Fal. These four came a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado but took all their seven points in my target, thus. [Now.

Prince. Seven? why, there were but four even

Fal. In buckram?
Pois. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Prince. Prithee, let him alone; we shall have more

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal? [Anon.

Prince. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram, that I told thee of—Prince. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken—
Pois. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground: but I followed me close, came in foot and hand; and with a thought seen of the eleven I paid.

Prince. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two!

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knives in Kendall green came at my back and got drive at me: but it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand.

Prince. These lies are like their father that begets them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou knotty-pated fool, thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-catch,—

Fal. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth the truth?

Prince. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendall green, when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? come, tell us your reason: what sayest thou to this?
Pois. Concerning reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? Zounds, an I were at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! If reasons were as plentiful as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion. I

Prince. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin: this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horseback-breaker, this huge hill of flesh,—

Fal. 'Sblood, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dunce neat's tongue, you bull's pizzle, you stock-liker! O for breath to utter what is like thee! you tailor'syard, you sheweth, you bow-case, you vile standing-tack.

Prince. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again: and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Prince. Mark, Jack.

Prince. We two saw you four set on four and bound them, and were masters of their wealth. Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down. Then did we two set on you four; and, with a word, out-faced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house; and, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimblly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy and still run and roared, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave, art thou, to lack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Prince. Mark, Jack.

Prince. Come, 's we hear, Jack; what trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why, hear you, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir-apparent? should I turn upon the true prince? why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hereules: but beware instinct: the lion will not touch the hart. Instinct is a great matter: I was now a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money. Hostess, clasp to the doors: watch to-night, pray tomorrow. Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship gone to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

Prince. Content; and the argument shall be thy running away.

Fal. Ah, no more of that, Hal, an thou lovset me!

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu, my lord the prince!

Prince. How now, my lady the hostess! what sayest thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you: he says he comes from your father.

Prince. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. Has he gravity out of his bed at midnight? shall I give him his answer?

Prince. Prithee, do, Jack.

Fal. 'Faith, and I 'll send him packing.

[Exit.]

Prince. Now, sirs; by 'r lady, you fought fair; so did you, Peter; so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no, fie!

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

Prince. 'Faith, tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

Peter. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said he would swear truth out of England but he would make you believe it was done in fight, and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass to make them bleed, and then to beslubber our garments with it and swear it was the blood of true men. But this seven year before, I blushed to hear his monstrous deeds.

Prince. O villain, thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and went taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hadst an evil word on thy side, and yet thou rannest away: what instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

Prince. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?

Prince. Of lives and earthly purses.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

Prince. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes Jack; here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast! How long is 't age, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

Fal. My own knee! when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring: a plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a blast. There's villainous news abroad: here was Sir John Bracey from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy, and he of Wales, that gave Ammon the bastinado and made Lucifer cuckold and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook — what a plague call you him?

Fal. O, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen, the same; and his son-in-law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular, Prince. He that rides at high speed and with his pistol kills a sprawl flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

Prince. So did he never the sprawl.

Fal. Well, that rash he had good mettle in him; he will not run.

Prince. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running!

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckoo; but afoot he will not budge a foot.

Prince. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more: Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news: you may buy land now as cheap as shanking mackerel.

Prince. Why, then, it is like, if there come a hot June and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundreds.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like we shall have good trading that way. But tell me, Hal, art not thou horrible afraid? thou being heir-apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies against as that good Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? dost not thy blood thrill at it?

Prince. Not a wit, 't faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

Prince. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content: this chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

Prince. Thy state is taken for a joined-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful hald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou see what my eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Caumbyes' vein.

Prince. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech. Stand aside, nobility.

Host. O, this is excellent sport, 't faith!

Fal. WEEP not, sweet queen; for trickling tears are vain.

Host. O, the father, how he holds his countenance!
ACT II.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

SCENE IV.

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my trustful queen;
For 'tis t'ot stop the flood-gates of her eyes.
Host. O Jesu, he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see!

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain. Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Peace, where's the more it is trodden on the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion, but chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye and a foolish handle of thy nether lip, that doth withold me. If then thou be my son. To be, like this the point: why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micier and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast oft heard of and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth delile; so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink but in tears, not in measure but in words only. But, since I am about toere also: and yet there is a virtuous man whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

Prince. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A goodly portly man, i' faith, and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by 'r lady, inclining to three score; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lendly given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, true books. Look, your son. To be, like this the point: why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micier and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast oft heard of and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth delile; so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink but in tears, not in measure but in words only. But, since I am about toere also: and yet there is a virtuous man whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

Prince. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker or a poultier's Prince. Well, here I am set hare.

And here I stand: judge, my masters.

Prince. Now, Harry, whence come you?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap. [Exeunt Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph.

Re-enter the Hostess.

Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord! Prince. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlestick: what's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

Prince. And thou a natural coward, without inward spirit? I deny not thy nature, but this to thee in particular: if you will deny the sheriff, so: if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

Prince. Go, hide thee behind the arras: the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face and good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had: but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

Prince. Call in the sheriff.

Enter Sheriff and the Carrier.

Now, master sheriff, what is your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry Hath follow'd certain men unto this house.

Prince. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious, a gross fat man.

Cus. As fat as butter.

Prince. The man, I do assure you, is not here; For I myself at this time have employ'd him. And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee That I will, to-morrow, send him to answer thee, or any man, For any thing he shall be charged withal: And so let me entreat you leave the house.

Sher. I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen Have in this matter lost three hundred marks.

Prince. It may be so: if he have robb'd these men, He shall be answerable; and so farewell.

Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

Prince. I think it is good morrow, is it not?

Sher. Indeed, my lord. I think it be two o'clock.

Prince. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go, call him forth.

Peto. Falstaff!—Fast asleep behind the arras, and snorting like a horse.

Prince. Hark, how hard he fetches breath. Search
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bangor. The Archbishop's house.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower, Will you sit down? And uncle Worcester: a plague upon it! I have forgot the map.

Glend. No, here it is. Sit, cousin Percy: sit, good cousin Hotspur. For by that name as oft as Lancaster Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale and with A rising sigh he wisheth you in heaven.

Hot. And you in hell, as oft as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him; at my nativity The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cresses; and at my birth The frame and huge foundation of the earth Shaked like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done at the same season, if your mother's cat had but kittened, though yourself had never been born.

Glend. I say the earth did shake when I was born. Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble. Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens And not in fear of your nativity, [on fire, Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions; oft the temning earth Is with a kind of collie pinch'd and vex'd By the imprisoning of unruly wind Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving, Shakes the old beldam earth and topples down Steeples and moss-grown towers. At your birth Our grandam earth, having this distemperate, In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave To tell you once again that at my birth The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely manourous to the frighted fields. These signs have mark'd me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do show I am not in the roll of common men. Where is he living, clipp'd in with the sea? That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales, Which calls me out as wild, or hath read to me? And bring him out that is but woman's son Can trace me in the tedious ways of art And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. I think there's no man speaks better Welsh. I'll to dinner. [Exit. Mort. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hot. Why, so can I, or so can any man; But will they come when you do call for them? Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command The devil.

Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil By telling truth: tell truth and shame the devil. If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither, And I'll be sworn I have power to shame him hence. O, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil! Mort. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made Against my power; thrice from the banks of Wye And sandy-bottom'd Severn have I sent him Bootless home and weather-beaten back.

Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too! How 'scapes he agues, in the devil's name?

Glend. Come, here's the map: shall we divide our According to our threefold order ta'en? [Right Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits very equally: England, from Trent and Severn hitherto, By south and east is to my part assign'd: All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore, And all the fertile land within that bound, To Owen Glendower: and, dear coz, to you The remnant northward, lying off from Trent. And our indentures tripartite are drawn; Which being sealed interchangeably, A business that this night may execute, To-morrow, cousin Percy, you and I And my good Lord of Worcester will set forth To meet your father and the Scottish power, As is appointed, at Shrewsbury. My father Glendower is not ready yet, Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days. Within that space you may have drawn together Your tenants, friends and neighbouring gentlemen. Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords: And in my conduct shall your ladies come; From whom you now must steal and take no leave, For there will be a world of water shed Upon the parting of your wives and you. [here, Hot. Methinks my moeity, north from Burton In quantity equals not one of yours: See how this river comes me cranking in, And cuts me from the best of all my land A huge half-moon, a monstrous canteel out. I'll have the current in this place damn'd up; And here the smug and silver-Trent shall run In a new channel, fair and evenly; It shall not wind with such a deep indent, To rob me of the rich a. [both. Glend. Not wind? it shall, it must; you see it Mort. Yea, but Mark how he bears his course, and runs me up With like advantage on the other side; Gethling the opposed continent as much As on the other side it takes from you. Wor. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here

ACT III.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE I.

And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.
Hot. I 'll have it so: a little charge will do it.
Grend. I 'll not have it after'd.
Hot. Will not you?
Grend. No, nor you shall not.
Hot. Why, that will I. [Welsh.
Hot. Let me not understand you, then; speak it in Grend. I can speak English, lord, as well as you;
For I was train'd up in the English court;
Where, being but young, I learned to the harp
Many an English ditty lovely well
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament,
A virtue that was never seen in you.
Hot. Marry,
And I am glad of it with all my heart:
I had rather be a kitten and cry new
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers;
I had rather hear a brazen cansticke turn'd,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axe-tree;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry:
'Tis like the forced gait of a shuffling nag.
Grend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.
Hot. I do not care: I 'll give thrice so much land
To those as will bring friends.
But in the way of bargains, mark ye me,
I 'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.
Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?
Grend. The moon shines fair; you may away by
I 'll haste the writer and withal:
[night:
Break your wifes of your departure hence:
I am afraid my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer.
[Exit.
Mort. Fri, cousin Percy! how you cross my father!
Hot. I cannot choose: sometime he angers me
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies,
And of a dragon and a finless fish,
A clip-wing'd grizzly and a mouten raven,
A couching hon and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skinble-skamble stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what;
He held me last night at least nine hours
In reckoning up the several devils' names
[To, This was that hecquys: I cried 'hum,' and 'well, go
But mark him not a word. O, he is as tedious
As a tired horse, aailing wife;
Worse than houses, he had rather live
With cheese and garlic in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates and have him talk to me
In any summer-house in Christendom.
Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman,
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange concealments, valiant as a lion
And wondrous affable and as bountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect
And curbs himself even of his natural scope
When you come cross his humour; faith, he does:
I warn you, that man is not at all:
Might so have tempt'd him as you have done,
Without the taste of danger and reproof;
But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.
Wor. In faith, my lord, you are too willful-blame;
And since your coming hither have done enough
To put him quite beside his patience.
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault:
Though sometimes it show greatness, courage,
blood,—
And that 's the dearest grace it renders you,—
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion and disdain:
The least of which haunting a nobleman
Loseth men's hearts and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation. [speed!
Hot. Well, I am school'd: good manners be your Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter Glendower with the ladies.
Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers me;
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.
Grend. My daughter weeps: she will not part
With you:
She 'll be a soldier too, she 'll to the wars. [Percy
Mort. Good father, tell her that she and my aunt
Shall follow in your conduct speedily.
[Glendower speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.
Grend. She is desperate here; a peevish self-will'd harlotry, one that no persuasion can do good upon.
[The lady speaks in Welsh.
Mort. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh
Which thou pour'st down from these swelling heau
I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,
[ens In such a parley should I answer thee.
[The lady speaks again in Welsh.
I understand thy kisses and thou mine,
And that 's a feeling disposition:
But I will never be a triant, love,
Tell me how by art thou language:
thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bowr,
With ravishing division, to her lute.
Grend. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.
[The lady speaks again in Welsh.
Mort. O, I am ignorant of this! [down
Grend. She bids you on the wanton rushes lay you
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleasest you
And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness,
Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep
As is the difference betwixt day and night
The hour before the heavenly-harness' team
Begins his golden progress in the east.
Mort. With all my heart I 'll sit and hear her sing:
By that time will our book, I think, be drawn.
Grend. Do so;
And those musicians that shall play to you
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence,
And straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.
Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down:
Come, quick, quick, that I may lay my head in thy Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose. [lap.
[The music plays.
Hot. Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh;
And 'tis no marvel he is so humorous.
By 'r lady, he is a good musician.
Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical, for you are altogether governed by humors. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh. [Irish.
Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Lady P. Wouldst thou have thy head broken?
Hot. No.
Lady P. Then be still.
Hot. Neither; 't is a woman's fault.
Lady P. Now God help thee!
Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.
Lady P. What's that?
Hot. Peace! she sings.
[Here the lady sings a Welsh song.
Hot. Come, Kate, I 'll have your song too.
Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.
Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! Heart! you swear like a counsel-maker's wife. 'Not you, in good sooth,' and 'as true as I live,' and 'as God shall mend me,' and
'as sure as day,'
And givest such sarronet surety for thy oaths,
As if thou never walkst further than Finsbury.
Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,
A good mouth-filling oath, and leave 't in sooth;
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,
To velvet-guarders and Sunday-citizens.
Come, sing, LADY; I will not sing.
Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-breast teacher.
An' the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so, come in when ye will.

[Exit.]

Glov. Come, come, Lord Mortimer; you are as hot I Lord Percy is on fire to go, by this our book is drawn; we'll but seal,
And then to horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart. [Exit.

SCENE II. — London. The palace.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, and others.

King. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I must have some private conference: but be near
For we shall presently have need of you.

[Exit Lords.

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengence and a scourge for me;
But thou dost in thy passages of life
Make me believe that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven
To punish my mistreadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poor, such base, such Lewd, such mean attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal and grafted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

Prince. So please your majesty, I would I could Quit all offences with as clear excuse
As well as I arm doublets I can purge
Myself of many I am charged withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in reproof of many tales devised,
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,
By smiling pick-thanks and base newsmongers,
I may, for some things true, where my youth
Hath fancy wander'd and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

King. God pardon thee! yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
They place to counsel thou hast rarely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied,
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the soul of every man
Prophetically doth forethink thy fall,
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-backney'd in the eyes of men,
So state and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession.

And left me in repulse banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir
But like a comet I was wonder'd at;
That men would tell their children 'This is he;
Others would say 'Where, which is Bolingbroke?'
And let me in repulse be heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh and new;
My presence, like a rote pontifical,
Ne'er seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast
And won by rareness such solemnity.

The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bawin wits,
Soon kindled and soon put out at last,
Mingleth his royalty with capping fools,
Had his great name profaned with their scorns
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys and stand the push
Of every headless valiant comparative,
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd himself to popularity;
That, being daily swallowed by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey and began
To lose the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than the little is by much too much.
So when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sam-like majesty.
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes;
But rather drowzled and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries,
Being with his presence glutted, gorged and full.
And in the very sight thou dost me dishonour,
Forsworn, for thine last lost thy princely privilege
With vile participation: not an eye
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desired to see thee more;
Which now doth tell that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

Prince. I shall hereafter, my thriche gracious lord,
Be more myself.

King. For all the world
As thou art to this hour was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurgh,
And even as I was then is Percy now.
Now, by my sceptre and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state
Than thou the shadow of succession;
For of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm,
Turns heads against the lighted laws,
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverence bishops on
To bloody battles and to bruising arms,
Never-dying honour hath he got
Against renowned Douglas! whose high deeds,
Whose head and great and glorious
Holds from all soldiers chief majority
And military title capital
Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ:
Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathing clothes,
This infant warrior, in his enterprises
Discomfited great Douglas, taken him once,
Enlarged him and made a friend of him,
To fill the month of deep defiance up
And shake the peace and safety of our throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer
Capitulate against us and are up.
But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my nearest and dearest enemy?
Thou that art like enough, through fire and fathom, fear
Base inunions and the art of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To dog his heels and curtsy at his frowns,
To show how much thou art degenerate.

Prince. Do not think so: you shall not find it so;
And God forgive them that much sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!
I will redeem all this on Percy's head.
must needs be out of all compass, out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No. I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a Death's-head or a momento mori: I never see thy face but I think upon hell-fire and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my case should be: 'By this fire, that's God's angel,' but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou rennest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me would have bought thee these cheap at the nearest Chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years; God reward me for it!

Bard. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly! [burned.]

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Eastcheap. The Boar's-Head Tavern.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away wisely since this last action? do I not live? do I not dwell? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am withered like an old apple-john. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a peppercorn, a brewer's horse; these high deeds, Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fettle, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it come singing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; more little; died not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter — of an hour; paid money that I borrowed, three or four times; lived well and in good compass; and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you
ACT IV.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

SCENE I.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: if speaking truth
In this fine age were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world.

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.
Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.
Prince. What sayest thou, Mistress Quickly?
How doth thy husband? I love him well; he is an honest man.
Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Prizhee, let her alone, and list to me.
Prince. What sayest thou, Jack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras and had my pocket picked; this house is turned bawdy-house; they pick pockets.
Prince. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

Prince. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.
Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said I heard your grace say so: and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you.
Prince. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, Maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why, a thing to Thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou should'st know it: I am an honest man's wife: and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Host. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?

Fal. What beast! why, an otter.

Prince. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?

Fal. Why, she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so: thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave, thou!

Prince. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slandereth me most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord, and said this other day you ought him a thousand pound.

Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million: thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea, if he said my ring was copper.

Prince. I say 'tis copper: darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare: but as thou art prince, I fear thee as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

Prince. And why not as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion:

dost thou think I 'll fear thee as I fear thy father? no, an I do, I pray God my girdle break.

Prince. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees? But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty in this bosom of thine; it is all filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were anything in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandum of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded, if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain: and yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong: art thou not ashamed?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocence Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villany? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. Thou confess then, you picked my pocket?

Prince. It appears so by the story.

Host. Hostess, I forgive thee: go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest I am pacified still. Nay, prizhee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad, how is that answered?

Prince. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee: the money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying lack; 'tis a double labour.

Prince. I am good friends with my father and may do anything.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou dost, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

Prince. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two and twenty or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous: I land them, I praise them.

Prince. Bardolph!

Bard. My lord?

Prince. Go bear this letter to Lord John of Lancaster, to my brother John; this to my Lord of Westmoreland. [Exit Bardolph.] Go, Percy, to horse, to horse; for thou and I have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner-time. [Exit Percy.] Jack, meet me to-morrow in the temple hall at two o'clock in the afternoon. There shall thou know thy charge; and there receive money and order for their furniture.

The land is burning; Percy stands on high;
And either we or they must lower lie. [Exit.

Hot. Rare words! brave world! Hostess, my breakfast, come!

O, I could wish this tavern were my drum! [Exit.]
Enter a Messenger with letters.

Vhat letters hast thon there?—I can but thank you.

Mess. These letters come from your father.

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he is grievous sick.

Hot. 'Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick
In such a justling time? Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along?

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord.

Wor. I prithee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth;
And at the time of my departure theene
He with much fear bade me by his place.

Wor. I would the state of time had first been whole
Ere he by sickness had been visited:
His health was never better worth than now, (feast

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth in-
The very life-blood of our enterprise;
'Tis catching hither, even to our camp.
He writes me here, that inward sickness—
And that his friends by députation could not
So soon be drawn, nor did he think it meet
To lay so dangerous and dear a trust
On any soul removed but on his own.
Yet doth he with his mind, as with his might,
That with our small conjunction we should on,
To see how fortune is disposed to us;
For, as he writes, there is no qualifying now,
Because the king is certainly possess'd
Of all our posses. What says Gower here?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a main to us.

Hot. A perilous gush, a very limbo upper;
And yet, in faith, it is not; his present want
Seems more than we shall find it: were it good
To set the exact wealth of all our states
All at once? to set so rich a man
On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?
It were not good; for therein should we read
The very bottom and the soul of hope,
The very list, the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.

'Faith, and so we should;
Where now remains a sweet reversion:
We may boldly spend upon the hope of what
Is to come in:
A comfort of retirement lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,
If that the devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

Wor. But yet I would your father had been here.
The quality and hair of our attempt
Brooks no division: it will be thought
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisdom, loyalty and mere dislike
Of our proceedings kept the earl from hence:
And think how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful faction
And breed a kind of question in our cause;
For well you know we of the offering side
Must keep aloof from strict arbiterment,
And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us;
This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dream of.

Hot. You strain too far.

I rather of his absence make this use;
It lends a lustre and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise.
Than if the earl were here: for men must think,
If we without his help can make a head
To push against a kingdom, with his help
We shall o'erturn it topsy-lurvy down.
Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.

Ver. Pray God my news be worth a welcome, lord.
The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards; with him Prince John.

Hot. No harm: what more?

Ver. A word, sir: I have learn'd,
The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales,
Whose carriage, as I know, was some days
After his May-day: and now is he in
And bid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms;
All plumed like strigilés that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bathed;
Glittering in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the months of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer:
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vauet a chilly axe, that strike the seat.
As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more: worse than the sun in March, when he is best.

This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come;
They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war
All hot and bleeding will we offer them.
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit
Up to the ears in blood. But I am on fire
To hear this rich reprimis is so nigh
And yet not ours. Come, let me taste my horse,
Who is to bear me like a thunderbolt.
Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales:
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet and we'er part as the mouth of May,
O that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news:
I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.

Hot. What may the king's whole batle reach unto?

Ver. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be;
My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us take a muster speedily:
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying: I am out of fear
Of death or death's hand for this one-half year.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A public road near Coventry.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack: our soldiers shall march through;
we'll to Sutton Cotill to-night.

Bard. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all. I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Petru meet me at town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell.

Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet. I have misused the king's press dannably: I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers: three hundred and odd pounds, I press me none but brawny householders, yeoman's sons; I require none out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the banes: such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lieve hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a strick foul or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toasts-and-butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the gluton's dogs licked for nutmeg, and such as indeed were never soldiers, but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revoited tapsters and ostlers trade-fallen, the cankers of a calm world and a long peace, ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old faced ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodiags lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draff and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way and told me I had unloaded all the giblets and pressed the jointed bodies. Eye hath seen so much sacrificial. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat: nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had glyves on; for indeed I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company; and the half shirt is too napkin for my nieces. And now their pride and mettle is asleep. Their courage with hard labour tame and dull, That not a horse is half the half of himself. The hoarse of the horses of the enemy In general, journey-bated and brought low: The better part of ours are full of rest. The number of the few, well with ours: For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in. [The trumpet sounds a parley.]

Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king, If you voucluse me hearing and respect.

Hot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to You were of our determination! [God

Some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings and good name, Because you are not of our quality, But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so, So long as out of limit and true rule You stand against anointed majesty. But to my charge. The king hath sent to know The nature of your griefs, and whereupon You conjure from the breast of civil peace Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land Audacious cruelty. If that the king Have any way your good deserts forgotten, Which he confesseth to be manful, He bids you name your griefs: and with all speed You shall have your desires with interest And pardon absolute for yourself and these Herein misled by your suggestion.

Hot. The king is kind; and well we know the king Knows at what time to promise, when to pay. The nature of your griefs, and whereupon Did give him that same royalty he wears; And when he was not six and twenty strong, Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low, A poor unprofit outlaw sneaking home, My father gave him welcome to the shore; And when he stood him down to God He came but to be Duke of Lancaster, To sue his liver and beg his peace, With tears of innocency and terms of zeal, My father, in kind heart and pity moved, Swore him assistance and performed it too. Now when the lords and earls of the realm Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him, The more and less came in with cup and knee; Met him in boroughs, cities, villages, Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes, SCENE III.—The rebel camp near Shrewsbury.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.
ACT V.  FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE I.

Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
Gave him their heirs, as pages follow'd him
Even at the heels in golden multitudes.
He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his yow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh;
And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts and some strait decrees
That lie too heavy on the commonwealth,
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that did anguage for;
Proceeded further; cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt.  Tut, I came not to hear this.

Hot.  Then to the point.

In short time after, he deposed the king;
Soon after that, deprived him of his life;
And in the neck of that, task'd the whole state;
To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March,
Who is, if every owner were well placed,
Indeed his king, to be engaged in Wales,
There without warrant to lie forfeited;
Disgraced me in my happy victories,
Sought to entrap me by intelligence;
Rated mine uncle from the council-board;
In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
Broke oaths on oaths, committ'd wrong,
And in conclusion drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and withal to pry
Into his title, the which we find
Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt.  Shall I return this answer to the king?

Hot.  Not so, Sir Walter: we'll withdraw awhile.
Go to the king; and let there be impaw'd
Some surety for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall my uncle
Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.

Blunt.  I would you would accept of grace and love.

Hot.  And may be so we shall.

Blunt.  Pray God you do.

[Exeunt.]

Enter the Archbishop of York and Sir Michael.

Arch.  Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this sealed brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal;
This to my cousin Scroop, and all the rest
To whom they are directed.  If you knew
How much they do import, you would make haste.

Sir M.  My good lord,
I guess their tenour.

Arch.  Like enough you do.

To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must ride the touch; for, sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king with mighty and quick-raised power
Meets with Lord Harry: and, I fear, Sir Michael,
What with the sickness of Northumberland,
Whose power was in the first proportion,
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,
Who with them was a rated shew too
And comes not in, o'er-ruled by prophecies,
I fear the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king.

Sir M.  Why, my good lord, you need not fear; There is Douglas and Lord Mortimer.

Arch.  No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir M.  But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester and a head
Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.  [Exeunt.

Arch.  And so there is: but yet the king hath
The special head of all the land together:
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmoreland and warlike Blunt;
And many more, and warlike men of estimation and prudent in arms.

Sir M.  Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well.

Arch.  I hope no less, yet needful 't is to fear.
And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speak: For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,
And he hath heard of our dispositions,
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him:
Therefore make haste.  I must go write again
To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falstaff.

King.  How bloody the sun begins to peer
Above you bushy hill! the day looks pale
At his distemperate.

Prince.  The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blustering day.

King.  There with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.
[The trumpet sounds.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

How now, my Lord of Worcester! 'tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As now we meet.  You have deceived our trust,
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel:
This is not well, my lord, this is not well,
What say you to it? will you again unkit

This churlish knot of all-aborred war?
And move in that obedient orb again
Where you did give a fair and natural light,
And be no more an exhaled meteor,
A prodigy of fear and a portent
Of broached mischief to the unborn times?

Wor.  Hear me, my liege:
For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours; for I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.  [then?

King.  You have not sought it? how comes it
Vul.  Rebellion lay in hollow ways, and he found it.

Prince.  Peace, chiewet, peace!

Wor.  It pleased your majesty to turn your looks
Of favour from myself and all our house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord,
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you my staff of office did I break
In Richard's time; and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place and in account
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was myself, my brother and his son,

ACT V.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

SCENE II.

The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.

King. Hence, therefore, ever be ready to your charge;
For, on their answer, will we set on them:
And God befriend us, as our cause is just!

[Exeunt all but the Prince of Wales and Falstaff.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle and Bestride me, so 'tis a point of friendship.

Prince. Nothing. But a colossus can do thee that friendship.
Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would 't were bed-time, Hal, and all well.

Prince. Why, thou owest God a death.

[Exit.

Fal. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loath to pay him before his day.

That all in England did repute him dead:
And from this swarm of fair advantages
You took occasion to be quickly woot'd
To grasp the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
And being fed by you, used us so
As that gentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
Useth the sparrow; did oppress our nest;
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk
That even our love durst not come near your sight
For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
We ev'rywhere fled, to detract you, I suppose,
Out of your sight and raise this present head;
Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have forged against yourself
By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworn to in your younger enterprise.

King. These things indeed you have articulately
Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some false colour that may please the eye
Of their changelings and poor contents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation
And never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impaint his cause;
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of patriotism, to meddle and mislay;

Prince. In both your armies there is many a soul
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,
This present enterprise set off his head,
I do not think a braver gentleman:
More active-valiant or more valiant-young,
More daring or more bold, is now alive
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak to my shame,
I have a truant beck to chivalry;
And so I hear he doth account me too;
Yet this before my father's majesty —
I am content that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight. [thee,

King. And, Prince of Wales, so dare we venture
Albeit considerations infinite
Do make against it. No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love
That are misled upon your cousin's part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both he and theyand you, young man,
Shall be my friend again and I'll be his:
So tell your cousin, and bring me word
What he will do: but if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us
And their office do, be gone;
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair; take it advisedly.

[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon.

Prince. It will not be accepted, on my life:

Enter Hotspur and Douglas.

Hot. My uncle is return'd:
Deliver up my Lord of Westminster.

Uncle, what news?

Wor. The king doth bid you be present.

Doug. Forthwith him by the Lord of Westminster.

Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly. [Exit.

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.

Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid.

Wor. I told him gently of my grievances,
Of his oath breaking: which he answered thus,
By now forswareing that he is forsworn:
He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With hauyghty arms this hateful name in us.
ACT V.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

SCENE IV.

---

Re-enter Douglas.

Dougal. Arm, gentlemen; to arms! for I have A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth, [thrown And Westmorland, that was engaged, did bear it; Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on. With this news of Wales stood forth before the king, And, nephew, challenged you to single fight. Hot. O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads, And that no man might draw short breath to-day But I and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me, How soon his tardy? seem'd it in contempt? Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life Did hear a challenge urged more modestly, Unless a brother should a brother dare To gentle exercise and proof of arms. He gave you all the duties of a man: Trim'm up your praises with a princely tongue, Speak your deservings like a chronicle, Making you ever better than his praise By still dispraising praise valued with you; And, which became him like a prince indeed, He made a blushing cifal of himself; And chid his truant youth with such a grace As if he master'd there a double spirit Of teaching and of learning instantly. There did he pause: but let me tell the world, If he outlive the envy of this day, England did never owe so sweet a hope, So much misconstrued in his wantonness. Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured On his follies: never did I hear Of any prince so wild a libertine. But be he as he will, yet once I thought I will embrace him with a soldier's arm, That he shall shrink under my courtesy. Arm, arm with speed: and, fellows, soldiers, friends, Better consider what you have to do Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue, Can lift your blood up with persuasion. Enter a Messenger. Mess. My lord, here are letters for you. Hot. I cannot read them now. O gentlemen, the time of life is short! To spend that shortness basely, were too long, If life did ride upon a dial's point, Still ending at the arrival of an hour. An if we live, we live to tread on kings; If die, brave death, when princes die with us! Now, for our consciences, the arms are fair, When the intent of bearing them is just. Enter another Messenger. Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace. Hot. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale, For I profess not talking; only this — Let each man do his best: and here draw I A sword, whose temper I intend to stain With the best blood that I can meet withal In the adventure of this perilous day. Now, Esperance! Percy! and set on. Sound the lefty instruments of war, And by that music let us all embrace: For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall A second time do such a courtesy. [The trumpets sound. They embrace, and exult."

SCENE III. — Plain between the camps.

The King enters with his power. Alarum to the battle. Then enter Douglas and Sir Walter Blunt. Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thus Thou cross'st me? what honour dost thou seek Upon my head? Doug. Know then, my name is Douglas; And I do haunt thee in the battle thus Because some tell me that thou art a king. Blunt. They tell thee true. [bought Doug. The Lord of Stafford dear to-thy hath Thy likeness, for instead of thee, King Harry, This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee, Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner. Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot; And thou shalt find a king that will revenge Lord Stafford's death. [They fight. Douglas kills Blunt. Enter Hotspur.

Hot. O Douglas, hast thou fought at Holmedon I never had triumph'd upon a Scot. [thus, Doug. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies Hot. Where? [the king. Doug. Here. Hot. This, Douglas? no: I know this face full well: A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt; Semblably furnish'd like the king himself. Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes! A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear: Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king? Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats. Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats; I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece, Until I meet the king. Hot. Up, and away! Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exeunt. Alarum. Enter Falstaff, solus. Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here; here's no scoring but upon the pate. Soft! who are you? Sir Walter Blunt: there's honour for you! Here's no vanity! I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels. I have led my ragamuffins where they are peppered: there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here? Enter the Prince. Prince. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff [sword; Under the hoods of vapant enemies, Whose death they cry yet unreavenged: I prithee, lend me thy sword. Fal. O Hal, I prithee, give me leave to breathe awhile. Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him such a king. Prince. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee. I prithee, lend me thy sword. Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt. Prince. Give it me: what, is it in the case? Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city. [The Prince draws it out, and finds it to be a bottle of sack. Prince. What, is it a time to jest and daily now? [He throws the bottle at him. Exit. Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbonado of me. I like not such ginning honour as Sir Walter hath: give me life: which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end. [Exit. SCENE IV. — Another part of the field. Alarum. Excursions. Enter the King, the Prince, Lord John of Lancaster, and Earl of Westmoreland. King. I prithee, Harry, with thyself: thou bleed'st too much. Lord John of Lancaster, go with you him. Lan. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.
Prince. I beseech your majesty, make up, Lest your retirement do amaze your friends. I will do so, My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent. West. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent. Prince. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help; And God forbid a shallow scratch should drive The Prince of Wales from such a field as this, Where strife and pride lies treading bloody roads. And rebels' arms triumph in massacres! Lan. We breathe too long: come, cousin Westmoreland, Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come. Enter Prince and Westmoreland. Prince. By God, thou hast deceived me, Lancastre. I did not think thee lord of such a spirit: Before, I loved thee as a brother, John; But now, I do respect thee as my soul. King. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrown warrior. Prince. O, this boy lends mettle to us all! [Exit. Enter Douglas.

Douglas. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads. That wear those colours on them: what art thou, That counterfeit'st the person of a king? King. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves at So many of his shadows thou hast met [heart not and the very king. I have two boys Seek Percy and thyself about the field. But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily, I will assay thee: so, defend thyself. Douglas. I fear thou art another counterfeit; And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king: But mine I am sure thou art, who'er thou be, And thus I win thee. [They fight: Douglas falls. Prince. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art Never to hold it up again! the spirits [like Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms: It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee; Who never promises but he means to pay. They fall. [Enter Hotspur.

Lest all the building honours on thy crest. I'll crop it, to make a Garland for my head. Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities. [They fight. Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal! Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you. Re-enter Douglas: he fights with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit Douglas. Hotspur is wounded, and falls. Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth! I better brook the loss of brittle life Than those proud titles thou hast taken on of me; They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh: But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy, But that the earthy and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue: no, Percy, thou art dust, And food for— [Dies. Prince. For worms, brave Percy: fare thee well, great heart! I'll-weave ambition, how much art thou shrunken! Would that this body did contain a fit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough: this earth that bears thee dead Bears not alive so stout a gentleman. If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal: But let my favours hide thy mangled face: And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself For doing these fair rites of tenderness. Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven! Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave, But not remember'd in thy epitaph! What, old acquaintance! could not all this flesh Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell! I could have better spared a better man: O, I should have a heavy miss of thee, If I were much in love with vanity. Death hath not struck so fat a deal to-day, Though many dearer, in this bloody fray. Embow'd will I see thee by and by: Till then in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit. Fal. [Rising up] Embow'd! if thou embowel me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me and eat me too to-morrow: O, thou art a time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had me sect and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie, I am no counterfeit: to die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man who hath not the life of a man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valor is discretion; in the which better part I have saved my life. 'Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead: how, if he should counterfeit too and rise? by my faith, I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing con- futes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah [stopping him], with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me. [Takes up Hotspur on his back. Re-enter the Prince of Wales and Lord John of Lancaster.

Prince. Come, brother John; full bravely hast Thou ta'en the maiden sword: [thou flesh'd Lan. But, soft! whom have we here? Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?
ACT V.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE V.

Prince. I did: I saw him dead, [alive?] Breathless and bleeding on the ground. Art thou Or is it fantasy that plays upon our eyesight? I prithee, speak; we will not trust our eyes Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man: but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy [throwing the body down]: if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you. [dead.

Prince. Why, Percy I killed myself and saw thee Fal. Didst thou? Lord, Lord, how this world is given to lying! I grant you I was down and out of breath; and so was he: but we rose both at an instant and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them that should reward valour bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive and would deny it, 'tounds, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

Lan. This is the strangest tale that ever I heard.

Prince. This is the strangest fellow, brother John. Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back: For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, I 'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

[Exit Prince of Wales and Lancaster.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I 'll grow less; for I 'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly as a nobleman should do. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

The trumpets sound. Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmoreland, with Worcester and Vernon prisoners.

King. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke. Ill-spirited Worcester! did not we give grace, Pardon and terms of love to all of you? And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary? Misuse the tenour of thy kinsman's trust? Three knights upon our party slain to-day, A noble earl and many a creature else Had been alive this hour, If like a Christian thou hadst truly borne Betwixt our armies true intelligence. Wor. What I have done my safety urged me to; And I embrace this fortune patiently, Since not to be avoided it falls on me. [too:

King. Bear Worcester to the death and Vernon Other offenders we will pause upon. [Exeunt Worcester and Vernon, guarded.

How goes the field? [saw

Prince. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, when he The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him, The noble Percy slain, and all his men Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest; And falling from a hill, he was so bruised That the pursuers took him. At my tent The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace I may dispose of him.

King. With all my heart.

Prince. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you This honourable bounty shall belong: Go to the Douglases, and deliver him Up to his pleasure, ransomless and free: His valour shown upon our crests to-day Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

Lan. I thank your grace for this high courtesy, Which I shall give away immediately. [power.

King. Then this remains, that we divide our You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland Towards York shall bend you with your dearest speed, To meet Northumberland and the prelate Scroop, Who, as we hear, are busily in arms: Myself and you, son Harry, will towards Wales, To fight with Glendower and the Earl of March. Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway, Meeting the check of such another day: And since this business so fair is done, Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exeunt.

SCENE — England.

INDUCTION.

Warkworth. Before the castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing when loud Rumour speaks? I, from the orient to the drooping west, Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold The acts commenced on this ball of earth: Upon my tongues continual slanders ride, The which in every language I pronounce, Stuffing the ears of men with false reports. I speak of peace, while covert enmity Under the smile of safety wounds the world: And who but Rumour, who but only I, Make fearful musters and prepared defence, Whiles the big year, swoln with some other grief, Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war, And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures, And of so easy and so plain a stop That the blunt monster with uncounted heads, The still-discordant wavering multitude,

Can play upon it. But what need I thus My well-known body to anatomize Among my household? Why is Rumour here? I run before King Harry's victory; Who in a bloody field by Shrewsbury Hath beaten down young Hotspur and his troops, Quenching the flame of bold rebellion Even with the rebel's blood. But what mean I To speak so true at first? my office is To noise abroad that Harry Monmouth fell Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword, And that the king before the Douglas' rage Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death. This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns Between that royal field of Shrewsbury And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone, Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland, Lies crafty-sick: the posts come firing on, And not a man of them brings other news Than they have learn'd of me: from Rumour's tongues They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs.

[Exit.]
ACT I.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE I.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — The same.

Enter Lord Bardolph.

L. Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho?

The Porter opens the gate.

Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are?

L. Bard. Tell thou the earl
That the Lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard;
Please it your honour, knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bard. Here comes the earl.

[Exeunt Porter.

North. What news, Lord Bardolph? every minute
Should be the father of some stratagem:

The times are wild; contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose
And bears down all before him.

L. Bard. Noble earl,
I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an God will!

L. Bard. As good as heart can wish:
The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts
Killed by the hand of Douglas; young Prince John
And Westmoreland and Stafford fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir John,
Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day,
So fought, so follow'd and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times,
Since Caesar's fortunes!

North. How is this derived?

Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came From thence:
A gentleman well bred and of good name,
That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant Travers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last to listen after news.

Enter Travers.

L. Bard. My lord, I over-rove him on the way;
And he is furnished with no certainties
More than he haply may retain from me.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings comes with you?

Tro. My lord, Sir John Umfraville turn'd me back
With joyful tidings; and, being better horsed,
Outrode me. After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forspent with speed,
That stopped by me to breathe his bloodyed horse.
He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury:
He told me that rebellion had bad luck
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold,
With that, he gave his able horse the head,
And bending forward struck his armed heels
Against the pouting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head, and starting so
He seem'd in running to devour the way,

Staying no longer question.

North. Ha! Again:

Said he young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur Coldspur? that rebellion
Had met ill luck?

L. Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what;
If my young lord your son have not the day,
ACT I.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE II.

So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss,
Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear
That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim
Than while they vainly at their safer
Fly from the field.
Then was that noble Worcester
Too soon ta'en prisoner; and that furious Scot.
The bloody Douglas, whose well-labouring sword
Had three times slain the appearance of the king,
'Gan vail his stomach and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs; and in his flight,
Stumbling in fear, was taken.
The loss of all
Is that the king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster
And Westmoreland. This is the news at full.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good heartly word, but for the duty that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent or is invented on me: I am only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then have I no judgment. Thou wast born mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to walk at my heels. I was never manned with an agate till now: but I will inset you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel,—the Juvenile, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand than he shall get one on his cheek; and though I can say his face is a face-royal: God may finish it when he will, 'tis not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still at a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he'll be crowing as if he were a bull-man ever since his father was a bachelor. He shall keep his own grace, but he's almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said Master Dombledom about the satin for my short cloak and my slops?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his band and yours; he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned, like the gluton! pray God his tongue be hotter! A whoreson Achiophil! a rascally yeo-forssooth knave! to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security! The whore's smooth-pates do now bear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is through with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth as offer to stop it with security. I looked a' should have sent me two or twenty right reels of that as a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it; and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lanthorn to light him. Where's Bardolph?

ACT I.  SECOND PART OF

Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the stews, I were manned, horsed, and wived.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice and Servant.

Page. Sir, here comes the noblemant that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Serv. Falstaff, an't please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery.

Serv. He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Serv. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder: my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of anything good. Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Serv. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. What's a young knife, and begging! Is there not wars? is there not employment? doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the other's side. If it were worse than the name of rebellion can tell lie to me in it.

Serv. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had lied in my throat, if I had said so.

Serv. By your leave, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside; and give me leave to tell you, lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou gettest any leave of me, hang me! if thou takest leave, thou wert better be hanged. You hunt counter: hence! away!

Serv. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord! God give your lordship good time of day! God be pleased to grant your lordship a health: I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some rash of the saltiness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship to have regard to your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty: you would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whorsen apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, God mend him! I pray you, let me speak with you.

Fal. Come, my lord, let us; I'll speak with you. A man may be a very sick, yea, even a dying man, and yet be not very foolish. But I'll speak with you. And I'll tell you, I am now as well as I was ever in my life. For I lie as well as I lie; and, as I lie, I am as well as I am.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief, from study and perturbation of the brain: I have read the case of his effects in Galen: it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled with.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the hecis would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me in respect of poverty; but how I could be so patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or indeed a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws, and this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in his belt cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath misled me: I am the fellow with all the great bells in my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loath to gull any new-healed wound: your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gaul's-hill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet over-posting that action.

Fal. My lord, I'll tell.

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wasseill candle, my lord, all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravity, gravv, gravv.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light; but I hope he that looks upon me will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go: I cannot tell. Virtue is of so little regard in these costermonger times that true valor is esteemed but bad; gladness for your lordship abroad: I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some rash of the saltiness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship to have regard to your health.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? But be, Sir John.

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head and something a round belly. For my voice, I have lost it with lauling and singing of anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not: the truth is, I am only to be judged by my understanding: and he that will capper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him! For the box of the ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it, and the young lion repent: marry, not in ashes and sackcloth; but in new silk and old sack.
Act I.
Second Part of King Henry IV.
Scene III.

Ch. Just.
Well, God send the prince a better companion!

Ful.
God send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just.
Well, the king hath severed you and Prince Harry.
You are going with Lord John of Lancaster against the Arch Bishop and the Earl of Northumberland.

Ful.
Yea, I thank your pretty sweet wit for it.
But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady Peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I think not but there will be blood with you. And I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, and I brandish any thing but a bottle, I would I might never spit white again.
There is not a dangerous action can pep out his head but I am thrust upon it: well, I cannot last ever: but it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common.
If ye will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with a rust than to be scourged to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just.
Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!

Ful.
Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just.
Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses.
Fare you well: commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.

[Exeunt Chief-Justice and Servant.

Ful.
If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.
A man can no more separate age and covetousness than a can part young limbs and leechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the degrees prevent my curses.
Boy?

Page.
Sir?

Ful.
What money is in my purse?

Page.
Seven groats and two pence.

Ful.
I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse; borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.
Go bear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the Earl of Westmoreland; and this to old Mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin.
I will know where to find me.

[Exit Ful.
A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one or the other plays the rogue with my great toe.
'T is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make use of any thing: I will turn diseases to commodity.
[Exit.

Scene III.—York.
The Archbishop's palace.

Enter the Archbishop, the Lords Hastings, Mowbray, and Bardolph.

Arch.
Thus have you heard our cause and known our needs;
And, my most noble friends, I pray you all,
Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:
And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Morb.
I well allow the occasion of our arms;
But gladly would be better satisfied in the way how in our means we should advance ourselves
To look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast.
Our present muster grows upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice;
And, though we have few lords to head them, and of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns
With an incensed fire of injuries.
[eth thus;

L. Bard.
The question then, Lord Hastings, stand—
Whether our present five and twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberland?

Hast.
With him, we may.

L. Bard.
Yea, marry, there's the point:
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is, we should not step too far
Till we had his assistance by the hand;
And then, in a thousand several fashions
Conjecture, expectation, and surmise
Of aids uncertain should not be admitted.

Arch.
'Tis very true, Lord Bardolph; for indeed
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.
[Hope,
L. Bard.
It was, my lord; who lined himself with Eating the more, in the prime of his Flattering himself in project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so, with great imagination
Proper to madmen, led his powers to death
And winking leap'd into destruction.

Hast.
But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt
To lay down likelihoods and forms of hope.

L. Bard.
Yes, if this present quality of war,
Indeed the instant action: a cause on foot
Lives so in hope as in an early spring
We see the appearing buds; which to prove fruit,
Hope gives not so much warrant and desir
That frosts will bite them.
When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model;
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection;
Which if we find outweights ability,
What do we then but draw anew the model
In fewer offices, or at last desist
To build at all?
Much more, in this great work,
Which is almost to pluck a kingdom down
And set another up, should we survey
The plot of situation and the model,
Consent upon a sure foundation.

Question surveyors, know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his opposite; or else
We fortify in paper and in figures,
Using the names of men instead of men:
Like one that draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it: who, half through,
Gives o'er and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Hast.
Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be still-born, and that the now possess'd
The utmost man of expectation,
I think we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.
[thousand?

L. Bard.
What, is the king but five and twenty

Hast.
To us no more; may, not so much, Lord Bar-
For his divisions, as the times do bawl,— [dolphins
Are in three heads: one power against the French,
And one against Glendower; perforce a third
Must take up us: so is the uniform king
In three divided; and his coffer's sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.
[together

Arch.
That he should draw his several strengths
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast.
If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarmed, the French and Welsh
Baying him at the heels: never fear that.
[hither?

L. Bard.
Who is it like should lead his forces

Hast.
The Duke of Lancaster and Westmoreland;
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Monmouth:
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

Arch.
Let us on,
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their over-greedy love hath surfeited:
An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond many, with what loud applause

ACT II.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE I.

Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou wouldst have him be!
And being now trimm'd in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provokest thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy golden bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou wilt eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times?
They that, when Richard lived, would have him die,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that throw'st dust upon his goodly head
When through proud London he came sighing on
After the admired heels of Bolingbroke,
Criesst now 'O earth, yield us that king again,
And take thou this! 'O thoughts of men accursed!
I would and to come seems best; things present worst.
Moreb. Shall we go draw our numbers and set on?
Hast. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone. [Exeunt.]

Enter Hostess, Fang and his Boy with her, and Snare following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?
Fang. It is entered.
Host. Where's your yeoman? Is't a lusty yeoman? Will 't stand to? Fang. Sirrul, where's a Snare.
Host. O Lord, ay! good Master Snare.
Snare. Here, here.
Fang. Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.
Host. Yea, good Master Snare; I have entered him within my space.
Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives,
for he will stab.
Host. Has the day! take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly: in good faith, he cares not what mischief he does, if his weapon be out: he will fain look like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.
Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.
Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.
Fang. An I but list him once; an' come but within my ve—
Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he's an intuitive thing upon my score. Good Master Fang, hold him sure: good Master Snare, let him not 'scape. A' comes continually to Pie-corner—saving your manhoods—to buy a saddle;
and he is indited to dinner to the Lubber's-head
in Lambert street, to Master Smooth the silkman:
I pray ye, since my exion is entered and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long one for a poor lone woman to bear: and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fubbed off, and fubb'd off, and fubb'd off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong. Yonder becomes; and that arrant malousenose knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices; Master Fang and Master Snare, do me,
do me, do me your offices.

Enter Falstaff, Page, and Bardolph.

Faul. How now! whose mare's dead? what's the matter?
Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Mistress Quickly.
Faul. Away, varieties! Draw, Bardolph: cut me off this villain's head: throw the queen in the channel.
Fang. Throw me in the channel! I'll throw thee in the channel. Will thou? wilt thou? thou bas-tardly rogue! Murder, murder! Ah, thou honeysuckle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers and the king's? Ah, thou honey-seed rogue! thou art a honey-seed, a man-queller, and a woman-queller.
Faul. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Faul. A rescue! a rescue! Good people, bring a rescue or two. Thou wo't, we't thou? thou wo't, wo'ta? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!
Faul. Away, you scoundrel! you rampallian! you fustilarian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice, and his men.

Ch. Just. What is the matter? keep the peace here, ho!
Host. Good my lord, be good to me. I beseech you, stand to me.
Ch. Just. How now, Sir John; what are you and Brawling here? [Tuss.] Doth this become your place, your time and busi-you should have been well on your way to York.
Stand from him, fellow: wherefore hang'st upon
him?
Host. O my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.
Ch. Just. For what sum?
Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his; but I will have some of it out again, or I will ride thee o' nights like the mare.
Faul. I think I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.
Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fie! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of explanation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?
Faul. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?
Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round-table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Wheeson week, when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor, thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me and make me thy lady thy wife. Canst thou dey it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess
of vinegar; telling us she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some; whereby I told thee they were full for a green wind? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarity with such poor people; saying that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-keith; deny it, if thou canst.
Faul. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says up and down the town that her eldest son is like you: she hath been in good case, and the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you I may have redress against them.

Second Part of King Henry IV

Scene II

LONDON. Another street.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

Prince. Before God, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is't come to that? I had thought weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

Prince. Faith, it does me; though it discourses the complication of my greatness to acknowledge it. Dost it not show visibly in me to desire small beer? Poins. By, a prince should not be so loosely studied as to remember so weak a composition.

Prince. Belike then my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. Withal, I'll have no show of it to remember thy name! or to know thy face to-morrow! or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast, viz. these, and those that were thy peach-coloured ones! or to bear the inventory of thy shirts, as, one for superfluity, and another for use! But that the temis-court-keeper knows better than I; for it is a love of linen with thee when thou keepest nest racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low countries havè made a shift to eat up thy holland; and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruines of thy linen shall inherit his kingdom: but the midwives say the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

Prince. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes, faith; and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prince. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

Prince. Marry, I tell thee, it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed for it.

Poins. Very hardly upon such a subject.

Prince. By this hand, thou thinkest me as far in the devil's book as thou and Falstaff for obduracy and persistency: let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly that my father is so sick: and keeping such vile company as thou art hath in reason taken from me all estonation of Poins. The reason?

Prince. What wouldst thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrify. Prince. It would be every man's thought; and thou art a blessed fellow to think as every man thinks; never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what excites your most worshipful thought to think so?
Act II. Second Part Of King Henry IV. Scene III.

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd and so much engraven to Falstaff.

Prince. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoken on; I can hear it with mine own ears; the worst that they express, but I am a second brother and that I am a proper fellow of my hands; and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

Enter Bardolph and Page.

Prince. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: a' had him from me Christian; and look, if the villain have not transformed him ape.

Bard. God save your grace!

Prince. And yours, most noble Bardolph!

Bard. Come, you virtuous ass, you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man-at-arms are you become! Is 'tis a matter to get a potte-pot's maidenhead?

Page. A' calls me e'en now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last I spied his eyes, and me-thought he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new petticoat and so peeped through.

Prince. Has not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away!

Page. Marry, my lord. Althea dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand; and therefore I call her dream.

Prince. A crown's worth of good interpretation: there's his boy.

Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers! Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him hanged among you, the gallowes shall have wrong.

Prince. And doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town: there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect. And how doth the martlemas, your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that be sick, it dies not.

Prince. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place; for look you how he writes.

Page. [Reads] John Falstaff, knight,—every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself: even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger but they say, 'There's some of the king's blood spilt.' 'How comes that?' says he, that takes upon him not to conceive. The answer is as ready as a borrower's cap, 'I am the king's poor cousin, sir.'

Prince. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they fetch it from Japhet. But to the letter.

Poins. [Reads] Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting. Why, this is a certificate.

Prince. Peace!

Poins. [Reads] I will imitate the honourable Romans in brevity: he sure means brevity in breath, short-winded. 'I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayest; and so, farewell.

'Thine, by yea and no, which is as much as to say, as thou useth him, Jack Falstaff with my familiars, John with my brothers and sisters, and Sir John with all Europe.'
KING HENRY THE FOURTH. PART II.—Act II., Scene iv.
ACT II.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE IV.

Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him: so that in speech, in gait,
In diet, in affection of delight.
In military rules, humour of blood,
He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous him!
O miracle of men! him did you leave,
Second a none, uncondescended by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage; to abide a field
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
Did seem defensible: so you left him.
Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong
To hold him honour more precise and nice
With others than with him! let them alone:
The marshal and the archbishop are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North.
Beshrew your heart,
Fair daughter, you do draw my spirits from me
With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go and meet with danger there,
Or it will seek me in another place
And find me worse provided.

Lady N.
O, fly to Scotland,
Till the nobles and the armed commons
Have of their puissance made a little taste. [king,

Lady P.
If they get ground and vantage of the
Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,
First let them try themselves. So did your son;
He was so suffer'd: so came I a widow;
And never shall have length of life enough
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recompensation to my noble husband. [mind

North. Come, come, go in with me. 'Tis with my
As with the tide swell'd up unto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way:
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back.
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exeunt

SCENE IV. — London. The Boar's-Head Tavern.
In Eastcheap.

Enter two Drawers.

Sec. Draw. Mass, thou sayest true. The prince once set a dish of apple-johns before him, and told him there were live more Sir Johns, and, putting off his hat, said 'I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, wither'd knights.' It angered him to the heart: but he hath forgot that.

First Draw. Why, then, cover, and set them down: and see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise; Mistress Tearsheet would fain hear some music. Dispatch. By this means they supped is too hot: they'll come in straight.

Sec. Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince and Master Pouns anon; and they will put on two of our jerkins and aprons; and Sir John must not know of it; Bardolph hath brought word.

First Draw. That's well: and it will be old Utis; it will be an excellent stratagem.

Sec. Draw. I'll see if I can find out Sneak. [Exit.

Enter Hostess and Doll Tearsheet.

Host. I faith, sweetheart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperatur: your pulsidge beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose. in good truth, la! But, i' faith, you have drunk too much canaries; and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say 'What's this?' How do you now?

Dol. Better than I was: hem!

Host. Why, that's well said; a good heart's worth gold. Lo, here comes Sir John.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. [Singing] 'When Arthur first in court—'

Empty the jordan. [Exit First Drawer. — [Singing]

And was a worthy king.' How now, Mistress Doll?

Host. Sick of a cold: yea, good faith.

Fal. So. So all her sect; an they be once in a cold, they are sick.

Dol. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals, Mistress Doll.

Dol. I make them: gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Dol. Yea, joy, our chains and our jewels.

Fal. 'Yon brocaries, pearls, and ooches,' for to serve bravely is to come hale off, you know: to come off the beach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely: to venture upon the charged chambers bravely,—

Dol. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion; you two never meet but you fall to some discord: you are both, i' good truth, as rheumatic as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's continencies. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must be you: you are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Dol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hog's head? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars, and whether I shall ever see thee again or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter First Drawer.

First Draw. Sir, Ancient Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Dol. Ho, ho, ho! a swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul-mouth'd rogue in Eng-land.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live among my neighbours; I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best: shut the door; there comes no swaggerers here: I have not lived all this while, to have swaggering now: shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?

Host. Pray ye, pacify yourself, Sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally, Sir John, ne'er tell me: your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before Master Tislick, the deputy, 'tother day: and, as he said to me, 't was no longer ago than Wednesday last, 'T good faith, neighbour Quickly,' says he; Master Dumbe, our minister, was by then; 'neighbour Quickly,' says he, ' receive those that are civil; for,' said he, 'you are in an ill name: now a' said so. I can tell whereupon; 'for,' says he, 'you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive,' says he, 'no swaggering companions.' There comes none here: you would bless you to hear what he said: no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater,
ACT II.  SECOND PART OF  KING HENRY IV.  SCENE IV.

Host. By my troth, captain; these are very bitter words.
Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.
Pist. Die men like dogs! give crowns like pins! Have we not Hiren here?
Host. 'O my word, captain, there's none such here. What the good-year! do you think I would deny her? For God's sake, be quiet.
Pist. Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calpolidis.
Come, give 's some sack.
'Si fortune me tormente, sperato me contento.'
Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire:
Give me some sack: and, sweetheart, lie thon there.

[Playing down his sword.

Come we to full points here; and are eteceterns

Pist. I, Pistole, I would be quiet. [Nothing]
Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif: what! we have seen the seven stars.

Host. For God's sake, thrust him down stairs: I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.
Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway nags!
Pist. Quilt him down, Bardolph, like a show-great shilling: nay, an a' do nothing but speak nothing, a' shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.
Pist. What! shall we have incension? shall we Imbrue?
[Snatching up his scord.

Then death encompass me asleep, and alridge my doleful days! Why, when, let grievous, ghostly, gaping wounds
Untwine the Sisters Three! Come, Atropos, I say!
Host. Here's a goody stuff toward! Fal. Give me my napier, boy.
Dol. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.
Fal. Get you down stairs.
[Drawing, and driving Pistol out.

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'! be in these tirrits and frigres. So; murder, I warrant now. Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons.

[Exit Pistol and Bardohe.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal's gone.
Ah, you whoreson little valiant villain, you!
Host. Are you not hurt 't the groin? methought a' made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter Bardolph.

Fal. Have you turned him out o' doors?
Bard. Yea, sir. The rascal's drunk: you have hurt him, sir, 't the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal! to brave me!

Dol. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou sweatest! come, let me wipe thy face; come on, you whoreson chaps: ah, rogue! if faith, I love thee; thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the Nine Worthies: ah, villain!

Pist. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Dol. Do, an thou darest for thy heart: an thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheeets.

Enter Music.

Fal. Let them play. Play, sirs. Sit on my knee, Doll. A rascal bragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Dol. I' faith, and thou followest him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, with curled tuft that save fighting o' days and foning o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter, behind, Prince Henry and Poinis, disguis.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head; do not bid me remember mine end.
ACT II. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE IV.

Dol. Sirrah, what humour's the prince of?
Fal. A good shallow young fellow: a' would have made a good pantler; a' would ha' clipped bread
Dol. He is a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit's thick as Tewksbury mustard! there's no more conceit in him than is in a malet.
Dol. Why does the prince love him so, then?
Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness, and a' has a quill as well and gouts count and foam, and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons, and rides the wild-mare with the boys, and jumps upon joined-stools, and swears with a good grace, and wears his boots very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg, and breeds no hate with telling of discreet speech; and such other gambol faculties a' has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoidupols.
Prince. Would not this nay of a wheel have his ea's cut off?
Poins. Let's beat him before his whore.
Prince. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.
Poins. Is it not strange that should so many years outlive performance?
Fal. Prince. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanac to that?
Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not tipping to his master's old tables, his
Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.
Dol. By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart.
Fal. I am old, I am old.
Dol. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurry young boy of them all.
Fal. What stuff will have a kittle of? I shall receive money o' Thursday: shalt have a cap tomorrow. A merry song, come: it grows late; we'll to bed. Thou'll forget me when I am gone.
Fal. By my troth, thou'rt set me a-weeping, an
I sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return: well, hearken at the end.
Fal. Some sack, Francis.
Prince. Anon, anon, sir. [Coming forward.
Poins. Ha! a bastard son of the king's? And art not thou Poins his brother?
Prince. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead!
Fal. A better than thou: I am a gentleman; thou art a drawer.
Prince. Very true, sir; and I come to draw you out by the ears.
Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London. Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?
Dol. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty, but this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art wel.
Fal. How, you fat fool! I scorched you. [Come.
Poins. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.
Prince. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how vilely did you speak of me even now even before this honest gentleman? and shall I forget?
Host. God's blessing of your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.
Fal. Didst thou hear me?
Prince. Ye, and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gad's-hill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.
ACT III. SECOND PART OF

KING HENRY IV. SCENE II.

Doll. I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst,—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Falstaff and Bardolph.

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty nine years, come pease-cold-time; but an honest and truer-hearted man,—well, fare thee well.

Doll. [Within] Mistress Tearsheet!

Host. What's the matter?

Doll. [Within] Did Mistress Tearsheet come to my master.

Host. O, run, Doll, run; run, good Doll: come. [She comes blubbering.] Yea, will you come, Doll?

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Westminster. The palace.

Enter the King in his night-gown, with a Page.

King. Go call the Earls of Surrey and of Warwick; But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, And well consider of them: make good speed.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep! O sleep, O gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how I have frightened thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down And steel my senses in forgetfulness? Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs, Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, And rush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber, Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great, Under the coverings of costly state, And lull'd with sound of sweetest melody? O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile In lodgsome beds, and leavest the kingly couch A watch-case or a common lorum-bell? wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains In cradle of the rude imperious surge And in the visitation of the winds, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads and hanging them With deafening clamour in the slippery clouds, That, with the hurly, death itself awakes? Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy reposè To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude, And in the calmest and most stillest night, With all appliances and means to boot, [Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. War. Many good morrows to your majesty! King. Is it good morrow, lords? War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past. [lords.] King. Why, then, good morrow to you all, my Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you? War. We have, my liege.

King. Then you perceive the body of our kingdom How foul it is; what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it. War. It is but as a body yet distemper'd; Which to his former strength may be restored With good advice, and most stillest mind: My Lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. King. O God! that one might read the book of fate, And see the revolution of the times Make mountains level, and the continent, Weary of solid firmness, melt itself Into the sea! and, other times, to see The beachy girthle of the ocean Too wide for Neptune's hips: how chances mock, And changes ill the cup of alteration With divers liquors! O, if this were seen, The happiest youth, viewing his progress through, What perils past, what crosses to ensuing, Would shut the book, and sit him down and die. 'Tis not ten years gone Since Richard and Northumberland, great friends, Did feast together, and in two years after Were they at war: it is but eight years since This Percy was the mainest of our soul, Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs And laid his love and life under my foot, Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard Gave him defiance. But which of you was by — You, cousin Neville, as I may remember— [To Warwick. When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears, Then check'd and rated by Northumberland, Did speak these words, now proved a prophecy? 'Northumberland, thou ladder by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascended to the throne:' Though then, God knows, I had no such intent, But that necessity so bow'd the state That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss: 'The time shall come,' thus did he follow it, 'The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head, Shall break into corruption; ' so went on, Foretelling this same time's condition And the division of our anity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives, Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd; The which observed, a man may prophesy, With a near prediction, of the substance of things As yet not come to life, which in their seeds And weak beginnings lie untreasured. Such things become the hatch and brood of time; And by the necessary form of this King Richard might create a perfect guess That great Northumberland, then false to him, Would of that seed grow to a greater fulness; Which should not find a ground to root upon, Unless on you.

King. Are these things then necessities? Then let us meet them like necessities: And that same word even now cries out on us: They say the bishop and Northumberland Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord; Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo, The numbers of the fear'd. Please it your grace To go to bed. Upon my soul, say lord, The powers that you already have sent forth Shall bring this prize in very easily. To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd A certain instance that Glendower is dead. Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill, And these unsweeten'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness.

King. I will take your counsel: And were these inward wars once out of hand, We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Gloucestershire. Before Justice Shallow's house.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting; Mouldy, Shadow, Wart, Fleeble, Bullelief, a Servant or two with them.

Shall. Come on, come on, come on, sir; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer, by the rood! And how doth my good cousin Silence?
Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.
Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow?
and your fairest daughter and mine, my goddaughter Ellen?
Sil. Ahas, a black osuel, cousin Shallow!
Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say my cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not?
Sil. Indeed, sir, to my cost.
Shal. A' must, then, to the inns o' court shortly.
I was once of Clement's Inn, where I think they will have a bad Shallow yet.
Sil. You were called 'lusty Shallow' then, cousin.
Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing indeed too, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Barnes, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squeue, a Cotswold man; you had not four such swinge-bucklers in all the inns o' court again: and I may say to you, we knew where the bona-rokas were and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now
Sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray,
 Duke of Norfolk.
Sil. This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?
Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. I see him break Skogan's head at the court-gate, when a' was a crack not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's Inn. Jesu, Jesu, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of my old acquaintance are dead!
Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.
Shal. Certain, 't is certain; very sure, very sure:
death, and the Psalmist saith, is certain to all: all shall die. If it be a good yoke of oxen at Stamford fair?
Sil. By my troth, I was not there.
Shal. Death is certain. Is old Double of your town living yet?
Sil. Dead, sir.
Shal. Jesu, Jesu, dead! a' drew a good bow; and death! a' shot a fine shoot: John a Gaunt loved him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead!
a' would have clapped it! the clot at twelve score;
and carried you a forehand shaft a fourteen and fourteen score, that it would have done a man's heart good to see. How a score of eves now?
Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good eves may be worth ten pounds.
Shal. And is old Double dead?
Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as Enter Bardolph and one with him.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen; I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?
Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace, and by your good pleasure with me.
Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you;
my captain, Sir John Falstaff, a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.
Shal. He greets me well, sir. I knew him a good backward man. How doth the good knight? May
I ask how my lady his wife doth?
Bard. Sir, pardon: a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.
Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated! it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were admirable. Accommodated! It comes of 'accommo-dato'; very good: a good phrase.
Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word.
Phrase call you it? by this good day, I know not the phrase: but I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command, by heaven. Accommodated; that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or when a man is, being, whereby a' may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.
Shal. It is very just.

Enter Falstaff.
Fal. Look, here comes good Sir John. Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: by my troth, you like well and bear your years very well; welcome with good Sir John.
Fal. I am glad to see you well, good Master
Robert Shallow: Master Surecade, as I think?
Shal. No, Sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.
Fal. Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.
Sil. Your good worship is welcome.
Fal. Fie! this is hot weather, gentlemen. Have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?
Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?
Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.
Shal. Where the devil is 't there? 't will be the roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so, so, so, so: yea, marry, sir: Ralph Mouldy!
Let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so. Let me see; where is Mouldy?
Mould. Here, an't please you.
Shal. What think you, Sir John? a good-lined fellow; young, strong, and of good friends.
Sil. Is thy name Mouldy?
Mould. Yea, an't please you.
Fal. 'T is the more time thou wert used.
Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, I' faith! things that are mouldy lack use: very singular good! in faith, well said, Sir John, very well said.
Fal. Prick him.
Mould. I was prick'd well enough before, an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery; you need not to have prick'd me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.
Fal. Go to: peace, Mouldy; you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.
Mould. Spent!
Fal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: know you where you are? For the other, Sir John: let me see: Simon Shadow!
Fal. Yea, marry, let me have him to sit under:
he's like to be a cold soldier.
Shal. Where's Shadow?
Shal. Here, sir.
Shal. Shadow, whose son art thou?
Shal. My mother's son, sir.
Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough, and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: it is often so, indeed; but much of the father's substance!
Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?
Fal. Shadow will serve for summer; prick him, for we have a number of shadows to fill up the mus-Shal. Thomas Wart! [inter-book.
Fal. Where's he?
Wart. Here, sir.
Fal. Is thy name Wart?
Wart. Yea, sir.
Fal. Thou art a very ragged wort.
Shal. Shall I prick him down, Sir John?
Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back and the whole frame stands upon that prick he has no more John.
Shal. Ha, ha, ha! you can do it, sir; you can do it:
I commend you well. Francis Feeble!
Fee. Here, sir.
Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?
Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.
351
Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?
Fal. You may; but if he had been a man's tailor, he'd ha' pricked you. Will thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?
[Exit.]

Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove or most magnanimous mouse. Prick the woman's tailor: well, Master Shallow; deep, Master Shallow.

Fal. I would Wart might have gone, sir.
Fal. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou might'st mend him and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forbear.
Fee. It shall suffice, sir. [Feeble.
Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble. Who Shal. Peter Bullcalf o' the green! [js next?
Yea, marry, let's see Bullcalf.
Ball. Here, sir.
Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow! Come, prick me Ball. Shall be the roar again.

Bell. O Lord! good my lord captain,—
Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?
Bell. O Lord, sir! I am a diseased man.
Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bell. A whoreson cold, sir, a cough, sir, which I cannot get out of me, in the king's affairs upon his coronation-day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order that thy friends shall ring for thee. Is there all? Shal. Here is two more called than your number; you see the four faces on the back, sir: and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my troth, Master Shallow.

Shal. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night at the windmill in Saint George's field?

Fal. No more of that, good Master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha! 't was a merry night. And is Jane Nightwork alive?

Fal. Sir, she lives, Master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Fal. Never, never; she would always say she could not abide Master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart.
She was then a bona-roba. Dost thou hold her own?

Fal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain she's old; and had Robin Nightwork by old Nightwork before I came to Clement's Sil. That's fifty-five year ago. [Inn.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that that knight and I have seen! Ha, Sir John, said I well?

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, Master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have: our watchword was 'I'm but a boy!' Come, let's to dinner: come, let's to dinner: Jesus, thou days that we have seen! Come, come.

[Exeunt Falstaff and the Justices.

Ball. Good Master Corporate Bardolph, stand my friend; and here's four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be bound, for jest, and yet for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends: else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

Ball. Go to; stand aside.

Maud. And, good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do anything about her when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself: you shall have forty, Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Sir. Fee. By my troth, I care not: a man can die but once: we owe God a death: I'll never bear a base mind, and how my destiny so; an he be not, so; a man is too good to serve 's prince; and let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said: thou 'rt a good fellow.

Sir. Fee. Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter Falstaff and the Justices.

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?
Shal. Four of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you: I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bullcalf.
Fal. Go to; well.
Shal. Come, Sir John, which four will you have?
Fal. Do you choose for me.

[Shadow.

Marry, then, Mouldy, Bullcalf, Feeble and Fal. Mouldy and Bullcalf: for you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service: and for your part, Bullcalf, grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong: they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a tailor? I will tell you: for I am a tailor, and I will tell you how to choose a tailor. I will give you a piece of advice: I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong: they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a tailor? I will tell you: for I am a tailor, and I will tell you how to choose a tailor. I will give you a piece of advice: I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice.

Fal. Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a tailor? I will tell you: for I am a tailor, and I will tell you how to choose a tailor. I will give you a piece of advice: I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice. I will give you a piece of advice.

Shal. He is not his craft's master; he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end Green, when I lay at Clement's Inn,—I was then Sir Dagouet in Court: there was a little quiet fellow, and a' would manage your affairs, and a' would about and about, and come in and come out; and I had two men, 'rah, 'tah, 'tah, would a' say; 'bonnece' would a' say; and away again would a' go, and again would a' come: I shall ne'er see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, Master Shallow. God keep you, Master Silence: I will not use many words with you. Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night. Bardolph, give the soldiers coats.

Shal. Sir John, the Lord bless you! God prosper your affairs! Go send me peace! At your return visit our house; let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure I will with ye to the court.

Fal. 'Fore God, I would you would, Master Shallow.
ACT IV.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE I.

Turnbull Street; and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's Inn like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when a' was naked, he went for all the world, like a forked rushdish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: a' was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible: a' was the very genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him master. He had lived in the rearward of the fashion, and sung those tunes to the over-scratched huswives that he heard the carmen whistle, and swore they were his fancies or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a square, and talks as familiarly of John a Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn a' ne'er saw him but once in the Tilt-yard; and then he took him home, and it shall go hard but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me: if the young duke be a baft for the old pirate, I see no reason in the law of nature but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end.  [Exit.

SCENE I. — Yorkshire. Gautree Forest.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd?  [Grace.

Hast. 'Tis Gautree Forest, an't shall please your Arch. Here stand, my lords; and send discoverers To Mowbr. The number of our that we gave them out. Let us way on and face them in the field.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?  [Ground

Enter a Messenger.

West. Of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In goodly form comes on the enemy; And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Mowbr. The junctors of our that we gave them out. Let us way on and face them in the field.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?  [Enter Westmoreland.

Mowbr. I think it is my Lord of Westmoreland. West. Health and fair greeting from our general, The prince, Lord John and Duke of Lancaster. Arch. Say on, my Lord of Westmoreland, in What doth concern your coming?  [Peace: West. Then, my lord, Unto your grace do I in chief address The substance of my speech. If the rebellion Came like itself, in base and abject routs, Men led not by bloody youth, guarded with dogs, And contemnenced by boys and beggarly, I say, if damned commotion so appear'd, In his true, native and most proper shape, You, reverend father, and these noble lords Had not been here, to dress the ugly form Of base and bloody insurrection With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop, Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd, Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd, Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd, Whose white investments figure innocence, The dove and very blessed spital of peace, Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself Out of the speech of peace that bears such grace, Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war; Turning your books to graves, your ink to blood, Your pens to lances and your tongue divine To a loud trumpet and a point of war?  [Arch. Wherefore do I this? so the question stands. Briefly to this end: we are the amtes, And with our surfeiting and wanton hours Have brought ourselves into a burning fever, And we must bleed for it; of which disease Our late king, Richard, being infected, died. But, my most noble Lord of Westmoreland, I take not on me here as a physician, Nor do I as an enemy to peace Troop in the throns of military men; But rather show awhile like fearful war, To diet rank minds sick of happiness And purge the obstructions which begin to stop Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly. I have in equal balance justly weigh'd What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we And find our griefs heavier than our offences. We see which way the stream of time doth run, And are enforced from our most quiet there By the rough torrent of occasion; And have the summary of all our griefs, When time shall serve, to show in articles; Which long ere this we offer'd to the king, And might by no suit gain our audience: When we are wrong'd and would unfold our griefs, We are denied access unto his person Even by those men that most have done us wrong. The dangers of the days but newly gone, Whose memory is written on the earth With yet appearing blood, and the examples Of every minute's instance, present now, Hath put us in these ill-beseeming arms, Not to break peace or any branch of it, But to establish here a peace indeed, Concurring both in name and quality. West. When ever yet was your appeal denied? Wherein have you been galled by the king? What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you, That you should seal this lawless bloody book Of forged rebellion with a seal divine And consecrate commotion's bitter edge? Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth, To brother born an household cruelty, While my quarrel in the field hard And West. There is no need of any such redress; Or if there were, it not belongs to you. Mowbr. Why not to him in part, and to us all That feel the bruises of the days before, And suffer the condition of these times To lay a heavy and unequal hand Upon our honours? 23
West. The King that loved him, as the state stood then, Was forced to enforce compell'd to bid him: And then that Henry Bolingbroke and he, Being mounted and both robed in their seats, Their neighing coursers dashing of the spur, Their arm'd staves in charge, their beavers down, Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel And such true angels as their lives That by indigence from their throne. Then, then, when there was nothing could My father from the breast of Bolingbroke, [stay'd O, when the king did throw his wander down, His own life hung upon the staff he threw: Then the be down himself and all their lives That by indigence from their throne. Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke. West. You speak, Lord Mowbray, now you know not what. The Earl of Hereford was resisted them. In England the most valiant gentleman: Who knows on whom fortune would then have But if your father had been victor there, [smiled? He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry: For all the country in a general voice Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers and love Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on. And bless'd and grace'd indeed, more than the king. But this is mere digression from my purpose. Here come 1 from our princely general To know your grieves; to tell you from his grace That he will give you audience; and wherein It shall appear that ye deserving are just, You shall enjoy them, every thing set off. That might so much as think you enemies. Mowbr. But he hath forced us to compel this offer; And it proceeds from policy, not love. West. Mowbray, you overween to take it so; This offer comes from mercy, not from fear: For, lo! within a ken our army lies, Upon mine honour, all too confident, To give admittance to a thought of fear. Our battle is more full of names than yours, Our men more perfect in the use of arms, Our armour all as strong, our cause the best: Then reason will our hearts should be as good. Say you not then our offer is compell'd. Mowbr. Well, by my will we shall admit no parley. West. That argues but the shame of your offence: A rotten case abides no handling. Hast. Hath the Prince John a full commission, In very ample virtue of his father, To hear and absolutely to determine Of what conditions we shall stand upon? West. That is intended in the general's name: I muse you no slight a question; [schedule Arch. Then take, my Lord of Westmoreland, this For this contains our general grievances: Each several article herein redress'd, All members of our cause, both here and hence, That are insinu'd to this action, Acquitted by a true subject his form And present execution of our wills To us and to our purposes confined, We come within our awful banks again And knit our powers to the arm of peace. [lors, West. This will I show the general. Please you, In sight of both our battles we may meet; And either end in peace, which God so frame! On to the place of difference call the swords Which must decide it. Arch. My lord, we will do so. [Exit West. Mowbr. There is a thing within my bosom tells me That no conditions of our peace can stand. Hast. Fear ye not that: if we can make our Upon such large terms and so absolute [peace As our conditions shall consist upon, Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains. Mowbr. Yea, but our valuation shall be such That every slight and false-derived cause, Yea, every trivial reason, and each less Shall to the king taste of this action; That were our royal faiths martyrs in love, We shall be wronn'd with so rough a wind That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff And good from bad find no partition. [weary Arch. No, no, my lord. Note this; the king is Of dainty and such pickings grievances: For he hath found to end one doubt by death Revives two greater in the heirs of life, And therefore will he wipe his tables clean And keep no tell-tale to his memory That may report and hereafter may New to remembrance; for full well he knows He cannot so precisely weed this land As his misdoings present occasion; His foes are so enrooted with his friends That, plucking to unfix an enemy He doth intensify so and shake a friend: So that this land, like an offensive wife That hath enraged him on to offer strokes, As he is striking, holds his infant up And hangs resolved correction in the arm That was uprear'd to execution. Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods On late offenders, that he now doth lack The very instruments of chastisement: So that his power, like to a fangless lion, May offer, but not hold. 'Tis very true: And therefore be assured, my good lord marshel, If we do now make our atonement well, Our peace will, like a broken limb united, Grow stronger for the breaking. Mowbr. Be it so, Here is return'd my Lord of Westmoreland. Re-enter Westmoreland. West. The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship To meet his grace just distance between us. Mowbr. Your grace of York, in God's name, then, set forward. Arch. Before, and greet his grace: my lord, we come. [Exeunt. SCENE II.—Another part of the forest. Enter, from one side, Mowbray, attended; afterwards the Archbishop, Hastings, and others; from the other side, Prince John of Lancaster, and Westmoreland; Officers, and others with them. Lan. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray: Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop: And so to you, Lord Hastings, and to all. My Lord of York, it better show'd with you When that your flock, assembled by the bell, Encircl'd with all that you hold in reverence Your exposition on the holy text Than now to see you here an iron man, Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum, Turning the word to sword and life to death. That man that sits within a monarch's heart, ACT IV.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE III.

And ripens in the sunshine of his favour, Would he abuse the countenance of the king, Alack, that it is hard, when he shall是他 seven draughts In shadow of such greatness! With you, lord bishop, It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken How deep you were within the books of God? To us the speaker in his parliament; To us it is not fit to make use of God himself; The very open and intelligent Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven And our dull workings. O, who shall believe But you misuse the reverence of your place, Employ the countenance and grace of heaven, As a false favourite doth his prince's name, In deeds dishonourable? You have ta'en up, Under the counterfeited zeal of God, The subjects of his substitute, my father, And both against the peace of heaven and him Have here up-swarm'd the.

Arch. (Exit.) Good my Lord of Lancaster, I am not here against your father's peace; But, as I told my Lord of Westmoreland, The time misorder'd doth, in common sense, Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form, To hold our safety up; I sent your grace The place and particulars of our grief; (court, The which hath been with scorn shoved from the Whereon this Hydræson of war is born; Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleep With grant of our most just and right desires, And true obedience, of this madness cured, Scoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Mowb. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes To the last man.

Host. And though we here fall down, We have supplies to second our attempt: If they miscarry, their shall second them; And so success of mischief shall be born And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up Whiles England shall have generation. [shallow.

Lan. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleaseth your grace to answer them duly.

Mowb. How far you do like their articles. [reently

Lan. I like them all, and do allow them well, And swear here, by the honour of my blood, My father's purposes have been mistook, And some about him have too lavishly Wasted his mead and authority.

Mowb. My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd; Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you, Discharge your powers unto their several counties, As we will ours: and here between the armies Let's drink together friendly and embrace, That all their eyes may bear those tokens home Of our restored love and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses.

Lan. I give it you, and will maintain my word: And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Host. Go, captain, and deliver to the army The true and proper words; let them have part and part; I know it will well please them. He's thee, captain. [Exit Officer.

Arch. To you, my noble Lord of Westmoreland. West. I pledge your grace; and, if you knew what pains I have my mind to breed this present peace, You would drink freely: but my love to ye Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.

Health to my lord and gentle cousin, Mowbray. Mowb. You wish me health, that I may have a happy season; For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. Against ill chances men are ever merry; But heaviness forcruns the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow,
Serves to say this, some good thing comes to.
Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true.

Lan. The word of peace is render'd: hark, how they upheave!

Mowb. This had been cheerful after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
For then both parties nobly are subdued, And neither party loser.

Lan. Go, my lord, And let our army be discharged.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Host. Now cousain, wherefore stands our army still? West. They are leaders, having charge from you, Will not go off until they hear you speak. [stand.

Lan. They know their duties.

Re-enter Hastings.

Host. My lord, our army is dispersed already: Like youthful steers unyoked, they take their courses

West. Each hurries toward his home and sporting-place.

West. Good tidings, my Lord Hastings; for the I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason: [which And you, lord archbishop, and you, Lord Mowbray, Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

Lan. I have sworn thee none: I promised you redress of these same grievances Whereof you did complain; which, by mine hon-
I will perform with a most Christian care. [hour, But for you, rebels, look to taste the due Meet for rebellion and such acts as yours. Most shallowly did you these arms commence, Pardoned you; hence and foollisly believe, Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd stray:

God, and not we, hath safely fought to-day. Some guard these traitors to the block of death, Treason's true bed andielder up of breath.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Another part of the forest.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Falstaff and Cole-vile, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you, and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Cole-vile of the dale.

Fal. Well, then, Coleville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale: Coleville shall be still your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeon your place, and place deep enough; so shall you be still Coleville of the dale.

Cole. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, who'er I am. Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death; therefore rise up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think you are Sir John Falstaff, and in that thought yield me.
ACT IV. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE IV.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my own. An I had but a belly of any indifference, I was simply the most active fellow in Europe: my womb, my womb, my womb, Undo's my. Here comes our general.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, Blunt, and others.

Lan. The heat is past; follow no further now: Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland. [Exit Westmoreland.

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while? When every thing is ended, then may you come: These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life, One time or other break some gallows' back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? I have, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility; I have foudered nine score and odd posts: and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and human heart, taken Sir John Coleville of the dale, a most furious knight and valorous enemy. But what of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may justly say, with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome, 'I came, saw, and overcame.' [serving.

Lan. It was more of his courtesy than your devout mind here be, and here I yield him: and beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top on't, Coleville kissing my foot: to the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show like gilt two-pences to me, and I in the clear sky of fame o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the cinders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble: therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

Lan. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine, then.

Lan. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

Lan. Which Coleville?

Fal. Cole. It is, my lord.

Lan. A famous rebel art thou, Coleville.

Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole. I am, my lord, but as my betters are Thesat led me hither: had they been ruled by me, You should have won them dearer than you have.

Fal. I know not how they sold themselves: but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away gratis; and I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Lan. Now, have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made and execution stay'd.

Lan. Send Coleville with his confederates To York, to present execution: Blunt, lead him hence; and see you guard him sure. [Exeunt Blunt and others with Coleville.

And now dispatch we toward the court, my lords: I hear the king my father is sore sick: Our news shall go before us to his majesty, Which, cousin, you shall bear to comfort him, And we with sober speed will follow you. But, my lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go Through Gloucestershire: and, when you come to court, Stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.

Lan. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition, Shall better speak of you than you deserve. [Exeunt all but Falstaff.

Fal. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better than your dukedom. Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man cannot make him laugh; but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never none of these demure boys come to any proof; for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-mongers, these they fall into a kind of male green sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches: they are generally fools and cowards; which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it: it ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull and cruddy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble fiery and delectable shapes; which, delivered o'er to the voice, the tongue, which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is, the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pulsilainity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme: it illumineth the face, which, as a beacon gone, doth guide you. Master Robert Shallow, the big kingdom, man, to arm; and then the vital commoners and inland petty spirits must me all to their captain, the heart, who, great and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a work; and learning a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil, till sack commences it and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like sheep, sterile and bare land, manured, husbanded, and filled with excellent endeavour of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first humane principle I would teach them should be, to forswear thin potations and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter Bardolph.

How now, Bardolph?

Bard. The army is discharged all and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Gloucestershire; and then will I visit Master Robert Shallow, the big kingdom, man, to arm; and then the vital commoners and inland petty spirits must me all to their captain, the heart, who, great and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a work; and learning a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil, till sack commences it and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like sheep, sterile and bare land, manured, husbanded, and filled with excellent endeavour of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first humane principle I would teach them should be, to forswear thin potations and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter the King, the Princes Thomas of Clarence and Humphrey of Gloucester, Warwick, and others.

King. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end To this debate that bleedeth at our doors, We will our youth lend on to higher fields And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Our navy is address'd, our power collected, Our substitutes in absence well invested, And every thing lies level to our wish. Only, we want a little personal strength; And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot, Come underneath the yoke of government. Warr. Both which we doubt not but your majesty Shall soon enjoy.

King. Humphrey, my son of Gloucester. Where is the prince your brother? [Windsor. Glou. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord, at King. And how accompanied? Glou. I do not know, my lord. King. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?
ACT IV.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE V.

Glow.  No, my good lord; he is in presence here.

Clar.  What would my lord and father?  [fence.

King.  Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clar.
How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?
He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas;
Thou hast a better place in his affection
Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy,
And noble offices thou mayst effect
Of mediation, after I am dead,
Between his greatness and thy other brethren:
Therefore omit him not; blot not his love,
Nor lose the good image of his grace
By seeming cold or careless of his will;
For he is gracious, if he be observed:
He hath a tear for pity and a hand
Open as day for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being licensed, he's flint,
As humorous as winter and as sudden
As flaws concealed in the spring of day.
His temper, therefore, must be well observed:
Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclined to mirth;
But, being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working.  Learn this,
Thomas,
And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion,
As, force perforce, the age will pour it in—
Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
As acornitum or rash gunpowder.

Clar.  I shall observe him with all care and love.
King.  Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas?

Clar.  He is not there to-day; he dines in London.

King.  And how accompanied?  canst thou tell that?
[lowers.

Clar.  With Poins, and other his continual fol.

King.  Must subject the least soil to weeds;
And he, the noble image of my youth,
Is overspread with them: therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death:
The blood weeps from my heart when I do shape
In forms imaginary the ungilded days
And rot these trees that you shall look upon
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet together,
O, with what wings shall his affections fly
Towards fronting peril and opposed decay!  [quite.

War.  My gracious lord, you look beyond him
The prince but studies his companions [guage,
Like a strange tongue, wherein, to gain the lan-
Tis needful that the most inmodest word
Be look'd upon and learn'd; which once attain'd,
Your highness knows, comes to no further use
But to be known and hated.  So, like gross terms,
The prince will in the perfection of time
Cast off his followers; and their memory
Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which his grace must mete the lives of others,
Turning past evils to advantages.  [comb

King.  'Tis seldom when the bee doth leave her
In the dead carrion.

Enter Westmoreland.

Who's here?  Westmoreland?

West.  Health to my sovereign, and new happiness
Added to that that I am to deliver!
Prince John your son doth kiss your grace's hand:
Mowbray, the Bishop Scroop, Hastings and all
Are brought to the correction of your law;
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd,
But Peace puts forth her olive every where.

The manner how this action hath been borne
Here at more leisure may your highness read,
With every course in his particular.

King.  O Westmoreland, thou art a summer bird,
Which ever in the launch of winter sings
The lifting up of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Look, here's more news.

Har.  From enemies heaven keep your majesty;
And, when they stand against you, may they fall
As those that I gave you to observe.
The Earl Northumberland and the Lord Bardolph,
With a great power of English and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown:
The manner and true order of the fight
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

King.  And wherefore should these good news make me sick?
Will Fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach and no food,
Rich is the pea, in health; or else a feast
And takes away the stomach; such are the rich,
That have abundance and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news;
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:
O me! come near me; now I am much ill.

Glow.  Comfort, your majesty!—O my royal father!

Clar.  West.  My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look up.

War.  Be patient, princes; you do know, these fits
Are with his highness very ordinary.
Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be well.

Clar.  No, no, he cannot long hold out these pangs:
The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the more that should confine it in
So thin that life looks through and will break out.

Glow.  The people fear me; for they do observe
Unfather'd heirs and happily births of nature:
The seasons change their manners, as the year
Had found some months asleep and leap'd them over.

Clar.  The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before
This our great-grand'sire, Edward, sick'd and died.

War.  Speak, lower, prince; for the king recovers.

Glow.  This apoplectic will certainly be his end.

King.  I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence
Into some other chamber: softly, pr'ythee.

SCENE V.—Another chamber.

The King lying on a bed: Clarence, Gloucester,
Warwick, and others in attendance.

King.  Let there be no noise made, my gentle
Unless some dull and favourable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War.  Call for the music in the other room.

King.  Set me the crown upon my pillow here.

Clar.  His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War.  Less noise, less noise!

Enter Prince Henry.

Prince.  Who saw the Duke of Clarence?

Clar.  I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

Prince.  How now! rain within doors, and none
How doth the king?

Glow.  Exceeding ill.

Prince.  Heard he the good news yet?

tell it him.

Glow.  He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

Prince.  If he be sick with joy, he'll recover without physic.

War.  Not so much noise, my lords; sweet prince,
The king your father is disposed to sleep.

-357
ACT IV.  SECOND PART OF  KING HENRY IV.  SCENE V.

Clar. Let us withdraw into the other room.
War. Will 't please your grace to go along with us?
Prince. No; I will sit and watch here by the [Exit all but the Prince.
War. Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night! sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound and half so deeply sweet
As he whose brow with homely biggen bound
Snores out the watch of night. O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. My gracious lord! my father!
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep
That from this golden rigol hath divorced
So many English kings. Thy duteous care
Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood,
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:
My duteous care from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. — Lo, here it sits thousandfold
Which God shall guard; and put the world's whole
Into one giant arm, it shall not force [strength
This lineal honour from me: this from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me.
[Exit.
King. Warwick! Gloucester! Clarence!
Re-enter Warwick, Gloucester, Clarence, and the rest.
Clar. Doth the king call?
War. What would your majesty? How fares your King. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?
Clar. We left the prince here, my brother here; my
Who undertook to sit and watch by you.
[See him.
King. The Prince of Wales! Where is he? let me
He is not here.
[Exit Warwick.
Glov. He came not through the chamber where
Our master stay'd?
King. Where is the crown? who took it from my
War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it [Here him out.
King. The prince hath ta'en it hence: go, seek
Is he so hasty that he doth suppose
My sleep? death?
Find him, my Lord of Warwick; chide him hither.
[Exit Warwick.
This part of his conjoinus with my disease,
And helps to end me. See, sons, what things you
How quickly nature falls into revolt [Are!
When gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry:
For fear they had been engrossed and piled up
The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, culling from every flower
The virtuous sweets,
Our souls, clad with wax, our mouths with
We bring to it the hive, and, like the bees,
Are murdered for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the ending father.
[Re-enter Warwick.
Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determined me?
War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks,
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow
That tyranny, which never quaff'd but blood,
Would not beholding him have wash'd his knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is growing hither.
King. But wherefore did he take away the crown?
Re-enter Prince Henry.
Lo, where he comes. Come hither to me, Harry.
Deport the chamber, Jealousy.
[Exeunt Warwick and the rest.
Prince. I never thought to hear you speak again.
King. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
[Thought:
Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair
That thou wilt needs into what form thy honours
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.
Stay but a little: for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind
That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.
Thou hast stolen that which after some few hours
Were thine without offence; and at my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:
Thy life did manifest thou lovedst me not,
And thou wilt have me die assured of it.
Whom holy thoughts engag'ds in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted to thy own heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.
What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear
That the heart crowned, not yet I am dead.
Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse
Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head:
Only compound me with forgotten dust;
Give that which gave thee life unto the worms.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to make a form:
Harry the Fifth is crown'd: up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence!
And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!
Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your scum:
Have you no ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,
Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more;
England shall double gild his treble guilt,
England shall give him office, honour, might;
For thou shalt make Harry from hence a knave,
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
Shall flesh his tooth on every innocent.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that thy care could not withstand thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again.
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants!
Prince. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke
Ere you with grief had brimmed your ear.
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And He that wears the crown immortally
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more
Than as your honour and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which my most inward, that will wear a glorious spirit
Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bending.
God witness with me, when I here came in,
And found no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
O, let me in my present wilderness die
And not alive to show the glorious world
The noble change that I have purposed!
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,
I spake unto this crown as having sense, And thus upbraided it: 'The care on thee depending Hath fed upon the body of my father; Therefore, thou best of gold art worst of gold: Other, less fine in carat, is more precious, Preserving life in medicine potable; But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd, Hast eat thy bearer up.' Thus, my most royal liege, Accusing it, I put it on my head: To try with it, as with an enemy That had before my face murder'd my father, The quarrel of a true inheritor. But if it did infect my blood with joy, Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride; If apter, or vain, or pride of mine Did with the least affectation of a welcome Give entertainment to the might of it, Let God for ever keep it from my head And make me as the poorest vassal is That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!'

King. O my son, God put it in thy mind to take it hence, That thou might'st win the more thy father's love, Pleading so wisely in excuse of it! Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed; And hear, I think, the very latest counsel That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my son, By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways I met this crown; and I myself know well How troublesome it sat upon my head. To thee it shall descend with better quiet, Better opinion, better confirmation; For all the soul of the achievement goes With me into the earth. It seem'd in me But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand, And I had many living to upbraid My gain of it by their assistances; Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed, Wounding supposed peace: all these bold fears Thou see'st with peril I have answered; For all my reign hath been but as a scene Acting that argument: and now my death Changes the mode; for what in me was purchased, Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort. So thou the garland wear'st successively. [do, Yet though thou stand'st more sure than I could

Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green; And all my friends, which thou must make thy friends, Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out; By whose fell working I was first advanced And by whose power I well might lodge a fear To be again displaced: which to avoid, I cut thee off; and had a purpose now To head out mercy to the Holy Land; Last rest and lying still might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry, Be it thy course to busy giddy minds With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out, May waste the memory of the former days. More would I, but my huns are wasted so That strength of speech is utterly denied me. How I came by the crown, O God forgive; And grant it may with thee in true peace live! Prince. My gracious liege, You won it, wore it, kept it, gave me it; Then plain and right must my possession be: Which I with more than with a common pain 'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter Lord John of Lancaster.

King. Look, look, here comes my John of Lanz-estor. [father! Lanz. Health, peace, and happiness to my royal King. Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John; But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown From this bare wither'd trunk: upon thy sight My worldly business makes a period. Where is my Lord of Warwick? Prince. My Lord of Warwick![Enter Warwick, and others.

King. Doth any name particular belong Unto the lodging where I first did swoon? War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord. King. Laud be to God! even there my life must It hath been prophesied to me many years, [end. I should not die but in Jerusalem; Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land: But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie; In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. — Gloucestershire. Shallow's house.

Enter Shallower, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pie, sir, you shall not away to-night. What, Davy, I say! [low.

Fal. You must excuse me, Master Robert Shall. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused. Why, Davy!

Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy, let me see, Davy; let me see, Davy; let me see: yea, marry, William cook; bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excused. Davy. Marry, sir, thus; those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir, shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook: are there no young pigeons? Davy. Yes, sir. Here is now the smith's note for shoeing and plough-iron.

Shal. Let it be cast and paid. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had: and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. A' shall answer it. Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kieskawills, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yea, Davy. I will use him well: a friend i'the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they arearrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are backbitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul liken.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy: about thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wocnot against Clemens Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There is many complaints, Davy, against that Visor: that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship that he is a knave, sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knife is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years: and if I could once quarter bear out a knife against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knife is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to! I say he shall have no wrong. Look after that. [Exit.]

Fal. Where are you, Sir John? Come, come, come, off with your boots. Give me your hand, Master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind Master Bardolph: and welcome, my tall fellow [to the Prince].

Fal. I'll follow you, good Master Robert Shallow.

[Exit Shallow.] Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exit Bardolph and Page.] If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermits' staves as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: they, by observing of him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving-man: their spirits are so married in conjunction with the part they must strike, and so much interwoven together, that is like so many wild-geese. If I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with Master Shallow that no man could better command his servants. It is certain that either wise men, or ignorant carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing out of six fashions, which is four terms, or two actions, and one suit, either with or without intervallums. O, it is much that a lie with a slight oath and a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up!

Shal. [Within] Sir John!

Fal. I come, Master Shallow; I come, Master Shallow.

[Exit.]

Act V. Second Part of King Henry IV. Scene ii.

Enter Warwick and the Lord Chief Justice, meeting.

War. How now, my lord chief-justice! whither
Ch. Just. How doth the king? [away?]
War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all ended.
Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.
War. He's walk'd the way of nature; And to our purposes he lives no more. [him:]
Ch. Just. I would his majesty had call'd me with The service that I truly did his life Hath left me open to all injuries. War. Indeed I think the young king loves you not. Ch. Just. I know he doth not, and do arm myself To welcome the condition of the time, Which cannot look more hideously upon me Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter Lancaster, Clarence, Gloucester, Westmoreland, and others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry: O that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That true ears and to spiritual judgment? Ch. Just. O God, I fear all will be overturn'd! Lan. Good morrow, cousin Warwick, good morrow. Glou. [Good morrow, cousin.]

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier! Glou. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend in- And I dare swear you borrow not that face [deed; Of seeming sorrow, it is sure your own. Lan. Though no man be assured what grace to find, You shall stand in confidence to do no care, Sir John? I am the sorrier; would 't were otherwise. [fair; Clar. Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff Which swains against your stream of quality. Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in hon- [led by your impartial counsel, such a soul; [our, And never shall you see that I will beg A ragged and forested'd remission. If truth and upright innocency fail me, I'll to the king my master that is dead, And tell him who hath sent me after him. War. Here comes the prince.

Enter King Henry the Fifth, attended.

Ch. Just. Good morrow; and God save your majesty!

King. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, Sits not as well on me as you think.
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear: This is the English, not the Turkish court; Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds, But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers, For, by my faith, it very well becomes you: Sorrow belongeth to the anxious in your świata That I will deeply put the fashion on And wear it in my heart: why then, be sad; But entertain no more of it, good brothers, Than a joint burden laid upon us all. For me, by Heaven, I bid you be assured, I'll be your father and your brother too; Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares: Yet weep that Harry's dead; and so will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears By number into hours of happiness.

Princes. We hope no other from your majesty.

King. You all look strangely on me: and you most; You are, I think, assured I love you not.

Ch. Just. I am assured, if I be measured rightly, Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

King. No! How must a prince of my great hopes forget So great indignities you laid upon me? What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison The immediate heir of England! Was this easy? May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten? Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father; The image of his power lay then in me: And, in the administration of his law, Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth, Your highness pleased to forget my place, The majesty and power of law and justice, The image of the king whom I presented, And strung me in my way of judgment; Whereon, as an offender to your father, I gave bold way to my authority And did commit you. If the deed were ill, Be you contented, wearing now the garland, To have your set your decrees at nought, To pluck down justice from your awful bench, To trip the course of law and blunt the sword That guards the peace and safety of your person; Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image And mock your workings in a second body. Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours; Be now the father and propose a son. Hear your own dignity so much profaned, See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted, Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd; And then imagine me taking your part.
And in your power soft silencing your son;
After this cold consideration, sentence me;
And, as you are a king, speak in your state
What I have done that misbecame my place,
Moreover, my most merciful sovereign, [well;]
King. You are right, justice, and you weigh this Therefore still bear the balance and the sword:
And I do wish your honours may increase,
Till you do live to see a son of mine
Offend. This I obey you, as I did.
So shall I live to speak my father's words:
'Happy am I, that have a man so bold,
That dares do justice on my proper son;
And not less happy, having such a son,
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hands of justice.' You did commit me:
For which, I do commit into your hand
The unstained sword that you have used to bear;
With this remembrance, that you use the same
With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit
As you have done against me. There is your hand.
You shall be as a father to my youth:
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear,
And I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well-practised wise directions.
And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you;
My father is gone wild into his grave,
For in his tomb lie my affections;
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectation of the world,
To frustrate prophecies and to raze out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now;
Now doth it turn and ebb back to the sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods
And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
Now call we our high court of parliament:
And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best govern'd nation;
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us;
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.
Our coronation done, we will accite,
As I before remember'd, all our state;
And, God consigning to my good intents,
No prince nor peer shall have just cause to say,
God shorten Harry's happy life one day! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Glocestiershire. Shallow's orchard.
Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Davy, Bardolph, and the Page.

Shal. Nay, you shall see my orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of caraways, and so forth: come, cousin Silence; and then to bed.

Fal. 'Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, Sir John: marry, good air. Spread, Davy; spread, Davy; well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John: by the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper: a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down: come cousin Silence: and then to bed.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John: by the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper: a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down: come cousin Silence: and then to bed.

Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer.

And praise God for the merry year;
When flesh is cheap and females dear,
And lusty lads roam here and there
So merrily,
And ever among so merry.

Fal. There's a merry heart! Good Master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give Master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sweet, sir; I'll be with you anon; most sweet Sir, sit. Master page, good master page, sit.

Proface! What you want in mealt, we'll have it in drink: but you must bear; the heart's all. [Exit.

Shal. Be merry, Master Bardolph; and, my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all:

For women are shrews, both short and tall:
'Tis merry in hall when beards wag all,
And welcome merry Shrove-tide.

Be merry, be merry.

Fal. I did not think Master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There's a dish of leather-coats for you.

[To Bardolph.

Shal. Davy!

Davy. Your worship! I'll be with you straight [to Bardolph]. A cup of wine, sir?

Sil. A cup of wine that's brisk and fine,

And drink unto the lemon mine;

And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, Master Silence.

Sil. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet o' the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, Master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come; [Singing].

I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wastenest any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart. Welcome, my little tiny thief [to the Page], and welcome indeed too. I'll drink to Master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.

Davy. I hope to see Lord on once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together, ha! will you not, Master Bardolph?

Bard. Ye, sir, in a pottle-pot.

Shal. By God's buggins, I thank thee; the knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that. A' will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. [ Knocking within.] Look who's at door there, ho! who knocks?

[Exit Davy.

Fal. Why, now you have done me right.

[To Silence, seeing him take off a bumper.

Sil. Do me right.

And dub me knight:

Samingo.

Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so. [somewhat.

Sil. Is't so? Why then, say an old man can do

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. An't please your worship, there's one

Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court! let him come in.

Enter Pistol.

How now, Pistol!

Pist. Sir John, God save you!

Fal. What wind and blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good. Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in this realm.

Sil. By'r lady, I think a' be, but goodman Puff of Barson.

Pist. Puff! Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!
Sir John, I am thy Pistol and thy friend, And heller-skeler have I rode to thee, And tidings do I bring and lucky joys And golden times and happy news of price.

Fal. I pray thee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A fortune for the world and worldlings base! I speak of Africa and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news? Let King Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John.

[Singing.]

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicons? And shall good news be battled? Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies’ lap.

Sil. Honest gentleman, I know not thy breeding.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir: if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it there’s but two ways, either you are a minister thereof, or a worthless knave; and I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Besonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under King Harry.

Pist. I’II have the Fourth? or Fifth?

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A fortune for thine office! Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king; Harry the Fifth’s the man. I speak the truth: When Pistol lies, do this; and fig me, like The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. Of what, is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak are just.

Pist. What! I do bring good news.

Fal. Carry Master Silence to bed. Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow—be what thou wilt; I am fortune’s steward—get on thy boots: we’ll ride all night. O sweet Pistol! Away, Bardolph! [Exit Bardolph.

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand beside me. O, if I had had time to have made new livery, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But ’tis no matter; this poor show doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Shal. It shall be.

Fal. It shows my earnestness of affection.—

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.—

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me.—

Shal. It is best, certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Pist. ’Tis ‘semper idem,’ for ‘obscure hoc nihil est;’ ’tis all in every part.

Shal. ’Tis so, indeed.

Pist. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver, And make thee rage. Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, Is in base durance and contagious prison; Haled thither By most mechanical and dirty hand: [snake, House up revenge from ebon den with fell Alecto’s For Doll is that Pistol speaks nought but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

[Shouts within, and the trumpets sound. Pist. There roar’d the sea, and trumpet-clangor sounds.

Enter the King and his train, the Lord Chief-Jus- tice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal! my royal Hal!

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal hotel of fame!

Fal. God save thee, my sweet boy! [man.

King. My lord chief-justice, speak to that vain Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what ’tis you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!
ACT V.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE V.

King. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers;
How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit-swell'd, so old and so profane;
But, being awaked, I do despise my dream.
Make less thy body hence, and more thy grace;
Leave gormandizing; know the grave doth gape
For thee thrice wider than for other men.
Reply not to me with a fool-born jest:
Presume not that I am the thing I was;
For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,
That I have turned away my former self;
So will I those that kept me company.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots:
Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders,
Not to come near our person by ten mile.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil:
And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
We will, according to your strengths and qualities,
Give you advancement. Be it your charge, my lord,
To see perform'd the tenor of our word.
Set on.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.
Shal. Yea, marry, Sir John: which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, Master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world: fear not your advancements; I will be the man yet that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceive how, unless you should give me your doubtlet and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour.

Shal. A colour that I fear you will die in, Sir Fal. Fear no colours: go with me to dinner: come, Lieutenant Pistol; come, Bardolph: I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter Prince John, the Lord Chief-Justice; Officers with them.

Ch. Just. Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet:
Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,—

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you Take them away.

Pist. Si fortuna me tormenta, spero contenta.

[Exeunt all but Prince John and the Chief-Justice.

Lan. I like this fair proceeding of the king's:
He hath intent his wonted followers
Shall all be very well provided for;
But all are banish'd till their conversations
Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

Lan. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

Lan. I will lay odds that, ere this year expire,
We bear our civil swords and native fire
As far as France: I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleased the king.

Come, will you hence?

[Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by a Dancer.

First my fear; then my courtesy; last my speech.
My fear is, your displeasure; my courtesy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say is of mine own making; and what indeed I should say will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture. Be it known to you, as it is very well, I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to play your patience for it and to promise you a better. I meant indeed to pay you with this; which, if like an ill venture it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here I promised you I would be and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some and I will pay you some and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment, to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so would I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me: if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France: where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already a' be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldecastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night: and so kneel down before you; but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention,
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars: and at his heels,
[fire
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword and Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentle all,
The flat unraised spirits that have dared
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O the very casques
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
Apostle in little place a million;

And let us, ciphers to this great account,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confined two mighty monarchies,
Whose high uprear'd and abutting fronts
The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder:
Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance;
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs in the receiving earth;
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there: jumping o'er times,
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass: for the which supply,
Admit me Chorus to this history;
Who prologue-like your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

[Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — London. An ante-chamber in the King's palace.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Ely.

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you; that self bill is urged,
Which in the eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scabbling and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,

We lose the better half of our possession:
For all the temporal lands which men devout
By testament have given to the church
Would they strip from us; being valued thus:
As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,
Full fifteen earls and fifteen hundred knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And, to relief of lazars and week age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year: thus runs the bill
KING HENRY V.

SCENE I.

Ely. This would drink deep.
Cont. 'Tis would drink the cup and all.
Ely. But what prevention?
Cont. The king is full of grace and fair regard.
Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.
Cont. The courses of his youth promised it not.
The breath no sooner left his father's body, But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very moment Consideration, like an angel, came And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him, Leaving his body as a paradise, To envelope and contain celestial spirits.

SCENE II. The same. The Presence chamber.

Enter King Henry, Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?
Eve. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.
West. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?
K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin: we would be resolved, Before we hear him, of some things of weight That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Ely.

Cont. God and his angels guard your sacred throne And make you long become it.

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you. My learned lord, we pray you to proceed And justly and religiously unfold Why the law Salique that they have in France Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim: And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord, to speak That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your readers or nearly charge your understanding soul With opening titles miscreate, whose right Suits not in native colours with the truth; For God doth know how many now in health Shall drop their blood in approbation Of what your reverence shall dictate us to. Therefore take heed how you impawn our person, How you awake our sleeping sword of war: We charge you, in the name of God, take heed; For never two such kingdoms did contend Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops Are every one a woe, a sore complaint 'Gainst him whose wrong gives edge unto the swords That make such waste in brief mortality. Under this conjunction speak, my lord; For we will hear, note and believe in heart That what you speak is in your conscience washed As sure as salt with baptism: [Peers,
Cont. Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you That owe yourselves, your lives and services To this imperial throne, There is no bar To make against your highness' claim to France But this, which they produce from Pharamond, 1 In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant ; 2 'No woman shall succeed in Salique land; Which Salique land the French unjustly gaze To be the realm of France, and Pharamond The founder of this law and female bar. Yet their own authors faithfully affirm That the landward of Salique land is Germany Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe; 3 sons, Where Charles the Great, having subdued the Sax There left behind and settled certain French; Who, holding in disdain the German women For some dishonest manners of their life, Establish'd then this law; to wit, no female Should be inheritrix in Salique land; Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala, Is at this day in Germany call'd Meissen. Then doth it well appear the Salique law Was not devised for the realm of France: For did the French, before Pharamond, possess Salique land Until four hundred one and twenty years After defunct of King Pharamond, I defy supposed the founder of this law;
ACT II.

KING HENRY V.

SCENE II.

Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Saïa, in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childerice,
Did, as heir general, being descended
Of Blasia, whom was daughter to King Clothair,
Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown
Of Charles the duke of Lorraine, sole-heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,
To his issue, which should, by the lineal
Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,
Convey'd himself as heir to the lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son
Of Charles the great. Also King Lewis the Tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermingare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorraine:
By birth defect on the full power of Charles the Great
Was re-united to the crown of France.
So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
King Pepin's title and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear
To hold a right and title of the female:
So do the kings of France unto this day;
Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law
To bar your highness claiming from the female,
And rather choose to hide them in a net
Than amply to imbar their crooked titles
Under which you pretend your true claim.

Cont. May I with right and conscience make this
The sin upon my head, dreadful sovereign!
For in the book of Numbers it is writ,
When the man dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Shall you your property so readily
Look back into your mighty ancestors;
Go, my dread lord, to your great-grand sire's tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great-uncle's, Edward the Black Prince,
Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy,
Marking his foot on the full power of France,
Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp
Forge in blood of French nobility.
O noble English, that could entertain
With your forces the edge of France
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work and cold for action!

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead
And with your puissant arm renew their feats:
You are their heir; you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage that renowned them
Runs in your veins; and my thrice puissant liege
Is in the very May-morn of your youth,
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises. [earth

Ecc. Your brother kings and monarchs of the
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As do the emperors and lords of your blood.

West. They know your grace hath cause and means and might;
So hath your highness; never king of England
Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects,
With whose love they were in England
And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Cont. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood and sword and fire to win your right;
In aid whereof we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the
But lay down our proportions to defend [French,
Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Cont. They of those marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our suffering rulers. [only.

K. Hen. We do not mean the cursing snatchers
But fear the main intention of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For you shall read that my great-grandfather
Never went with his forces into France
But stood out that the Scots might free
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fulness of his force,
Galling the gleaned land with hot assays,
Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Cont. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege;
For hear her but exampled by herself:
When all her chivalry hath been in France
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath not move'd herself not when called
But taken and impound'd as a stray
The King of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings
And make her chronicle as rich with praise
As is the day and both of France.
With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.

West. But there's a saying very old and true,
If that you will France win
Then with Scotland first begin!
For once the eagle England being in prey
To her enemies, your property
Comes sneaking and so sucks her princely eggs,
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

Ecc. It follows then the cat must stay at home;
Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home;
For government, though high and low and lower;
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congregating in a full and natural close,

ACT II.

KING HENRY V.

PROLOGUE.

Shake in their fear and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see they thrive. For though men in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men,
One, Richard Earl of Cambridge, and the second,
Henry Lord Scroop of Masham, and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey, knight of Cumberland,
Have, for the price of a crown, left off France.—O guilt indeed!—
Confirm’d conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on; and we'll digest
The abuse of distance; force a play:
The sun is paid; the traitors are agreed.
The king is set from London; and the scene
Is now transported, gentle, to Southampton;
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit:
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass: for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.
[Exit.

Enter Corporal Nym and Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, Corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yet?
Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles, but that shall be all as may. I dare not fight; but I will wink and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one;
but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's an end.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good Corporal Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer,
I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the revenge of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and certainly she did you wrong;
for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell: things must be as they may:
men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be con-cclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Hostess.

Bard. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife:
good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host!
Pist. Base tike, call'st thou me host? [Pistol!
Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers,
By my troth, not long: for we cannot lodged and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy house straight.
[Pistol and Bardolph draw. ] O well a day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! we shall see wilful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good lieutenant! good corporal! offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!
Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog! thou pricket-car'd cuck of Iceland!
Host. Good Corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shag off? I would have you solus, Pist. 'Solus, egregious dog? O viper vile!
The solus? in thy most nervalious face;
The solus, in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy nay, perdy,
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do intort the solus? in thy bowels;
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am a Barbary prince, you cannot conjure me.
I have an humour to knock you indifferently well.
If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may: and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O braggart vile and damned furious wight!
The grave doth gape, and doing death is near;
Therefore exhale.

Bard. Hence, boy, hear me what I say: he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hills, as I am a soldier.
[Draws.

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give: [abate.
That spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms: that is the humour of it.

Pist. 'Couple a gorge!'
That is the word. I thee defy again.
O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?
No; to the spital go,
And from the powdering-tub of infancy
Fetch forth the lazaret kite of Cressid's kind,
Doll Tearsheet she by name, and her espouse:
I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly
For the only she; and — pauxca, there's enough.
Go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and you, hostess: he is very sick, and would to bed. Good Bardolph, put thy face between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan. Faith, he's very Bard. Away, sir, you rogue!
Host. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days. The king has killed his heart.
Good husband, come home presently.

[Exit Hostess and Boy.

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats? [on!
Pist. Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food how!
Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?
[ Exit.
Pist. Base is the slave that pays.
Nym. That now I will have: that's the humour
Pist. As manhood shall compound: push home.
[They draw.

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why, then, be enemies with me too. Prithue, put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay;
And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:
I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me;
Is not this just? for I shall suffer be
Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?
Pist. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well, then, that's the humour of 't.

Re-enter Hostess.

Host. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shaked of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knights; that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;
His heart is fracted and corroborate.
Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may; he passes some humours and cares.

Pist. Let us console the knight; for, lambkins
we will live.

KING HENRY THE FIFTH.—Act II., Scene I.
KING HENRY V.

ACT II.

SCENE II.—Southampton. A council-chamber.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.

Bed. 'Tis true, God, his grace is bold, to trust these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear them.

As if allegiance in their bosoms sat, [selves!]

Crowned with faith and constant loyalty.

Hen. The king hath note of all that is intended, and knoweth on which they dream not.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bed fellow,

Whom he hath dullyd and cloy'd with gracious favors—

That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell [yours,]

His sovereign's life to death and treachery.

Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Scroop, Cambridge, Grey, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will board. [Masham,]

My Lord of Cambridge, and my kind Lord of

And you, my gentle knight, give me your thoughts:

Think you not that the powers we bear with us

Will cut their passage through the force of France,

Doing the execution and the act.

For which we have in head assembled them? [best.

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his

K. Hen. I doubt not that; since we are well per and the conduct of us [sauid;]

That grows not in a fair consent with ours.

Nor leave not one behind that doth not wish

Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch more dear'd and loved

Than is your majesty: there's not, I think, a subject

That breathes not in heart-grief and meanness

Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. True: those that were your father's enemies

Have steep'd their galls in honey and do serve you

With hearts create of duty and of zeal: [fulness;]

K. Hen. Therefore we have great cause of thank

And shall forget the office of our hand,

Sooner than quittance of desert and merit

According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steeld sinews toll,

And labour shall refresh itself with hope,

To do your grace incessant service.

K. Hen. Yes: we do hope to have

Uncle of Exeter,

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,

That raill'd against our person: we consider

It was excess of wine that set him on;

And on his more advice we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security.

Let him be punish'd, sovereign, lest example

Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

K. Hen. O, let us yet be merciful.

Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey, Sir,

You show great mercy, if you give him life,

After the taste of much correction.

K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care of me

Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch!

It little faults, proceeding on distemper,

Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye

When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd and digested,

Appear before us? We'll yet enlarge that man,

Though Cambridge, Scroop and Grey, in their dear

And tender preservation of our person, [eare

Would have him punish'd. And now to our French

With these so many losers? [causes:

Cam. I one, my lord;

Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.

Grey. And I, my royal sovereign. [yours;

K. Hen. Then, Richard Earl of Cambridge, there

There yours, Lord Scroop of Masham; and, sir

knight,

Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:

Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.

My Lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter,

We will aboard to-night. Why, how now, gentle

What see you in these papers that you lose? [men!

So much complexion? Look ye, how they change!

Their cheeks are paper. Why, what read you there?

That hath so cowardly and chased your blood

Out of appearance?

Care ye with me, I do confess my fault;

And do submit to your highness' mercy.

Grey. To which we all appeal.

K. Hen. The mercy that was quick in us but late,

By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:

You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;

For your own reasons turn your bosoms into,

As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.

See you, my princes and my noble peers, [here,

These English monsters! My Lord of Cambridge

You know how apt our love was to accord

To furnish him with all appertinents

Of his belonging to his majesty,

Hath, for a few fight crowns, lightly conspired,

And sworn unto the practices of France,

To kill us here in Hampton: to the which

This knight, no less for bounty bound to us

Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn. But, O,

What shall I say to that poor Lord Scroop? thou cruel,

Ingrateful, savage and inhuman creature!

Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,

That knewst the very bottom of my soul,

That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold,

Wouldst thou have practis'd on me for thy use,

May it be possible, that foreign hire

Could out of thee extract one spark of evil

That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange,

That, though the truth of it stands off as gross

As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.

Treason and murder ever kept together,

As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,

Working so grossly in a natural cause,

That admiration did not whoath at them:

But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in

Worder to wait on treason and on murder:

And whatsoever cunning fiend it

That wrought not the same in his masterly

Hath the voice in hell for excellence:

All other devils that suggest by treasons

Do botch and bungle up consumption

With patches, colours, and with forms being fetch'd

From glittering semblances of pity:

But he that fow'd thee, he thou art, and this stand up,

Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,

Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.

That if same demon that had gull'd thee thus

Should with his hon guilt walk the whole world,

He might return to vasty Tartar back,

And tell the legions 'I can never win

A soul so easy as that Englishman's,'

O, how hast thou with jealousy infected

The sweetness of alliance! Show men dutiful?

Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?

Why, so didst thou: come they at no sacrifice?

Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?

Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet,

Free from gross passion or of mirth or anger,

Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,

Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complements,

Not working out the eye without the ear,

And but in purged judgment trusting neither?

Such and so finely bolted didst thou see?

And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot

To mark the full-fraught man and best indued

With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;

For this revolt of thine, now lacks it like

Another fall of man. Their faults are open:

360,
Arrest them to the answer of the law; And God acquit them of their practices!

_Eze._ I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard Earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry Lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland.

Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd; And I repent my fault more than my death; Which I'll requite by my right hand, although Although my body pay the price of it.

_Cam._ For me, the gold of France did not seduce; Although I did admit it as a motive The sooner to effect what I intended: But God be thanked for prevention; Which I in sufficiency heartily will rejoice, Beseeching God and you to pardon me.

Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice At the discovery of most dangerous treason Than I do at this hour joy 'er myself, Prevented from a damned enterprise: My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign. [tence.

_K. Hen._ God quit you in your mercy! Hear your sen-

You have conspired against our royal person, Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd and from his coffer Received the golden earnest of our death: Wherein you have sold your sincerity to slaughter, His princes and his peers to servitude, His subjects to oppression and contempt And his whole kingdom into desolation. Touching our person seek we no revenge; But we our kingdom's safety must so tender, Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence, Poor miserable wretches, to your death: The taste whereof, God of his mercy give You patience to endure, and true repentance Of all your dear offences! Bear them hence.

Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof Shall be to you, as us, like glorious. We doubt not of a fair and lucky war, Since God so graciously hath brought to light This dangerous treason; hurrying on our way To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now But every rub is smoothed on our way. Then forth, dear countriemen: let us deliver Our puissance into the hand of God, Putting it straight in expedition.

Cheerly to see the sign of war advance: No king of England, but the king of France. [Exeunt.

 нашей

_SCENE III._—London. Before a tavern.

_Enter Pistol, Hostess, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy._

_Pist._ No: for my manly heart doth yearn.

Bardolph, be blithe: Nym, rouse thy vauing veins: Boy, bristle thy courage up: for Falstaff he is dead, And we must yet therefore. But I did like with him, wheresoe'er he is, either in heaven or in hell!

Host. Nay, sure, he's not in hell: he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. A' made a finer end and went away anu it had been any christen child, a' parted ever between twelve and one, even at the turning o' the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets and play with flowers and smile upon his fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way: for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and a 'babbled of green fields.

Now, Sir John! quoth I: 'tis not so bad a good cheer.' So a' cried out 'God, God, God!' three or four times. Now I, to comfort him, bid him a' should not think of God: I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So a' bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and they were as cold, as any stone, and so upward and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

_Nym._ They say he cried out of sack.

Host. Ay, that a' did.

_Bard._ And of women.

Host. Nay, that a' did not. [incarnate.

_Boy._ Who? a' did that a' did; and said they were devils.

Host. A' could never abide carnation; 't was a colour he never liked. [women.

_Boy._ Do you not remember, a' saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose, and a' said it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

_Bard._ Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

_Nym._ Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

_Pist._ Come, let's away. My love, give me thy

Look to my chattels and my movables:

Let senses rule; the word is 'Pitch and Pay':

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes. And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck: Therefore, Caveto be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals. Yoke-fellows in arms, Let us to France: like horse-keechies, my boys, Thus, to suck the very blood to suck!

_Boy._ And that's but unwholesome food, they say.

_Pist._ Touch her soft mouth, and march.

_Bard._ Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.

_Nym._ I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but, adieu, [command.

_Pist._ Let housewifery appear: keep close. I thee

Host. Farewell; adieu. [Exeunt.

_SCENE IV._—France. The King's palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King, the Dauphin, the Dukes of Berri and Bretagne, the Constable, and others.

_Fr. King._ Thus comes the English with full power And more than carefully it us concerns [upon us; To answer royally in our defences. Therefore, by the Duke of Bretagne, Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth, And, you, Prince Dauphin, with all swift dispatch, To line and new repair our towns of war With men of courage and with means defendant; For England his approaches makes as fierce As waters to the sucking of a gulf. It fits us then to be as provident As fear may teach us out of late examples Left by the fatal and neglected English Upon our fields.

_Boy._ My most redoubted father,

It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe:

For peace itself should not so dully a kingdom, Though war nor no known quarrel were in question, But that defences, muster, preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled and collected, As were a war in expectation.

Therefore, I say 't is meet we all go forth To view the sick and feeble parts of France: And let us do it with no show of fear;

No, with no more than if we heard that England Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance:

For, by good like, she is souddy kingd, Her acceptors so fantastically borne By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth, That fear attends her not.
ACT III.

KING HENRY V.

PROLOGUE.

Con. O peace, Prince Dauphin! You are too much mistaken in this king: Qualm your grace the later assassurs. With what great state he heard their embassy, How well supplied with noble counsellors, How modest in exception, and withal How terrible in constant resolution, And you shall find his vanities forespent. Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly; As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots That shall first spring and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable; But though we think it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence 'tis best to weigh The enemy more mighty than he seems: So the proportions of defence are fill'd; Which of a weak andiggardly projection Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat with seanting A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Harry strong? And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him. The kindred of him hath been fleshed upon us; And he is bred out of that bloody strain That haunted us in our familiar paths: Witness our too much memorable shame When Croissy battle by our ship-track, And all our princes captived by the hand Of that black name, Edward, Black Prince of Wales; While that his mountain siren, on mountain stand-Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun, [ing, Saw his herculean seed, and smiled to see him, Mangle the work of nature and define The patterns that by God and by French fathers Had twenty years been made. This is a stem Of that victorious stock; and let us fear The native mightinesse and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.

[Eexeunt Messenger and certain Lords.

You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends. [dogs Dau. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward Most spend their mouths when they see them to threaten Runs far before them. Good my sovereign, Take up the English short, and let them know Of what a monarch you are the head: Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeter and train.

Fr. King. From our brother England? Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty. He wills you, in the name of God Almighty, That you divest yourself, and lay apart The borrow'd glories that by gift of heaven, By law of nature and of nations, 'long To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown And all wide-stretched honours that pertain By custom and the ordinance of time, Unto the crown of France. That you may know'Tis no sinister nor no awkward claim, Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days, Nor from the dust of old oblivion raked, He sends you this most memorable line, In every branch truly demonstrative; Willing you overlook this pedigree: And when you find him evenly derived From his most famed of famous ancestors, Edward the Third, he bids you then resign Your crown and kingdom, indirectly lied From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown Even in your hearts, there will he take for it: Therefore in better cunning to search for, In thunder and in earthquake, like a Jove, That, if requiring fail, he will compel; And bids you, in the bowls of the Lord, Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy On the poor souls for whom this hungry war Opens his vast page: and have the kindness To turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries, The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans, For husbands, fathers and betrothed lovers, That shall be swallow'd in this controversy. This is his claim, his threatening and my message; Unless the Dauphin be in presence here, To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further: To-morrow shall you hear our full intent Back to our brother England.

Dau. For the Dauphin, I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorn and defiance; slight regard, contempt; And any thing that may not misbecome The mighty sender, doth he prize you at. Thus says my king; an if your father's highness Do not, in grant of all demands at large, Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty, He'll call you to so hot an answer of it, That caves and woody vaultages of France Shall chide your trespass and return your mock In second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair return, It is against my will; for I desire Nothing but odds with England: to that end, As matching to his youth and vanity, I did present him with the Paris balls.

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it, Were it the mistress-court of mighty Europe: And, be assured, you'll find a difference, As we his subjects have in wonder found, Between the promise of his greener days And these he masters now: now he weighs time Even to the utmost grain: that you shall read In your own losses, if he stay in France. [at full. Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind Exe. Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our Come here himself to question our delay; [king For he is footed in this land already. Fr. King. You shall be soon dispatch'd with fair conditions: A night is but small breath and little pause To answer matters of this consequence.

[Flourish.—Exeunt.

ACT III.

PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus with imagined wing our swift scene In motion of no less celerity flies Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen The well-appointed king at Hampton pier Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet With silken streamers the young Phoebus fanning: In a hurry with your fancies, and in them held Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing; Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give:
To sounds confused: behold the threaten'd sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think
You stand upon the rivage and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestic.

When I die, my Father, to blades and battle.

Let me behold the scene of this mighty Battle.

K. STRONG. Then let me see the bloody
Field:
These call'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege;
Behold the ordnance on their carriages.

With fatal mouths gaping on giddy Harleian.

Suppose the ambassador from the French comes
Tells Harry that the king doth offer him [back;
Katharine his daughter, and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
With lining now the devilish cannon touches.

And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.

[Exit."

SCENE II. — France. Before Harleian.

Alarum. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford,
GloUCESTER, and Soldiers, with scaling-ladders.

K. HEN. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, one more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead.
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage;
Let it py through the portage of the head
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'ermelt it
As fearfully as doth a galloped rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide,
Hold hard the breath and bend up every spirit
To his full height. On, on, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought
And sheathed their swords for lack of argument:
Dishonour not your mothers; now address
That those whom you call'd fathers did beget you,
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war. And you, good yeo-

men,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pastures; let us swear [not;
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot:
Follow your spirit, and upon this charge
Cry 'God for Harry, England, and Saint George!'

[Exeunt. Alarum, and chambers go off.

SCENE II. — The same.

Enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Iarl. On, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knockers are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just; for humours do abound:

Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die;
And sword and shield,
In bloody field.

Doth win immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale and safety.

Pist. And I:
If wishes were things with me,
My purse should not fail with me:
But thither would I lie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Up to the breach, you dogs! avont, you culli-ions! [Driving them forward.

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould.

Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage,
Abate thy rage, great duke! [whack.

Good baycock, hate thy rage; use leyni, sweet
Nym. These be good humours! your honour wins bad humours.

[Exeunt all but Boy.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashbucklers. I am boy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for indeed three such anticks do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof a' faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; by the means whereof a' breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest a' should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are matched with as few good deeds; for a' never broke any man's head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lattice, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in felching, and in Calais they stole a fire-sho'el: I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchers: which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villany goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up.

[Exit.

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloucester would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines; for, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war: the conveniences of it is not sufficient; for, look you, thk seventh day you may discuss into the duke, look you, is digh himself four yard under the coumiers-mines: by Cheshu, I think a' will pow up all, if there is not better directions.

Gow. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman, a very valiant gentleman, I' faith.

Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world: I will verify as much in his heerd: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.
Enter Macmorris and Captain Jany.

Gow. Here a' comes; and the Scots captain, Captain Jany, with him.

Flu. Captain Jany is a marvelous furbolous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition and knowledge in th' ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jany. I say gud-day, Captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, good Captain James.

Gow. How now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have you the pioners given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish, la! tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blew up the town, so Chrish save me, la! in an hour: O, tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you; a few disputations of the discipline of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly to satisfy my opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jany. It shall be vary gud, gud faith, gud captains bath: and I sal quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that sal I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes: it is no time to discourse. I do not kno' ye so well, and the trumpet call us to the breach; and we talk, and, be Chrish, do nothing: 'tis shame for us all: so God sa'me, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is throttles to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa'me, la.

Jany. By the mass, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, ay'll de gud service, or ay'll lig it the grund for it; ay, or go to death; and ay'll pay't as valorously as I may, that sal I surely do, that is the brief and the long. Marry, I wad full fain hear some question 'tween you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—Mac. Of my nation! What ish my nation? Ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal. What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, peradventure I shall think you do not use me with that affection as in discretion you ought to, use me, look you; being as good a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of war, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not kno' it so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each Jany. A! that's a foul fault. [other.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you I know the discipline of war; and there is an end. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Before the gates.

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English forces below. Enter King Henry and train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the This is the latest parle we will admit: [town?
ACT III.

KING HENRY V.

SCENE VI.

Kath. De nails. Écoutez; dites-moi, si je parle bien: de hand, de fîngres, et de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon.

Anglois.

Kath. Dites-moi l'Anglois pour le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude?

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris à présent.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Exécutez-vous; dites de hand, de fîngres, de nails, de arma, de bilow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oublie de ce.

Comment appelez-vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De neck. Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de nick; de menton, de sin.

Alice. Oui. Sauf votre honneur, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre, par la grâce de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez-vous pas déjà oublie ce que je vous ai enseigné?

Kath. Non, je reciterai à vous promptement: de hand, de fîngres, de mails.

Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arm, de elbow.

Alice. Sauf votre honneur, de elbow.

Comment appelez-vous le pied de la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame; et de coum.

Kath. De foot et de coum! O Seigneur Dieu! ce sont mots de son mauvais, corruptible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user: je ne voudrais prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France pour tout le monde. Foh! le foot et le coum! Néanmoins, je reciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fîngres, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, de coum.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois: allons-nous à dîner.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The same.

Enter the King of France, the Dauphin, the Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord,

Let us not live in France; let us quit all

And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dau. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of us, The emptying of our fathers' luxury,

Our seions, put in wild and savage stock,

Spirit up so suddenly into the clouds;

And overlook their grafters? [bastards!]

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman Mort de ma vie! if they march along

Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,

To buy a sobbery and a dirty farm

In that nook-shotten isle of Albion. [ile?]

Con. Dien de batailles! where have they this met-

Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull,

On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,

'Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water,

A drench for sun-rein'd jades, their barley-broth,

Decort their cold blood to such valiant heat?

And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,

Seem frozen? O, for honour of our hand,

Let us not hang like roping feleces

Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people

Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields!

Poor we may call them in their native lords.

 duu. By faith and honour,

Our madams mock at us, and plainly say

Our mettle is bred out and they will give

Their bodies to the lust of English youth

To new-conquore France with bastard warriors.

Bour. This bid us to the English dancing-schools,

And teach lavolts high and swift contos;

Saying our grace is only in our heels,

And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy the herald? speed him hence.

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.

Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edged

More sharper than your swords, bie to the field:

Charles Deabreth, high constable of France;

You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri,

Alencon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy.

Jacques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,

Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussi, and Fauconberg,

Foix, Lestrade, Bouicault, and Charolois;

High dukes, great princes, barons, lords and knights,

For your great seats now quit you of your great shames.

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land

With penmons painted in the blood of Harleur:

Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow

Upon the valleys, whose low vassal seat

The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon;

Go down upon him, you have power enough,

And in a captive chariot into Rouen

Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.

Sorry am I his numbers are so few.

His soldiers lick and famish'd in their march.

For I am sure, when he shall see our army,

He'll drop his heart into the sack of fear

And for achievement offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy,

And let him say to England that we send

To know what will come from him he will give.

Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty. [us.

Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with

Now forth, lord constable and princes all,

And quickly bring as word of England's fall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The English camp in Picardy.

Enter Gower and Fluellen, meeting.

Gow. How now, Captain Fluellen! come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent services committed at the bridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magannimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost power: he is not—God be praised and blessed!—any hurt in the world; but keeps the pridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an aunchent lieutenant there at the pridge, I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony;

and he is a man of no estimation in the world; but

I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called Aunchent Pistol.

Gow. I know him not.

[Exeunt.]

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours:

The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise God; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart,
And of buxom valour, hath, by cruel fate,
And giddy Fortune's furious little wheel,
That stands upon the rolling restless stone—

Flu. By your patience, Aunchient Pistol. Fortune is painted blind, with a multer afore her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is blind; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which in the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and variation; and her foot, you is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls: in good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent moral. [to him; Pist.

Flu. Bardolph's, feo, and fellows sworn. For he hath stolen a pax, and hanged must a be: A dammed death! Let gallows gape for dog; let man go free
And let not hemp his wind-pipe suffocate: But Exeter hath given the doom of death For pax of little price.
Therefore, go speak: the duke will hear thy voice:
And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee require.

Pist. Aunchient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Flu. Why then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, aunchient, it is not a thing to re-joyce at; for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damned! and figo for thy friend.

Flu. It is well. [ship!

Pist. The fig of Spain! [Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit nascal; I remember him now; a bawd, a cutpurse.

Pist. I'll assure you, a' uttered as brave words at the prison as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well; what he has spoken to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue, that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy: who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the king gave them. And that is as much as the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: and what a heard of the general's cut and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanderers of the age, or else you may be marvelous mistook.

Flu. I tell you what, Captain Gower; I do perceiue he is not the man that he would gladsly show to the world he is: if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark you, the king is coming, and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Enter King Henry, Glouceter, and Soldiers.

Gow. Pless your majestie! [the bridge?

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen! camest thou from Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge: The French is gone off, you look; and there is gallant and most prave passages; marry, th' athver-sars was the possession of the pridge; but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge: I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdiction of th' athversary hath been very great, reacheth to the day. For my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubsles, and wheelks, and knobs, and flames o' fire: and his hips blows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, something white and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off: and we give express charge, that in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for, none of the French be used or abused in dishonorable language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Enter Montjoy.

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king: Say thou to Harry of England: Though wert thou dead, we did but show that advantage is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him we could have rebuked him at Harleir, but that we thought not good to bruise an injury till it was full ripe: now we speak upon our eye, and our voice is imperial: England shall repeat his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested: which in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the mister of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add defiance; and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose contemnation is pronounced.

So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

[back.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee
And tell thy king I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais
Without impeachment: for, to say the sooth, I have so much hatred against the French
Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,
My people are with sickness much eafebeled,
My numbers lessened, and those few I have Almost no better than so many French;
Who when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,
I thought upon one pair of English legs
Did march three Frenchmen. Yet, forgive me, God,
That I do brag thus! This your air of France
Hath blown that vice in me; I must repent.
Go therefore, tell thy master here I am;
My ransom is this trail and worthless trunk
My army but a weak and study guard:
Yet, God before, tell him we will come on,
Though France himself and such another neighbour
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.
Go, bid thy master well advise himself:
If we may pass, we will; if we be hindered,
We shall your majesty to se a red blood
Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.
The sum of all our answer is but this:
We would not seek a battle, as we are;
Nor, as we are, we say we will not shun it:
So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

[Exit.

Gow. I hope they will not come upon us now.
K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.

Marc. The bridge; it now draws toward night:
Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves,
And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The French camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Bambles, Orleans, Dauphin, with others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world.
Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My Lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour?

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

Con. Well, a long time is this! I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns.
Ca, ha! he bounds from the earth, as if his entrais-tes were hairs; le cheval volant, the Pegasus, chez les marines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk; he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches the basement of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hircus.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus; he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of paireys; his neigh is like the biding of a monarch and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot,
from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, varied praise on my pairey: it is a theme as fluently, as illust as the sea: turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all:
't is a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world, familiar to us and unknown, to lay apart their particular actions and wonder at him. I once wrote a sonnet in his praise and began thus: 'Wonder of nature,'—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's misfortune.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I compounded to my curser, for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly shook your lack.

Dau. So perhaps did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O then belike she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait strossers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me, then: there that ride so and ride not warily, fall into foul bags. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief leave my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. ' Le chien est retourné à son propre vonissement, et la truie lavée au bourbier: ' thou makest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress, or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

Rum. My lord constable, in England that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many super-fluously, and I were more honour some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: but I would it were morning; for
I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Rum. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight: I'll go arm myself. [Exit.

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Rum. He longs to eate the English.

Con. I think he will eat all he kills. [prince.

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Orl. He is simply the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still.

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was told by one that knows him better than you.

Orl. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not: it is no hidden virtue in him.

Con. He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in him.

Rum. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it but his lackey: 't is a hooded valour; and when it appears, it will bate.

Orl. I'll will never said well.

Con. I will esp that proverb with 'There is flattery in friendship.' [his due.

Orl. And I will take up that with 'Give the devil

Con. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil; have at the very eye of that proverb with 'A pox of the devil.'

Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much
'A fool's bolt is soon shot.'

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpré.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.

Would it were day! Alas, poor Harry of England!
he longs not for the dawning as we do.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to move with his fat-browned followers so far out of his knowledge!

Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.

Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellect or armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Rum. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

376
The greater therefore should our courage be.
Good morrow, brother Bedford. God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out.
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers,
Which is both healthful and good husbandry:
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all, admonishing
That we should dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France. [ter,
Erp. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me bet-
Since I may say 'Now lie I like a king.' [pains
K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present
Upon example; so the spirit is eased:
And when the mind is quick'en, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave and newly move,
With casted slough and fresh legerity.
Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas. Brothers both,
Command me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good morrow to them, and anon
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glow. We shall, my liege.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
I and my bosom must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

[Exeunt all but King.

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speak'st cheerfully.

Enter Pistol.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; art thou officer?

Or art thou base, common and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. 'Tis hard'st thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so. What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of flame;
Of parents good, of fist most valiant.
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-string
I love the lovely bully. What is thy name?

Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate
Unto Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.
Pist. Art thou his friend?
K. Hen. And his kinsman too.
Pist. The figo for thee, then!
K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!
Pist. My name is Pistoll call’d. [Exit.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!
Flu. So! in the name of Jesus Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and aneuchet-prerogatifs and laws of the wars is not kept. If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor nibble pabble in Pompey’s camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sollicity of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.
Flu. If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience, now?

Gow. I will speak lower.
Flu. I pray you and beseech you that you will. [Exit Gower and Fluellen.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion, there is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter three soldiers, John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks upon us?
Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.
Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it. Who goes there?
K. Hen. A friend.
Will. Under what captain serve you?
Will. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our affairs?
K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.
Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?
K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should. For, though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.
Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but I believe, as cold a night as this, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.
K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself any where the less where he is.
Bates. Then I would he were here alone: so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men’s lives saved.
K. Hen. I dare say you love him not so ill; to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this to feel other men’s minds: methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king’s company; his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.
Will. That’s more than we know.
Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king’s subjects: if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the law will clear the crime.
Will. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make, when all these legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all ‘We knew as small place,’ some swelling, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; whom to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.
K. Hen. So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the limbs of his generation by retribution should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master’s command transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers and die in many unconciliated inquiuries, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant’s damnation; but then it is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitration of swords, can try it out without all unspotted soldiers: some pereadventure have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bullying, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his badge, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before apprehended in no point of a private quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject’s duty is the king’s, but every subject’s soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessest lost wherein such preparation was gained; and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, He let him outlive that day to see His greatness and to teach others how they should prepare.
Will. ’Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head, the king is not to answer it.
Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.
K. Hen. I myself heard the king say he would not be ransomed.
Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully; but when their throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne’er the wiser.
K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.
Will. You pay him then. That’s a perilous shot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and private discretion can do against a monarch! you may as ACT IV.  KING HENRY V.  SCENE II.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence, seek through your camp to find you.

K. Hen. Good old knight, Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do 't, my lord. [Exit.]

K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts; Possess them not with fear: take from them now The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers Pluck their hearts from them. Not to-day, O Lord, O, not to-day, think not upon the fault My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard's body have interred new; And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears Than from it issued forced drops of blood; Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay, Who twice a-day their wither'd hands hold up Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built Two chantryes, where the sad and solemn priests Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do; Though all that I can do is nothing worth, Since that my penitence comes after all, Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glu. My liege!

K. Hen. My brother Gloucester's voice? Ay; I know thy errand, I will go with thee:
This day, my friends and all things stay for me. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The French camp.

Enter the Dauphin, Orleans, Rambouls, and others.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh! [rides.

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their That their hot blood may spin in English eyes, And dout them with superfluous courage, la! Rom. What, will you have them weep our horses' How shall we, then, behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers. [horse!

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to Do but behold you poor and starved hand, And your fair show shall suck away their souls, Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. There is not work enough for all our hands; Scarcely blood enough in all their sickly veins To give each naked curtle-axe a stain.
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out, And shew as for lack of sport; let us but blow them, The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.

'T is positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
ACT IV.

KING HENRY V.

SCENE III.

That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe,
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our arms must not. What's to say?
A very little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket sonance and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much dare the field
That England shall cough down in fear and yield.

Enter Grandpré.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shames them passing soonfall'n;
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks, [jades
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel bit
Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crowds,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.
Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dan. Shall we go send them dinners and fresh
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guidon; to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come, away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The English camp.

Enter Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham, with all his host: Salisbury and Westmoreland.

Glou. Where is the king?

Ibid. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full three-score thousand.

[fresh.

Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are
Sal. God be with you, princes all; I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully, my noble Lord of Bedford,
My dear Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter,
And my kind kinsman, warriors all, aliens!

Ibid. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exe. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it,
For thou art framed of the firm truth of valour.

Ibid. He is as full of valour as of kindness;
Privily in both.

Enter the King.

West. O that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England
That do our work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland? No, my fair cousin:
If we are mark'd to die, we are enow
To do our country's loss; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost:
It yeares me not if men my garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.
No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
God's peace! I would have that an honour
As one man more, methinks, would share from me.
For the best hope I have, O, do not wish one more!
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my lost,
That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We would not die in that man's company
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is call'd the feast of Crispian:
He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say 'To-morrow is Saint Crispian:'
Then will he strip his sleeve and show his scars,
And say 'These wounds I had on Crispian's day.'
Old men forget; yet all shall be remembered,
But he'll remember with advantages
What feats he did that day: then shall our names,
Familiar in his mouth as household words,
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester,
Be in their flowing cups freshlyRemember'd.
This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he to-day that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition:
And gentlemen in England now a-bed
Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here,
And hold their manhood cheap when any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Re-enter Salisbury.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with
The French are bravely in their battles set, [school,
And will with all expedition charge on support,
K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.
West. Perish the man whose mind is backward now!
K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England and co. [alone.
West. God's will! my liege, would you and I
Without more help, could fight this royal battle?
K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wish us one.
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, King Harry,
If for thy rancour this new business compound,
Before thy most assured overthrow:
For certainly thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be engulfed. Besides, in mercy,
The constable desires thee thou wilt mind
Thy followers of repentance; that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor
Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?
Mont. The Constable of France.

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back:
Bid them achieve me and then sell my bones.
Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?
ACT IV.  KING HENRY V.  SCENE V.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast lived, was killed with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find they've got his sword, tell the world, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work:
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be famed; for there the sun shall greet them.
And do their honours reeking up to heaven;
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then abounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.
Let me speak proudly; tell the constable
We are but warriors for the working-day;
Our gayness and our gift are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host—
Good argument, I hope we will not fly—and time hath worn us into slovenry:
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim;
And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night
They'll be in fiercer robes, or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads
And turn their backs upon the service. If they do this,—As, if God please, they shall,—my rason then will soon be levied.
Herald, save thou thy labour;
Come thou no more for ranson, gentle herald;
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints;
Which if they have as I will leave 'em them,
Shall yield them little, tell the constable. [well;
Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so faire thee
Thou never shall hear herald any more. [Exit.

K. Hen. I fear thou'lt once more come again for ranson.

Enter York.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg
The leading of the vaward.

K. Hen. Take it, brave York. Now, soldiers, march away;
And how thou pleaust, God, dispose the day! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The field of battle.

Pist. Yield, cur!
Fr. Sol. Ye pense que vous ètes gentilhomme de bonne qualité.
Pist. Qualité calmee custure me! Art thou a gentleman? what is thy name? discuss. Fr. Sol. O Seigneur Dieu! Pist. O Signieur Dew should be a gentleman: Perpend my words, O Signieur Dew, and mark; O Signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox, Except, O signieur, thou do give to me Egregious ransom.

Fr. Sol. O, prenez miséricorde! ayez pitié de moi! Pist. Moy shall not serve; I will have forty moys;
Or I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat
In drops of crimson blood.

Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible d'échapper la force de
Pist. Brass, cur! [ton brass?
Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,
Offer'st me brass?
Fr. Sol. We'll conquer non moi!
Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?
Come hither, boy; ask me this slave in French
What is his name.

Boy. Écoutez: comment êtes-vous appelé?
Fr. Sol. Monseur le Fer.
Boy. His name is Master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and firk him, and ferret him: discuss the same in French unto him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and firk, and firk.
Pist. But him prepare: for I will cut his throat.
Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?
Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous faites vous prê; car ce soldat ici est disposé tout à cette heure de couper votre gorge.

Pist. Owly, cuppege gorre, permafo,
Peasant, unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns; Or mangled shall thou be by this my hand.
Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie, pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison: gardez ma vie, et je vous donnerai deux cents écus.
Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and for his ransom he will give you two hundred crowns.
Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I
The crowns will take.
Fr. Sol. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?
Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son jurement de darder aucun prisonnier, némémons, pour les écus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchissement.
Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux je vous donne mille remerciments, et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, vaillant, et très distingué seigneur d'
Pist. Expound unto me, boy. [Angleterre.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of one, as he thinks, the most brave, valourous, and thrice-worthy signeur of Eng-

[Follow me! Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy show.
Boy. Suivez-vous le grand capitaine. [Exeunt Pistol, and French Soldier.] I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true, 'The empty vessel makes the greatest sound.' Bardolph and Nym had ten times more valour than this roaring devil [the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously.
I must stay with the lackeys, with the luggage of our camp: the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it but boys.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dauphin, and Rambures.

Con. O diable!
Orl. O seigneur! le jour est perdu, tout est perdu!
Dou. Mort de na vie! all is confounded, all!
Reproach and everlasting shame
Sits mocking in our plumes. O méchante fortune! Do not run away. [A short alarum.

Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.
Dou. O perdurable shame! let's stab ourselves.
But these the wratches that we play'd at dice for?
Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?
Bour. Shame and eternal shame, nothing but shame!
Let us die in honour: once more back again;
And he that will not follow Bourbon now.
Let him go hang himself, and with his carcass,
Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door
Whilest by a slave, no gentler than my dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, friend us now!
Let us on heaps go offer up our lives.
Orl. We are all as hayling in the field
To smother up the English in our throngs,
If any order might be thought upon.
ACT IV.

KING HENRY V.

SCENE VII.

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the throng:
  Let life be short; else shame will be too long.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another part of the field.

Alarum. Enter King Henry and forces, Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice valiant countrymen:
  But all's not done; yet keep the French the field.
  Exe. The Duke of York commendeth him to your grace.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice within
  I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting;
  From helmet to the spur all blood he was.
  Exe. In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie,
  Larding the plain; and by his bloody side,
  Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds,
  The noble Earl of Suffolk also lies.
  Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over,
  Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteep'd,
  And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes
  That bloodily did tawn upon his face:
  And says, 'Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk! My soul shall thine keep company to heaven;
  Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast,
  As in this glorious and well-foughten field
  We kept together in our chivalry!'

  Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up:
  He smiled me in the face, taught me his hand,
  And, with a feeble gripe, says, 'Dear my lord,
  Command my service to my sovereign,'
  So did he turn and over Suffolk's neck
  He threw his wounded arm and kiss'd his lips;
  And smote, to the heart, with blood he seal'd
  A testament of noble-ending love.
  The pretty and sweet manner of it forced
  Those waters from me which I would have stopp'd;
  But I had not so much of man in me,
  All my mother came into mine eyes
  And I come up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not;
  For, hearing this, I must perforce compound
  With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.
[Alarum.

But, hark! what new alarum is this same?

The French have reinforced their scatter'd men:
Then every soldier kill his prisoners:
  Give the word through.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another part of the field.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offer'd; in your conscience, now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain there's not a boy left alive:
  and the cowardly rascals that ran from the battle
  'tis done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent;
  wherefore the king, most worthily, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, Captain Gower.
What call you the town's name where Alexander the Pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why, pray you, is not pig great? the pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnificent, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the Great was born in Macedon; his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain, if you look in the maps of the 'orld, I warrant you shall find, in the comparising between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye at Monmouth;
  but it is out of my prays what is the name of the other river; but it's all one, 'tis alike as my fingers to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander, God knows, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wrath, and his choler, and his mouth and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicates in his prays, did, in his ales and his anger, look, kill his best friend, Cleitus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander killed his friend Cleitus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right and his good judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great belly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaverys, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he: I'll tell you there is good men born at Monmouth,

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter King Henry and forces; Warwick, Gloucester, Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France
  Until this instant. Take a trumpet, herald;
  Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill:
  If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
  Or void the field; they do offend our sight:
  If they 'll do neither, we will come to them,
  And make their arms their payment. Enforced from the old Assyrian slings:
  Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have,
  And not a man of them that we shall take
  Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they used to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald?
  know'st thou not
  That I have fined these bones of mine for ransom?
  Comest thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king:
  I come to thee for charitable license,
  That we may wander o'er this bloody field
  To look our dead, and then to bury them;
  To sort our nobles from our common men.
  For many of our princes—are the while—
  Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
  So do our vulgar drench their pleasant limbs
  In blood of princes; and their wounded steeds
  Fret fellock deep in gore and with wild rage
  York out the armed feet of their dead masters,
  Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
  To view the field in safety and dispose
  Of their dead bodies!

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
  I know not if the day be ours or no;
  For yet a many of your horsemen peer
  And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength; for What is this castle call'd that stands hard by? [it!

Mont. They call it Agincourt.
ACT IV.

KING HENRY V.

SCENE VIII.

K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Black Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most brave battle here in France.

K. Hen. The sound of your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavvy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour;

For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh blood out of your poity, I can tell you that; God please it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Jeshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the 'orld: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God, as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so! Our heralds go with Bring me just notice of the numbers dead [liam: On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to Williams. Exeunt Heralds with Montjoy, Exe. Soldier, you must come to the king. [cap? K. Hen. Soldier, why wearest thou that glove in thy hand? An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if alive and enemy, did dare challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' th' ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap, which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear if alive, I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, Captain Fluellen? Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a rascal and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look you, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain and a Jacksauce, as ever his black slice trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, ha!

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meetest the fellow.

Will. So will I, my liege, as I live, K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is good knowledge and literated in the wars.

K. Hen. Canst thou keep to me, soldier?

Will. I will, my liege. [Exeunt. K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me and stick it in thy cap: when Aleoncon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Aleoncon, and an enemy to our person: if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost me love.

Flu. Your grace doo's me as great honours as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself above this glove: that is all; but I would fain see it once, an' please God of his grace that I might see.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an' please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. [Exeunt.

K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, and my brother Follow Fluellen closely at the heels: [Gloucester, Gloucester, The glove which I have given him for a favour May haply prove him false. Fluellen, may be, It is the soldier's; I by bargain should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick: If that the soldier strike him, as I judge By his blunt bearing he will keep his word, some sudden mischief may arise of it; For I do know Captain Fluellen valiant And, touched with choler, hot as gunpowder, And quickly will return an injury: Follow, and see there be no harm between them.

Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII. — Before King Henry's pavilion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. God's will and his pleasure, captain, I see you now, come apace to the king: there is more good toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove? [glove.

Flu. Know the glove! I know the glove is a Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it. [Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblood! an arrant traitor as any in the universal world, or in France, or in England! Gone. How now, sir! you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand, Captain Gower! I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat. I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alencon's.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, here is — praised be God for it! — a most contemptuous treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Aleoncon.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it: and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap; I promised to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have borne it as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lousy knave it is: I hope your majesty is near me testimony and witness, and will avouchment, that this is the glove of Aleoncon, that your majesty is given me, in your conscience, now?

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it. 'Twas I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike; And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any mortal law in the world.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction? Will. All offences, my lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine that might offend your majesty. Will. Your majesty can not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you take it for your own fault and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me. [crows.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with
And give it to this fellow. Keep it, fellow;
And wear it for an honour in thy cap
Till I do challenge it. Give him the crowns:
And, captain, you must play your friends with him.
Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his belly. Hold, there is twelve pence for you; and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of pravish, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.
Will. I will none of your money.
Flu. It is with a good will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you be so pushful? your shoes is not so good:
't is a good silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald, are the dead number'd?
Her. Here is the number of the slaughtered
French [uncle?]
K. Hen. Whom prisoners of good sort are taken.
Exe. Charles Duke of Orleans, nephew to the king;
John Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouicquilat;
Of other lords and barons, knights and squires,
Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.
K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand
That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number,
And nobles bearing lammers, there lie dead
One hundred twenty-six: added to these,
Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,
Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights:
So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;

The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood and quality.
The names of those their nobles that lie dead:
Charles Dambreth, high constable of France;
Jacques de Chatillon, admiral of France;
The master of the cross-bows, Lord Lumbardes;
Great Master of France, the brave Sir Guichard
Dolphin,
John Duke of Alençon, Anthony Duke of Brabant,
The brother to the Duke of Burgundy,
And Edward Duke of Bar: of lusty earls,
Grandpré and Roussi, Fauconberg and Folx,
Beaumont and Mare, Vaudemont and Lestrade.
Here was a royal fellowship of death!
Where is the number of our English dead?
[Herold shows them another paper.
Edward the Duke of York, Davy Gam, esquire:
None else of name; and of all other men
But five and twenty. O God, thy arm was here;
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all. When, without stratagem,
In plain shock and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss
On one part and on the other? Take it, God,
For it is none but thine!

Exe. T is wonderful!
K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village:
And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this or that praise from God
Which is his only.
Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?
K. Hen. By all means, but with this acknowledgment:
That God fought for us.

Flu. Was, my conscience, he did us great good.
K. Hen. Do we all holy rites;
Let there be sung 'Non holds' and 'Te Deum,'
The dead with charity enclosed in clay:
And then to Calais; and to England then:
Where never from France arrived more happy men.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

PROLOGUE.

Chor. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit the excuse
Of time, of numbers and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life
Be here presented. Now we bear the king
Toward Calais: grant him there: there seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
A' thwart the sea. Behold, the English beach
Pales in thousand with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd
Which like a mighty whiffer 'fore the king [sea,
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath thought that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;
Giving full troply, signal and ostent
Quite from himself to God. But now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens!
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Cesar in:
As, by a lower but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
How many woud the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of England's stay at home;
The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them; and omit
All the occurrences of the deep-mouth'd;
Till Harry's back-return again to France:
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
The interim, by remembering you 't is past.
Then brook abridgement, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

[Exit.

SCENE I.—France. The English camp.

Enter Fluenlen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.
Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, asse my friend,
Captain Gower: the rascally, scal'd, beggary, lousy,

384
Enter Pistol.

Gow: Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu: 'Tis no matter for his swellings nor his turkey-cocks. God bless you, Auncient Pistol you scurvy, lousy knave, God bless you!

To have me fold upon Parce's fatal web?

Hence! I am ashamed at the smell of leek.

Flu. I seech you heartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek: because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections and your appetites and your digestions do's not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.] Will you not take it, scurling knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scurdlng knave, when God's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals; come, there is sauce for it. [Strikes him.] You called me yesterday mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain: you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peel his pate four days. Bile, I pray you; it is good for your green wound and your pooey coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge; I eat and eat. I swing mock at thee; there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see I eat.

Flu. Much good do you, scurvy knave, heartily.

No, I pray you, thou now none away; the skin is good for your broad coxcomb. When you take occasion to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is good: hold you, there is a gront to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a gront;

Flu. Yes, verily and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy gront in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I love you anything, I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodchopper, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God b' wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exeunt.]

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. When you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well. [Exit.

Pist. Doth Fortune play the huswife with me now?

News have I, that my Nell is dead! the spital
Of malady of France;
And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.
Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs
Honour is cull'd. We, I verily, I'll turn,
And something lean to cutpurses of quick hand.
To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgel'd scars,
And swear I got them in the Gallia wars. [Exit.

SCENE II.—France. A royal palace.

Enter, at one door, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloucester, Warwick, Westmoreland, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel, the Princess Katharine, Alice and other Ladies; the Duke of Burgundy, and his train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are Unto our brother France, and to our sister, [met] Health and fair time of day; joy and good wishes To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine; And, as a branch and member of this royalty, By whom this present assembly is arrived, We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy; And, princes French, and peers, health to you all! Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your Most worthy brother England; fairly met: [face, So are you, princes English, every one.
Q. Lou. So happy be the issue, brother England, Of this good day and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them Against the French, that met them in their bent, The fatal balls of murdering basilisks: The venom of such looks, we fairly hope, Have lost their quality, and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.
K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear. Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you. Dur. My duty to you both, on equal love, Great Kings of France and England! That I have labour'd.

With all my wits, my pains and strong endeavours, To bring your most imperial majesties Unto this bar and royal interview, Your mightiness on both parts best can witness. Since then my office hath so far prevail'd That, face to face and utilly eye to eye, You have congregated, let it not disgrace me, If I demand, before this royal view, What rub or what impediment there is.

Why that the naked, poor and mangled Peace, Dear nurse of arts, plentifuls and joyful births, Should not in this best garden of the world Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage? Alas, she hath from France too long been chased, And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps, Corrupting in its own fertility.

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart, Unpruned dies; her hedges even-bleach'd, Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair, Put forth disorder'd twigs; her fallow leas The danel, hummock and rank fumitory

Doth root upon, while that the couler rusts That should democrate such savagery.

The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth The freckled cowslip, burnet and green clover, Wanting the sythe, all incorrected, rank

Conceives by idleness and nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckes, burs, Losing both beauty and utility

And as our vineyards, fallows, meads and hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildness,
Even so our houses and ourselves and children
Have lost, or do not learn to want of time,
The sciences that should become our country;
But grow like savages,—as soldiers will
That nothing do but meditate on blood,—
To swearing and stern looks, diffused attire
And all things that seems unnatural.
Which to our force into our favour
You are assembled: and my speech entreats
That I may know the, why gentle Peace
Should not expel these inconveniences
And bless us with her former qualities. [Exeunt Fr. and Bur.]
The Whose want gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenours and particular effects
You have unscheduled briefly in your hands.

Kath. The king hath heard them; to the which as
There is no answer made.

K. Hen. Well then the peace,
Which you before so urged, lies in his answer.

K. Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'erglanced the articles: pleaseth your grace
To take some of your thoughts presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

K. Hen. Brother, we shall. Go, uncle Exeter,
And brother Clarence, and you, brother Gloucester,
We mean to send to Hugon, go with the king;
And take with you free power to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageous for our dignity,
Anything in or out of our demands,
And we'll consign thereto. Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?

Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them:
Haply a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles too nicely urged be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here
She is our capital demand, comprised
Within the forerank of our articles.

Q. Isa. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all except Henry, Katharine, and Alice.

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair,
Will you be vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady's ear
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your English.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me sounly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Parle-moi, I cannot tell vat is 'like me.

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate, and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges?

Alice. Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi dit.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongnes of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Our dat de tongnes de de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de princess.

K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoman.
I faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king that thou wouldst think
I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to make it in love, but directly to say thus you; 'then if you urge me farther than to say 'do you in faith? 'I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; I faith, do; and so clap hands and a bar gain: how say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, me understand.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me:
for the one, I have neither words nor measure,
and for the other, I have no strength in measure,
yet a reasonable measure in strength.

Kath. If I could win a lady at least of you, or,
Kate, that would be my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or if I might buffet for my love, or found my horse for her favour, I could lay on like a butcher and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off.
But, before Gis. Kate, never changing, but keep thy out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation: only downright oaths, which I never use still urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his eyes for anything more than his looks, let thy eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier:
if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to speak to thee that I shall die, is true; but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too.

Kath. Is it possible dat I could love de enemy de France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shed off. O que vous avez le possession de moi,— let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speech!— done votre est France et vous êtes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to break so much more French: I shall keep more thy French, in unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, le Français que vous parlez, il est meilleur que l'Anglais lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, is 't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly-falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But,
Kate, dost thou understand thus much English,
canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate?
I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night, when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me merrily; the rather, gentle princess, because I see you ne'er have had my part in your eyes. Kate, as I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt, I get thee with scandal, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder: shall not thou and I, between Saint Denis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall preserve Courtlier and fair, Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce? "

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endavour for your French part of such a boy; and for my English moiety take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon tres cher et devin decesse?

Kath. Your majesty ave fausse French enough to deceive de most sage demoiseille dat is en France. But, monsieur le Prince, la bien fausse! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now, beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me; therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer up of beauty, can do no more to vex me than my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushing; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say 'Harry of England, I am thine: ' which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud 'England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine;' who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt be fellow with thy King of good fellow. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English; wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is as it shall please de roi mon père.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: ma force ne peut point que vous abaissez votre grandeur en faisant la main d'une de votre seingneur indigne serviteur; excusez-moi, je vous supplie, mon tres-puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames et demoiselles pour être baisées devant leur noces, il n'est pas la coutume de France.

K. Hen. Madam my interpreter, what says she? Alice. Dat it is not be de fashion pour les ladies de France,—I cannot tell vat is baiser en Anglise.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre bettre que moi.

K. Hen. How can you, when fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Oui, vraiment.

K. Hen. O Kate, nice customs curtsy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouth of all fault-finds; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patient and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Re-enter the French King and his Queen, Burgundy, and other Lords.

Bar. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bar. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness. Par'don the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. Can you blame her then, being a maid yet roset over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink and yield, as love is blind and enforces.

Bar. They are too excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

Bar. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end and she must be blind too.

Bar. Par'don the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. Can you blame her then, being a maid yet roset over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end and she must be blind too.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her: so the maid that stood in the way for my wish shall show me the way to my will.

[son

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article: His daughter first, and then in sequel all, According to their firm proposed natures.

Eex. Only he hath not yet subscribed this: Where your majesty demands, that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form and with this signature, \\

Our trescher fils Henri, Roi d'Angleterre, Héritier de France; and thus in Latin, Preecharissimus filius noster Henricus, Rex Angliae, et Hennes Francie.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied, But your request shall make me let it pass.
K. Hen. I pray you, when, in love and dear alliance,
Let that one article rank with the rest;
And thereupon give me your daughter.
Fr. King. Take her, fair son, and from her blood raise up
Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms
Of France and England, whose very shores look pale
With envy of each other’s happiness,
May cease their hatred, and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord
In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
His bleeding sword ’twixt England and fair France.
All. Amen!
K. Hen. Now, welcome, Kate: and bear me witness all,
That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one!
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there ’twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage,
Thrust in between the pation of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league;
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive each other. God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!
K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage: on which day,
My Lord of Burgundy, we’ll take your oath,
And all the peers’, for surety of our leagues.
Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me;
And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

EPILOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus far, with rough and all-able pen,
Our bending author hath pursued the story,
In little room confining mighty men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but in that small most greatly lived
This star of England: Fortune made his sword;
By which the world’s best garden he achieved,
And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant hands crown’d King
Of France and England, did this king succeed;
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown; and, for their sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

_Dead March._ Enter the Funeral of King Henry the Fifth, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloucester, Protector; the Duke of Exeter, the Earl of Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night! Comets, importing change of times and states, Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky, And with them scourge the bad revolving stars That have consented unto Henry's death! King Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long! England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. _Glu._ England ne'er had a king until his time. Virtue he had, deserving to command: His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams: His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings; His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire, More dazzled and drove back his enemies Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech: He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered. _Exe._ We mourn in black: why mourn we not in Henry is dead and never shall revive: Upon a wooden coffin we attend, And death's dishonourable victory. We with our stately presence glorify, Like captives bound to a triumphant car. What! shall we curse the planets of mishap That plotted thus our glory's overthrow? Or shall we think the subtle-witted French Conjurers and sorcerers, that afraid of him By magic verses have contrived his end? _Win._ He was a king bless'd of the King of kings. Unto the French the dreadful judgment-day So dreadful will not be as was his sight. The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought: The church's prayers made him so prosperous. _Glu._ The church! where is it? Had not churchmen pray'd. His thread of life had not so soon decay'd: None do you like but an effeminate prince, Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe. [for _Win._ Gloucester, whate'er we like, thou art profane. And lookest to command the prince and realm. Thy wife is proud: she holdeth thee in awe, More than God or religious churchmen may. _Glu._ Name not religion, for thou lovest the flesh, And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st Except it be to pray against thy foes. [peace: _Bgd._ Cease, cease these jars and rest your minds in Let's to the altar: heralds, wait on us: Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms; Since arms avail not now that Henry's dead. Posterity, await for wretched years, When at their mothers' moist eyes babes shall suck, Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears, And none but women left to wail the dead. Henry the Fifth, thy ghost I invoke: Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils, ACT I.  FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE II.

Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!  A far more glorious star thy soul will make Than Julius Caesar or bright —

Enter a Messenger.

Mess.  My honourable lords, health to you all!  Sad tidings bring I to you out of France, Of loss, of slaughter and desolation: Guianne, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans, Paris, Guyors, Poictiers, are all quite lost. [corse?  Bed.  What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's shade?  They burn the base with the great towns! Will make him burst his head and rise from death.  Glou.  Is Paris lost?  Is Rouen yielded up?  If Henry were recall'd to life again,— [ghost.  These news would cause him once more yield the Exe.  How were they lost?  what treachery was used?  Mess.  No treachery; but want of men and money.  Amongst the soldiers this is muttered, That here you maintain several factions, And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought, You are disposing of your generals: One would have lingering wars with little cost; Another, to shew thy self, would make songs; A third thinks, without expense at all, By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd. Awake, awake, English nobility! Let not slob do thy honour new-begot: Create thee the flower-de-luces in your arms; Of England's coat one half is cut away.  Exe.  Were our tears wanting to this funeral, These tidings would call forth their flowing tides.  Bed.  Me they concern; Regent I am of France.  Give me my steeled coat.  I'll fight for France.  Aways with that Earl of Salisbury in my mind: Wounds will I lend the French instead of eyes, To weep their interminable miseries.

Enter to them another Messenger.

Mess.  Lords, view these letters full of bad misfortune from the English side, —chance, Except some petty towns of no import: The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims; The Bastard of Orleans with him is join'd; Reignier, Duke of Anjou, doth take his part; The Duke of Alencon lieth to his side.  Exe.  The Dauphin Charles is his special king; All fly to him!  O, whither shall we fly from this reproach?  Glou.  We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats.  Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.  [mess?  Bed.  Gloucester, why doubt'st thou of my forward- ing army here must march in my thoughts, Wherewith already France is overran.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess.  My gracious lords, to add to your laments, Wherewith you now belowe King Henry's hearse, I must inform you of a dismal truth: Betwixt the stout Lord Talbot and the French, Win.  What!  wherein Talbot overcame?  is't so?  Mess.  O, no; wherein Lord Talbot was o'erthrown: The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.  The tenth of August last this dreadful lord, Retiring from the siege of Orleans, had, Having full scarce six thousand in his troop, By three and twenty thousand of the French Was round encompassed and set upon.  No leisure had he to enrank his men; His horse with pikes set before his archers; Instead whereof sharp stakes pluck'd out from hedges They pitched in the ground confusedly, To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.  More than three hours the fight continued; Where valiant Talbot above human thought Enraged wonders with his word and lance: Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him; Here, there, and everywhere, enraged he flew:  The French exclaim'd, the devil was in arms; All the whole army stood agazed on him: His soldiers ayng his undaunted spirit A Talbot!  A Talbot!  cried out again And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.  Here had the Dauphin Charles truly been taken, If Sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward: He, being in the vaward, placed behind With purpose to relieve and follow them, Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.  Hence grew the general wreak and massacre; Enclosed with them with the base of France: A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace, Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back, Whom all France with their chief assembled strength Durst not presume to look once in the face.  Bed.  Is Talbot slain?  then I will say myself, For living idly here in pomp and ease, Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid, Unto his dastard foemen is betray'd.  Mess.  O no, he lives; but is taken prisoner, And Lord Scales with him and Lord Hungerford: Most of the rest slaughter'd or took likewise.  Bed.  This is the thing I shall pay.  I'll haste The Dauphin headlong from his throne: His crown shall be the ransom of my friend; Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.  Farewell, my masters; to my task will I; Bonfire in France I think the world will make, To keep our great Saint George's feast withal: Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take, Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.  Mess.  So you had need; for Orleans is besieged; The English army is grown weak and faint: The Earl of Salisbury craven supply, And hardly keeps his men from mutiny, Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.  Exe.  Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn, Either to quell the Dauphin utterly, Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.  Bed.  I do remember it; and here take my leave, To go about my preparation.  [Exeit.  Glou.  I'll to the Tower with all the haste I can, To view the artillery and munition; And then I will proclaim young Henry king.  [Exeit.  Exe.  To Eltham will I, where the young king is, Being ordain'd to open a courier, And for his safety there I'll best devise.  [Exeit.  Win.  Each hath his place and function to attend: I am left out; for me nothing remains.  But long I will not be Jack out of office: The king from Eltham I intend to steal And sit at cheifest stern of public weal.  [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France.  Before Orleans.

Sound a flourish.  Enter Charles, Alencon, and Reignier, marching with drum and soldiers.

Char.  Mars his true moving, even as in the So in the earth, to this day is not known: [heavens Late did he shine upon the English side; Now are we victors; upon us he smiles. What towns of any moment but we have?  At pleasure here we lie near Orleans.  Otherwhiles the famish'd English, like pale ghosts, Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.  Alen.  They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves: Either they must be dieted like mules, Or have their provender fied to their mouths, Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.  Reig.  Let's raise the siege: why live we idly here?  Talbot is taken, whom we want to fear: Remaisthence none but mad-brain'd Salisbury; And he may well in fretting spend his gall, Nor men nor money hath he to make war.

Char.  Sound, sound alarm! we will rush op them.
Act I. First Part of King Henry VI. Scene II.

Now for the honour of the forlorn French!
Him I forgive my death that killeth me
When he sees me go back one foot or fly. [Exeunt.

Here alarum; they are beaten back by the English with great loss. Re-enter Charles, Alençon, and Reignier.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I
Dogs! cowards! dastards! I would ne'er have fled,
But that they left me midst my enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life.
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alen. a countryman of ours, records,
England all Olivers and Rowlands bred
During the time Edward the Third did reign.
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons and Goliases
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!
Lean and is to raise this who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd glimmers or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do.
By my consent, we'll even let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appalled.

Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succor is at hand:
A holy maid better with me I bring,
Which by a vision sent to her from heaven
France, and drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine sylly of old Rome:
What's past and what's to come she can descry.

Speek, shall I call her in? Believe my words,
For they are certain and infallible.

Char. Go, call her. [Exit Bastard.] But first,
to try her skill,
Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:
Question her proudly; let thy looks be stern;
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.

Re-enter the Bastard of Orleans, with Joan La Pucelle.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Puc. Reignier, is 't thou that thinkest to beguile
Where's the Dauphin? Come, come, come from behind;
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amazed, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart.
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Alen. From the child she can by birth a shepherd's daughter,
My wit untrained in any kind of art.

Heaven and our Lady graciously hast pleased
To shine on my contemplable estate:
Lo, whilst I waited on my tender limits,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother designed to appear to me
And in a vision full of majesty
Will'd me to leave my base vocation
And free my country from calamity:

Her aid she promised and assured success:
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And, whereas I was but weak and infirm,
With those clear rays which she infused on me
That beauty am I bless'd with which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated:

My courage try by combat, if thou darest,
And thou shalt see that I exceed my sex.

Puc. I am prepared: here is my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side;
The which at Touraine, in Saint Katharine's churchyard,
Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come, o' God's name; I fear no woman.

Puc. And while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.

Here they fight; and Joan La Pucelle overcomes.

Char. Stay, stay thy hands! thou art an Amazon
And fightest with a sword of Deborah.[weak.

Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too

Char. Who'er helps thee, 'tis that must help me:

 impatiently I burn with thy desire;
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdued.
Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be Alençon,
Let me thy servant and not sovereign be:
'Tis the French Dauphin sueth to thee thus.

Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love,
For my profession's sacred from above:

When I have chased all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompense. [thick.

Char. Meantime look gracious on thy prostitute

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he swipes this woman to her snick;
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

[know: Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do.
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you
Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Puc. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!

FIGHT TILL THE LAST GASP; I WILL BE YOUR GUARD. [out.

Char. What she says I'll confirm: we'll fight it

Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English scourge.

This night the siege assuredly I'll raise;
Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlargeth itself

Till by broad spreading it disperseth all about.

With Henry's death the English circle ends;
Dispursed are the glories it included.
Now am I like that proud insulting ship
Which Caesar and his fortune bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?

Thou with an eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine,
Nor yet Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days, were like thee.

Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,

How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our Honours.

Drive them from Orleans and be immortalized. [it: Char. Presently we'll try: come, let's away about.

No prophet will I trust, if she prove false. [Exeunt.

391
Here Gloucester's men beat out the Cardinal's men, and enter in the hally-burlly the Mayor of London and his Officers.

May. Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates, Thus contumeliously should break the peace! Gloucester. Peace, mayor! thou know'st little of my wrongs.

Here's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king, Hath here distrain'd the Tower to his use. Win. Here's Gloucester, a foe to citizens, One that still motions war and never peace, Of recharging your free purses with large fines, That seeks to overthow religion, Because he is protector of the realm, And would have armour here out of the Tower, To crown himself king and suppress the prince. Gloucester. I will not answer thee with words, but blows. May. Nought rests for me in this tumultuous But to make open proclamation: [stiffe Come, officer; as loud as e'er thou canst. CRY. Off. All manner of men assembled here in arms this day against God's peace and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death. Gloucester. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law: But we shall meet, and break our minds at large. Win. Gloucester, we will meet; to thy cost, beware: Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work. May. I'll call for clubs, if you will not away. This cardinal's more haughty than the devil. Gloucester. Mayor, farewell: thou dost but what thou mayst. Win. Abominable Gloucester, guard thy head; For I intend to have it ere long. [Exeunt, severally, Gloucester and Winchester with their Serving-men. May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart. Good God, these nobles should such stomachs bear! I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exeunt.}

SCENE IV.—Orleans.

Enter, on the walls, a Master-Gunner and his Boy. M. Guen. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieged, And how the English have the suburbs won. Boy. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them, Howe'er unfortunate I miss'd my aim. M. Guen. But now thou shalt not. Be thou ruled Chief master-gunner am I of this town; [by me: Something I must do to procure me grace. The prince's espiers have informed me How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd, Went through a secret grate of iron bars In yonder tower to overpeer the city And thence discover how with most advantage They may vex us with shot or with assault. To intercept this inconvenience, A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have placed; And even these three days have I watch'd, If I could see them. Now do thou watch, for I can stay no longer. If thou spiest any, run and bring me word; And thou shalt find me at the governor's. [Exit. Boy. Father, I warrant you: take you no care; I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them. [Exit.

Enter, on the turrets, the Lords Salisbury and Talbot, Sir William Glansdale, Sir Thomas Gargrave, and others.

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd! How wert thou handled being prisoner?
Or by what means got'st thou to be released?
Discourse, I prithee, on this turret's top.
Tal. The Duke of Bedford had a prisoner
Call'd the brave Lord Ponton de Santrailes;
For him was I exchanged and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far
Once in contempt they would have barters' me:
Which I disclaiming scorn'd and craved death
Rather than I would be so vile-esteem'd.
In fine, redeem'd I was as desired.
But, O! the treacherous Fastolfo wounds my heart,
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I had but him brought into my power.
Sal. Yet tell me, not how thou art entertained.
Tal. With scoffs and scorn's and contumelious
In open-market-place produced they me, [taunts.
To be a public spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scarcrow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame:
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'tho' longest time was spread
That they supposed I could rend bars of steel
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:
Wherefore a guard of chosen Shot I had
That walked about me every minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a limstock.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endured,
But we will be revenged sufficiently.
Now in Orleans:
Here, through this grate, I count each one
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in; the sight will much delight thee.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me have your express opinions
Where is best place to make our battery next.

Gur. I think, at the north gate; for there stand lords.

Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.

Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.

Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners!

Gur. O Lord, have mercy on me, woful man!

Tal. What chance is this that suddenly hath cross'd us?

Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak:
How fairest thou, mirror of all martial men?
One of thy eyes and thy cheek's side struck off!
Accursed tower! accursed fatal hand
That hath contriv'd this woful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame;
Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst my trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did never leave striking in the field,
Yet livest thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,
One eye thou hast, to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.

Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!
Bear Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Though thou art alone,
He beckons with his hand and smiles on me,
As who should say 'When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.'

Plantagenet, I will; and like thee, Nero,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:
Wretched shall France be only in my name.
[Here an alarm, and it thunders and lightens.]
What stir is this? what tumult's in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarm and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head:
The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,
A holy prophetess new risen up,
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth groan!
It racks his heart he cannot be revenged.
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you:
Pucelle or puzzel, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.
Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what these hardi Faithfull Frenchmen dare.

SCENE V. — The same.

Here an alarm again: and Talbot pursueth the Dauphin, and driveth them; then enter Joan la Pucelle, driving Englishmen before her, and exit after them: then re-enter Talbot.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my forces?
Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them;
A woman clad in armour chaseth them.

Re-enter la Pucelle.

Here, here she comes! I'll have a bout with thee;
Devil or devil's dam, I'll copulate thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch,
And straightforward give thy soul to him thou servest.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace thee.

[Here they fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail?
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded stumpet.

[They fight again.

Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come:
I must go victual Orleans forthwith.

[A short alarm: then the form with soldiers.

O'ertake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strength.
Go, cheer up thy hungry-starved men;
Help Salisbury to make his testament:
This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[Exit Talbot.

Edw. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's
I know not where I am, nor what I do:
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troops and conquer them as she lists:
So bees with smoke and doves with nonsome stench
Are from their hives and houses driven away.
They call'd us for our fierceness English dogs;
Now, like to whoels, we crying run away.

[A short alarm.

Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight,
Or tear the lions out of England's coat;
Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead;
Sheep run not half so treacherous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard.
As you fly from your off-suckled slaves.

[Alarum. Here another skirmish.

It will not be: retire into your trenches;
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.
Pucelle is ever in debate while this doth last,
In spite of us or aught that we could do.
O, would I were to die with Salisbury!
The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

[Exit Talbot.

Edw. Alarum; retreat; flourish.
ACT II.

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter, on the walls, La Pucelle, Charles, Reigner, Alençon, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls; Rescued is Orleans from the English: Thus Joan la Pucelle hath performed her word.

Char. Divinest creature, Astra's daughter, How shall I honour thee for this success? Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens That one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess! Recover'd is the town of Orleans: More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.

Reig. Why ring not the bells aloud throughout the town? Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires And feast and banquet in the open streets, To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Orleans.

Enter a Sergeant of a band, with two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant: If any noise or soldier you perceive Near to the walls, by some apparent sign Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

First Sent. Sergeant, you shall. [Exit Sergeant.

Thus are poor servitors, When others sleep upon their quiet beds, Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, and forces, with scaling-ladders, their drums beating a dead march.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy, By whose approach the regions of Artois, Wallon and Picardy are friends to us, This happy night the Frenchmen are secure, Having all day caroused and banqueted: Embrace we then this opportunity As fitting best to quittance their deceit Contrived by art and baleful sorcery. Bed. Coward of France! how much he wrongs his fame, Despoils his own arm's fortitude, To join with witches and the help of hell! Bur. Traitors have never other company. But what's that Pucelle whom they term so pure? Tal. A maid, they say. Bed. A maid! and be so martial! Bur. Pray God she prove not masculine ere long.

If underneath the standard of the French She carry armour as she hath begun. Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits? God is our fortress, in whose conquering name Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee. Tal. Not all together; better far, I guess, That we do make our entrance several ways; That, if it chance the one of us do fail, The other yet may rise against their force. Bed. Agreed: I'll to yond corner. Bur. And I to this, Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.

Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right Of English Henry, shall this night appear How much in duty I am bound to both.

Sent. Arm! arm! the enemy doth make assault! [Cry: 'St. George,' 'A Talbot.'
SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the town.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury,
And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.
Now have I paid my vow unto his soul;
For every drop of blood was drawn from him
There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-night.
And that hereafter ages may behold
What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,
Within their chiefest temple I'll erect
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter'd:
Upon the which, that every one may read,
Shall be engraven the sack of Orleans,
The treacherous manner of his mournful death
And what a terror he had been to France.
But, lords, in all our bloody massacre
I must we met not with the Dauphin's grace,
His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc,
Nor any of his false confederates. [began,

Bed. 'Tis thought, Lord Talbot, when the light
Roused the slam'd and statement of many beds,
They did amongst the troops of armed men
Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bar. Myself, as far as I could well discern
For smoke and dusty vapours of the night,
Am sure I scared the Dauphin and his trull,
When that an arm from the earth swiftly running,
Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves
That could not live asunder day or night.
After that things are set in order here,
We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely
Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts [train
So much applauded through the realm of France?
Tal. Here is the Talbot: who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, Countess of Auvergne,
With modesty admiring thy renown,
By me entreats, great lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe
To visit her poor castle where she lies,
That she may boast she hath beheld the man
Wossed all the world with word and loud report.
Bar. How ill nin? Nay, even, I
For our wars will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter'd with.
You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of
Could not prevail with all their oratory, [men
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd;
And therefore tell her I return great thanks,
And in submission will attend on her.
Will not your honours bear me company?

Bed. No, truly: it is more than manners will:
And I have heard it said, unbidden guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.
Come hither, captain. [Whispers.] You perceive my mind?

Capt. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Auvergne. The Countess's castle.

Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge;
And when you have done so, bring the keys to me.
Port. Madam, I will. [Exit.

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right,
I shall as famous be by this exploit
As Seythian Tonyris by Cyrus' death.
Great is the renown of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account:
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madam, According as your ladyship desired,
By message craved, so is Lord Talbot come.
Count. And he is welcome. What is this the Mess. Madam, it is. [man? Count.

Mess. Is this the scope of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad
That with his name the mothers still their babes?
I see report is fabulous and false:
I thought I should have seen some Hercules,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Alas, this is a child, a silly dwarf!
It cannot be this weak and witheled shrimp
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you;
But since your ladyship is not at leisure,
I'll sort some other time to visit you. [he goes.
Count. What means this negligence of him whither
Mess. Stay, my Lord Talbot: for my lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter with keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.
Port. Prisoner! to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord;
And for that cause I train'd thee to my house.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my gallery thy picture hangs:
But now the substance shall endure the like,
And I will chain these legs and arms of thine,
That hast by tyranny these many years
Wasted our country, slain our citizens
And sent our arms and husbands captive.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha! Count. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn to mourning.

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond
To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow
Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal. I am indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself:
You are deceived, my substance is not here;
For what you see is but the smallest part
And least proportion of humanity:
I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here,
It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,
Your roof were not sufficient to contain t'.

Count. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce;
He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can these contrarieties agree?

Tal. That will I show you presently.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded
That Talbot is but shadow of his self?
These are his substance, sinews, arms and strength,
With which he yokest thy rebellious necks,
Razeth thy cities and subverts thy towns
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse:
I find thou art no less than fame hath bruited
And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am sorry that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.
Tud. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue
The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.
Whatever I have done hath not offended me;
Nor other satisfaction do I crave.
But only, with your patience, that we may Taste of your wine and see what cates you have;
For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.
Count. With all my heart, and think me honoured
To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. The Temple-garden.

Enter the Earls of Somerset, Suffolk, and Warwick;
Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords and gentlemen, what means this silence?
Dare no man answer in a case of truth?
Suf. Within the Temple-hall we were too loud;
The garden here is more convenient.
Plan. Then say at once if I maintain'd the truth;
Or else confess the error?
Suf. Faith, I have been a traitor in the law,
And never yet could frame my will to it;
And therefore frame the law unto my will.
Som. Judge you, my Lord of Warwick, then, between us.
[Pitch; War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye;
I have perhaps some shallow spirit of judgment;
But in these nice sharp quillquets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.
Plan. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:
The truth appears so naked on my side
That any purblind eye may find it out.
Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining and so evident
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.
Plan. Since you are tongue-tied and so loath to speak,
In dumb signification proclaim your thoughts:
Let him that is a true-born gentleman
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.
Som. Let him that is no coward nor no flatterer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.
War. I love no colours, and without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.
Suf. I pluck this red rose with young Somerset
And say withal I think he held the right.
Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen, and pluck no more.

Till you conclude that he upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well objected:
If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.
Plan. And I—
Ver. Then for the truth and plainness of the case,
I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side.
Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off,
Lest bleeding you do paint the white rose red
And fall on my side so, against your will.
Ver. For thy love art thou my opinion, bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt
And keep me on the side where still I am.
Som. Well, well, well on: who else?
Law. Unless my study and my books be false,

The argument you held was wrong in you;

[To Somerset.

In sign whereof I pluck a white rose too.
Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?
Som. Here in my scabbard, meditating that Shall dye you white with these pious roses;
Plan. Meantime your cheeks do counterfeit our
For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.
Som. No, Plantagenet,
'T is not for fear but anger that thy checks
Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our roses,
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.
Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?
Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?
Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;
Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.
Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding roses,
That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.
Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I turn thee to thy fashion, ye devil.
Suf. Turn not thy scorns this way, Plantagenet.
Plan. Proud Pole, I will, and scorn both him and thee.
Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.
Som. Away, away, good William de la Pole!
We grace the woman by conversing with him.
War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him,
Somerset;
His grandfather was Lionel Duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward King of England:
Spring erstwhile yeomen from so deep a root?
Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,
Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.
Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my
On any plot of ground in Christendom. [words
Was not thy father, Richard Earl of Cambridge,
For treason executed in our late king's days?
And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And, till thou be restored, thou art a yeoman.
Plan. My father was attached, not attainted,
Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;
And that I'll tell at the bar of Somerset,
We were growing in time once ripen'd to my will.
For your partaker Pole and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To succour you for this apprehension:
Look to it well and say you are well war'd.
Som. Ah, thou shalt find us ready for thee still;
And know us by these colours for thy foes,
For these my friends in spite of thee shall wear.
Plan. And, by my soul, this jale and angry rose,
As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever and my faction wear,
Until it wither with me to my grave
Or flourish to the height of my desire.
[ion!
Suf. Go forward and be choke'd with thy ambition;
And so farewell until I meet thee next. [Exit.
Som. Have with thee, Pole. Farewell, ambitions
Richard. [Exit.
Plan. How I am braved and must perform an dare I
[hone
War. This blot that they object against your
Shall be wiped out in the next parliament
Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloucester;
And if thou be not then created York,
I will not live to be accounted Warwick.
Meantime, in spirit of my love to thee,
Against proud Somerset and William Pole,
Will I upon thy party wear this rose:
And here I prophesy: this brawl to-day,
Grown to this faction in the Temple-garden,
ACT II.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE V.

The Tower of London.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a chair, and Guelers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.
Even like a man new haled from the rack,
So fare my limbs with long imprisonment;
And these grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Nestor-like aged in an age of care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent;
Weak shoulders, overborne with hithering grief,
And pitiless arms, like to a wither'd vine
That droops its sapless branches to the ground:
Yet are these feet, whose carelessness stay is numb,
Unable to sport this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting no other comfort have.
But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?

First Guel. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come;
We sent unto the Temple, unto his chamber;
And answer was return'd that he will come.

Mor. Enough: my soul shall then be satisfied.
Poor gentleman! his wrong doth equal mine.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had;
And even since then hath Richard been obscured,
Deprived of honour and inheritance.
But now the arbitrator of desairs,
Just death, kind umpire of men's miscaries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence:
I would his troubles likewise were expired,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet.

First Guel. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly used,
Your nephew, late despaired Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:
O, tell me when my lips do touch his cheeks,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss,
And no, declare, sweet stem from York's great stock.
Why didst thou say, of late thou wert despaired?

Plan. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm;
And, in that case, I'll tell thee my disease.
This day, in argument upon a case,
Some hand of a true Plantagenet and me;
Among which terms he used his lavish tongue
And did upbraid me with my father's death:
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him.
Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake,
In honour to a true Plantagenet and me
And for alliance sake, declare the cause
My father, Earl of Cambridge, lost his head.

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me
And hath detain'd me all my flowering youth
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was cursed instrument of his decease.

Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant and cannot guess.

Mor. I will, if that my fading breath permit
And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Heure the grand truth, grand father, to this king;
Dropped his nephew Richard, Edward's son,
The first-begotten and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent:
During whose reign the Percys of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavoured, to my advancement to the throne:
The reason made these warrors lords to this
Was, for that—young King Richard thus removed,
Leaving no heir begotten of his body—
I was the next by birth and parentage;
For by my mother I derived am
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third son
To King Edward the Third; whereas he
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark: as in this haughty great attempt
Theylaboured to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry, Earl of Northumberland,
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke, did reign,
Thy father, Earl of Cambridge, then derived
From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of York,
Marrying my sister that thy mother was,
Again in pity of my hard distress
Levied an army, weening to redeem
And have install'd me in the diadem:
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True; and thou seest that I no issue have
And that my fainting words do warrant death:
Thou art my heir; the rest I wish thee gather:
But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me:
But yet, methinks, my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic:
Strong-gaited is the house of the Mortimers,
And like a mountain, not to be removed.
But now thy uncle is removing hence;
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O, uncle, would some part of my young years
Might but redeem the passage of your age!

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me, as that slaughterer doth
Which giveth many wounds when one will kill.
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only give order for my funeral:
And so farewell, and fair be all thy hopes
And prosperous be thy life in peace and war! [Dies.

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul!
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.
Well, I will look his counsel in my breast;
And what I do imagine let that rest.
Keepers, cease; let him go to his own self
Will see his buried better than his life.
[Exeunt Guelers, bearing out the body of Mortimer.
Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Choked with ambition of the meaneart sort:
And for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offered to my house,
I doubt not but with honour to redress;
And therefore haste I to the parliament,
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my ill the advantage of my good. [Exit.
ACT III.

Flourish. Enter King, Exeter, Gloucester, Warwick, Somerset, and Suffolk; the Bishop of Winchester, Richard Plantagenet, and others. Gloucester offers to put up a bill; Winchester snatches it, and tears it.

Win. Comest thou with deep premeditated lines, With written pamphlets studiously devised, To heap thou and thine up against my face, As I with tongue. Stones of Winchester, Stones of Gloucester thou canst accuse, Or ought intend'st to lay unto my charge, Do it without invention, suddenly; As I with sudden and extemporal speech Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glou. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience.

Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonour'd me. Think not, although in writing I profess'd The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes, That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen: No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness, Thy lewd, pestiferous and dissentious pranks, As very infants prattle of thy pride.

Thou art a most pernicious usurer, Froward by nature, enemy to peace; Lascivious, wanton, more than webesmen A man of thy profession and degree;

And for thy treachery, what's more manifest? In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life, As well at London bridge as at the Tower.

Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted, The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

[safe]

Win. Gloucester, I do defy thee. Lords, vouch-st To give me hearing what I shall reply. If I were covetous, ambitious or perverse, As he will have me, how am I so poor? Or how haps it I seek not to advance Or raise myself, but keep my wonded calling?

And for dissension, which preferreth peace More than I do?—except I be provoked. No, my good lords, it is not that offends; It is not that that hath incensed the duke; It is, because no one should sway but he; No one but he should be about the king; And that engenders thunder in his breast And makes him roar these accusations forth. But he shall know I am as good—

Glou. Thou bastard of my grandfather! Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray, But one imperious in another's throne?

Glou. Am I not protector, saucy priest? Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?

Glou. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps

And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster! Glou. Thou art reverent

Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life. Win. Rome shall remedy this.

War. Roam thither, then.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.

Som. Methinks my lord should be religious And know the office that belongs to such.

War. Methinks his lordship should be humbler; It fitteth not a prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.

War. State holy or unhallow'd, what of that? Is not he bishop, that is, a holy man? [tourge, Plan. [Aside] Plantagenet, I see, must hold his Lest it be said 'Speak, sirrah, when you should; Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?' Else would I have a fling at Winchester.

King. Uncles of Gloucester and of Winchester, The special watchmen of our English wall, I would prevail, if prayers might prevail, To join your hearts in love and amity. O, what a scandal is it to our crown, That two such noble peers as ye should jar! Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell Civil dissension is a virulent worm That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.

[Enter Serving-men, in skirmish, with bloody pates.]

King. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself, To hold your slaughtering hands and keep the peace. Pray, uncle Gloucester, mitigate this strife.

First Ser. Nay, if we be forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our feet.

Sec. Ser. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.

[Skirmish again.]

Glou. You of my household, leave this peevish And set this unaccustom'd fight aside. [broil

Third Ser. My lord, we know your grace to be a Just and upright; and, for your royal birth, [man Inferior to none but to his majesty: And ere that we will suffer such a prince, So kind a father of the commonweal, To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate, We and our wives and children all will fight And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.

First Ser. Ay, and the very parings of our nails Shall pitch a field when we are dead. [Begin again. Glou. Stay, stay, I say! And if you love me, as you say you do, Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.

King. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul! Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold My sighs and tears and will not once relent? Who should be pitiful, if you be not? Or who should study to prefer a peace, If holy churchmen take delight in broils? War. Yield, my lord protector; yield, Winchester; Except you mean with obstinate repulse To slay your sovereign and destroy the realm. You see what mischief and what murder too Hath been enacted through your enmity; Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood. Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glou. Compassion on the king commands me Or I would see his heart out, ere the priest [stoop; Should ever get that privilege of me. War. Behold, my Lord of Winchester, the duke Hath banish'd moody discontented fury, Is by his smoothed brows it doth appear: Why look you still so stern and tragic? Glou. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

King. Fie, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach That malice was a great and grievous sin;
ACT III.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter La Pucelle disguised, with four Soldiers with sacks upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen, Through which our Duke must make a breach: Take heed, be wary how you place your words; Talk like the vulgar sort of market men That come to gather money for their corn. If we have entrance, as I hope we shall, And that we find the slothful watch but weak, I'll by a sign give notice to our friends, That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them. First Sol. Our sacks shall be a means to sack the And we be lords and rulers over Rouen; [city, Therefore we'll knock. [Knocks. Watch. [Within] Qui est là? Puc. Paysans, pauvres gens de France: Poor market folks that come to sell their corn. Watch. Enter, go in: the market bell is rung. Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground. [Exeunt.

Enter Charles, the Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, Reignier, and forces.

Char. Saint Denis bless this happy stratagem! And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen. Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle and her practisants; Now she is there, how will she specify Where is the best and safest passage in? Reig. By the ingenuity a torch from yonder tower; Which, once discern'd, shows that her meaning is, No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter La Pucelle on the top, thrusting out a torch burning. Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen, But burning fatal to the Talbotites! [Exit. Bast. See, noble Charles, the beacon of our friend; The burning torch in yonder turret stands. Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge, A prophet to the fall of all our foes! Reig. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends: Enter, and cry 'The Dauphin! presently, And then do execution on the watch. [Alarum. Exeunt.

An alarum. Enter Talbot in an excursion. Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy Talbot but survive thy treachery. [tears, Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress, Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares, That hardly we escaped the pride of France. [Exit. An alarum: excursions. Bedford, brought in sick in a chair. Enter Talbot and Burgundy without: within La Pucelle, Charles, Bastard, Alençon, and Reignier, on the walls.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye corn for I think the Duke of Burgundy will fast [bread? Before he'll buy again at such a rate: 'T was full of dandel: do you like the taste? Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend and shameless courtier! I trust ere long to choke thee with thine own And make thee curse the harvest of that corn. Char. Your grace may starve perhaps before that time. [trea...
Puc. Are ye so hot, sir? yet, Pucelle, hold thy tongue. If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow. [peace;

The English whisperer and the rest.

God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker?

Tal. Dare ye come forth and meet us in the field?

Puc. Believe your lordship takes us then for fools, To try if that our own be ours or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate, But unto thee, the valiant conqueror. Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?

Alen. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang! base muleters of France! Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Puc. For you, Captain! let's get us from the walls; For Talbot means no goodness by his looks.

God be wi' you, my lord! we came but to tell you That we are here. [Exeunt from the walls.

Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long, Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame! Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house, Prick'd on by public wrongs sustain'd in France, Either to get the town again or die:

And I, as sure as English Henry lives And as his father here was conqueror, As sure as in this late-betrayed town Great Cour-de-licon's heart was buried; So sure I swear to get the town or die.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy vows.

Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince, The valiant Duke of Bedford. Come, my lord, We will bestow you in some better place, Fitter for sickness and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me: Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen

And will be partner of your weal or woe. [you.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read That sin in him was more than sin in me:

Come to the field and vanish'd quenched his foes; Methinks I should revive the soldiers' hearts, Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!

Then be it so: heavens keep old Bedford safe!

And now no more ado, brave Burgundy, But gather we our forces out of hand
And set upon our boasting enemy. [Exeunt all but Bedford and Attendants.

An alarm: excursions. Enter Sir John Fastolfe and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?

Fast. Whither away! to save myself by flight:
                             We are like to have the overthorn again.

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave Lord Talbot!

Retreat: excursions. La Pucelle, Alençon, and Charles fly.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please, For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.

What is the trust or strength of foolish man? They that of late were daring with their scots Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves. [Bedsford dies, and is carried in by two in his chair.

An alarm. Re-enter Talbot, Burgundy, and the rest.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again! This, a double honour, Burgundy. Yet heavens have glory for this victory!

Bur. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy Enshrines thee in his heart and there erects Thy noble deeds as valor's monuments.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle I think her old familiar is asleep: [now?

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his geeks?

What, all amoret Rouen hangs her head for grief That such a valiant company is fled. Now will we take some order in the town, Placing therein some expert officers, And then depart to Paris to the king.

For there young Henry with his nobles lie. Bur. What wills Lord Talbot pleaseth Burgundy. Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget The noble Lord of Bedford, in the old days, But see his exequies fulfill'd in Rouen: A braver soldier never couched lance, A gentler heart did never sway in court; But kings and mightiest potentates must die, For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The plains near Rouen.

Enter Charles, the Bastard of Orleans, Alençon, La Pucelle, and forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident, Nor grieve that Rouen is so recover'd: Care is no care, but rather corrosive, For things that are not to be remedied. Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while And like a peacock sweep along his tail; We'll pull his plumes and take away his train, If Dauphin and the rest will but rule. Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto And of thy cunning had no diffidence:

One sudden foil shall never breed distrust. Dest. Search out thy wit for secret policies, And we will make thee famous through the world. Alen. We'll set thy stature in some holy place, And have thee reverenced like a blessed saint: Employ thee then, sweet virgin, for our good. Puc. Then thus it must be: this doth Joan devise: By fair persuasions mix'd with sugar'd words We will entice the Duke of Burgundy To leave the Talbot and to follow us. Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that, France were no place for Henry's warriors; Nor should that nation boast it so with us, But be extirped from our provinces. Alen. For ever should they be expuls'd from A title so noble as to be an Englishman. [France

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work To bring this matter to the wished end. [Drum sounds afar off.

Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

Here sound an English march. Enter, and pass over at a distance, Talbot and his forces. There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread, And all the troops of English after him.

French march. Enter the Duke of Burgundy and forces.

Now in the rearward comes the duke and his: Fortune in favour makes him lag behind. Summon a parley; we will talk with him. [Trumpets sound a parley.

Char. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am marche Char. Speak, Pucelle, and enchant him with thy words.

Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France! Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.
ACT IV.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE I.

Bur. Speak on: but be not over-toldious.
Fuc. Look on thy country, look on fertile France, And see the cities and the towns defaced By wasting ruin of the cruel foe.
As looks the mother on her lowly babe When death doth close his tender dying eyes, See, see the pining malady of France; Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds, Which thou hast given her woful breast.
O, turn thy edgy sword another way; Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help. One drop of blood drawn from thy country's bosom Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore:
Return thee therefore with a flood of tears, And wash away thy country's stained spoils.
Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words, Or nature makes me suddenly relent.
Fuc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny, [thee,] Who join'st thou with but with a lordly nation That will not trust thee but for profit's sake? When Talbot hath set foot once in France And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill, Who then but English Henry will be lord And make his blood so thicker than thy sword.
Call we to mind, and mark but this for proof, Was not the Duke of Orleans thy foe? And was he not in England prisoner? But when they heard he was thine enemy, They set him free without his ransom paid, In spite of Burgundy and all his friends. See, thou, thou light'st against thy countrymen And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men. Come, come, return; return, thou wandering lord; Charles and the rest will take thee in their arms.
Bur. I am vanquished; these haughty words of Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot, [hers And made me almost yield upon my knees. Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen, And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace: My forces and my power of men are yours: So farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.
Fuc. [Aside] Done like a Frenchman: turn, and W. Look again! [Exeunt.]

Enter the King, Gloucester, Bishop of Winchester, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, Exeter; Vernon, Basset, and others. To them with his Soldiers, Talbot.

Tal. My gracious prince, and honourable peers, Hearing of your arrival in this realm, I have awe'd to give true and timely wars, To do my duty to my sovereign:
In sign whereof, this arm, that hath reclaim'd To your obedience fifty fortresses, Twelve cities and seven walled towns of strength, Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem, Let's fall his sword before your highness' feet, And with submissive loyalty of heart

A Scribes the glory of his conquest got
First to my God and next unto your grace. [Kneels.]

King. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle Gloucester, That hath so long been resident in France?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

King. Welcome, brave captain and victorious lord! When I was young, as yet I am not old, I do remember how my father said A stouter champion never handled sword. Long since were resolved of your truth, And I am heartily glad to see you in war; Yet never have you tasted our reward. Or been requerdon'd with so much as thanks, Because till now we never saw your face: Therefore, stand up; and, for these good deserts, We here create you Earl of Shrewsbury; And in our coronation take your place.

Sennet. Flourish. Exeunt all but Vernon and Basset.

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea, Disgracing of these colours that I wear In honour of my noble Lord of York: [spakest? Darest thou maintain the former words thou Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage The envious barking of your saucy tongue Against my lord the Duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is. Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as York. Ver. Bark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that. [Strikes him.]

Bas. Villain, thou know'st the law of arms is such That whose draws a sword, 't is present death, Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood. But I'll unto his majesty, and crave I may have liberty to venge this wrong; When thou shalt see I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you; And, after, meet you sooner than you would. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Sir John Fastolfo.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from To haste unto your coronation,

Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy and thee! I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next, To tear the garter from thy craven's leg.

[Plucking it off.]

Which I have done, because unworthily Thou wast installed in that high degree. Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:

This dastard, at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met or that a stroke was given,
Like to a trusty squire did run away:
In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;
Myself and divers gentlemen beside
Were there surprised and taken prisoners.
Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;
Or whether such that cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yes or no.

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous

26
And ill beseeming any common man, Much more a knight, a captain and a leader.

Tud. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords, Knights of the garter were of noble birth, Valiant explorers, full of the noon day, Such as were grown to credit by the wars; Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress, But always resolute in most extremes. He then that is not furnish'd in this sort Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight, Profaning his honours, and doth in his turn, And should, if I were worthy to be judge, Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain, That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. [Shout!]

King. Stain to thy countrymen, thou hear'st thyself be packing, therefore, thou that wast a knight: Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.

[Exit Fastolfe.]

And now, my lord protector, view the letter Sent from our uncle Duke of Burgundy: [his style] Glou. What means his grace, that he hath changed No more but plain and bluntly, 'To the king!' Hath he forgot he is his sovereign? Or doth his churlish superstition Pretend some alteration in good will? What's here? [Reads] 'I have, upon especial cause, Moved with compassion of my country's wreck, Together with the pitiful complaints Of such as your oppression feeds upon, Forgive your perjury and bear with their perversities; And join'd with Charles, the rightful King of O monstrosous treachery! can this be so, That in alliance, amity and oaths, There should be found such false dissembling guile?'

King. What doth my uncle Burgundy revol't? Glou. He doth my lord, and is become your foe.

King. Is that the worst this letter contain'd? Glou. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes. King. Why, then, Lord Talbot there shall talk with And give him chastisement for this abuse. Him how say you, my lord? are you not content? Tud. Content, my liege! yes, but that I am prevented, I should have begg'd it might have been employ'd. King. Then gather strength and march unto him straight: Let him perceive how ill we brook his treason And to revenge once it is to flout his friends. Tud. I go, my lord, in heart desiring still You may behold confusion of your foes. [Exit.]

Enter Vernon and Basset.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign, Bas. And me, my lord, grant me the combat too. York. This is my servant: hear him, noble prince, Som. And this is mine: sweet Henry, favour him, K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak. Say, gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaim? And why do you hang up this strange head? Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong. Bas. And I with him; for he hath done me wrong. K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain? First let me know, and then I'll answer you. Bas. Crossing the sea from England into France, This fellow here, with envious carping tongue, Upbraided the rose of those I wear; Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves Did represent my master's blushings cheeks, Whereunto only he did repugn the truth About a certain question, in the law Argued between the Duke of York and him; And with other vile and ignominious terms In confluxion of which rude reproach And in defence of my lord's worthiness, I crave the benefit of law of arms. Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord: For though he seem with forged quaint conceit To set a gloss upon his bold intent, Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him; And he himself provok'd me to this hedge, Pronouncing that the paleness of this flower Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. York. Will not this malice, Somerset, he look? Som. Your private grudge, my Lord of York, will Though he'er so cunningly you smoother it. [out.]

K. Hen. My Lord, what madness rules in brain-sick men?

When for so slight and frivolous a cause Such factious enmities shall arise! Good cousins both, of York and Somerset, Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.

York. Let this dissension first be tried by fight, And then your highness shall command a peace.

Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone; Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset. Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first. Bas. Confused be your strife! And perish ye, with your audacious pride! Presumptuous vassals, are you not ashamed With this immodest monstrous outrage To trouble and disturb the king and us? And you, my lords, methinks you do not well To take your persons in the perversions Henceforth I charge you, as you love our favour, Quite to forget this quarrel and the cause. And you, my lords, remember where we are; In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation: If they perceive dissension in our looks And that within ourselves we disagree, How will their grudging stomachs be provoked To wilful disobedience, and rebel! Beside, what infamy will there arise, When foreign princes shall be certified That for a toy, a thing of no regard, King Henry's peers and chief nobility Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France! O, think upon the conquest of my father, My tender years, and let us not forego That for a trifle that was bought with blood! Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife. I see no reason, if I wear this [Putting on a red rose.]

That any one should therefore be suspicious I more incline to Somerset than York: Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both: As well they may upbraid me with my crown, Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd. But your discretions better can persuade Than I am able to instruct or teach: And therefore, as we hither came in peace, So let us still continue peace and love.

Cousin of York, we institute your grace To be our regent in these parts of France: And, good my Lord of Somerset, unite Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot; And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors, Go cheerfully together and digest Your angry cholers on your enemies. Ourself, my lord protector and the rest, After some respite will return to Calais; From thence to England; where I hope ere long To be presented, by your victories, With Charles, Alençon and that traitorous rout. [Flourish. Exeunt all but York, Warwick, Exeter, and Vernon.]

ACT IV.  FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE IV.

War. My Lord of York, I promise you, the king
Prettily, methought, did play the orator.
York. And so he did; but yet I like it not.
In that he deserved the fortune of the estate. [not;]
War. Tush, that was but his fancy, blame him
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.
York. An if I wist he did,—but let it rest;
Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt all but Exeter.]

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy
For, had the passions of thy heart burst out, [voice;]
I fear we should have seen deeper'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils,
Than yet can be imagined or supposed.
But howsoever, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of notability,
This shouldering of each other in the court,
This fansacy bandying of their favours,
But that it doth presage some ill event.
'Tis much when spectres are in children's hands;
But more when envy breeds unkind division;
There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.

SCENE II.    — Before Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot, with trumpet and drum.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpet;
Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds. Enter General and others, aloft.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,
Servant in arms to Harry King of England;
And thus he would: Open your city gates;
Be humble to us; call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects;
And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power:
But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;
Who in a moment even with the earth
Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou omnious and fearful owl of death,
Our nation's terror and their bloody scourge!
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us thou canst not enter but by death;
For, I protest, we are well fortified
And strong issue our bloody fight;
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee:
On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight;
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
But death doth front thee with apparent spoil
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.
Lo, there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit!
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, due thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour.
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale and dead.

[Drum o'er off.]

Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exeunt General, &c.

Tal. He fables not; I hear the enemy:
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.
O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale,
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Mazed with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be then in blood;
Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch,
But rather, moody-mad and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine.
And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.
God and Saint George, Talbot and England's right,
Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter a Messenger that meets York. Enter York with trumpet and many Soldiers.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That didg't the mighty army of the Dauphin?
Mass. They are return'd, my lord, and give it out
That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with all his power,
To fight with Talbot: as he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led,
Which join'd with him and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset,
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid,
And I am bow'd by a traitor villain
And cannot help the noble chevalier:
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Lucy. Thou prince truly of our English strength,
Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spar to the rescue of the noble Talbot.
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron
And hemm'd about with grim destruction:
To Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bourdeaux, York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.
York. O God, that Somerset, who in proud heart
Doth stop my cornets, were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman
By forfeiting a traitor and a coward.
Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord!
York. The loss, we laugh at the warlike word;
We mourn, France smiles; they daily get;
All 'long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then God take mercy on brave Talbot's
And on his son young John, who two hours since
I met in travel toward his warlike father!
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.
York. Alas, what joy shall noble Talbot have
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?
Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.
Lucy, farewell: no more my fortune can
But curse me! the fate I cannot change the man.
Maine, Blois, Poictiers, and Tours are won away,
'Long all of Somerset and his delay.

[Exeunt with his soldiers.

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Sleeping neck and bathe in their idle loss.
The conquest of our scarce cold conqueror,
That ever living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth: whiles they each other cross.
Lives, honours, lands and all hurry to loss.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Other plains in Gascony.

Enter Somerset, with his army; a Captain of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late: I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by York and Talbot

403
ACT IV.  FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE VI.

Too rashly plotted: all our general force Might with a sally of the very town Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure: Yore, by the fire, to fight him I best knew there. That Talbot's name, great York might bear the name. Cap. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me Set from our o'ermatched forces forth for aid.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, Sir William! whither were you sent? [Lord Talbot; Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold Who, ring'd about with bold adversary, Cries out for noble York and Somerset, To beat assailing death from his weak legions: And whilst the captain there Doth bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs, And, in advantage lingering, looks for rescue, You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour, Keep off aloof with worthless emulation. Let not your private discord keep away The levied succours that should lend him aid, While he, renowned noble gentleman, Yields up his life unto a world of odds: Orleans the Bastard, Charles, Burgundy, Alencon, Reignier, compass him about, And Talbot perisheth by your default. [him aid. Som. York set his hand on; York should have sent Lucy. And, as fast upon your grace exclaims; Swearing that you withdraw your levied host, Collected for this expedition. [horse; Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the I owe him little duty, and less love; And take foul scorn to fawn on him by sending. Lucy. The man of England, not the force of France, Hath now enthrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot: Never to England shall he bear his life; But dies, betray'd to fortune by your strike. Som. Come, go; I will dispatch the horsemen Within six hours they will be at his aid. [straight: Lucy. Too late comes rescue: he is ta'en or slain; For fly he could not, if he would have fled: And fly would Talbot never, though he might. Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu! Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The English camp near Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot and John his son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee To tutor thee in stratagems of war, That Talbot's name might be in thee revived When sapless age and weak unable limbs Should bring thy father to his drooping chair. But, O malignant and ill-boding stars! Now thou art come into a feast of death, A terrible and unavoidable danger: There, boy, dearest boy, take up thy swiftest horse; And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape By sudden flight: come, daily not, be gone. John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son? And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother, Dishonour not her honourable name, To make a bastard and a slave of me! The world will say, he is not Talbot's blood, That basely fled when noble Talbot stood. Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain. John. He that flies so will ne'er return again. Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die. John. Tarry I but one stay: and, father, do you fly: Your loss is great, so your regard should be; My worth unknown, no loss is known in me. Upon my death the French can little boast; In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost. Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;

But mine it will, that no exploit have done: You fled for vantage, every one will swear; But, if I bow, they'll say it was for fear. There is no hope that ever I will stay, If the first hour I shrink and run away. Here on my knee I rest a while. Rather than life preserved with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb? John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb. Tal. Upon my blessing, I command thee go. John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe. Tal. Part of thy father may be saved in thee. John. No part of him but will be shame in me. Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it. [it? John. Yes, your renowned name: shall flight abuse Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain. John. You cannot witness for me, being slain. If death be so apparent, then both fly. Tal. And leave my followers here to fight and die? My age was never tainted with such shame. John. And shall all my youth be thus embittered? No more can I be sever'd from your side, Than can yourself yourself in twain divide: Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I; For live I will not, if my father die. Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son, Born to eclipse thy life the afternoon of such blame? Come, side by side together live and die; And soul with soul from France to heaven fly. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A field of battle.

Alarum: excursions, wherein Talbot's son is hemmed about, and Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight: The regent hath with Talbot broke his word And left us to the rage of France his sword. Where is John Talbot? Pause, and take thy breath; I gave thee life and rescued thee from death. John. O, twice my father, twice am I thy son! The life thou gavest me first was lost and done; Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate, To my determined time thou gavest new date. Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire Of bold-faced victory. Then leaden age, Quicken'd with youthful spleen and warlike rage, Beat down Alencon, Orleans, Burgundy, And from the pride of Gallia rescued thee. The irrefutable Bastard Orleans, that drew blood From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood Of thy first fight, I soon encountered, And interchanging blows I quickly shed Some of his bastard blood; and in disgrace Bespoke him thus: 'Contaminated, base And misbegotten blood I spill of thine, Mean and right poor, for that pure blood of mine Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy!' Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy, Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care, Art thou not weary, John? how dost thou fare? Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly? Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry! Fly, to revenge my death when I am dead: The help of one stands me in little stead. O, too much folly is it, well I wot To hazard all our lives in one small boat! If I to-day eke I with mortal men's rage, To-morrow I shall die with mickle age; By me they nothing gain an if I stay; 'Tis but the shortening of my life one day: In thee thy mother dies, our household's name. My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame:
ACT V.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.
SCENE I.

All these and more we hazard by thy stay;
All these are saved if thou wilt fly away. [smart;
John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me
These words of yours draw life-blood from my heart:
On that advantage, bought with such a shame,
To save a paltry life and slay bright fame,
Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,
The coward horse that bears me fail and die!
And like me to the peasant boys of France,
To be shame's scorn and subject of mischance!
Surely, by all the glory you have won,
An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son:
Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot;
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.
Tul. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,
Thou Icarus; thy life to me is sweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy side from the rest;
And, commendable provost, let's die in pride.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another part of the field.

Alarum: excursions. Enter old Talbot led by a Servant.

Tul. Where is my other life? mine own is gone;
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?
Triumphant death, smeared with captivity.
Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee:
When he perceived me shriek and on my knee,
His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And, like a hungry lion, did commence
Rough deeds of rage and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardant stood alone,
Tendering my ruin and assail'd of none,
Dizzy-eyed fury and great rage of heart
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clustering battle of the French;
And in that set of blood my boy did drench
His over-mounting spirit, and there died,
My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Serc. O my dear lord, lo, where your son is born!

Enter Soldiers, with the body of young Talbot.

Tul. Thou antic death, which laugh'st us here to Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
[scorn,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity.

Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky,
In thy despite shall escape mortality.

O thou, whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father ere thou yield thy breath!
Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no;
I found him a Frenchman at Talbot's foot.
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks, as who should say,
Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms:
My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,
Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave.

[Dies.

Enter Charles, Alencon, Burgundy, Bastard,
La Pucelle, and forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,
Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said:
'Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid:'
But, with a proud majestical high scorn,
He answer'd thus: 'Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillow of a gigllet wench:'
So, rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight. [Knight:
Bur. Doubtless he would have made a noble
Sce, where he lies inhearsed in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms! [der.
Bast. H ew them to pieces, hack their bones asum;
Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.
Char. O, no, forbear! for that which we have fled
During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter Sir William Lucy, attended; Herald of the French preceding.

Lucy. Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent,
To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?
Lucy. Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French
word;
We English warriors wot not what it means,
I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en
And to survey the bodies of the dead.
[is.
Char. For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison
But tell me whom thou seek'st.
Lucy. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury,
Created, for his rare success in arms,
Great Earl of Washford, Waterford and Valence;
Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfeld,
Lord Strange of Blackmore, Lord Verdun of Alton, Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield,
The thrice-victorious Lord of Falconbridge;
Knight of the noble order of Saint George,
Worthy Saint Michael and the Golden Fleece;
Great marshal to Henry the Sixth.
Of all his wars within the realm of France?
Puc. Here is a silly stately style indeed!
The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath,
Writes not so tediously a style as this.
Him that thou magnifiest with all these titles
Stinking and fly-blown lies here at our feet.
Lucy. Is Talbot slain, the Frenchmen's only scourge,
Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?
O, were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might shoot them at your faces!
O, that I could but call these dead to life!
It were enough to fright the calm of France;
Were but his picture left amongst you here,
It would amaze the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies, that I may bear them hence
And give them burial as beseeems their worth.
Puc. I think this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.
For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them here,
They would but stink, and putrefy the air.
Char. Go, take their bodies hence.
Lucy. I'll bear them hence; but from their ashes shall be rear'd
A phoenix that shall make all France afraid.
A phoeńix that shall make all France afraid.
Char. So be rid of them, do with 'em what thou
And now to Paris, in this conquering vein: [wilt.
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. —London.  The palace.

Senet. Enter King, Gloucester, and Exeter.

King. Have you perused the letters from the pope,
The emperor and the Earl of Armagnac?

Glov. I have, my lord; and their intent is this:
They humbly sue unto your excellence
To have a godly peace concluded
Between the realms of England and of France.
[King. How doth your grace affect their motion?
Glov. Well, my good lord; and as the only means
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE III.

To stop effusion of our Christian blood
And stablish quietness on every side.

King. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought
It was both impious and unnatural
That such confusions and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glow. Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect
And surer bind this knot of amity,
The Earl of Armagnac, near knit to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,
Proffered his only daughter to your grace
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

King. Marriage, uncle! alas, my years are young!
And fitter is my study and my books
Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.
Yet call the ambassadors; and, as you please,
So let them have their answer every one:
I shall be well content with any choice
Tends to God's glory and my country's weal.

Enter Winchester in Cardinal's habit, a Legate and two Ambassadors.

Eec. What! is my Lord of Winchester install'd,
And call'd unto a cardinal's degree?
Then I perceive that will be verified
Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,
'If once he come to be a cardinal, He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.'

King. My lords ambassadors, your several suits
I have considered and deliberated on,
Your purpose is both good and reasonable;
And therefore are we certainly resolved
To draw conditions of a friendly peace;
Which by my Lord of Winchester we mean
Shall be transported presently to France.

Glow. And for the proffer of your lord your master,
I have inform'd his highness so at large
As liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,
Her beauty and the value of her dowry,
In argument and proof of which contract,
Bear her this jewel, pledge of my affection.
And so, my lord protector, see them guarded
And safely brought to Dover; where inshipp'd
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.

[Exeunt all but Winchester and Legate.

Win. Stay, my lord legate: you shall first receive
The sum of money which your lordship paid
Should be deliver'd to his holiness.
For clothing me in these grave ornaments.

Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure.

Win. [Aside] Now Winchester will not submit, I
Or be inferior to the proudest peer.
[trouw, Humphrey of Gloucester, then shall well perceive
That, neither in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be overborne by thee:
I'll either make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—France. Plains in Anjou.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alençon, Bastard,
Reignier, La Pucelle, and forces.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:
'Tis said the stout Parisians do revolt
And turn again unto the warlike French. [France. Alençon. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of
And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us;
Else, ruin combat with their palaces!

[Enter Scout.

Scout. Success unto our valiant general,
And happiness to his accomplices!

Char. What tidings send our scouts? I prithee, scout.
Scout. The English army, that divided was

Into two parties, is now conjoin'd in one,
And means to give you battle presently.
Char. Somewhat too sudden, sir, the warning is:
But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there:
Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions, fear is most accursed.
Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine,
Let Henry fret and all the world repine.
Char. Then on, my lords; and France be forsworn!
And lay them gently on thy tender side.

Wil. Art thou fay, say, that I may honour thee.

Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a king,
The King of Naples, whose-er thou art.

Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me;
So doth the swan her downy egrets save,
Keeping them prisoner underneath her wings.
Yet, if this servile usage once offend,
Go and be free again as Suffolk's friend.

[She is going.]

O, stay! I have no power to let her pass;
My hand would free her, but my heart says no.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.
Fian would I woo her, yet I dare not speak:
I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind.
Fie, de la Pole! disable not thyself;
Hast not a tongue? is she not here?
Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?
Ay, beauty's princely majesty is such,
Confounds the tongue and makes the senses rough.

Mar. Say, Earl of Suffolk — if thy name be so
What ransom must I pay before I pass?
For I have no man to send thy prisoner.

Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit.
Before thou make a trial of her love? [I pay]

Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must
Suf. She's beautiful and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman, therefore to be won.

Mar. Witt thou accept of ransom? yea, or no.

Suf. A wad man, remember that thou hast a wife;
Then how can Margaret be thy paramour?

Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not hear.

Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card.

Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad.

Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.
Suf. I'll win this Lady Margaret. For whom?
Why, for my king: tush, that's a wooden thing!
Mar. He walks of wood: it is some carpenter.

Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
And peace established between these realms.
But there remains a scruple in that too;
For though her father be the king of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor,
And our nobility will scorn the match.

Mar. Hear ye, captain, are you not at leisure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdain he ever so much:
Henry is youthful and will quickly yield.

Suf. Madam, I have a secret to reveal. [knight
Mar. What though I be enthrall'd? he seems a
And will not any way dishonour me.

Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say,
Mar. Perhaps I shall be rescued by the French;
And then I need not crave his courtesy.

Suf. My soul, madam, give me hearing in a case—
Mar. Tush, women have been more private ere now.

Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but Quid for Qno.

Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

Mar. To be a queen in bondage is more vile
Than that some slave be set: I am not free;
For princes should be free.

Suf. And so shall you,
If happy England's royal king be free.

Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?

Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen,
To play the golden sceptre to thy head;
And set a precious crown upon thy head,
If thou wilt condescend to be my —

Mar. His love.

Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.

KING HENRY VI. SCENE III.
SCENE IV. — Camp of the Duke of York in Anjou.

Enter York, Warwick, and others.

York. Bring forth that soreness condemn’d to burn.

Enter La Pucelle, guarded, and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan, this thy father’s heart out—

Have I sought every country far and near, [right]

And, now it is my chance to find thee out,

Much art without thy wish, I would say;

Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I’ll die with thee!

Puc. Deceitful mis’r! base ignoble wretch!

I am descended of a gentler blood;

Thou art no father nor no friend of mine. [not so;

Shep. Out, out! My lords, an please you, ‘tis

I didst wonder to hear the Duke of York words:

Her mother liveth yet, can testify

She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?

York. This argues what kind of life hath been,

Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Pie, Joan, that thou wilt be so obstacle

God knows thou art a collop of my flesh;

And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:

Deny me not, I prithee, gentle Joan. [man

Puc. Peasant, avault! You have suborn’d this

Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. ’Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest

The morn that I was wedded to her mother,

Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl:

Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time

Of thy nativity! I would the milk

Thy mother gave thee when thou suck’dst her breast,

Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake!

Or else, when thou diest keep my lambs a-field,

I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!

Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?

O, burn her, burn her! hanging is too good. [Exit York.

York. Take away her; for she hath lived too long,

To fill the world with vicious qualities. [demn’d!

Puc. First, let me tell you whom the duke I named,

But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail’d;

War. A married man! that’s most intolerable.

York. Why, here’s a girl! I think she knows not well,

There were so many, who she may accuse.

War. It’s sign she hath been liberal and free.

York. And yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.

Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat and thee:

Use no entreaty, for it is in vain. [curse;

Puc. Then lead me hence; with whom I leave my

May never glorious sun relex his beams

Upon the country where I stand above;

But darkness and the gloomy shade of death

Environ you, till mischief and despair

Drive you to break your necks or hang yourselves! [Exit, guarded.

York. Break thou in pieces and consume to ashes,

Thou foul accursed minister of hell.

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester,

attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence

With letters of commission from the king.

For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,

Moved with remorse of these outrageous broils,

Have earnestly implored a general peace

Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;

And here at hand the Dauphin and his train

Approacheth, to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn’d to this effect?

After the slaughter of so many peers,

So many captains, gentlemen and soldiers,

That in this quarrel have been overthrown

And sold their bodies for their country’s benefit,

Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?

Have we not lost most part of all the towns,

By treason, falsehood and treachery,

Of our great progenitors had conquered?

O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief

The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York: if we can conclude a peace,

It shall be with such strict and severe covenants

As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, Alençon, Bastard, Reignier, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed

That peaceful truce shall be proclaimed in France,

We come to make the peace informed by yourselves.

What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choleric

The hollow passage of my poison’d voice,

By sight of these our baseful enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:

That, in regard King Henry gives consent,

Of more compassion and of lenity,

To ease your country of distressful war,

And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,

You shall become true liegemen to his crown:

And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear

To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,

Thou shalt be placed as viceroy under him,

And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?

Adorn his temples with a coronet,

And yet, in substance and authority,

War. The greatest miracle that e’er ye wrought:

Is all your strict preciosity come to this?

York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling:

I did imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well, go to; we’ll have no bastards live;

Especially my sister Charles I mean,

Puc. You are deceived; my child is none of his:

It was Alençon that enjoy’d my love.

York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel!

It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. O, give me leave, I have deluded you:

Was neither Charles nor yet the duke I named,

But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail’d.

War. A married man! that’s most intolerable.

York. Why, here’s a girl! I think she knows not well,

There were so many, who she may accuse.

War. It’s sign she hath been liberal and free.

York. And yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.

Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat and thee:

Use no entreaty, for it is in vain. [curse;

Puc. Then lead me hence; with whom I leave my

May never glorious sun relex his beams

Upon the country where I stand above;

But darkness and the gloomy shade of death

Environ you, till mischief and despair

Drive you to break your necks or hang yourselves! [Exit, guarded.

York. Break thou in pieces and consume to ashes,

Thou foul accursed minister of hell.

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester,

attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence

With letters of commission from the king.

For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,

Moved with remorse of these outrageous broils,

Have earnestly implored a general peace

Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;

And here at hand the Dauphin and his train

Approacheth, to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn’d to this effect?

After the slaughter of so many peers,

So many captains, gentlemen and soldiers,

That in this quarrel have been overthrown

And sold their bodies for their country’s benefit,

Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?

Have we not lost most part of all the towns,

By treason, falsehood and treachery,

Of our great progenitors had conquered?

O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief

The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York: if we can conclude a peace,

It shall be with such strict and severe covenants

As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, Alençon, Bastard, Reignier, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed

That peaceful truce shall be proclaimed in France,

We come to make the peace informed by yourselves.

What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choleric

The hollow passage of my poison’d voice,

By sight of these our baseful enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:

That, in regard King Henry gives consent,

Of more compassion and of lenity,

To ease your country of distressful war,

And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,

You shall become true liegemen to his crown:

And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear

To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,

Thou shalt be placed as viceroy under him,

And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?

Adorn his temples with a coronet,

And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This offers is absurd and reasonless.
Char. This I am glad you now yourself possess'd
With more than half the Gallian territories,
And therein reverence for their lawful king:
Shall I, for here of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be cal'd but vice-roy of the whole?
No, lord ambassador, I'll rather keep
That which I have than, coveting for more,
Be cast from possibility of all. [means
York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret
Used intercession to obtain a league,
And, now the matter grows to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison?
Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our king
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.
Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one
We shall not find like opportunity.
Aken. To say the truth, it is your policy
To save your subjects from such massacre
And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostilitie;
And therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although he's proud, our enemies serve.
War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condi-
Char. It shall; [tion stand?
Only reserved, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.
York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty,
As thou art knight, never to disobey
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.
So, now dismiss your army when ye please;
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—London. The palace.
Enter Suffolk in conference with the King, Gloucester and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl,
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtue and her grace, which I have seen,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart:
And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts
Provoke the mightiest hulk against the tide,
So am I driven by breath of her renown
Either to suffer shipwreck or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.
Suf. Tush, my good lord, this superfluous tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise;
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,
If at I sufficient skill to utter them,
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit:
And yet, such lines are capable of divine,
So full-replete with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowliness of mind
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I mean, of virtueous chaste intents,
To love and honour Henry as her lord,
King. And other excellencies of Henry ne'er presume.
Therefore, my lord protector, give consent
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.
Glow. So should I give consent to blatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem:
How should you, thinking of that contract,
And not deface your honour with reproach?
Suf. As do a builder with unlawfull oaths;
Or one that, at a triumph having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds;
A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds,
And therefore may be broke without offence.
Glow. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than
Her father is no better than an earl? [that?
Although in glorious titles he excel.
Suf. Yes, my lord, her father is a king,
The King of Naples and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France
As his alliance will have it, Margaret,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.
Glow. And so the Earl of Armagnac may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles. [dower.
Exe. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal
Where Reignier sooner will receive than give.
Suf. A dower, my lords, I disgrace not so your king,
That he should be so abject, base and poor.
To choose for wealth and not for perfect love.
Henry is able to enrich his queen
And not to seek a queen to make him rich:
So wothless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship;
Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must be companion of his nuptial bed:
And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,
It most of all these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinion he should break it.
For what is wedlock forced but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife?
Whereas the contrary bringeth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.
Whom should we match with Henry, being a king,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?
Her-peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none but for a king:
Her valiant courage and undaunted spirit,
More than in women commonly is seen,
Will answer our hope in issue of a king;
For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolue
As is fair Margaret he be link'd in love.
Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with me
That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.
King. Whether it be through force of your report,
My noble Lord of Suffolk, or fate of mine,
My tender youth was yet yet attain'd
With any passion of infaunging love,
I cannot tell; but this I am assured,
I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,
Such fierce alarums both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to France;
Agree to any covenants, and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To cross the seas to England and be crown'd
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen:
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people is more, she will be
Be gone, I say; for, till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.
And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do censure me by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
That excess of my invention of which
And so, conduct me where, from company,
I may revolve and ruminaye my grief. [Exit.
Glow. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.
[Exeunt Gloucester and Exeter.
Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd; and thus he
As dur'd the youthful Paris once to grace,
Lgoes, With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did.
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
But I will rule both her, the king and realm. [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.

Flourish of trumpets: then hautboys. Enter the King, Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, Salisbury, Warwick, and Cardinal Beaufort, on the one side; the Queen, Suffolk, York, Somerset, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, As procurator to your excellency, To marry Princess Margaret for your grace, So, in the famous ancient city Tours, In presence of the Kings of France and Sicil, [eon, The Dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretagne and Alen- Seven earls, twelve barons and twenty reverend bishops, I have perform'd my task and was espoused: And humbly now upon my bended knee, In sight of England and her lordly peers, Deliver up my title in the queen To your most gracious hands, that are the substance Of that great shadow I did represent; The happiest gift that ever marquess gave, The fairest queen that ever king received.

King. Suffolk arise. Welcome, Queen Margaret: I can express no kinder sign of love Than this kind kiss. O Lord, that lends me life, Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness! For thou hast given me in this beauteous face A world of earthy blessings to my soul, If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. [lord, Queen. A Spirit.

SCENE.—England.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had, By day, by night, waking and in my dreams, In courtly company or at my beads, With you, mine alder-lieapest sovereign, Makes me the bolder to salute my king With ruder terms, such as my wit affords And over-joy of heart doth minister.

King. Her sight did ravish; but her grace in speech, Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty, Makes me from wondering fall to weeping joys; Such is the fulness of my heart's content.

Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love. All [kneeling]. Long live Queen Margaret, Eng- land's happiness!

Queen. We thank you all. [Flourish.
Suff. My lord protector, so please your grace, Here are the articles of contracted peace Between our sovereign and the French king Charles, For eighteen months concluded by consent.

G lou. [Reads] 'Imprimis, It is agreed between the French king Charles, and William de la Pole, Mar- quess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry king of England, that the said Henry shall espouse the Lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier King of Naples, Sicilia and Jerusalem, and crown her Queen of England ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing. Item, that the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine shall be released and delivered to the king her father! — [Let the paper fall. King. Uncle, how now! [G lou. Pardon me, gracious lord;
SECOND
SCENE.

And din'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

K. Hen. A proper Jane, and new read on.

Car. [Reads.] Item, It is further agreed between them, that the dukies of Anjou and Maine shall be proper and charges, without having any dowry.

K. Hen. How they please us well. Lord marquess, kneel down;

We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
And gird thee with the sword. Cousin of York,
We here discharge your grace from being regent
To the parts of France, till term of eighteen months
Be full expired. Thanks, uncle Winchester,
Gloucester, York, Buckingham, Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick;
We thank you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my princely queen.

Come, let us in, and with all speed provide
To see her coronation be performed.

Glow. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,
To you Duke Humphrey must unload his grief,
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.

What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coin and people, in the wars?
Did he not spend in France and Normandy?
In winter's cold and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toil his wits,
To keep by policy what Henry got?

Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,
Received deep scars in France and Normandy?
Or hath mine uncle Beaufort and myself,
With all the learned council of the realm,
Studied so long, sat in the council-house
Early and late, debating to and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe,
And had his bigness in his infancy
Crowned in Paris in despite of foes?
And shall these labours and these honours die?
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war and all our counsel die?

O peers of England, shameful is this league!
Fate this marriage, cancelling your fame,
Blotting their names from books of memory,
Razing the characters of your renown,
Defacing monuments of conquer'd France,
Undoing all, as all had never been!

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discours?
This peroration with such circumstance?
For France, 't is ours; and we will keep it still.

Glow. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can;
But now it is impossible we should:
Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roost,
Hath given the duchy of Anjou and Maine
Unto the poor King Regnier, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanings of the course.

Suffolk, the new-made duke, may he be suffocate,
That he may lose the honour of this warlike isle!
France should have torn and rent my very heart,
Before I would have yielded to this league.

And our King Henry gives away his own,
To match with her that brings no vantages.

Glow. My Lord of Winchester, I know your mind;
'Tis not my speeches that you do dislike,
But 'tis my presence that doth trouble ye.
Rancour will out: proud prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury: if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient kickings.
Lording, farewell; and say, when I am gone,
I prophesied France will be lost ere long.

K. Hen. So, there goes our protector in a rage.

Car. It is known to you he is mine enemy,
Nay, more, an enemy unto you all,
And no great friend, I fear me, to the king.
Consider, lords, he is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown:
Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,
There's reason he should be displeased at it.
Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing words
Hewitch your ears with falseΝοις';
What though the common people favour him;
Calling him Humphrey, the good Duke of Gloucester,
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice,
'Jesu maintain your royal excellence!
With 'God preserve the good Duke Humphrey!' I fear me, lords, for this flattering gloss,
He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he, then, protect our sovereign,
He being of age to govern of himself?
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And all together, with the Duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoist Duke Humphrey from his seat.

Car. This weighty business will not brook delay;
I'll to the Duke of Suffolk presently.

Suffolk. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's
And greatness of his place be grief to us,
Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal;
His insolence is more intolerable
Than all the princes in the land beside.
If Gloucester be displaced, he'll be protector.

Buck. Or thou or I, Somerset, will be protector,
Despite Duke Humphrey or the cardinal.

Car. [Exeunt Buckingham and Somerset.
Somerset. Pride come before, ambition follows him.
While these do labour for their own prehernent,
Belaives it us to labour for the realm.

I never saw but Humphrey Duke of Gloucester
Did bear him like a noble gentleman.
Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal,
More like a soldier than a man o' the church,
So stout and gross he was, he seemed all of all,
Swear like a ruffian and demean himself
Unlike the ruler of a commonwealth.

Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy plainness and thy housekeeping,
Hath won the greatest favour of the commons,
Excepting none but good Duke Humphrey:
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline,
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wentest regent for our sovereign,
Have made thee fear'd and honour'd of the people:
Join we together, for the public good.

York. And, to what we can with the bride and sister,
The pride of Suffolk and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;
And, as we may, cherish Duke Humphrey's deeds,
While they do tend the profit of the land.
War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
And common profit of his country!
York. [Aside] And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.
Sal. Then let's make haste away, and look unto War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is lost;
That Maine which by main force Warwick did win,
And would have kept so long as breath did last!
Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or else be slain.
[Enter Warwick and Salisbury.]
York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;
Paris is lost: the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone:
Suffolk concluded on the articles,
The peers agreed, and Henry was well pleased
To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.
I cannot blame them all: what is 't o them?
'Tis thine they give away, and not their own.
Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pilgage
And purchase friends and give to courtzans,
Still revelling like lords till all be gone;
While as the sail of ships or broods
Weeps over them and wrings his hapless hands
And shakes his head and trembling stands aloof,
While all is shared and all is borne away,
Ready to starve and dare not touch his own:
So York must sit and fret and bite his tongue,
While his own hands are bargained for and sold.
Methinks the realms of England, France and Ireland
Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood
As did the fatal brand Althaea burn'd
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.
Anjou and Maine both given unto the French!
Cold news for me, for I had hope of France,
Even as I have of fertile England's soil,
A day will come when York shall claim his own,
And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts
And make a show of love to proud Duke Humphrey,
And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,
For that's the golden mark I seek to hit:
Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist,
Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
Whose church-like humours fits not for a crown.
Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve:
Watch thou and wake when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state:
'Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
[queen,
With his new bride and England's dear-bought
And Humphrey with the peers be full'n at jars:
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfumed;
And in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Duke of Gloucester's house.

Enter Duke Humphrey and his wife Eleanor.
Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres' plentiful load?
Why doth the great Duke Humphrey knit his brows,
As frowning at the favours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?
What seem'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Enchased with all the honours of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Unti'dling with the same,
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold,
What, 'tis too short? I'll lengthen it with mine;
And, having both together heaved it up,
We'll both together lift our heads to heaven,
And never more abuse our sight so low
As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.
Glou. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord,
Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts.
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against me, dying and nephews, see,
Duch. Be my last breathing in this mortal world!
My troublous dream this night doth make me sad, Glou. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it
With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.
Glou. Methought this staff, mine office-lodge in court,
Was broke in twain; by whom I have forgot,
But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;
And on the pieces of the broken wand
Were placed the heads of Edmund Duke of Somerset,
And William de la Pole, first duke of Suffolk.
This was my dream: what it doth bode, God knows.
Duch. Tuf, this was nothing but an argument
That he that breaks a stick of Gloucester's grove
Shall lose his head for his presumption.
But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke:
Methought I saw in sweet peace
The church of Westminster,
And in that chair where kings and queens are
crown'd;
Where Henry and dame Margaret kneel'd to me
And on my head did set the diadem.
Glou. Nay, Eleanor, then must I judge outright:
Presumptuous dame, ill-nurtured Eleanor,
Art thou not second woman in the realm,
And the protector's wife, beloved of him?
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To tumble down thy husband and thyself
From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
Away from me, and let me hear no more!
Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric
With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?
Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
And not be check'd.
Glou. Nay, be not angry; I am pleased again.

Enter Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure
You do prepare to ride unto Saint Albans',
Where as the king and queen do mean to hawk.
Glou. I go. Come, Nell, thou wilt ride with us?
Duch. Yes, my good lord, I'll follow presently.

[Exeunt Gloucester and Messenger.

Follow I must; I cannot go before,
While Gloucester bears this base and humble mind.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks
And smooth my way upon their headless necks;
And, being a woman, I will not be slack
To play my part in Fortune's pageant.
Where are you there? Sir John! nay, fear not, man,
We are alone; here's none but thee and I.

Enter Hume.

Hume. Jesus preserve your royal majesty!
Duch. What say'st thou? majesty! I am but grace.
Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's
Your grace's title shall be multiplied.
[Advise,
Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet conferr'd
With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch,
With Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer?
And will they undertake to do me good? [highness
Hume. This they have promised, to show your
A spirit raised from depth of under-ground,
That shall make answer to such questions
As by your grace shall be propounded him.
Duch. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions:
ACT I.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE III.

When from Saint Alban's we do make return,
We'll see the things effectuated to the full.
Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry, man,
With thy confederates in this weighty cause. [Exit. Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold; Marry, and shall. But, how now, Sir John Hume! Seal up your lips, and give no words but man:
The business asketh silent secrecy. Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring the witch; Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil. Yet have I gold flies from another coast; I dare not say, from the rich cardinal; And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolk, Yet I do, I do. These hungry birds are plain. They, knowing Dame Eleanor's aspiring humour, Have hired me to undermine the duchess
And but these conjurations in her brain. They say 'A crafty knave does need no broker;' Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker. Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near To call them both a pair of crafty knaves. Well, so it stands; and thus, I fear, at last Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck, And her attainture will be Humphrey's fall: Sort how it will, I shall have gold for all. [Exit.

* SCENE III. — The palace.

Enter three or four Petitions, Peter, the Armourer's man, being one.

First Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quire.

Sec. Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man! Jesu bless him!

Enter Suffolk and Queen.

Peter. Here n' comes, methinks, and the queen with him. I'll be the first, sure.

Sec. Pet. Come back, fool; this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector. [me? Suf. How now, fellow! wouldst any thing with First Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me; I took ye for my lord protector.

Queen. Who's that? 'To my Lord Protector! Are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

First Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife and all, from me.

Suf. This is so, that's wrong, indeed. What's yours? What's here! [Revels] Against the Duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford. How now, sir knave!

Sec. Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Giving his petition] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying that the Duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

Queen. What say'st thou? did the Duke of York say he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? no, forsooth: my master said that he was, and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servant.] Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently: we'll hear more of your matter before the king. [Exit Servant with Peter. Queen. And as for you, that love to be protected Under the wings of our protector grace, Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Enter the supplications.

Away, base cullions! Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone. [Exeunt.

Queen. My Lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise, Is this the fashion in the court of England?

Is this the government of Britain's isle, And this the royalty of Albion's crown? What, shall King Henry be a pupil still Under the surly Gloucester's governance? Am I a queen in title and in style, And must be made a subject to a duke? I tell thee, Pole, when in the city Tours Thou ran'st a tilt in honor of that wrife, And stolest away the ladies' hearts of France, I thought King Henry had resembled thee In courage, courtship and proportion: But all his mind is bent to holiness. To number Ave-Maries on his beads; He is champion of the prophets and apostles, His weapons holy saws; for, to be plain, His study is his field-yard, and his loves Are brazen images of canonized saints. I would the college of the cardinals Would choose him pope and carry him to Rome, And set the triple crown upon his head: That were a state fit for his holiness. Suf. Madam, be patient: as I was cause Thy highness came to England, so will I In England work your grace's full content. Queen. Beside the haughty protector, have we Beaufort— The impecunious churchman, Somerset, Buckingham, And grumbling York; and not the least of these But can do more in England than the king. Suf. And he of these that can do most of all Cannot do more in England than the Nevils: Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers. Queen. Not all these lords do vex me half so much As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies, More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's wife: Strangers in court do take her for the queen: She bears a duke's revenues on her back, And in her heart she scorns our poverty: Shall I not live to be avenged on her? Contemptuous base-born callet as she is, She vaunted 'mongst her minions 'other day, The very train of her worst wearing gown Was better worth than all my father's lands, Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter. Suf. Madam, my vision has been true for her, And placed a quire of such enticing birds, That she will light to listen to the lays, And never mount to trouble you again. So, let her rest: and, madam, list to me; For I am bold to counsel you in this. Although we fancy not the cardinal, Yet must we join with him and with the lords, Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace. As for the Duke of York, this late complaint Will make but little for his benefit. So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last, And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Sound a sennet. Enter the King, Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, York, Somerset, Salisbury, Warwick, and the Duchess of Gloucester.

King. For my part, noble lords, I care not which; Or Somerset or York, all's one to me. York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France, Then let him be denay'd the regentship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place, Let York be regent: I will yield to him. War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea or no, Dispute not that: York is the wortlier.

Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy better's speak. War. The cardinal's not my better in the field. Duck. All in this presence are thy better. Warwick. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

ACT I.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.
SCENE IV.

KING.  What mean'st thou, Suffolk; tell me, what are these?

SUFF.  Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master with so high a reason:
The words he spares are these: That Richard Duke of York
Was rightful heir unto the English crown
And that your majesty was an usurper.

KING.  Say, man, were these thy words?

HOR.  An' tis please your majesty, I never said
Nor thought any such matter: God is my witness, I Am falsely accused by the villager's matters.

PET.  By these ten bones, my lords, he did speak
Them to me in the garret one night, as we were Securing my Lord of York's armour.

YORK.  Base duinghill villain and mechanical,
I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech.
I do beseech your royal clemency,
Let him have all the rigour of the law.

HOR.  Alas, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the Words. My accuser is my 'prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did Vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I
Have good cause of this; therefore I beseech your Majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

KING.  Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

SUFF.  This doom, my lord, if I may judge:
Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,
Because of York this business.
And let these have a day appointed them
For single combat in convenient place,
For he hath witness of his servant's malice;
This is the law, and this Duke Humphrey's doom.

SOM.  I humbly thank your royal majesty.

HOR.  O, that I had the combat willing.
PET.  Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake, Pity my case. The spite of man prevail not against Me: O Lord, have mercy upon me! I shall never Be able to fight a blow. O Lord, my heart!

SUFF.  Sirrah, or you must fight, or else hang'd.

KING.  Away with them to prison; and the day of Combat shall be the last of the next month. Come,
Somerset, we'll see thee sent away.

[Flourish.  Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Gloucester's garden.

Enter Margery Jourdain, Hume, Southwell,

And Bolingbrooke.

Hume.  Come, my masters; the duchess, I tell
You, expects performance of your promises.

BOLING.  Master Hume, we are therefore provided:
Will her ladyship behold and hear our excursions?

HUME.  Ay, what else? Fear you not her courage.

BOLING.  I have heard her reported to be a woman
Of an invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient,
Master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we
Be busy below; and so I pray you, go, in God's Name, and leave us.  [Exit Hume.]  Mother Jour-dain, be you profane and grovel on the earth: John
Southwell, read you; and let us to our work.

Enter Duchess aloft, Hume following.

Duch.  Well said, my masters; and welcome all.

To this gear the sooner the better. [Times:
BOLING.  Patience, good lady, wizards know their Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire;
The time when screech-owls cry and ban-dogs howl;
And spirits walk and ghosts break up their graves,
That time best fits the work we have in hand.

SUFF.  Madam, sit you and fear not when we Dress you in the garb of the fairer sex; we
Will make fast within a hallo'v' verge.

[Here they do the ceremonies belonging, and
Make the circle; Bolingbrooke or Southwell Reads, Conjuro te, &c.  It thunders and Lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.
ACT II.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE I.—Saint Alban’s.

Enter the King, Queen, Gloucester, Cardinal, and Suffolk, with Falconers halloing.

Queen. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook, I saw not better sport these seven years’ day: Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high; And, to be sure, old Joan had not gone out.

King. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made, And what a pitch she flew above the rest! To see how God in all his creatures works! Yea, man and birds are fain of climbing high.

Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty, My lord protector’s hawks do tower so well; They know their master loves to be aloft And bears his thoughts above his falcon’s pitch.

Glou. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Car. I thought as much; he would be above the clouds.

Glou. Ay, my lord cardinal? how think you by Were it not good your grace could fly to heaven?

King. The treasury of everlasting joy. [thoughts Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart; Pernicious protector, dangerous peer, That slipt it so with king and commonweal! Glou. What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown Tantene animis celestibus ire? [peremptory Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice; With such holiness can you do it?

Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes So good a quarrel and so bad a peer.

Glou. As who, my lord?

And kept asunder. You, madam, shall with us. Stafford, take her to thee. [Exeunt above Duchess and Hume, guarded. We’ll see your trinkets here all forthcoming.

All, away!

[Exeunt guard with Jourdain, Southwell, &c. York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch’d her well:

A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!
Now, pray, my lord, let’s see the devil’s writ. What have we here? [Reads.

The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose; But him outlive, and die a violent death.

Why, this is just

'Àoù te, 'Acida, Romanos vincere posse,' Well, to the rest:

'Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolk?' By water shall he die, and take his end.

What shall betide the Duke of Somerset?

'Let him shun castles; Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains Than where castles mounted stand.'

Come, come, my lords; These oracles are hardly attain’d,

And hardly understood:

The king is now in progress towards Saint Alban’s, With him the husband of this lovely lady:

Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry A sorry breakfast for my lord protector. [then:

'Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my Lord of To be the post, in hope of his reward. [York, York. At your pleasure, my good lord. Who’s within there, ho!

Enter a Servingman.

 Invite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick To sup with me to-morrow night. Away! [Exeunt.
King. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs. How irksome is this music to my heart! [lords. When such strings jar, what hope of harmony? I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter a Townsman of Saint Alban's, crying 'A miracle!'

Glow. What means this noise? Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?

Town. A miracle! A miracle!

Suf. Come to the king and tell him what miracle.

Town. Forsoath, a blind man at Saint Alban's has seen.

Within the halfhour, heath received his sight; A man that ne'er saw in his life before.

King. Now, God be praised, that to believing souls Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Alban's and his brethren, bearing Simpcox, between two in a chair, Simpcox's Wife following.

Car. Here comes the townspeople on procession, To present your highness with the man.

King. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale, Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.

Glow. Stand by, my masters: bring him near the This highness' pleasure is to talk with him. [kings;

King. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance, That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

What, hast thou been long blind and now restored?

Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed, he was.

Suf. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.

Glow. Hadst thou been his mother, thou couldst have better told.

King. Where was thou born? [grace.

Simp. At Berwick in the north, an't like your

King. Poor soul, God's goodness hath been great to thee:

Let never day nor night unshadow'd pass, But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Queen. Tell me, good fellow, earnest thou here by Or of devotion, to this holy shrine? [chance.

Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd A hundred times and oftener, in my sleep, By good Saint Alban; who said, 'Simpcox, come, Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.'

Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!

Suf. How camest thou so?

Simp. A plum-tree, master.

Glow. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master.

But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing very dear.

Glow. Mass, thou lovedst plums well, that wouldst Although it were in smoke [clamors; Simpcox. Alas, good master, my wife desired some And made me climb, with danger of my life.

Glow. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve. Let me see thine eyes: wink now: now open them;

In my opinion yet thou see'st not well.

Simp. Yes, master, clear as day, I thank God and Saint Alban. [cloak of? [Glow. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this Simp. Red, master; red as blood. [gown of? [Glow. Why, that's well said. What colour is my Simp. Black, forsooth: coal-black as jet. [is of? King. Why, then, thou know'st what colour jet [Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see. [Simpcox. But cloaks and gowns, before this day, a many.

Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.

Glow. Tell me, sirrah, what's his name?

Simp. Alas, master, I know not.

Glow. What's his name?

Simp. I know not.

Glow. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Simp. Saunter Simpcox, an if it please you, mas-

Then, Saunter, sit there, the lyingest knave in Christendom. If thou hast been born blind, thou mightst as well have known all our names as Thus to name the several colours we do wear. Sight may be distinguished by the colour, but suddenly to coalesce them all, it is impossible. My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle; and would ye not think his cunning to be great, that could restore this cripple to his legs again?

Simp. O master, that you could!

Glow. My masters of Saint Alban's, have you not beadle in your town, and things called whips?

May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glow. Then send for one presently.

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight.

[Exit an Attendant.

Glow. Now fetch me a stool either by and by.

Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool and run away.

Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand alone: You go about to torture me in vain.

Enter a Beadle with whips.

Glow. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs. Sirrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Beed. I will, my lord. Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool and runs away; and they follow and cry, 'A miracle!'

King. O God, seest Thou this, and bearest so long? [Queen. It made me laugh to see the villain run.

Glow. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.

Wife. Alas, sir, we did it for pure need.

Glow. Let them be whipped through every market-town, till they come to Berwick, from whence they came.

[Exeunt Wife, Beadle, Mayor, &c.

Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.

Suf. True; made the lame to leap and fly away.

Glow. But you have done more miracles than I; You made in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.

A sort of naughty persons, lowly benta

Under the countenance and confederacy Of Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,

The ringleader and head of all this rout.

Have practised dangerously against your state, Dealing with witches and with conjurors:

Whom we have apprehended in the fact;

Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,

Demanding of King Henry's life and death,

And other of your highness' privy-council;

As more at large your grace shall understand.

Car. [Aside to Glow.] And so, my lord protector, by this means Your lady is forthcoming yet at London.

This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge; To like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.

Glow. A ambitious churchman, leave to afflict my heart:

Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;
And, vanquish’d as I am, I yield to thee,
Or to the meanest groom. [ones.

King. O God, what mischiefs work the wicked
Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!

Queen. Gloucester, see here the tainture of thy est.

And lo! myself be faultless, thouwert best.

Glou. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,
How I have loved my king and common-weal:
And, for my wife, I know not how it stands;
Sorrow I am to hear what I have heard:
Noble she is, but if she have forgot
Honour and virtue and conversed with such
As, like to pitch, deserveth nobility,
I banish her my bed and company
And give her as a prey to law and shame,
That hath dishonour’d Gloucester’s honest name.

King. Well, for this night we will repose us here:
To-morrow toward London back again,
To look into this business thoroughly
And call these foul offenders to their answers
And poise the cause in justice’ sole scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. [Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick.

York. Now, my good Lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
Our simple supper ended, give me leave
In this close walk to satisfy myself,
In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is inassailable, to England’s crown.

Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.

War. Sweet York, begin: and if thy claim be
The Nevils are thy subjects to command. [good,

York. Then thus: Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons:
The first, Edward the Black Prince, Prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield, and the third,
Lionel Duke of Clarence; next to whom
Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster;
The fifth was Edmund Langley, Duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester;
William of Windsor was the seventh and last.
Edward the Black Prince died before his father
And left behind him Richard, his only son, [king;
Who after Edward the Third’s death reign’d as Till Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
Crown’d by the name of Henry the Fourth,
Seized on the realm, deposed the rightful king,
Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came:
And him to Pomfret; where, as all you know,
Harmless Richard was murder’d traitorously.
War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
York. Which now they hold by force and not by Right;
For Richard, the first son’s heir, being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reign’d.
Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
York. The third son, Duke of Clarence, from whose line
I claim the crown, had issue, Phillipine, a daughter,
Whom married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March:
Edmund had issue, Roger Earl of March;
Roger had issue, Edmund, Anne and Eleanor.
Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
Who kept him in captivity till he died.
But to the rest.

York. His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,
Married Richard Earl of Cambridge; who was son
To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third’s fifth son.
By her I claim the kingdom; she was heir
To Roger Earl of March, who was the son
Of Edmund Mortimer, who married Phillipine,
Sole daughter unto Lionel Duke of Clarence:
So, if the issue of the elder son
Succeed before the younger, I am king. [this?

War. What plain proceeding is more plain than Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
The fourth son, for York claims in the third.
Till Lionel’s issue fails, his should not reign:
It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee
And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.
Then, father Salisbury, kneel we together;
And in this private plot be we the first
That shall salute our rightful sovereign
With honour of his birthright to the crown.

York. Long live our sovereign Richard, England’s king! [king

War. We thank you, lords. But I am not your Till I be crown’d and that my sword be stain’d
With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster;
And that’s not suddenly to be perform’d,
But with advice and silent secrecy.
Do you as I do in these dangerous days:
Wink at the Duke of Suffolk’s insolence,
At Beaumont’s pride, at Somerset’s ambition,
At Buckingham and all the crew of them,
Till they have snared the shepherd of the flock,
That virtuous prince, the good Duke Humphrey:
’Tis that they seek, and they in seeking that Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.
Sal. My lord, break we off; we know your mind at full.

War. My heart assures me that the Earl of War-shall one day make the Duke of York a king.
York. And, Nevill, this I do assure myself;
Richard shall live to make the Earl of Warwick
The greatest man in England but the king.

SCENE III.—A hall of justice.

Sound trumpets. Enter the King, the Queen, Glouce-er, York, Suffolk, and Salisbury; the Duchess of Gloucester, Margery Jourdain, Southwell, Hume, and Bolingbroke, under guard.

King. Stand forth, Dame Eleanor Cobham, Glouce-er’s wife:
In sight of God and us, your guilt is great:
Receive the sentence of the law for sins
Such as by God’s book are adjudged to death.
You four, from hence to prison back again;
From thence unto the place of execution:
The witch in Smithfield shall be burn’d to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.
You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life,
Shall, after three days’ open penance done,
Live in your country here in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.
Duch. Welcome is banishment; welcome were my death.

Glou. Eleanor, the law, thou see’st, hath judged
I cannot justify whom the law condemns.
[Exeunt Duchess and other prisoners, guarded.

Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground!
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace and mine age would ease.

King. Stay, Humphrey Duke of Gloucester: ere thou go,
Give up thy staff: Henry will to himself
Protector be; and God shall be my hope, ACT II.  SECOND PART OF

KING HENRY VI.  SCENE IV.

York. Take away his weapon. Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in the master's way.
Peter. O God, have I overcome mine enemy in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right!
King. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight;
For by his death we do perceive his guilt:
And God in justice hath reveal'd to us
The truth of that innocence of thy fellow,
Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.
Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward.
[Sounds a flourish.  Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A street.

Enter Gloucester and his Servingmen, in mourning cloaks.

Glou. Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a
And after summer evermore succeeds a cloud; barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:
So cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.
Sir, what's o'clock?  Ten, my lord.

Glou. Ten is the hour that was appointed me
To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess;
Unehail may she endure the flinty streets,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nick Naste, will you not take a look
The abject people gazing on thy face,
With envious looks, laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy proud chariot-wheels
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
But, soft! I think she comes; and I will prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of Gloucester in a white sheet, and a taper burning in her hand; with Sir John Stanley, the Sheriff, and Officers.

Serc. So please your grace, we'll take her from the street.

Glou. No, stir not, for your lives; let her pass by.
Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame? Now thou dost pence enough. Look how they gaze! See how the giddy multitude do point,
And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee!
Ah, Gloucester, hide thee from their hateful looks,
And, in thy closet, put up thy name,
And ban thine enemies, both mine and thine!
Glou. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief.
Duch. Ah, Gloucester, teach me to forget myself!
For whilst I think I am thy married wife
And thou a prince, protector of this land,
I think'st I should not thus be led along,
Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back,
And follow'd with a raddle that rejoice
To see my tears and hear my deep-felt groans.
The ruthless Flint doth cut my tender feet,
And when I start, the envious people laugh
And bid me be advised how I tread.
Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?
Trow'st thou that e'er I'll look upon the world,
Or count them happy that enjoy the sun?
No; dark shall be my light and night my day;
To think upon my pomp shall be my hell.
Sometimes I'll say, I am Duke Humphrey's wife,
And he a prince and ruler of the land:
Yet so he ruled and such a prince he was
As he stood by whilst I, his forlorn duchess,
Was made a wonder and a pointting-stock
To every idle rascal follower.
But be thou mild and lenient at my shame,
Nor stir at nothing till the axe of death
Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will;
For Suffolk, he that can do all in all
With her that hateth thee and hates us all.
And York and impious Beaufort, that false priest,
Have all lined bushes to betray thy wings,
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee:
ACT III.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE I.

But fear not thou, until thy foot be snared, Nor ever seek prevention of thy foes.
Glou. Ah, Nell, forbear! thou art almost all awry; I must offend before I be attainted; And had I twenty times so many foes, And each of them had twenty times their power, All these could not procure me any seate, So long as I am loyal, true and crimeless. Wouldst have me require thee from this reproach? Wry, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away, But I in danger for the breach of law. Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell: I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience; These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, Holden at Bury the first of this next month. Glou. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before! This is close dealing. Well, I will be there.

Exit Herald.

My Nell, I take my leave: and, master sheriff, Let not her penance exceed the king's commission. Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission And Sir John Stanley is appointed now [stays, To take her with him to the Isle of Man. Glou. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady here? Stand then, as I given in charge, may 't please your grace. Glou. Entreat her not the worse in that I pray

You use her well: the world may laugh again; And I may live to do you kindness if You do it here: and so, Sir John, farewell! [well! Duch. What, gone, my lord, and bid me not fare- Glou. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak. [Exeunt Gloucester and Seringan.

Duch. Art thou gone too? all comfort go with thee! For none abides with me: my joy is death; Death, at whose name I oft have been afraid, Because I wish'd this world's eternity. Stanley, I prithee, go, and take me hence; I care not whither, for I beg no favour, Only convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man; There to be used according to your state.

Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach: And shall I then be used reproachfully? Stan. Like to a duchess, and Duke Humphrey's lady; According to that state you shall be used.

Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare, Although thou hast been conducted of my shame. Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharged. Come, Stanley, shall we go?

Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this And go we to attire you for our journey. [sheet, Duch. My shame will not be assoild with my sheet: No, it will hang upon my richest robes And show itself, attire me how I can. Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. — The Abbey at Bury St. Edmund's.

Sound a sonnet. Enter the King, the Queen, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk, York, Buckingham, Salisbury and Warwick, to the Parliament.

King. I muse my Lord of Gloucester is not come: 'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Queen. Can you not see? or will ye not observe The strangeness of his alter'd countenance? With what a majesty he bears himself, How insolent of late he is become, How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself? We know the time since he was mild and affable, And if we did but glance a far-off look, Immediately he was upon his knee, That all the court admired him for submission: But meet him now, and, be it in the morn, When every one will give the time of day, He knits his brow and shows an angry eye And pusseth by with stiff unbowed knee, Dismissing duty that to us belongs. Small ears are not regarded when they grin; But great men tremble when the lion roars; And Humphrey is no little man in England. First note that he is near you in descent, And should you fall, he as the next will mount. Me seemeth then it is no policy, Respecting what a ravenous mind he bears, Now this the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted; Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the garden And choke the herbs for want of huskundry. The reverent care I bear unto my lord Made me collect these dangers in the duke.

If it be fond, call it a woman's fear; Which fear if better reasons can supplant, I will subscribe and say I wrong'd the duke. My Lord of Suffolk, Buckingham, and York, Reprove my allegation, if you can; Or else conclude my words effectual.

Suff. Well hath your highness seen into this duke; And, had I first been put to speak my mind, I think I should have told your grace's tale.

The duchess by his subordination, Upon my life, began her devilish practices: Or, if he were not privy to those faults, Yet, by repute of his high descent, As next the king he was successive heir, And such high vaunts of his nobility, Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall, Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep; And in his simple show he harbours treason. The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb. No, no, my sovereign; Gloucester is a man Unsounded yet and full of deep deceit.

Cay. Did he not, contriving of law, Devise strange deaths for small offences done? York. And did he not, in his protectorship, Levy great sums of money through the realm For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it? By means whereof the towns each day revolted.

Pike. Tut, these are petty faults to faults unknown, Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humphrey.

King. My lords, at once: the care you have of us, To mow down thorns that would ail my foot, Is worthy praise: but, shall I speak my conscience, Our kinsman Gloucester is as innocent From meaning treason to our royal person As is the sucking lamb or harmless dove: The duke is virtuous, mild and too well given To dream on evil or to work my downfall.
Queen. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond affiance!
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's disposed as the hateful raven:
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
For he's inclined as is the ravenous wolf.
Who can steal a shape that means deceit?
Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!
King. Welcome, Lord Somerset. What news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

King. Cold news, Lord Somerset: but God's will be done!

York. [Aside] Cold news for me; for I had hope
As firmly as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud
And caterpillars eat my leaves away;
But I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Enter Gloucester.

Glou. All happiness unto the lord my king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long. [soon,
Suf. Nay, Gloucester, know that thou art come too
Unless the chartier more loyal than thou art:
I do arrest thee of high treason here.

Glou. Well, Suffolk, thou shalt not see me blush
Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.
The purest spring is not so free from mud
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign;
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?
York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,
And, being protector, stayed the soldiers' pay;
By means whereof his highness hath lost France.

Glou. Is it but thought so? What are they that
I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay, [think it?
Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.
So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,
Ay, night by night, in studying good for England,
That doth that e'er I wrested from the king,
Or any good I hoarded to my use:
Be brought against me at my trial-day!
No; many a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispersed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.

Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.

Glou. I say no more than truth, so help me God!
York. In your protectorship you did devise Strange tortures for offenders never heard of,
That England was defam'd by tyranny. [teetor,

Glou. Why, 'tis well known that, whiles I was pro-
Per, as I did stand to the fault that way.
For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lowly words were rason for their fault.
Unless it were a bloody murderer,
Or foul felonious thief that fleeced poor passengers,
I never gave them condign punishment:
Murder indeed, that bloody sin, I tortured
Above the felon or what trespass else. [svered:
Suf. My lord, these faults are easy, quickly an-
But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.
I do arrest you in his highness' name:
And that I commit you to my liege
To keep, until your further time of trial.

King. My lord of Gloucester, 'tis my special hope
That you will clear yourself from all suspect:
My conscience tells me you are innocent.

Glou. Ah, gracious lord, these days are dangerous:
Virtue is choked with foul ambition
And charity chased hence by rancour's hand;
Foul subornation is predominant
And equity exiled her highness' land.
I know their plot is to have your life,
And if my lord will make this island happy
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness:
But mine is made the prologue to their play:
For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.
Bolsofer's sparkling eyes blash his heart's malice,
And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;
Sharp Buckingham unburthen's with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart;
And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life;
And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgrace on my head
And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
My fiest liege to be mine enemy:
Ay, all of you have laid your heads together—
Myself had notice of your ventures' intents,
And all to make away my guiltless life.
I shall not want false witness to condemn me,
Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;
The ancient proverb will be well effect'd:
'A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.'
Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:
If those that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife and traitors' rage
Be thus upbraid'd, chid and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
'T shall make them cool in zeal unto your grace.
Suf. Hath he not twixt our sovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though clerly couch'd,
As if she had undergone some to swear
False allegations to o'erthrow his state?
Queen. But I can give the loser leave to chide.

Glou. Far truer spoke than meant: I lose, indeed;
Beseech the winners, for they play'd me false!
And well such losers may have leave to speak.

Buck. He'll wrest the sense and hold us here all day:
Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner. [sure.

Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him
Glou. Aha! thus King Henry throws away his Before his legs be firm to bear his body.

[crutch.
Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side
And wolves are gnawing who shall gnaw thee first.
Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!
For, good King Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exit, guarded.

King. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best,
Do or undo, as if ourself were here. [ment?

Queen. What, will your highness leave the parlia-

King. Ay, Margaret; my heart is drown'd with grief.
Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes,
My body round engirt with misery,
For what's more miserable than discontent?
Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see

The map of honour, truth and loyalty:
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come
That e'er I proved thee false or fear'd thy faith.
What louring star now envies thy estate,
That these great lords and Margaret our queen
Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
Thou never didst them wrong nor man wrong;
And as the butcher takes away the calf,
And blinds the wretch and beats it when it strays,
Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house,
Even so remorseless have they borne him hence;
And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling's loss,
Even so myself bewails good Gloucester's case
With such unhelpful tears, and with dimm'd eyes
Cry after him and ask me if he come to me,
So mighty are his vowed enemies.
His fortunes I will weep and 'twixt each groan
Say 'Who's a traitor? Gloucester he is none.'

[Enter all but Queen, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk, and York; Somerset remains apart.
Queen. Free lords, I could not show myself with the sun's
Henry my lord is cold in great affairs, jet boats,
Too full of foolish pity, and Gloucester's show
Beguiles him as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers,
Or as the snake roll'd in a flowering bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I —
And yet herein I judge mine own wit good —
This Gloucester should be quickly rid the world,
To rid us from the fear we have of him.
Car. That he should die is worthy policy;
But yet we want a colour for his death:
'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of law.
Suf. But, in my mind, that were no policy:
The king will labour still to save his life,
The commons happy rise, to save his life;
And yet we have but trivial argument,
More as a mistrust, than in my lord's worthye death.
York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.
Suf. Ah, York, no man alive so fain as I!
York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death.
But, my lord cardinal, and you, my Lord of Suffolk,
Say as you think, and speak it from your souls,
Were 't not all one, an empty eagle were set
To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
As place Duke Humphrey for the king's protector?
Queen. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.
Suf. Madam, 't is true; and were 't not madness,
To make the fox surveyor of the fold? [then,
Who being accused a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but idly posted over,
Because his purpose is not executed.
No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
By nature proven an enemy to the flock,
Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood,
As I'll protest, to my liege,
And do not stand on quillet how to slay him:
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtlety,
Sleeping or waking, 't is no matter how,
So he be dead; for that is good deceit
Which makes him first that first intends deceat.
Queen. Thrice-noble Suffolk, 't is resolutely spoke.
Suf. Not resolute, except so much were done;
For things are often spoke and seldom meant:
But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,
Say who, I will, and I will be his priest.
Car. But I would have, my Lord of Ere you can take due orders for a priest: [Suffolk,
Say you consent and censure well the deed,
And I'll provide his executioner,
I tender so the safety of my liege.
Suf. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.
Queen. And so say I.
York. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
It skills not greatly who impugns our doom.

[Enter a Post.]
Post. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again,
To signify that rebels there are up
And put the Englishmen unto the sword:
Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow uncurable;
For, being green, there is great hope of help.
Car. A breach that cracks a quick expedient stop!
What counsel give you in this weighty cause?
York. This Somerset, as friend and father,
'Tis meet that lucky ruler be employ'd;
Witness the fortune he hath had in France.
Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy,
Had been the regent there instead of me,
He never would have stay'd in France so long.
York. No, to not to lose it all, as thou hast done:
I rather would have lost my my land
Than bring a burthen of dishonour home
By staying there so long till all were lost.
Show me one scar character'd on thy skin:
Men's flesh preserved so whole do seldom win.
Queen. Nay, then, this spark will prove a raging
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with:
fire,
No more, good York; sweet Somerset, be still:
Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent there,
Might happily have proved far worse than his.
York. What, worse than nought? say, then, a shame take all!
Som. And, in the number, thee that wishest shame!
Car. My Lord of York, try what your fortune is.
The unciivil kerns of Ireland are in arms
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected choicely, from each county some,
And try your hap against the Irishmen?
York. I will not talk of that event.
York. My Lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days
At Bristol I expect my soldiers;
For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.
Suf. I'll see it truly done, my Lord of York.

[Exit all but York.
York. Now, York, or never, I'll show you fearful
And change disdain to resolution: thoughts,
Be thou hopeous to be, or what thou art
Resign to death; it is not worth the enjoying:
Let pale-faced fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart. [thought,
Faster than spring-time showers comes thought on
And not a thought but thinks on dignity.
My brain more busy than the labouring spider
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Well, nobles, well, 't is politicly done,
To send me packing with an host of men:
I fear me you but warm the starved snake,
Who, cherishing all your breasts, will lug your hearts.
'T was men thought lucky and you will give them me:
I take it kindly; yet be well assured
You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.
While I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven and hell;
And this false tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circtum on my head,
Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-bred law.
And, for a minister of my intent,
I have seduced a headstrong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,
To make commotion, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer.
In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns,
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE II.

And sought so long, till that his thighs with darts Were almost like a sharp-quilled petroncelle; And, in the end being rescued, I have seen Him caper upright like a wild Morisco, Shaking his loose hair, and ringing his bells. Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern, Hath he conversed with the enemy, And undiscover'd come to me again And given me notice of their villanies. This devil here shall be my substitute: For I was told that the Duke of Suffolk now is dead, In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble: By this I shall perceive the commons' mind, How they affect the house and claim of York. Say he be taken, rack'd and tortured, I know no pain they can inflict upon him Will make him say I moved him to these arms. Say that he thrive, as 'tis great like he will, Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength And reap the harvest which that rasal sow'd; For Humphrey being dead, as he shall be, And Henry put apart, the next for me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Bury St. Edmund's. A room of state.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

First Mur. Run to my Lord of Suffolk; let him know We have dispatch'd the duke, as he commanded. Sec. Mur. O that it were to do! What have we Didst ever hear a man so penitent? [done?

Enter Suffolk.

First Mur. Here comes my lord. Suf. Now, sites, have you dispatch'd this thing? First Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead. Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house; I will reward you for this venturous deed. The king and all the peers are here at hand. Have you laid fair the bed? Is all things well, According as I gave directions? First Mur. 'Tis, my good lord. Suf. Away! be gone. [Exeunt Murderers.

Sound trumpets. Enter the King, the Queen, Cardinal Beaufort, Somerset, with Attendants.

King. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight; Say we intend to try his grace to-day, If he be guilty, as 't is published. Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord. [Exit. King. Lords, take your places; and, I pray you all, Proceed no further against our uncle Gloucester Than from true evidence of good esteem He be approved in practice culpable. Queen. God forbid any malice should prevail, That faultless may condemn a nobleman! Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion! [much. King. I thank thee, Meg; these words content me

Re-enter Suffolk.

ACT III.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.
SCENE II.

For losing ken of Albion’s wish’d coast.
How often have I tempted Suffolk’s tongue,
The agent of thy foul inconstancy,
To sit and see my life unfold
When he to madding Dido would unfold
His father’s acts commenced in burning Troy!
Am I not witch’d like her? or thou not false like
Ay me, I can no more! die, Margaret! [him?]
For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.

War. But both of you were vow’d Duke Humphry’s foes.
And you, for death, had the good dude to keep:
’Tis like you would not feast him like a friend;
And ‘tis well seen he found an enemy.
Queen. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen
As guilty of Duke Humphry’s timeless death.
War. Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh
And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect’t was he that made the slaughter?
Who finds the partridge in the puttick’s nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak?
Even so suspicious is this tragedy. [your knife?]
Queen. Are you the butcher, Suffolk? Where’s
Is Beaufort term’d a kite? Where is his talons?
Suf. I wear no knife to slaughter sleeping men;
But here’s a vengeful sword, rusted with ease,
That shall be scour’d in his rancorous heart
That slanders me with murder’s crimson badge.
Say, if thou darest, proud Lord of Warwickshire,
That I am guilty in Duke Humphry’s death.
[Exeunt Cardinal, Somerset, and others.

War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?
Queen. He dares not call his countenuncle spirit
Nor cease to be an arrogant controller,
Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.
War. Marry, be still; whatever may I say;
For every word you speak in his behalf
Is slander to your royal dignity.
Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour!
If ever lady wrong’d her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor’d court, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou art
And never of the Nevills’ noble race.
War. But that the guilt of murder buckles thee
And I should rob the deathman of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my sovereign’s presence makes me mild,
I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech
And say it was thy mother that thou meant’st,
That thou thyself wast born in bastardy;
And after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire and send thy soul to hell,
Perrick, thy self-bite’d, and thou, thy hog!
Suf. Thou shalt be wak’d while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou darest go with me.
War. Away even now, or I will draw thee hence:
Unworthy though thou art, I’ll cope with thee
And do some service to Duke Humphry’s ghost.
[Exeunt Suffolk and Warwick.

King. What stronger breathed than a heart untainted!
Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just,
And he but naked, though lock’d up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.
[4a noise within.

Queen. What noise is this?
Re-enter Suffolk and Warwick, with their weapons drawn.

King. Why, how now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn
Here in our bosom! what, dare you be so bold?
Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?
Suf. The traitorous Warwick with the men of Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.
[Draw Sal. [To the Commons, entering] Sirs, stand apart;
the king shall know your mind.
Dread lords, I am sure, more than with word by me,
Unless Lord Suffolk straight be done to death,
Or banished fair England’s territories,
They will by violence tear him from your palace
And torture him with grievous lingering death.

423
They say, by him the good Duke Humphrey died;
They say, in them they fear your highness' death;
And mere instinct of love and loyalty,
Free from a stubborn opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his banishment.
Then, if, in your highness' case of treatment,
That if your highness should intend to sleep
And charge that no man should disturb your rest,
In pain of your dislike or pain of death,
Yet, notwithstanding such a strait edict,
Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That wildly glistened towards your feet, speedily
It were not necessary you were ware of,
Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal;
And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, whether you will or no,
From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is,
With whose envenomed and fatal sting.
Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within] An answer from the king, my Lord of Salisbury!

Suf. A tedious, rude unpolish'd hint's
Could send such message to their sovereign:
But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To show how quaint an orator you are:
But all the honour Salisbury hath won
Is, that he was the lord ambassador
Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within] An answer from the king, or we will all break in!

King. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I think them for their tender loving care;
And had I not been cited so by them,
Yet, in their absence, I must speak freely:
For, sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means:
And therefore, by His majesty I swear,
Whose far unworthy deputy I am,
He shall not breathe infection in this air
But three days longer, on the pain of death.

[Exit Salisbury.]

Queen. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk!

King. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk!
No more, I say: if thou dost plead for him,
Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.
Haughty and false, if ever I kept my word,
But when I swear, it is irrevocable.
If, after three days' space, thou here be'st found
On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life.
Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with me;
I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exeunt all but Queen and Suffolk.]

Queen. Mischance and sorrow go along with you!
Heart's discontent and sour affliction
Be playfellows to keep you company!
There's two of you; the devil make a third!
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these malice encouragings
And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave. [wrests]

Queen. Fie, coward woman and soft-hearted
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy?

Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I
The curse them?
Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's root,
I would invent as bitter-searching terms,
As curt, as harsh and horrid to hear,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As heavy laden Euphues in his leafsome cote:
My tongue should stumble in inane empty words;
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
Mine hair be fix'd on end, as one distrait;
Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:

And even now my burreth'd heart would break,
Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!
Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees!
Their chiefest prospect murdering basilisks!
Their softest touch as sharp as lizards' stings!
Their musical sound as painful as a gnat,
And boding screech-owls make the concert full!
All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—
Queen. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself;
And these dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil,
And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a winter's night,
Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where biting cold would never let grass grow,
And think it but a minute spent in sport.

Queen. O, let me entreat thee cease. Give me thy
That I may dew it with my mourning tears; [hand,
Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,
To wash away my woful monuments.
O, could the king be priz'd as the queen,
That thou mightst think upon these by the seal,
Through whom a thousand sighs are breathed for thee!
So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;
'T is but surmise whilst thou art standing by,
As one that surfeits thinking on a want.
I will repeat thee, or, be well assured,
Adventure to be banish'd myself:
And banish'd I am, if but from thee.
Go; speak not to me; even now be gone.
O, go not yet! Even thus two friends condemn'd
That their thousand leaves, Leather a hundred times to part than die,
Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee!

Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banish'd;
Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.
'T is not the land I care for, wilt thou there;
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company:
For where thou art, there is the world itself,
With every pleasure in the world,
And where thou art not, desolation.
I can no more: live thou to joy thy life;
Myself no joy in nought but that thou livest.

Enter Vaux.

Queen. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I
Vaux. To signify unto his majesty [prithee?]
That Cardinal Beaufort is at point of death;
For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,
And his deathcloth is printed in the air,
Blaspheming God and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talks as if Duke Humphrey's ghost
Were by his side; sometime he calls the king
And whispers to his pillow as to him.
The secrets of his overcharged soul:
And I am sent to tell his majesty
That even now he cries aloud for him.

Queen. Go tell this heavy message to the king.

[Exit Vaux.]

Ay me! what is this world! what news are these?
But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss
Dooming the thief of his exile, my lord's expense?
Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee.
And with the southern clouds contend in tears.
Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows?
Now get thee hence: the king, thou know'st is,
Coming.
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.
Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live;
And in thy sight to die, what were it else
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe
Dying with mother's sigh between its lips:
Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth;
So shouldst thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it lived in sweet Elysium.
To die by thee were but to die in jest:
From thee to die were torture more than death:
O, let me stay, befal what may befal!
Queen. Away! though parting be a fretful corrosive,
It is applied to a deathful wound.
To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from thee;
For whereas'ter thou art in this world's globe,
I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.
Suf. I go.
Queen. And take my heart with thee.
Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woful'st cask
That ever did contain a thing of worth.
Even as a splintered bark, so sunder we:
This way I fall to death.
Queen. This way for me.
[Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—A bedchamber.

Enter the King, Salisbury, Warwick, to the Cardinal in bed.

King. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.

SCENE IV.—The coast of Kent.

Alarum. Fight at sea. Ordnance goes off. Enter a Captain, a Master, a Master's Mate, Walter Whitmore, and others; with them Suffolk, and others, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, blabbing and remorseful day Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
And now loud-owling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragic melancholy night;
Who, with their drowsy, slow and slugging wings,
Clip dead men's graves and from their misty jaws
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.
Therefore bring forth the soldiers of our prize;
For, whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs,
Here shall they make their ransom on the sand,
Or with their blood stain this discoulour'd shore.
Master, this prisoner freely give I thee:
And thou that art his mate, make boot of this;
The other, Walter Whitmore, is thy share. [know.

First Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me
Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.
[yours.

Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes
Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentlemen?
Cut both the villains' throats; for die you shall:
The lives of those which we have lost in fight
Be counterposed with such a petty sum!
First Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life. [straight.

Sec. Gent. And so will I and write home for it
Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,
And therefore to revenge it, shall thou die; [To Suf.
And so should these, if I might have my will.
Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.
Suf. Look on my George; I am a gentleman:
Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's Enough to purchase such another island, [treasure,
So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.

King. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
Where death with mischance is seen to come.
War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
Died he not in his bed? where should he die?
Can I make men live, whether they will or no?
O, torture me no more! I will confess.
Alive again? then shall I know the thing is:
I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.
Com' down his hair; look, look! it stands upright,
Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul.
Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary
Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.
King. O, thou eternal Mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!
O, beat away the busy meddling fiend
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul
And from his bosom purge this black despair!

War. See, how the pangs of death do make him grin

Sal. Disturb him not; let him pass peaceably.

King. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!

Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,
Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.
He dies, and makes no sign. O God, forgive him!

War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.

King. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all,
Close up his eyes and draw the curtain close;
And let us all to meditation.
[Exeunt.
ACT IV. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE II.

Cap. Convey him hence and on our long-boat's side
Strike off his head.

Suf. Thou dar'st not, for thy own.

Suf. Pole!

Cap. Pool! Sir Pool! lord!

Ay, kernel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt
Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.

Now will I damp up this thy yawning mouth
For swallowing the treasure of the realm:
Thy lips that kiss'd the queen shall sweep the ground.
[Death]

And them that smilest at good Duke Humphrey's
Against the senseless winds shall grin in vain,
Who in contempt shall hiss at thee again:
And weel'd be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affly a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthless king,
Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem.
By devilish policy art thou grown great
And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorged
With gobbits of thy mother's bleeding heart.
By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France,
The false revolting Normans thorough thee
Disdain to call us lord, and Picardy
Hath slain their governors, surprised our forts
And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.
The princely Warwick, and the Neviss all,
Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,
As hating thee, are rising up in arms.
And not the house of York, thrust from the crown
By shamefull murder of a guiltless king
And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,
Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colours
Advance our half-faced sun, striving to shine,
Under the which is writ 'Invitus omnia.'
The commons here in Kent are up in arms:
And, to conclude, reproach and beggary
Is crept into the palace of our king,
And all by thee. Away! convey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder
Upon the paltry, servile, abject drudges!
Small things make base men proud: this villain
Being captain of a pinnacle, threatens more [here,]
Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian pirate,
Drones suck not eagles' blood but bob bee-hives:
It is impossible that I should die
By such a lowly way thyself.
Thy words move rage and not remorse in me;
I charge thee waft me safely cross the Channel.

Cap. Walter,— [death.

Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must waft thee to thy
Suf. Goliath timor occupat armus: it is thee I fear.
Whit. Thou shall have cause to fear before I leave thee.

What are ye daunted now? now will ye stop?
First Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolk, imperial tongue is stern and rough,
Useful to command, untameable to please for favour.
Far be it we should honour such as these
With humble suit: no, rather let my head
Stoop to the block than these knees bow to any Save to the God of heaven and to my king;
And sooner dance upon a bloody pole
Than stand uncov'd to the vulgar grom.
True nobility is exempt from fear:
More can I bear than you dare execute.

Cap. Hale him away, and let him talk no more.

Suf. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can,
To this my nephew may never be forgot!
Great shall be my grief, by the holy word,
A Roman sword upon a bandit slave,
Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutes' bastard hand
Stab'd Julius Caesar; savage islanders
Pompey the Great; and Suffolk dies by pirates.
[Exeunt Whitmore and others with Suffolk.

Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart:
Therefore come you with us and let him go.
[Exeunt all but the First Gentleman.

Re-enter Whitmore with Suffolk's body.

Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen his mistress bury it.
[Exit.

First Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!
His body will I bear unto the king:
If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;
So will the queen, that living held him dear.
[Exit with the body.

SCENE II.—Blackheath.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.

Bevis. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a laith: they have been up these two days.

Holl. They have the more need to sleep now, then.

Bevis. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.

Holl. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well,
I say it was never merry world in England since gentlemen came up.

Bevis. O miserable age! virtue is not regarded in handkerchief-men.

pros.

Holl. The nobility think scorn to go in leather Bevis. Nay, more, the king's council are no good workmen.

Holl. True; and yet it is said, labour in thy vocation; which is as much to say, as let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Bevis. Thou hast hit it; for there's no better sign of a brave mind than a hard hand.

Holl. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham.

Bevis. He shall have the skin of our enemies, to make dog's-leather of.

Holl. And Dick the Butcher,—

Bevis. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

Holl. And Smith the weaver,—

Bevis. Argg, their thread of life is spun.

Holl. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter Cade, Dick Butcher, Smith the
Weaver, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.— [herrings.

Dick. [Aside] Or rather, of stealing a cale of Cade. For our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes,—Command silence.

Dick. Silence!

Cade. My father was a Mortimer,—

Dick. [Aside] He was an honest man, and a good
Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,— [bricklayer.

Dick. [Aside] As I knew her well; she was a midwife.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lambes.—

Dick. [Aside] She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces.

Smith. [Aside] But now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes basks here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. [Aside] Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable; and there was he born, under a hedge, for his father had never a house but the cag.

Cade. Valiant I am. [valiant.

Smith. [Aside] A' must needs; for beggary is Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. [Aside] No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market-days together.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. [Aside] He need not fear the sword; for his coat is of proof.
Dick. [Aside] But methinks he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt i' the hand for stealing of sheep.

Cade. Be brave, then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be in England seven halfpenny loaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it teloy to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common; and in Cheapside shall my paltry go to grass: and when I am king, as king I will be,—

[Aside. God save your majesty!]

Cade. I thank you, good people: there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers and worship me their lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say the bee stings: but I say, 'tis the bee's wax; for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now! who's there?

Enter some, bringing forward the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read and cast account.

Cade. Oratory, Clerk?

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. Has a book in his pocket with red letters.

Cade. Nay, then, he is a conjurer. [In 't.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand.

Cade. I am sorry for 't: the man is a proper man, of mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die. Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: what is thy name?

Clerk. Emmanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters: 't will go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone. Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain, and I am ta'en in his plot.

Cade. Away with him, I say! hang him with his pen and ink-horn about his neck.

[Exit one with the Clerk.

Enter Michael.

Mich. Where's our general?

Mich. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down.

He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself; he is but a knight, is 'a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently. [Kneels] Rise up Sir John Mortimer. [Rises] Now have at him!

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford and his Brother, with drum and soldiers.

Staff. Rebellions hides, the fifth and seum of Kent, Mark'd for the gallowes, lay your weapons down:

Home to your cottages, forscake this grooms:

The king is merciful, if you revolt.

Cade. But angry, wrathful, and inclined to blood, If you go forward; therefore yield, or die.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not: It is to you, good people, that I speak, Over whom, in time to come, I hope to reign; For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staff. Villain, thy father was a plasterer;
And thou thyself a shearman, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

Bro. And Adam of the dust he was made. [March.

Cade. Marry, this; Edmund Mortimer, Earl of Married the Duke of Clarence's daughter, did he Staff. Ay, sir.

Bro. By her he had two children at one birth.

Cade. That's false.

Cade. Ay, there's the question; but I say, 'tis The elder of them, being put to nurse, [true:
Was by a beggar-woman stolen away;
And, ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a bricklayer when he came to age:
His son am I; deny it, if you can.
Dick. Nay, 'tis too true; therefore he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore deny it not.

Staff. And will you credit this base drudge's words, That speaks he knows not what?

All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone.

Bro. Jack Cloth, the Duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade. [Aside] He lies, for I invented it myself.

Go to, sirrah, tell the king from me, that, for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall resign: but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And furthermore, we'll have the Lord Say's head for selling the dukedom of Maine.

Cade. And good reason; for thereby is England mained, and fain to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you that that Lord Say hath gilded the commonwealth, and made it an emuch; and more than that, he can speak French; and therefore he is a traitor.

Staff. O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay, answer, if you can: the Frenchmen are our enemies; go to, then, I ask but this: can he that speaks with the tongue of an enemy be a good counsellor, or no?

All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

Bro. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail, Assail them with the army of the king.

Staff. Herald, away; and throughout every town Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade; That these fly, which fly be a traitor's end.

May, even in their wives' and children's sight, Be hang'd up for example at their doors: And you that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Exit the two Staffords, and soldiers.

Cade. And you that love the commons, follow me. Now show yourselves men; 't is for liberty. We will not leave one lord, one gentleman: Spare none but such as go in clouted shoon; For they are thristy honest men and such As would, but that they dare not, take our parts.

Dick. They are all in order and march toward us.

Cade. But then are we in order when we are most out of order. Come, march forward. [Exit.

SCENE III. — Another part of Blackheath.

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Staffords are slain. Enter Cade and the rest.

Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick. Here, sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behavest thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus will I reward thee, the Lent shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a license to kill two hundred [lacking one.]

Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no less.

This monument of the victory will I bear [putting on Sir Humphrey's brigandine]: and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse heels till I do come to Lon-
ACT IV.  SECOND PART OF  KING HENRY VI.  SCENE VII.

Don, where we will have the mayor's sword borne by

Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols and let out the prisoners.

Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London.  [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — London.  The palace.

Enter the King with a supplication, and the Queen with Suffolk's head, the Duke of Buckingham and the Lord Say.

Queen. Oft have I heard that grief softens the mind
And makes it fearful and degenerate;—
Think therefore on revenge and cease to weep.
But who can cease to weep and look on this?
Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast;
But where's the body that I should embrace?

Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?

King. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat;
For God forbid so many simple souls
Should perish by the sword! And I myself,
Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,
Will parley with Jack Cade their general:
But should again make war on them.

Queen. Ah, barbarous vigilars! hath this lovely
Ruled, like a wandering planet, over me,
Face
And could it not enforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the same?

King. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head.

Say. Ay, but I hope your highness shall have his.

King. How now! what news? why comest thou in such haste?

Mess. The rebels are in Southwark; fly, my lord!
Jack Cade proclaims himself Lord Mortimer,
Descended from the Duke of Clarence's house,
And calls your grace usurper openly
And vows to crown himself in Westminster.
His army is a ragged multitude
Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless:
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death
Hath given them heart and courage to proceed:
All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,
They call false caterpillars and intend their death.

King. O graceless men! they know not what they head.

Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Killingworth,
'Until a power be raised to put them down.

Queen. Ah, were the Duke of Suffolk now alive,
These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd!

King. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee;
Therefore away with us to Killingworth.

Say. I'll read it, my lord, and take it my note.
The sight of me is odious in their eyes;
And therefore in this city will I stay
And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. Jack Cade hath got London bridge;
The citizens fly and forsake their houses:
The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor, and they jointly swear
To spoil the city and your royal court.

Buck. Then linger not, my lord; away, take
And horse us as

King. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will succ.

Queen. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceased.

King. Farewell, my lord: trust not the Kentish rebels.

Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd.

Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and resolute.  [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — London.  The Tower.

Enter Lord Scales upon the Tower, walking.  Then enter two or three Citizens below.

Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain?

First Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: the lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare you shall command;
But I am troubled here with myself;
The rebels have ass'yd to win the Tower,
But get you to Smithfield and gather head,
And I'll send you Mr. Matthew Goffe;
Fight for your king, your country and your lives;
And so, farewell, for I must hence again.  [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. — London.  Cannon Street.

Enter Jack Cade and the rest, and strikes his staff on London-stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city.  And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command that, of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign.  And now henceforward it shall be treason for any that calls me other than Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!

Cade. Knock him down there.  [They kill him.

Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call ye
Jack Cade more: I think he hath a very fair warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then, let's go fight with them: but first, go and set London bridge on fire; and, if you can, burn down the Tower too.  Come, let's away.  [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. — London.  Smithfield.

Alarms.  Matthew Goffe is slain, and all the rest.
Then enter Jack Cade, with his company.

Cade. So, sir: now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inner halls: down with them.
Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.

Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.

Holl. [Aside] Mass, 'twill be sore law, then: for he was thrust in the month with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith. [Aside] Nay, John, it will be stinking law;
for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.

Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall be so.
Away, burn all the records of the realm: my mouth shall be the parliament of England.

Holl. [Aside] Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out.  [common.

Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the Lord Say, which sold the towns in France; he that made us pay one and twenty fifeens, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter George Bevis, with the Lord Say.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.
Ah, thou say, thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord!
now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction
KING HENRY THE SIXTH. PART II.—Act IV., Scene viii.
ACT IV.SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE VIII.

regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty for giving up of Normandy unto Monsieur Basilicamu, the damper unto thee by these presence, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most treacherously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school: and whereas, before, our forefathers had none, these new books but add to the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used, and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face that thou hast men about thee that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them; when, indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent.—

Dick. What say you of Kent? [gens.]

Say. Nothing but this; 'tis 'bona terra, mala

Cade. Away with him, away with him! he speaks Latin.

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you Kent, in the Commentaries Caesar writ,
Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle:
Sweet is the country, because full of riches;
The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy;
Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.
I sold not Mainne, I lost not Normandy,
Yet, to recover them, would lose my life.
Justice with favour have I always done;
Prayers and tears have moved me, gifts could never.
When have I sought at your hands,
But to maintain the king, the realm and you? Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks, Because I had no book before me to the king,
And seeing ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing whereewith we fly to heaven,
Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits,
You cannot but forbear to murder me:
This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings
For your behoof,—

Cade. Tut, when struck at thou blow in the

Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck
Those that I never saw and struck them dead.
Geo. O monstrous coward! what, to come behind folk?

Say. These cheeks are pale for watching for your Cade. Give him a box o' the ear and that will make 'em red again.

Say. Long sitting to determine poor men's causes
Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall have a hempen candle then and the help of hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Say. The palsy and not fear, provokes me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us, as who should say, I'll be even with you: I'll see if his head will stand steadier on a pole, or no. Take him away, and be head to him.

Say. Tell me wherein have I offended most?

Cade. Have I accounted wealth or honour? speak.

Say. Are my cheeks fill'd up with extorted gold?

Cade. Is my apparel sumptuous to behold?

Say. Whom have I injured, that ye seek my death?

These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding:

This breast from harboursing foul deceitful thoughts. 0, let me live!

Cade. [Aside] I feel remorse in myself with his words; but I'll broil it: he shall die, an it be but for pleasing so well for his life. Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue; he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done. [prayers, Say. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your God should be so obdurate as yourselves, How would it fare with your departed souls? And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him! and do as I command ye.

[Execut some with Lord Say. The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute; there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead ere they have it: men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command that their wives be as free as heart can wish or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cade. Marry presently.

All. O, brave!

Re-enter one with the heads.

Cade. But is not this braver? Let them kiss one another, for they loved well when they were alive. Now part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night: for with these borne before us, instead of maces, will we ride through the streets and at every corer have them kiss. Away! [Execut.

SCENE VIII.—Southwark.

Alarum and retreat. Enter Cade and all his rabblemound.

Cade. Up Fish Street! down Saint Magnus' Corner, kill and knock down! throw them into Thames! [Shout and a parley.] What noise is this I hear? Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill!

Enter Buckingham and old Clifford, attended.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare and will disturb thee:
Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king
Unto the commons whom thou hast misled;
And here pronounce free pardon to them all
That will forsake thee and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye, countrymen? will ye relent,
And yield to mercy whilst 'tis offer'd you;
Or let a rebel lead you to your deaths?
Who loves the king and will embrace his pardon,
Fling up his cap, and say 'God save his majesty!' Who hateth him and honours not his father,
Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cade. What, Buckingham and Clifford, are ye so brave? And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought ye would never have given out these arms till you had recovered your ancient freedom: but you are all recreants and dastards, and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs with burthens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces:
Of gallowglasses and stout kerns
Is marching hitherward in proud array,
And still prochaineth, as he comes along,
His arms are only to remove from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

King. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and York distress'd.

Like to a ship that, having 'scaped a tempest,
Is straightforward calm'd and boarded with a pirate:
But now is Cade driven back, his men dispersed;
And now is York in arms to second him.

I pray thee, Buckingham, go and meet him,
And ask him what 's the reason of these arms.
Tell him I 'll send Duke Edmund to the Tower;
And, Somerset, we will commit thee hither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

Som. My lord,
I 'll yield myself to prison willingly,
Or unto death, to do my country good.

King. In any case, be not too rough in terms;
For he is fierce and cannotbrook hard language.
Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal
As all things shall redound unto your good.

King. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better;
For yet may England curse my wretched reign.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—Kent. Iden's garden.

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself, that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I hid me in these woods and durst not peep out, for all the country is laid for me; but now am I so hungry that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years I could not stay no longer.
Therefore, on a brick wall have I climbed into this garden, to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And I think this word
'sallet' was born to do me good; for many a time, but for a sallet, my brain-pain had been eft with a brown bill: and many a time, when I have been dry and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart pot to drink in; and now the word 'sallet' must serve me to feed on.

Enter Iden.

Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the court,
And may enjoy such quiet walks as these?
This small inheritance my father left me
Contenteth me, and worth a monarch,
I seek not to wax great by others' waning,
Or gather wealth, I care not, with what envy:
Sufficeth that I have maintains my state
And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here 's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave.
Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand cries of the king by carrying my head to him: but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why, rude companion, whatsoever thou be,
I know thee not; why, then, should I betray thee?
Is 't not enough to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
Climbing in with false in spirit owner.
But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?
Cade. Brave thee! ay, by the best blood that ever was brooked, and braved thee too. Look on me well: I have eaten no meat these five days: yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door-nail, I pray God I may never eat grass more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England
That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent,
Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.
Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou canst outface me with thy looks:
Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist.
Thy leg a stick compared with this truncheon;
My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
And if mine arm be heaved in the air,
Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.
As for words, whose sadness answers words,
Let this my sword report what speech forbeares.

Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard! Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the barly-boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath; I beseech God on my knees thou mayst be turned to hounals.

[Here they fight. Cade falls.]

O, I am slain! famine and no other hath slain me; let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is hid.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

Enter York, and his army of Irish, with drum and colours.

York. From Ireland thus comes York to claim his right, And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head: Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright, To entertain great England's lawful king.

Ah! sancta majestas, who would not buy thee dear? Let them obey that know not how to rule; This land was made to handle nought but gold. I cannot give due action to my words, Except a sword or sceptre balance it: A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul, On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me? The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble. Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well. [greeting.]

York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure? Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege, To know the reason of these arms in peace; Or why thou, being a subject as I am, Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn, Should raise so great a power without his leave, Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

York. [Aside.] Scarecrow can I speak, my choler is so O, I could hew up rocks and fight with flint, [great: I am so angry at these abject terms; And now, like Ajax Telamonius, On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury. I am far better born than is the king; More like a king, more kingly they thought: But I must make fair weather yet awhile, Till Henry be more weak and I more strong.—Buckingham, I prithee, pardon me, That I have given no answer all this while: My mind was troubled with deep melancholy. The cause why I have brought this army hither Is to remove proud Somerset from the king, Seditious to his grace and to the state. Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part: But if thy arms be to no other end, The king hath yielded unto thy demand: The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner? Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.

York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers. Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves; Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field. You shall have pay and every thing you wish. And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry, Command my eldest son, nay, all my sons, As pledges of my fealty and love; I'll send them all as willing as I live: Lands, goods, horse, armour, anything I have, Is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission: We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King and Attendants.

King. Buckingham, dost York intend no harm to That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm? [hus, York. In all submission and humility] York doth present himself unto your highness. King. Then what intends these forces thou dost bring? York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence. And fight against that monstrous rebel Cade, Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden, with Cade's head.

Iden. If one so rude and of so mean condition May pass into the presence of a king, I, I present your grace a traitor's head, The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew. King. The head of Cade! Great God, how just O, let me view his visage, being dead, [art Thou! That living wrought me such exceeding trouble. Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him? Iden. I was, an't like your majesty. King. How art thou call'd? and what is thy de- iden. A poor esquire of Kent, that's my name; [gree? A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.

Buck. So please it you, my lord, 't were not amiss He were created knight for his good service. King. Iden, kneel down. [He kneels.] Rise up a We give thee for reward a thousand marks, [knight. And will that thou henceforth attend on us. Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty, And never live but true unto his liege! [Rises.

Enter Queen and Somerset.

King. See, Buckingham, Somerset comes with the Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke. [queen:
ACT V.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE II.

Queen. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his But boldly stand and front him to his face. [head, York. How now? I am Som's servant at liberty? Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts, And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shall I endere the slight of Som's heart? False king! why hast thou broken faith with me, Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse? King did I call thee? no, thou art not king, Not fit to govern and rule multitudes, Whose darest not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor. That bed of thee not become a crown; Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff, And not to grace an awful princely sceptre, That gold must round engirt these brows of mine, Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear, Is able with the change to kill and cure. Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up And with the same to act controlling laws. Give place: by heaven, thou shalt rule no more O'er him whom heaven created for thy ruler. Som. O monstrous traitor! I arrest thee, York, Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown: Obev, and resign thy traitor, and I for grace. York. Wouldst have me kneel? first let me ask If they can brook I bow a knee to man. [of these. Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail: [Exit Attendant. I know, ere they will have me go the ward, They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement. Queen. Call lither Clifford; bid him come amain, To say if that the bastard boys of York Shall be the surety for their traitor father, [Exit Buckingham. York. O blood-besotted Neapolitan, Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge! The sons of York, thy betters in their birth, Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those That for my surety will refuse the boys! Enter Edward and Richard.

Queen. And here comes Clifford to deny their bail. Clifford. Health and all happiness to my lord the king! I thank thee, Clifford; say, what news with Nay, do not fright us with an angry look: [thee. We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again; For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee. Clifford. This is my king, York. I do not mistake; But thou mistakest me much to think I do: To Bedlam with him! is the man grown mad? King. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour Makes him oppose himself against his king. Clifford. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower, And chop away that faction's pate of his. Queen. He is arrested, but will not obey; His sons, he says, shall give their words for him. York. Will you not, sons? Bick. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve. Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall. Clifford. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here! York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so: I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor. Clifford. Call hither to the stake my two brave bears, That with the very shaking of their chains They may astonish these fall-lurking curs: Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me. Enter the Earls of Warwick and Salisbury. Clifford. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death, And manacle the bear-ward in their chains, If thou darest bring them to the baiting place. Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweaving cur Run back and bite, because he was withheld; Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw, Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs and cried: And such a piece of service will you do. If you oppose yourselves to match Lord Warwick. Clifford. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump, As crooked in thy manners as thy shape! York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon. Clifford. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn your-selves.

[Exit.]

King. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot To Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver hair, Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son! What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian, And seek for sorrow with thy spectators? O, where is faith? O, where is loyalty? If it be banish'd from the frosty head, Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war, And shame thine honourable age with blood? 'Tis by our hand, and will for grace.[Kneels. Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it? For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me That bows unto the grave with mickle age. Salisbury. My lord, I have consider'd with myself The title of this most renowned duke; And in my heart I do resolve to none the less The rightful heir to England's royal seat. King. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me? Salisbury. I have. [an oath? King. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such Sal. It is great sin to swear unto a sin, But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Who can be bound by any solemn vow To do a murderous deed, to rob a man, To force a spotless virgin's chastity, To reave the orphan of his patrimony, To wring the widow from her custom'd right, And have no other reason for this wrong But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Queen. A subtle traitor needs no sophister. King. Clifford Buckingham, and bid him arm himself. Clifford Buckingham, and all the friends thou I am resolved for death or dignity. Clifford. First I warrant thee, if dreams prove true. War. You were best to go to bed and dream again, To keep thee from the tempest of the field. Clifford. I am resolved to bear a greater storm Than any thou canst conjure up to-day; And that I'll write upon thy burgonet. Might I but know thee by thy household badge. War. Now, by my father's badge, old Neville's crest, The rampant bear-chin'd to the ragged staff, This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet, As on a mountain top the cedar shows That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm, Even to affright thee with the view thereof. Clifford. Thou dost not from thy burgher badge At tread it under foot with all contempt; Despite the bear-ward that protects the bear. Clifford. So to arms, victorious father, To quell the rebels and their companions. Rich. Fear! charity, for shame! speak not in spite, For you shall sup with Jesus Christ to-night. Clifford. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell. Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell. [Exit severally.

SCENE II. — Saint Alban's.

Actorus to the battle. Enter Warwick.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls: And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now, when the angry trumpet sounds alarum
And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me:
Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter York.

How now, my noble lord! what, all afout?
York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed,
But match to match I have encounter'd him
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Even of the bonny beast he loved so well.

Enter old Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must hunt this deer to death.
War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou fight'st.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. [Exit.
Clif. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?
York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.
Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,
But that 'tis shown ignobly and in treason.
York. So let it help me now against thy sword
As I in justice and true right express it.
Clif. My soul and body on the action both!
York. A dreadful lay! Address thee instantly.
[They fight, and Clifford falls.
Clif. Lais vin couronne les œuvres. [Dies.
York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still,
Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will! [Exit.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout;
Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell,
Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance! Let no soldier fly,
He is truly dedicated to war
Hath no self-love, nor he that loves himself
Hath not essentially but by circumstance
The name of valour. [Seeing his dead father.
O, let the vile world end.
And the promised flames of the last day
Kuit earth and heaven together!
Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds
To cease! Was thou ordain'd, dear father,
To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve
The silver livery of advised age,
And, in thy reverence and thy chair-days, thus
To die in arran battle? Even at this sight
My heart is turn'd to stone: and while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. York not our old men spares;
No more will I their labors: tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire,
And beauty that the tyrants oft reclains
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.
Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
Meet I an infant of the house of York,
Into as many gobbets will I cut it
As wild Medea young Abyrutus did:
In cruelties will I seek the tyrant's throne.
Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house:
As did Aeneas old Anchises bear,
So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then Aeneas bare a living load,
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine.
[Exit, bearing off his father.

Enter Richard and Somerset to fight. Somerset is killed.

Rich. So, lie thou there;
For underneath an alehouse' patent sign,
The Castle in Saint Alban's, Somerset
Hath made the wizard famous in his death.
Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still:
Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.

Fight: escusions. Enter King, Queen, and others.

Queen. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame, away!

King. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.
Queen. What are you made of? you'll nor fight Now is it manhood, wisdom and defence, [nor fly:
To give the enemy way, and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

[Alarum after off. If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes: but if we haply seape,
As well we may, if not through your neglect,
We shall to London get, where you are loved
And where this breach now in our fortunes made
May readily be stopp'd.

Re-enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief
I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly:
[set,
But fly you must; incurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away, for your relief! and we will live
To see their day and then our fortune give:
Away, my lord, away! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Fields near St. Alban's.

That winter lion, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions and all brush of time,
And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,
Repairs him with occasion! This happy day
Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

Rich. My noble father,
Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
Three times bestri'd him: thrice I led him off,
Persuaded him from any further act:
But still, where danger was, still there I met him;
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.
But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day:
By the mass, so did we all. I thank you, Richard:
God knows how long it is I have to live;
And it hath pleas'd him that three times to-day
You have defend'd me from imminent death.
Well, lords, we have not got that which we have:
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repairing nature.
York. I know our safety is to follow them;
For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament.
Let us pursue him ere the wits of forth
What says Lord Warwick? shall we after them?
War. After them! nay, before them, if we can.
Now, by my faith, lords, 'tis a glorious day:
Saint Alban's battle won by famous York
Shall be eternized in all age to come;
Sound drums and trumpets, and to London all:
And more such days as these to us befall! [Exeunt.

SCENE — England and France.

ACT I.

War. I wonder how the king escaped our hands.
York. While we pursued the horsemen of the
He slily stole away and left his men: [north,
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,
Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,
Cheer'd up the dropping army; and himself,
Lord Clifford and Lord Stafford, all abreast,
Charged our main battle's front, and breaking in
Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, Duke of Buckingham
Is either slain or wounded dangerously; [ham,
I clear his beaver with a downright blow:
That this is true, father, behold his blood. [blood,
Mont. And, brother, here's the Earl of Wiltshire's
Whom I encountered'd as the battles join'd.

Rich. Speak thou for me and tell them what I did.
[Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's head.
York. Richard hath best deserved of all my sons.
But by your grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?

Norf. Such hope have have all the line of John of Gaunt!

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's head.

War. And so do I. Victorious Prince of York,
Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
I vow by heaven these eyes shall never close.
This is the palace of the fearful king,
And this the regal seat: possess it, York;
For this is thine and not King Henry's heirs.

York. Assist me, then, sweet Warwick, and I will;
For hither we have broken in by force.

Norf. We'll all assist you; he that flies shall die.

York. Thinks, gentle Norfolk: stay by me, my lords;
And, soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night.

[They go up.

War. And when the king comes, offer him no violence.

Unless he seek to thrust you out perforce. [ment,
York. The queen this day here holds her parl
But little thinks we shall be of her council:
By words or blows here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.

War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,
Unless Plantagenet, Duke of York, be king,
And bashful Henry deposed, whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute;
I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shake his bells.

I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares:
Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown.

FLOURISH. Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmoreland, Exeter, and the rest.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits,
Even in the chair of state: belike he means,
Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,
To aspire unto the crown and reign as king.

Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father,
And thine, Lord Clifford; and you both have vow'd revenge
On him, his sons, his favourites and his friends.
ACT I.  THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE I.

North. If I be not, heavens be revenged on me!
Clif. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.
West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him
My heart for anger burns; I cannot brook it.
K. Hen. Be patient, gentle Earl of Westmoreland.
Clif. Perchance it is for politicks, such as he: He durst not sit there, had your father lived.
My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York.
North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin: be it so.
K. Hen. Ah, know you not the city favours them, And they have troops of soldiers at their back?
War. But when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's
To make to shambles of the parliament-house!
Cousin of Exeter, crowns, words and threats
Shall be the war that Henry means to use.
Thou factions Duke of York, descend my throne, And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet;
I am thy sovereign.
York. I am thine. [Of York
Exe. For shame, come down: he made thee Duke of York: 'Twas my inheritance, as the earldom was. Exe.] And I shall wear the crown.
War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown
In following this usurping Henry.
Clif. Whom should he follow but his natural king?
War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard Duke of York. [To
K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my York. It must and shall be so: content thyself.
War. Be Duke of Lancaster; let him be king.
West. He is both king and Duke of Lancaster;
And that the Lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.
War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget
That we are those which chased you from the field
And slew your fathers, and with colours spread
March'd through the city to the palace gates.
North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;
And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.
West. Plantagenet, of thee and these thy sons,
Thy kinsmen and thy friends, I'll have more lives
Than chops of blood that never was father's veins.
Clif. Urge it no more; lest that, instead of words,
I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger
As shall revenge his death before I stir. [threats
War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless
York. Will you we show our title to the crown?
If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.
K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?
Thy father was, as thou art, Duke of York;
Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, Earl of March:
I am the son of Henry the Fifth,
Who made the Dauphin and the French to stop
And seize upon their towns and provinces.
War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.
K. Hen. The lordi protector lost it, and not I:
When I was crown'd I was but nine months old.
Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks,
You lose.
Father, take the crown from the usurper's head.
Edw. Sweet father, do set it on your head.
Mont. Good brother, as thou lovest and honour
est arms,
Let's fight it out and not stand cavilling thus,
Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king
York. Sons, peace! [in his ear.
K. Hen. Percieveth, thou! and give King Henry leave to speak. [lords.
War. Plantagenet shall speak first: hear him,
And be you silent and attentive too,
For he that interrupts him shall not live. [throne,
K. Hen. Think'st thou that I will leave my kingly
Wherein my grandsire and my father sat?
No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;
Ay, and their colours, often borne in France,
And now in England to our heart's great sorrow,
Shall be my winding-sheet. Why faint you, lords?
My title's good, and better far than his.
War. Prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king,
K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got the crown.
York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.
K. Hen. [Aside] I know not what to say; my title's weak.—
Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?
York. What then?
K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king;
For Richard, in the view of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth,
Whose heir my father was, and I am his.
York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
And made him to resign his crown perforce.
War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstr'd,
Think you 't were prejudicial to his crown?
Exe. No; for he could not so resign his crown
But that the next heir should succeed and reign.
K. Hen. Art thou against us, Duke of Exeter?
Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?
Exe. My conscience tells me he is lawful king.
K. Hen. [Aside] All will revolt from me, and turn to him.
North. Plantagenet, for all the chain thou lay'st,
Think not that Henry shall be so deposed.
War. Deposed he shall be, in despite of all.
North. Thou art deceived: 'tis not thy southern power,
Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,
Can set the duke up in despite of me.
Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:
May that ground gape and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!
K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!
What matter you, or what conspire you, lords?
War. Do right unto this princely Duke of York,
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And over the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.
[He stamps with his foot, and the Soldiers show themselves.
K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, hear me but one
Let me for this my life-time reign as king. [word:
York. Confirm the crown to me and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou livest.
King. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?
War. What good is this to England and himself!
West. Base, fearful and despairing Henry!
Clif. How hast thou injured both thyself and us?
West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.
North. You too?
Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.
[Aside.
York. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate
In whose cold blood no spark of honour blazes.
North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in hands for this unmanly deed!
Clif. In dreadful war mayst thou be overcome,
Or live in peace abandon'd and despised!
[Exeunt North., Cliff, and West.
War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.
Exe. They seek revenge and therefore will not.
K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!
[yield.
War. Why should you sigh, my lord?
K. Hen. Not for myself, Lord Warwick, but my whom I unthankfully shall disinherit. [son, but as it may: I here entail the crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever; conditionally, that here thou take an oath to cease, whilest I live, to honour me as thy king and sovereign, and neither by treason nor hostility to seek to put me down and reign thyself. York. This oath I willingly take and will perform. War. Long live King Henry! Plantagenet, enquire whose is he? [ward sons!] K. Hen. And long live thou and these thy for- York. New York and Lancaster are reconciled. [Exc. Accursed be he that seeks to make them foes! [Sennet. Here they come down. York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle. War. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray I'll steal away. [her anger: K. Hen. Exeter, so will I. Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me: I will follow thee. K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay. Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes? Ah, wretched man! would I had died a maid, and never seen thee, never borne thee son, Seeing thou hast proved so unnatural a father! Hath he deserved to lose his birthright thus? Hadst thou but loved him half so well as I, Or felt that pain which I did for him once, Or nourish'd him as I did with my blood, [there, Thou would'st have left thy dearest heart-blood Rather than have made that savage duke thine heir And disinherit thine own son. Prince. Father, thou cannot disinherit me: If you be king, why should not I succeed? [son: K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret: pardon me, sweet The Earl of Warwick and the duke enforced me. Q. Mar. Enforced thee! art thou king, and wilt be forced? I shan't to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch! Thou hast undone thyself, thy son and me; And given unto the house of York such head As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance. To entail him and his heirs unto the crown, What is it, but to make thy sepulchre And creep into it far before thy time? Warwick is chancellor and the lord of Calais: Stern Falconbridge commands the narrow seas; The duke is made protector of the realm; And yet shall thou be safe? such safety finds The trembling lamb environed with wolves. Had I been there, which were a silly woman, The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes Before I would have granted to that act. But thou prefer'st thy life before thine honour: And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed, Until that act of parliament be repeal'd Whereby my son is disinherited. The northern lords that have forsown thy colours Will follow mine, if once they see them spread; And spread they shall be, to thy foul disgrace And after ruin of the house of York. Thus do ye, son, and let 'tis away; Our army is ready; come, we'll after them. K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak. Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.

K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me? Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies. Prince. When I return with victory from the field I'll see your grace: till then I'll follow her. Q. Mar. Come, son, we'll not linger thus. [Exc. Queen Margaret and the Prince. K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me and to her son Hath made her break out into terms of rage! Revenged may she be on that hateful duke, Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire, Will cost my crown, and like an empty eagle Tire on the flesh of me and of my son! The loss of those three lords torment's my heart: I'll write unto them and entreat them fair. Come, cousin, you shall be the messenger. [Exc. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. [Exc.}

SCENE II. — Sandal Castle.

Enter Richard, Edward, and Montague.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.

Edw. No, I can better play the orator.

Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter the Duke of York.

York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.

Edw. But for a kingdom any oath may be broken: I would break a thousand oaths to reign one year. Rich. No; God forbid your grace should be for- York. I shall be, if I claim by open war. [sworn. Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak. York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible. Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took Before a true and lawful magistrate, That hath authority over him that swears: Henry had none, but did usurp the crown; Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose, Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.

Therefore, to arms! And, father, do but think How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown; Within whose circuit is Elysium And all that poets reign of bliss and joy. Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest Until the white rose that I wear be dyed Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart. York. Richard, enough; I will be king, or die. Broth. then shalt to London presently, And where in Warwick to this enterprise, Thon, Richard, shalt to the Duke of Norfolk, And tell him privily of our intent. Yor. Edward, shall unto my Lord Cobham, With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise: In them I trust; for they are soldiers, Witty, courteous, liberal, full of spirit. While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more, But that I seek occasion how to rise, And yet the king not privy to my drift, Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay: what news? What conest thou in such post? [lords Gabr. The queen with all the northern earls and Intend here to besiege you in your castle:

ACT I.  THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE IV.

She is hard by with twenty thousand men; And therefore fortify your hold, my lord. York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st thou that we fear them? Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me; My brother Montague shall post to London: Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest, Whom we have left protectors of the king, With powerful policy strengthen themselves, And trust not simple Henry nor his oaths. Mont. Brother, I go; I'll win them, fear it not: And thus most humbly I do take my leave. [Exit.

Enter Sir John Mortimer and Sir Hugh Mortimer.

York. Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles, You are come to Sandal in a happy hour; The army of the queen mean to besiege us. [field. Sir John. She shall not need; we'll meet her in the York. What, with five thousand men? Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need: A woman's general; what should we fear? [A march afar off.

Edw. I hear their drums: let's set our men in order, And issue forth and bid them battle straight. York. Five men to twenty! though the odds be great, Many a battle have I won in France, When as the enemy hath been ten to one: Why should I not now have the like success? [Alarm. Exit.

SCENE III.—Field of battle betwixt Sandal Castle and Wakefield.

Alarums. Enter Rutland and his Tutor.

Rut. Ah, whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands? Ah, tutor, look where bloody Clifford comes!

Enter Clifford and Soldiers.

Clif. How now! is he dead already? or is it fear That makes him close his eyes? I'll open them. Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch That trembles under his devouring paws; And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey, And so he comes, to rend his limbs asunder. Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword, And not with such a cruel threatening look. Sweet Clifford, hear me speak before I die. I am too mean a subject for thy wrath: Be thou revenged on men, and let me live. [blood Clif. In vain thou speak'st, poor boy; my father's Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.

Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again: He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him. [borne Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives and Were not revenge sufficient for me: No, if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves And hung their rotten coffins up in chains, It could not stifle mine ire, nor ease my heart. The sight of any of the house of York Is as a fury to me, my soul; And till I root out their accursed line And leave not one alive, I live in hell. Therefore— [Lifting his hand,

Rut. O, let me pray before I take my death! To thee I pray; sweet Clifford, pity me!

Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords. Rut. I never did thee harm: why wilt thou slay me? Clif. Thy father hath. Rut. But 'tis I was born. Thou hast one son; for his sake pity me, Lest in revenge thereof, sith God is just, He be as miserably slain as I. Ah, let me live in prison all my days; And when I give occasion of offence, Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause. Clif. No cause! Thy father slew my father; therefore, die. [Stabs him.

Rut. Di faciant landis summa sit ista tua! [Dies. Clif. Plantagenet! I come. Plantagenet! And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood, Congeal'd with this, do make me wipe off both. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field: My uncles both are slain in rescuing me; And all my followers to the eager foe Turn back and fly, like ships before the wind Turned and dispersed by hunger-starved lees. My sons, God knows what hath bechanc'd them: But this I know, they have demean'd themselves Like men born to renown by life or death. Three times did Richard make a lane to me, And thrice cried 'Courage, father! fight it out!' And full as oft came Edward to my side, With purple falchion, painted to the hilt In blood of those that had encounter'd him: And when the hardiest warriors did retire, Richard cried 'Charge! and give no foot of ground!' And cried 'A crown, or else a glorious tomb! A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!' With this, we charged again: but, out, alas! We bodged again; as I have seen a swan With bootless labour swim against the tide And spend her strength with over-matching waves. [A short alarum within. Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue; And I am faint and cannot fly with fury; And were I strong, I would not shun their fury: The sands are number'd that make up my life; Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen Margaret, Clifford, Northumberland, the young Prince, and Soldiers.

Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland, I dare your quenchless fury to more rage: I am your butt, and I abide your shot. North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet. Clif. Ay, to such mercy as his ruthless arm, With downright payment, show'd unto my father. Now Phæthon hath tumbled from his car, And made an evening at the noontide prick. York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth A bird that will revenge upon you all: And in that hope I throw mine eyes to heaven, Seorning what'er you can afflict me with. Why come you not? what multitudes, and fear? Clif. So cowards fight, when they can fly no further; So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons; So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives, Breathe out invectives against the officers. York. O Clifford, but let not thee once again, And in thy thoughts o'er-run my former time; And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face, And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere this!
ACT I.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE IV.

Cliff. I will not bade with thy word for word, But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one.

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand reasons
I would prolong awhile the traitor's life.

Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so much To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart: What valor were that, when a caw doth grin.
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away?
It is war's prize to take all advantages;
And ten to one is no impeach of valour.

[They lay hands on York, who struggles.

Cliff. Ay, ay, so strives for woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the coy struggle in the net.

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty;
So true men yield, with robbers so o'rematch'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,
Come, make him stand upon this molehill here,
That caught at mountains with outstretched arms,
Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.
What runs through the brain of England's king?
Was't he that revel'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent?
Where are your mess of sons to back you now?
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
And where's that valiant crook-back proddy,
Dicky by your boy, that with his grumbling voice
Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?
Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?
Look, York: I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point,
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.
Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable state.
I prithee, grieve, to make me merry, York.
What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thy entrails
That this cloth can fall for Rutland's death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou shouldnst be mad;
And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou wouldst be fee'd, I see, to make me sport:
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.
A crown fits York! and, lords, bow low to him:
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.

[Putting a paper crown on his head.

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!
Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chair,
And this is he was his adopted heir.
But how is it that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I bethink me, you should not be king
Till our King Henry had shook hands with death.
And will you pale your head in Henry's glory,
And rob his temples of the diadem.
Now in his life, against your holy oath?
O, 'tis a fault too unpardonable!
Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head;
And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him dead.

Cliff. That is my office, for my father's sake.

Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he has scarce
York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,
Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth!
How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull,
Upon their woes whom fortune captivates!

But that thy face is, visard-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
Would a sweet, proud queen, nay, a bee blush.
To tell thee whence thou camest, of whom derived,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils and Jerusalem.
Yet not so wealthy as an English woman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?
It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen,
Unless the adage be verified,
That beggars mounted run their horse to death.
'Tis beauty that doth oft make women proud;
And, God help me, thy share thereof is small;
'Tis virtue that doth make them most admired:
The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at:
'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable:
Thou art as opposite to every good
As the Antipodes are unto us:
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O tiger's heart wrapt in a woman's hide!
How couldst thou drain the life-blood of the child,
To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful and flexible;
Thou dost exult in famine, filthy, rough, remorseless.
Bid'st thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:
Wouldst have me weep? why, now thou hast thy will:
For raging wind blows up incessant showers,
And when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies:
And every drop cries vengeance for his death,
'Gainst thee, fell Clifford, and thee, false Frenchwoman.

North. Beshrew me, but his passion moves me so
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.

York. That face of his the hungry camillads
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd
With blood:
But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,
O, ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth of thine shall drink in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this:
And if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;
Yea even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say 'tis we were a pitiful race:
There, take the crown, and, with the crown, my curse;
And in thy need such comfort come to thee
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world:
My soul to heaven, my blood on thy heads!

North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,
I should not for my life but weep with him,
To show how inly sorrow grieves his soul.

Q. Mar. What, weeping-ripe, my Lord Northumber-

Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.

Cliff. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death.

Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted kin.

York. Open Thy gate of mercy, gracious God! My soul flies through these wounds to seek out
Thee.

Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gates;
So York may overlook the town of York.

[Dies.}

[Flourish. Exeunt.]
SCENE I.—A plain near Mortimer’s Cross in Herefordshire.

A march. Enter Edward, Richard, and their powers.

Edw. I wonder how our princely father escaped, or whether he be ‘scaped away or no. From Clifford’s horseman’s pursuit they fell; had he been taken, we should have heard the news; had he been slain, we should have heard the news; or had he ‘scaped, methinks we should have heard the happy tidings of his good escape.

How fares my brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolved where our right valiant father is become. I saw him in the battle range about; and watch’d him how he singed Clifford forth. Methought he bore him in the thickest troop as doth a lion in a herd of neat; or as a bear, encompass’d round with dogs, who having pinch’d a few and made them cry, the rest stand all aloof, and bark at him. So fare’d our father with his enemies; so fled his enemies my warlike father; Methinks, ’tis prize enough to be his son. See how the morning opens her golden gates, and takes her seat on the glorious arm. How well resembles it the prime of youth, trimm’d like a younger prancing to his love?

Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?

Rich. Three glorius sons, each one a perfect sun; not separated with the racking clouds, but sever’d in a pale clear-shining sky. See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss, as if they vow’d some league inviolable. Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun, in this the heaven figures some event. [heard of.]

Edw. ’Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never I think it citis us, brother, to the field, that we, the sons of brave Plantagenet, each one already blazing by our meads, should not withstanding join our lights together and over-shine the earth as this the world. Whate’er it bodes, henceforward will I bear upon my target three fair-shining suns.

Rich. Nay, bear three daughters: by your leave I speak it, you love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Mess. Ah, one that was a woful looker-on when as the noble Duke of York was slain, your princely father and my loving lord!

Edw. O, speak no more, for I have heard too much.

Rich. Say how he die, for I will hear it all. Mess. Environed he was with many foes, and stood against them, as the hope of Troy against the Greeks that would have enter’d Troy. But Hercules himself must yield to odds; and many strokes, though with a little axe, Hew down and fell the hardest-timer’d oak. By many hands your father was subdu’d, but yet as a ruffian by his cast upon the unrelenting Clifford and the queen, who crown’d the gracious duke in high despite, laugh’d in his face; and when with grief he wept, the ruthless queen gave him to dry his cheeks a napkin steeped in the harmless blood of sweet young Northumberland and Clifford slain: and after many sears, many foul taunts, they took his head, and on the gates of York they set the same; and there it doth remain, the saddest spectacle that e’er I view’d.

Edw. Sweet Duke of York, our prop to lean upon, now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay. O Clifford, bolsterous Clifford! thou hast slain the flower of Europe for his chivalry; and treacherously hast thou vanquish’d him, for had he been he would have vanquish’d thee. Now my soul’s palace is become the sorrows of his.”

Edw. Ah, would she break from hence, that this my body might in the ground be closed up in rest! For never henceforth shall I joy again, never, O never, shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep; for all my body’s moisture scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart: nor can my tongue unload my heart’s great burden; for selfsame wind that I should speak withal is kindling coals that fires all my breast. [quench. And burns me up with flames that tears would To weep is to make less the depth of grief; tears then for tabes; blows and revenge for me! Richard, I bear thy name; I’ll yenge thy death, or die renowned by attempting it. [thee. Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with his dukedom and his chair with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle’s bow, Show thy descent by gazing on the sun: for chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say: Either It’s thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwick, Marquess of Montague, and their army.

Rich. Great Lord of Warwick, if we should re-Our baleful news, and at each word’s deliverance stab poniards in our flesh till all were told, the words would add more anguish than the wounds. O valiant lord, the Duke of York is slain! Edw. O Warwick, Warwick! that Plantagenet, which held thee dearly as his soul’s redemption, is by the stern Lord Clifford done to death. War. Ten days ago I drown’d these news in tears; and now, to add more measure to your woes, I come to tell you things sith then befell’n.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought, where your brave father breathed his latest gasp, tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run, were brought me of your loss and his depart. I, then in London, keeper of the king, musterd my soldiers, gathered’ th flocks of depart, and very well appointed, as I thought, queen, March’d toward Saint Albans to intercept the bearing the king in my behalf along; for by my scouts I was advertised that she was coming with a full intent to dash our late decree in parliament. Touching King Henry’s oath and your succession, short tale to make, we at Saint Albans met, our battles joint’d, and both sides fiercely fought: but whether ’twas the coldness of the king, who look’d full gently on his warlike queen, that robb’d my soldiers of their heated spade; or whether ’twas report of her success; or more than common fear of Clifford’s rigour, who thunders by his bloody and his covetous blood and death, I cannot judge: but, to conclude with truth, their weapons like to lightning came and went, our soldiers’, like the night-owl’s lazy flight; or like an idle thunderer with a flail, fell gently down, as if they strick their friends; cheer’d up and with justice of our cause, with promise of high pay and great rewards: but all in vain; they had no heart to fight, and we in them no hope to win the day; so that we fled; the king unto the queen;
Lord George your brother, Norfolk and myself,
In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you;
For in the marches here we heard you were,
Making another head to fight again. [wick?]

Edw. Where is the Duke of Norfolk, gentle War?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?
With them six miles off the duke is with the soldiers;
And for your brother, he was lately sent
From your kind aunt, Duchess of Burgundy,
With aid of soldiers to this needful war. [ned:]
Rich. It was odds, belike, when valiant Warwick
Off were carried in haste to the sea,
But ne'er till now his scandal of retire.
[hear; War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou
For thou shalt know this strong right hand of mine
Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,
And wring the awful sceptre from his fist,
Were he as famous and as bold in war
As he is famed for mildness, peace, and prayer.
Rich. I know it well, Lord Warwick; blame me
'Tis love I hear thy glories make me speak. [not:
But in this troublous time what's to be done?
Shall we throw away our coats of steel,
And in our livery and in our gowns,
Numbering our Ave-Maries with our beads?
Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
Tell our devotion with revengeful arms?
If for the last, say ay, and to it, lords. [out;
War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you
And therefore cometh my brother Montague.
Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
With Clifford and the laught Northumberland,
And of their feather many moe proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
He swore consent to your succession,
His life did stand upon a slender limb,
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his oath and what beside
May make against the house of Lancaster,
Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong:
Now, if the help of Norfolk and myself,
With all the friends that thou, brave Earl of March,
Amongst the loving Welsuines canst procure,
Will but amount to five and twenty thousand,
War. Why, Via! to London will we march amain,
And once again bestride our foaming steeds,
And once again cry 'Charge upon our foes!'
But with the next turn, let them divide and speak.
Rich. Ay, now methinks I hear great Warwick
Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day,
That cries 'Retire,' if Warwick bid him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean;
And when thou fail'st—as God forbid the hour!—
Must Edward fall, which peril heaven防范! for

War. No longer Earl of March, but Duke of York:
The next degree is England's royal throne;
For King of England shalt thou be proclaimed
In every borough as we pass along;
And he that throws not up his cap for joy
Shall for the fear and forfeit of his head,
King Edward, valiant Richard, Montague,
Stay we no longer, dreaming of renown,
But sound the trumpets, and about our task.

Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as as Thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds, [steel,
I come to piece it, or to give thee mine.

Edw. Then strike up drums: God and Saint
George for us!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,
The queen is coming with a puissant host;
And craves your company for speedy counsel.
War. Why then it sorts, brave warriors, let's away.

[Exeunt.]
ACT II.

THIRD PART OF HENRY VI.

KING HENRY VI.

SCENE III.

Comes Warwick, backing of the Duke of York; And in the towns, as they do march along, Proclaims him king, and many fly to him; Darrayngh your battle, for they are at hand. cliff. Iron of Naples hid with English gilt, Whose father bears the title of a king,— As if a channel should be call'd the sea— Shamest thou not, knowing whence thou art ex- traught, To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart? edw. A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns, To make this shameless callet know herself. Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou, Although thy husband may be Menelaus; And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd By that false woman, as this king by thee. His father revel'd in the heart of France, And tamed the king, and made the dauphin stoop; And had he match'd according to his state, He might have kept that glory to this day; But when he took a beggar to his bed, And graced thou poor squire with his bridal-day, Even then that sunshine breed'd a shower for him. That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France, And beard'd sedition on his lid bow his knee; I was adopted heir by his consent: Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear, You, that are king, though he do wear the crown, Have caused him, by new act of parliament, To blot out me, and put his own son in. rich. ACT II.
THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE V.

That stain'd their fetlocks in their smoking blood, The noble gentleman gave up the ghost. [Blood: I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly. Why stand we like soft-hearted women here, Walling our losses, whiles the foe doth rage; And look upon, as if the tragedy Were play'd in jest by counterfeiters? Here on my knee I vow it to God above, I'll never pause again, never stand still, Till either death hath closed these eyes of mine Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Else. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine; And in this vow do chain my soul to thine! And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face, I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee, Thou setter up and plucker down of kings, Beseeching thee, if with thy will it stands That to my foes this body must be prey, Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope, And give sweet passage to my sinful soul! Now, lords, take leave until we meet again, Where'er it be, in heaven or in earth. [Warwick.

Rich. Brother, give me thy hand; and, gentle Let me embrace thee in my weary arms: 1. that did never weep, now melt with weep That winter should cut off our spring-time so. War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, farewell.

Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops, And give them leave to fly that will not stay; And call them pillars that will stand to us: And, if we thrive, promise them such rewards As victors wear at the Olympian games: This may plant courage in their quailing breasts; For yet is hope of life and victory. Forsworn no longer, make we hence again. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

Excursions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone: Suppose this arm is for the Duke of York, And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge, Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall. Cliff. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone: This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York; And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland; And here's the heart that Triumphs in their death And cheers these hands that slew thy sire and brother To meet this like upon thyself; And so, have at thee! [They fight. Warwick comes; Clifford flies.

Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase; For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

Alarum. Enter King Henry alone.

King. This battle faires like to the morning's war, When dying clouds contend with growing light, What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails, Can neither call it perfect day nor night. Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea, Forced by the tide to combat with the wind; Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea Forced to retire by fury of the wind: Sometime the dool prevails, and then the wind; Now another does; then weather takes it. Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror nor conquer'd: So is the equal poise of this fell war. Here on this molehill will I set me down. To whom God will, there be the victory! For why, my queen, and my lady too! Have chid me from the battle; swearing both They prosper best of all when I am thence.

Would I were dead! if God's good will were so; For what is in this world but grief and woe? O God! must we not here and now face To be no better than a homely swain; To sit upon a hill, as I do now, To carve out diauls quaintly, point by point, Thereby to see the minutes how they run, How many make the hour full complete; How many hours bring about the day; How many days will finish up the year; How many years a mortal man may live. When this is known, then to divide the times: So many hours must I tend my flock; So many hours must I take my rest; So many hours must I go to life; So many hours must I sport myself; So many days my eves have been with young; So many weeks ere the poor fools will ean; So many years ere I shall shear the fleece: So minutes, hours, days, months, and years, Pass'd over to the end they were created. Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely! Gives not the hawthorn-bush a sweeter shade To shepherds looking on their silly sheep, Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy To kings that feast on the feasts of treachry? O, yes, it doth; a thousand-fold it doth. And to conclude, the shepherd's homely curds, His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle, His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade, All which secure and sweetly he enjoys, Is far beyond a prince's delicacies. His viands sparkling in a golden cup, His body couched in a curious bed, When care, mistrust, and treason waits on him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his father, dragging in the dead body.

Son. Ill blows the wind that profits nobody. This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight, May be possessed with some store of crowns; And, that I haply take them from him now, May yet ere night yield both my life and them To some man else, as this dead man doth me. Who's this? O God! it is my father's face, Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd. O heavy times, begetting such events! From London by the king was I press'd forth; My father, being the Earl of Warwick's man, Came on the part of York; I joy his master: And I, who at his hands receiv'd my place, Have by my hands of life bereaved him. Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did! And pardon, father, for I knew not thee! My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks; And no more words till they have flow'd their fill. F. Hen. O sacred spectacle! O bloody times! Whiles lions war and battle for their dens, Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity. Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee for tears; And let our hearts and eyes, like civil war, [grief. Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharged with Enter a Father that has killed his son, bringing in the body.

Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resist'd me, Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold; For I have bought it with an hundred blows. But let me see: is this our foeman's face? Ah, no, no, it is mine own! Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee, Throw up thine eye! see, see what showers arise, Blown with the windy tempest of my heart, Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart! Only, pity, God, this miserable age! What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly, Erroneous, mutinous and unnatural,
This deadly quarrel daily doth begot!
O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late! [grief!]
K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common
O that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!
O, pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!
The rest past to the white, noblest of his face,
The fatal colours of our starving houses:
The one his purple blood right well resembles;
The other his pale cheeks, methinks, presenteth:
Wither one rose, and let the other flourish;
If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.
Son. I'll win my another for a father's death.
Take with me and ne'er be satisfied!

Fath. How will my wife for slaughter of my son
Shed seas of tears and ne'er be satisfied! [chances
K. Hen. Will you the country for these woful
Misthink the King and not be satisfied?
Son. Was ever son so rued a father's death?
Fath. Was ever father so bemoan'd his son?
K. Hen. Was ever king so grievous for subjects' woe?
Much is your sorrow; mine ten times so much.
Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill.
[Exit with the body.

Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-
My heart, a sweet boy, shall never Yield thee, for all time'; [sheet]
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go;
My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
And so I, as he that will thy fate be,
Even for the loss of thee, having no more,
As Priam was for all his valiant sons.
I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that will,
For I have murdered where I should not kill.
[Exit with the body.

K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overcome with
Here sits a king more woful than you are. [care,

Alarums: excursions. Enter Queen Margaret, the Prince, and Exeter.

Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
And Warwick rages like a chafed bull:
Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.
Q. Mar. Mount you, my lord; towards Berwick
King: Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds
Having the fearful flying hare in sight,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
And bloody steel grasp'd in their irreful hands,
Are at our backs; and therefore hence amain.
Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along with them:
Nay, send it a-dashing to extirpate their seed;
Or else come after: I'll away before.
[Exit:

K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exe.
Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
Whither the queen intends. Forward! away.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI. — Another part of the field.

A loud alarum. Enter Clifford, wounded.
Clif. Here burns my candle out; ay, here it dies,
Which, whilest it lasted, gave King Henry light.
O Lancaster, I fear thy falsehoods, tears,
More dear to heaven's pity than my son's!
My love and fear glued many friends to thee;
And, now I fall, thy tough cominiiture melts.
Impairing Henry, strengthening misprised York,
The common people swarm like summer flies;
And whither fly the gnats but to the sun?
And with what happy body's sight, O York!
O Phoebus, hast thou never given consent
That Phæthon should check thy fiery steeds,
Thy burning car never had scorched the earth! And,
Hast thou, hast thou swayed 's thine command should do,
Or as thy father and his father did,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies;

And I and ten thousand in this luckless realm
Had left no mourning widows for our death;
And thou this day hast kept thy chair in peace.
For what doth cherish weeds but gentle airy
And what makes robbers bold but too much leyni?
Bootless are plaints, and curseless are my wounds;
No way to fly, nor sitteth they under flight;
The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
For at their hands I have deserved no pity.
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effusion of blood doth make me faint.
Come, York and Richard, Warwick and the rest;
I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast.
[Exit.

Alarum and retreat. Enter Edward, George, Richard, Montague, Warwick, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now breathe we, lords: good fortune bids us pause,
And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful looks.
Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,
That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, nil'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosy to stem the waves.
But think of lords, that Clifford fled with them?
War. No, 'tis impossible; he could not escape;
For, though before his face I speak the words,
Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave:
And wheresoe'er he is, he's secretly dead.

[Clifford groans, and dies.

Edw. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?
Edw. See who it is: and, now the battle's ended,
If friend or foe, let him be gently used.
[ford;

Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford,
Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch
In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,
But set his murdering knife unto the root
From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,
I mean our princely father, Duke of York.
[head,

War. From off the gates of York fetch down the
Your father's head, which Clifford placed there;
Instead whereof let this supply the room:
Measure for measure must be answered.
[house

Edw. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our
That nothing sung but death to us and ours:
Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.
War. I think his understanding is here:
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?
Dark cloudy death overshades his beams of life,
And he nor sees nor hears us what we say.
Rich. O, would he did! and so perhaps he doth:
'T is but his policy to counterfeit,
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our father.
Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.
Rich. Clifford, ask mercy and obtain no grace.
Edw. Clifford, repeat in bootless penitence.
War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.
Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.
Rich. Thou dost love York, and am son to York.
Edw. Thou art Hied's Rutland; I will pity thee.
Geo. Where's Captain Margaret, to fence you now?
[wast wouit
War. They mocks thee, Clifford: swear as thou Rich. What, not an oath? nay, then the world goes hard!

When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath.
I know by that he's dead: and, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two hours' life,
That I in all despite might rai1 at him,
This hand should chop it off, and with the issuing
Stille the villain whose un stanza death thirist
York and young Rutland could not satisfie. [head,
War. Ay, but he's dead: off with the traitor's
ACT III.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE I. — A forest in the north of England.

Enter two Keepers, with cross-bows in their hands.

First Keep. Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves; for through this haunt anon the deer will come; and in this covert will we make our stand, culling the principal of all the deer.

Sec. Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.

First Keep. That cannot be; the noise of thy will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost. Here stand we both, and aim we at the best; and, for the time shall not seem tedious, I'll tell thee what befell me on a day.

In this self-place where now we mean to stand.

First Keep. Here comes a man; let's stay till he be past.

Enter King Henry, disguised, with a prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love, to greet mine own land with my wishful sight. No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine; Thy place is ill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee, Thy bal'd bath'd off wherewith thou wast anointed: No bending knee will call thee Caesar now, No humble suitors press to speak for right, No, not a man comes for redress of thee; For how can I help them, and not myself?

First Keep. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee: This is the quondam king; let's seize upon him.

K. Hen. Let me embrace thee, sour adversity, for wise men say it is the wisest course. [him.

Sec. Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon First Keep. Forbear awhile; we'll hear a little more.

K. Hen. My queen and son are gone to France and, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister to wife for Edward: if this news be true, poor queen and son, your labour is but lost; for Warwick is a subtle orator, and Lewis a prince soon won with moving words. By this account then Margaret may win him; for she's a woman to be pitied much: Her sighs will make a battery in his breast; Her tears will wander as a whirlwind to Hart; The tiger will be mild whiles she doth morn; And Nero will be tainted with remorse, To hear and see her plaints, her brinish tears. Ay, but she's come to beg, Warwick, to give; She, on his left side, craving aid for Henry, He, on her right, asking a wife for Edward. She weeps, and says her Henry is deposed. He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd; That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more;

Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be; For in thy shoulder do I build my seat, And never will I undertake the thing; Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting. Richard, I will create thee Duke of Gloucester, And George, of Clarence: Warwick, as ourself, Shall do and undoe as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Gloucester; For Gloucester's dukedom is too ominous.

War. Tut, that's a foolish observation: Richard, be Duke of Gloucester. Now to London, To see these honours in possession. [Execut.
And what God will, that let your king perform;
And what he will, I humbly yield unto.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — London. The palace.

Enter King Edward, Gloucester, Clarence, and Lady Grey.

K. Edw. Brother of Gloucester, at Saint Alban's field
This lady's husband, Sir Richard Grey, was slain,
His lands then seized on by the conqueror;
Her suit is now to repossess those lands;
Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because quarrell'd of the house of York.
The worthy gentleman did lose his life.

Glou. Your highness shall do well to grant her
It were dishonour to deny it her.
[suit;
K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make a
Glou. [Aside to Clar.] Yea, is it so?
[pause;
I see the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit.

Clar. [Aside to Glou.] He knows the game; how true he keeps the wind!

Glou. [Aside to Clar.] Silence!
K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit;
And come some other time to know our mind.
K. Edw. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:
May it please your highness to resolve me now;
And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me.

Glou. [Aside to Clar.] Ay, widow? then I'll warrant
you all your lands,
An if what pleases him shall pleasure you.
Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow.

Clar. [Aside to Glou.] I fear her not, unless she chance to fall.
Glou. [Aside to Clar.] God forbid that! for he'll take vantages.

K. Edw. How many children hast thou, widow?
tell me.

Clar. [Aside to Glou.] I think he means to beg a child of her.

Glou. [Aside to Clar.] Nay, whip me then: he'll rather give her two.

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glou. [Aside to Clar.] You shall have four, if he'll be ruled by him.

K. Edw. 'Twere pity they should lose their father's lands.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.

K. Edw. Lords, give us leave: I'll try this widow's wit.

Glou. [Aside to Clar.] Ay, good leave have you;
for you will have leave,
Till youth take leave and leave you to the crutch.
[Glou. and Clar. retire.

K. Edw. Now tell me, madame, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much to do them good?
[murm.

L. Grey. To do them good, I would sustain some K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands, to do them good.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.
K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness'
K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give them?
[to do.

L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me
K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon.

L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to do.

[commands.

L. Grey. Why, then I will do what your grace Glou. [Aside to Glou.] He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble.

Clar. [Aside to Glou.] As red as fire! nay, then her wax must melt.

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear
K. Edw. An easy task; 'tis but to love a king.

L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a suject.

K. Edw. Why, then, thy husband's lands I freely
L. Grey. Take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glow. [Aside to Clar.] The match is made; she seals it with a cursy.

K. Edw. But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I
L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edw. Ay, but, I fear me, in another sense.

What love, that's the thing? I see too much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death, my humble thanks,
my prayers;
That love which virtue begs and virtue grants.

K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.

L. Grey. Why, then you mean not as I thought K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.

[ceive

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I per-your highness ains at, if I am aline,
K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.

L. Grey. To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison.

K. Edw. Why, thou shalt not have thy hus-
L. Grey. Why, then mine honesty shall be my
For by that loss I will not purchase them.

[dover;
K. Edw. Therewith thou worst thy children
[and me.

L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them
But, mighty lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadness of my suit:
Please you dismiss me, either with 'ay' or 'no.'

K. Edw. Ay, if thou wilt say 'ay' to my request;
No, if thou dost say 'no' to my demand.

L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.

Glou. [Aside to Clar.] The widow likes him not,
she knits her brows.

Clar. [Aside to Glou.] He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom.
[with modesty;
K. Edw. [Aside] Her looks do argue her replete
Her words show her incomparable;
All her perfections challenge sovereignty:
One way or other, she is for a king;
And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—
Say that King Edward take thee for his queen?

L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious
I am a subject fit to jest withal,
[lord;
But far unfitness to a sovereign.
[thee;
K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.

L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto
I know I am too mean to be your queen,
And yet too bold to be your concubine.
[queen.

K. Edw. You caval, widow: I did mean, my
L. Grey. 'Twill grieve your grace my sons should call you father.
[thee mother.

K. Edw. No more than when my daughters call thou art a widow, and thou hast some children;
And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,
Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
To be the father unto many sons.
Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.

Glou. [Aside to Clar.] The ghostly father now hath done his shift.

Clar. [Aside to Glou.] When he was made a [shift.

K. Edw. Brothers, you muse what that we two have had.
[set.

Glow. The widow likes it not, for she looks very K. Edw. You'll think it strange if I should Clar. To whom, my lord?
[marry her.
ACT III.  THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.  SCENE III.

K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.
Glou. That would be ten days' wonder at the least.
Clou. But it's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
Glou. By so much is the wonder in extremes. K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you Her suit is granted for her husband's lands. [both Enter a Nobleman.

Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.
K. Edw. See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:
And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,
To question of his apprehension.
Widow, go you along. Lords, use her honourably. [Exit

Glou. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.
Would he were wasted, marrow, bones and all,
That from his loins an hopeful branch may spring,
To cross me from the golden line I look for!
And yet, between my soul's desire and me —
The lustful Edward's title buried —
Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,
And all the unlook'd-for issue of their bodies,
To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:
A cold premeditation for my purpose!
Why, then, I do but dream on sovereignty; —
Like Hesperus, mayhap I shall be there,
And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,
Wishing his foot were equal with his eye,
And chides the sea that sunders him from thence,
Saying, he'll make it dry to have his way:
So do I wish the crown, being so far off;
And so I chide the means that keeps me from it;
And so I say, I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities. My eye's too quick, my heart o'erworks too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;
What other pleasure can the world afford?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments,
And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.
O miserable thought! and more unlikely
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns!
Why, love foresaw me in her master's womb:
And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
She did corrupt frail nature with some bire,
To shrink mine arm up like a witter'd shrub;
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body;
To make an unseasonable
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or an unick'd bear-whelp
That carries no impression like the dam.
And am I then a man to be belov'd?
O monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought!
Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,
But to command, to check, to o'erbear such
As are of better person than myself,
I'll make my heaven to dream upon the crown,
And, whiles I live, to account this world but hell,
Until my mis-shaped trunk that bears this head
Be round impaled with a glorious crown.
And yet I know not how to get the crown.
For many lives stand between me and home:
And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,
That rends the thorns and is rent with the thorns,
Seeking a way and straying from the way;
Not so being how I find the way, or
But toiling desperately to find it out,
Torture myself to catch the English crown:
And from that torment I will free myself,
Or how my way out with a bloody axe.
Why, I can smile, and murder whiles I smile,
And cry "Content" to that which grieves my heart,
And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,
And frame my face to all occasions.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
I'll play more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the operator as well as Nestor.
Deceivemore silly than Ulysses could,
And, like a Simon, take another Troy.
I can add colours to the chameleon,
Change shapes with Proteus for advantages,
And set the murderous Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
Tut, were it farther off, I'll pluck it down. [Exit.

SCENE III.—France. The King's palace.

Flourish. Enter Lews the French King, his sister BonA, his Admiral, called Bourbon; Prince Edward, Queen Margaret, and the Earl of Oxford. Lewis sits, and rise up again.

K. Lew. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret,
Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state
And birth, that thou shouldst stand while Lewis doth sit.

Q. Mar. No, mighty King of France: now Mar-
Must strike her sail and learn awhile to serve
Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
Great Albion's queen in former golden days:
But now mischance hath tred my title down,
And with dishonor laid me on the ground;
Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?
Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in
K. Lew. What'er it be, be thou still like thyself,
And sit thee by our side: [Seats her by him] yield not thy neck
To fortune's yoke, but let thy damnsel mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.
Be plain, Queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eased, if France can yield relief. [thoughts
Q. Mar. Those gracious words revolve my drooping
And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.
Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,
That I, as Henry, am possessed of my own,
Is of a kind become a banish'd man,
And forced to live in Scotland a forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward Duke of York
Usurps the regal title and the seat,
Of England's true-annotied lawful king.
This is the cause that I protest,
With this my son, Prince Edward, Henry's heir,
Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid,
And if thou fail us, all our hope is done:
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled;
Our treasure seized, our soldiers put to flight,
And as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight. [storm
K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience, calm the

Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our
K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I succour thee.
Q. Mar. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow.
And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow!

Enter Warwick.

K. Lew. What's he approacheth boldly to our presence?
War. Our Earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest
K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France? [He descends. She arises.
Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
For this is he that moves both wind and tide.
War. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,
My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
I come, in kindness and unfeigned love,
First, to do greetings to thy royal person; And then to crave a league of unity; And lastly, to confirm that unity With nuptial knot, if thou wouldest grant That virtuous Lady Bona, thy fair sister, To England's king in lawful marriage.

Q. Mar. [Aside] If that go forward, Henry's hope [concerning the marriage].

War. [To Bona] And, gracious madam, in our I am commanded, with your leave and favour, Humbly to kiss your hand and with my tongue To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart; Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears, Hath placed thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Q. War. King Lewis, in Bona, hear me Before you answer Warwick. His demand [speak]. Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love, But from deceit bred by necessity; For how can tyrants safely govern home, Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? To prove him tyrant this reason may suffice, That Henry liveth still; but were he dead, Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henry's son. Look, therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour; [rages For though usurpers sway the rule awhile, Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs. War. Vouchsafe, fair Margaret: And why not queen? Prince. War. Because thy father Henry did usurp; And thou no more art prince than she is queen. Of course, Warwick, disunites great John of Gaunt, Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain; And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth, Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest; And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth, Who by his prowess conquered all France: From these our Henry lineally descends. [course, War. Oxford, how haps it in, this smooth distance You told not how Henry the Sixth hath lost All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten? Methinks these peers of France should smile at that. But for the rest, you tell a pedigree Of three score and two years; a silly time To make prescription for a kingdom's worth, [flege, Of course, Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy Whom thou dost slander and deride? And not bewray thy treason with a blush? War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right, Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree? For shame! leave Henry, and call Edward king. Of course, Call him my king by whose injurious doom My elder brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere, Was done to death? and more than so, my father, Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years, When nature brought him to the door of death? No, Warwick, no; while life upholds this arm, This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. War. And, in the house of York, [Oxford. K. Lev. Q. Mar. Q. War. Q. Mar. Warwick, and Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside, While I use further conference with Warwick. [They stand aloof. Q. Mar. Heavens grant that Warwick's words might with him not! [conscience, K. Lev. Warwick, tell me, even upon thy word, Is Edward thy true king? for I was loath To link with him that were not lawful chosen. War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour. K. Lev. But is he gracious in the people's eye? War. The more that Henry was unfortunate. K. Lev. Art thou, all dissembling set aside, Tell me for truth the measure of his love Unto our sister Bona. War. Such it seems As may beseech a monarch like himself. Myself have often heard him say and swear That this his love was an eternal plant, Whose root was fix'd in virtuous ground, The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun, Exempt from envy, but not from disdain, Unless the Lady Bona quit his pain. K. Lev. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve. Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine: [To War.] Yea, I confess that often ere this day, When I have heard your king's most gracious word, Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire. K. Lev. Then, Warwick, thus: our sister shall be Edward's; And now forthwith shall articles be drawn Touching the jointure that your king must make, Which shall be laid before the Parliament. Draw near, Queen Margaret, and be a witness That Bona shall be wife to the English king. Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king. Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device By this alliance to make void my suit; Before thy coming Lewis was Henry's friend. K. Lev. And still is friend to him and Margaret: But if your title to the crown be weak, As may appear by Edward's good success, Then 'tis but reason that I be released From giving aid which late I promised, Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand That your estate requires and mine can yield. War. Henry now lives in Scotland at his ease, Where having nothing, nothing can he lose. And as for you yourself, our quondam queen, You have a father able to maintain you; And better 't were you troubled him than France. Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick, peace, Proud setter up and puller down of kings! I will not hence, till, with my talk and tears, Both full of truth, I make King Lewis behold Thy sly conveyance and thy lord's false love; For both of you are birds of selfsame feather. [Post blows a horn within. K. Lev. Warwick, this is some post to us or thee. Enter a Post. Post. [To War.] My lord ambassador, these letters are for you, Sent from your three sisters, Marquess Montague; [To Lewis] These from our king unto your majesty: [To Margaret] And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not. [They all read their letters. Of course, I like it well that our fair queen and mistress Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his. Prince. Nay, mark how Lewis stamps, as he were I hope all's for the best. [nettled: K. Lev. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen? [joys. Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhoped joy. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent. K. Lev. Warwick, hast thou married the Lady Now, to soothe thy forgery and his, [Grey? Sends me a paper to persuade me patience? Is this the alliance that he seeks with France? Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner? Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before: This proveth Edward's war against Warwick's honesty. War. King Lewis, I here protest, in sight of And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss, [heaven, That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's, No more my king, for he dishonours me. But most himself, if he could see his shame. Did I forget that by the house of York My father came untimely to his death? Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece? Did I impale him with the regal crown? Did I put Henry from his native right? And am I guardian'd at the last with shame?
ACT IV. THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE I.

Shame on yourself! for my desert is honour:
And to repair my honour lost for him,
I here renounce him and return to Henry.
My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servitor:
I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona
And replant Henry in his former state.
Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn’d my hate to love:
And I forgive and quite forget old faults,
And joy that thou becomest King Henry’s friend.
War. So much his friend, ay, his unfrequented friend,
That, if King Lewis would close us off his grace,
With some sweet bands of chosen soldiers,
I’ll undertake to land them on our coast
And force the tyrant from his seat by war.
’Tis not his new-made bride shall succour him:
And as for Clarence, as my letters tell me,
He’s very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for wanton lust than honour,
Or than for strength and safety of our country.
Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be revenged
But by thy help to this distressed queen? [live.
Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry
Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?
Bona. My quarel and this English queen’s are one.
War. And mine, fair Lady Bona, joins with yours.
K. Lee. And mine with hers, and thine, and Marthihereat last I firmly am resolved [argent.
You shall have all my wealth.
Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.
K. Lee. Then, England’s messenger, return in
And tell false Edward, thy supposed king, [post.
That Lewis of France is sending over masques
To reveal it with him and his new bride:
Thou seest what’s past, go fear thy king withall.
Bona. Tell him, in hope he’ll prove a good wife.
I’ll wear the willow garland for his sake. [shortly,
Q. Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are laid
And I am ready to put armour on. [aside,
War. Tell him from me that he hath done me
wrong,
And therefore I’ll uncrown him ere ’t be long.
There’s thy reward: be gone. [Exit Post.
K. Lee. But Warwick, Thou and Oxford, with five thousand men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle;
And, as occasion serves, this noble queen
And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.
Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt,
What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?
War. This shall assure my constant loyalty,
That if our queen and this young prince agree,
I’ll join mine eldest daughter and my joy
To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.
Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous, [motion.
Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick;
And, with thy hand, thy faith irreprovable,
That only Warwick’s daughter shall be thine. [it:
Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves
And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.
K. Lee. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied,
And thou, Lord Bourbon, our high admiral,
Shalt waft them over with our royal fleet.
I long till Edward fall by war’s mishance,
For mocking marriage with a dame of France.
[Exit all but Warwick.
War. I came from Edward as an ambassador,
But I return his sworn and mortal foe:
Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,
But dreadful war shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a stale but me?
Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.
I was the chief that raised him to the crown,
And I’ll be chief to bring him down again:
Not that I pity Henry’s misery,
But seek revenge on Edward’s mockery. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.
Enter Gloucester, Clarence, Somerset, and Montague.
Glow. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think
Of this new marriage with the Lady Grey? [you
Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?
Clar. Alas, you know, ’tis far from hence to France;
How could he stay till Warwick made return?
Som. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the Clar. I mind to tell him all I think and know.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, attended; Lady Grey, as Queen; Pembroke, Stafford, Hastings, and others.
K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you
our choice,
That you stand pensive, as half malcontent?
Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the Earl of Warwick,
Which are so weak of courage and in judgment
That they’ll take no offence at our abuse. [cause.
K. Edw. Suppose they take offence without a

Tell me some reason why the Lady Grey [aside.
Should not become my wife and England’s queen.
And you too, Somerset and Montague,
Speak freely what you think.
Clar. Then this is mine opinion: that King Lewis
Becomes your enemy for mocking him
About the marriage of the Lady Grey.
Glow. And Warwick, doing what you gave in
Is now dishonour’d by this new marriage. [charge.
K. Edw. What if both Lewis and Warwick be
By such invention as I can devise? [appeased

England is safe, if true within itself?
Mont. But the safer when ’t is backed with France.
Hast. ’Tis better using France than trusting France:
Let us be back’d with God and with the seas
Which He hath given for fence impregnable,
And with their helps only defend ourselves;
In them and in ourselves our safety lies.
Clar. For this one speech Lord Hastings well deserves
To have the heir of the Lord Hungerford.
ACT IV. THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE II.

K. Edw. Nay, what of that? it was my will and grant;
And for this once my will shall stand for law.
Glow. And yet methinks your grace hath not done
To give the heir and daughter of Lord Scales [well,
Unto the brother of your loving bride;
She better would have fitted me or Clarence;
But in your bride you bury brotherhood: [their

K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife
That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee.
Clar. In choosing for yourself, you show'd your judgment.
Which being shallow, you shall give me leave To play the broker in mine own behalf;
And to that end I shortly mind to leave you.
K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king,
And not be tied unto his brother's will.
Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleased his majesty
To raise my state to title of a queen,
Do me but right, and you must all confess
That I was not ignoble of descent;
And meaner than myself have had like fortune.
But as this title honours me and mine,
So your dislike, to whom I would be pleasing,
Doth cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.
K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:
What danger or what sorrow can befal thee, So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
And their true sovereign, whom they must obey? Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,
Unless they seek for hatred at my hands;
Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.
Glow. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more. [Aside.

Enter a Post.

K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters or what From France? [news
Post. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few words, But such as I, without your special pardon, Dare not relate.
K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in brief, Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them.
What answer makes King Lewis unto our letters? Post. At my depart, these were his very words:
'Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over masquers To revel with him and his new bride.' [Henry.
K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave? belike he thinks me But what said Lady Bona to my marriage? Post. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain:
'Tell him, in hope he 'll prove a widower shortly, I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.' K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less;
She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen? For I have heard that she was there in place.
Post. 'Tell him,' quoth she, 'my mourning weeds And I am ready to put armor on.' [are done, K. Edw. Belike she minds to play the Amazon.' But what said Warwick to these injures? Post. He, more incensed against your majesty Than all the rest, discharged me with these words: 'Tell him from me that he hath done me wrong, And therefore I'll uncrown him ere 't be long.' K. Edw. Ha! durst the traitor breathe out so Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd: They shall have wars and pay for their presumption. But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret? Post. Ay, gracious sovereign; they are so link'd [daughter, in friendship. That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's Clar. Belike the elder; Clarence will have the younger.

Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,
For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter;
That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage I may not prove inferior to yourself.
You that love me and Warwick, follow me. [Exit Clarence, and Somerset follows.
Glow. [Aside.] Not I:
My thoughts aim at a further matter: I Stay not for the love of Edward, but the crown.
K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick! Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen; And haste is needful in this desperate case.
Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf.
Go levy men, and make prepare for war;
They are already, or quickly will be landed:
Myself in person will straight follow you.
[Exit Pembroke and Stafford.

But, ere I go, Hastings and Montague,
Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the rest,
Are near to Warwick by blood and by alliance:
Tell me if you love Warwick more than me? If it be so, then both depart to him;
I rather wish you foes than hollow friends: But if you mind to hold your true obedience,
Give me assurance with some solemn vow,
That I may never have you in suspect.
Mont. So God help Montague as he proves true!
Glow. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand K. Edw. Why, so! then am I sure of victory.
Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour,
Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—A plain in Warwickshire.

Enter Warwick and Oxford, with French soldiers.
War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well;
The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter Clarence and Somerset.
But see where Somerset and Clarence comes! Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends? Clar. Fear not that, my lord.
War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwick;
And welcome, Somerset: I hold it cowardice To rest distrustful where a noble heart Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love;
Else might I think that Clarence, Edward's brother, Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings:
But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daughter shall be thine.
And now what rests but, in night's overture, Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd,
His soldiers lurking in the towns about,
And but attended by a simple guard,
We may surprise and take him at our pleasure?
Our scouts have found the adventure very easy:
That as Ulysses and stout Diomede With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents, And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds, So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle, At unawares may beat down Edward's guard And seize himself; I say not, slaughter him, For I intend but only to surprise him.
You that will follow me to this attempt,
Declare the name of Henry with your leader. [They all cry, "Henry!"
Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort:
For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George! [Exeunt.

While he himself keeps in the cold field?
Second Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because

Enter Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset,

War. This is his tent; and see where stand his guard.

Courage, my masters! honour now or never!
But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

First Watch. Who goeth there?
Second Watch. Stay, or thou diest! [Warwick and the rest cry all, 'Warwick! Warwick!' and set upon the Guard, who fly, crying, 'Arm! arm! Warwick and the rest following them.

K. Edw. The duke! Why, Warwick, when we
Thou call'dst me king.
War. Ay, but the case is alter'd;
When you disgraced me in my embassade,
Then I degraded you from being king,
And come now to create you Duke of York.
Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,
That know not how to use ambassadors,
Nor how to be contented with one wife,
Nor how to use your brothers brotherly,
Nor how to study for the people's welfare,
Nor how to shroud yourself from enemies? [too
K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here
Nay, then I see that Edward needs must down.
Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,
Of thee thyself and all thy complices,
Edward will always bear himself as king:
Thou dost usurp a nation's welfare in my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.
War. Then, for his mind, be Edward England's king: [Takes off his crown.
But Henry now shall wear the English crown,
And be true king indeed, thou but the shadow.
My Lord of Somerset, at my request,
Seek that forthwith Duke Edward be convey'd
Unto my brother, Archbishop of York.
When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,

Nay, be thou sure I'll well requite thy kindness, For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure; Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds Conceive when after many moody thoughts At last by notes of household harmony They quite forget their loss of liberty. But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free, And chiefly therefore I thank God and thee; He was the author, thou the instrument. Therefore, that I may requite thy love, By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me, And that the people of this blessed land May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars, Warwick, although my head still wear the crown, I here resign my government to thee, For so doth my heart miscarry in these wars. Make much of him, my lords, for this is he Must help you more than you are hurt by me. Enter a Post. War. What news, my friend? Post. That Edward is escap'd from your brother, And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy. War. Unsaucy news! but how made he escape? Post. He was convey'd by Richard Duke of Glou- And the Lord Hastings, who attended him [cister in secret amissal on the forest side; And from the bishop's huntsmen rescued him; For hunting was his daily exercise. War. My brother was too careless of his charge. But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide A salve for any sore that may betide. [Exeunt all but Somerset, Richmond, and Oxford. Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's; For doubtless Burgundy will yield him help, And we shall have more wars before 't be long. As Henry's late pressaging prophecy [mon, Did glad my heart with hope of this young Rich-mond, my heart misgave me in these conflicts What may befall him, to his harm and ours: Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worst, Forthwith we 'll send him hence to Brittany, Till storms be past of civil enmity. OrS. Ay, for if Edward repose the crown, 'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall down. Som. It shall be so; he shall to Brittany. Come, therefore, let's about it speedily. [Exeunt. SCENE VII. — Before York. flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloucester, Hastings, and Soldiers. K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest, Yet thus far fortune maketh us amend, And says that once more I shall interchange My waneed state for Henry's regal crown. And the young man's fall, and now we pass'd the seas And brought desired help from Burgundy: What then remains, we being thus arrived From Ravenspurgh haven before the gates of York, But that we enter, as into our dukedom? [this; Glou. The gates made fast! Brother, I like not For many men that seem at the threshold Are well foretold that danger lurks within. 451
K. Edw. Tush, man, abominations must not now affright us: By fair means we must enter in,
For let us tell our friends repair to us. [them.]
Host. My liege, I’ll knock once more to summon Enter, on the walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brethren.
May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming, and shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
And now we owe allegiance unto Henry. [king.
K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your Yet Edward at the least is Duke of York.
May. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.
But if you acquaint your people with me,
As being well content with that alone. [dekedom;
Glow. [Aside But when the fox hath once got in his nose,
He’ll soon find means to make the body follow.
Host. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?
Open the gates: we are King Henry’s friends.
May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open’d. [They descend. Glow. A wise stout captain, and soon persuaded!
Host. The good old man would fain that all were
So ‘t were not ‘long of him: but being enter’d,
I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade
Both him and all his brothers unto reason.

Enter the Mayor and two Aldermen, below.
K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not
But in the night or in the time of war. [be shut
What I fear not, man, but yield me up the keys;
[Takes his keys.
For Edward will defend the town and thee,
And all those friends that deign to follow me.
March. Enter Montgomery, with drum and soldiers.
Glow. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery,
Our trusty friend, unless I be deceived. [in arms?
K. Edw. Welcome, Sir John! But why come you
Mont. To help King Edward in his time of storm,
As every loyal subject ought to do. [forget
K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery; but now
Our title to the crown and only claim
Our dukedom till God please to send the rest.
Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again:
I came to serve a king and not a duke.
Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.
[The drum begins to march.
K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, awhile, and we’ll delate
By what safe means the crown may be recover’d.
Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,
If you ‘ll not here proclaim yourself our king;
I’ll leave you to your fortune and be gone.
To keep them back that come to succour you;
Why shall we fight, if you pretend no title?
Glow. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points? [our claim:
K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we’ll make
Till then, ‘tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.
Host. Away with scurvy pulpit! now arms must rule.
Glow. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.
Brothers, we will proclaim you out of hand;
The brut thereof will bring you many friends.
K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for ‘tis my right,
And Henry but usurps the diadem. [self;
Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like him:
And now will I be Edward’s champion. [claim’d:
Host. Sovereign trumpet; Edward shall here pro-
Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.
[Flourish.

SCENE VIII. — London. The palace.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Warwick, Monttague, Clarence, Exeter, and Oxford.
War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belguia,
With being a danger, and speed before his
Hath pass’d in safety through the narrow seas,
And with his troops doth march amain to London;
And many giddy people flock to him.
K. Hen. Let’s levy men, and beat him back again.
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out;
Which, being suffer’d, rivers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends,
Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war;
Those will I muster up: and thou, son Clarence,
Shalt stir up in Suffolk, Norfolk and in Kent,
The knights and gentlemen to come with thee:
Thou, brother Montague, to Northampton and in Leicestershire, shalt find Men well inclined to hear what thou command’st:
And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well beloved,
In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.
My sovereign, with the loving citizens,
Like to his island cit in with the ocean,
Or modest Dian circled with her nymphs,
Shall rest in London till we come to him.
Fair lords, take leave and stand not to reply.
Farewell, my sovereign.
K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy’s true host.
Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness’ hand.
K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!
Mont. Comfort, my lord; and so I take my leave.
Oxf. And thus I seal my truth, and bid adieu.
K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,
And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, sweet lords; let’s meet at Coven-trary. [Exeunt all but King Henry and Exeter.
K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest awhile.
Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?
Methinks the power that Edward hath in field
Should not be able to encounter mine.
Exe. The doubt is that he will seduce the rest.
K. Hen. That’s not my fear; my meed hath got me fame:
I have not stopp’d mine ears to their demands,
Nor posted off their suits with timely delays;
My pity was been balm to heal their torments,
My mildness hath allay’d their swelling griefs,
My mercy dried their water-flowing tears;
I have not been desirous of their wealth,
Nor much oppress’d them with great subsidies.
Ab, for revenge, though they much err’d:
Then why should they love Edward more than me?
No, Exeter, these graceles shame grace.
ACT V.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter Warwick, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others upon the walls.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?

First Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?

Where is the post that came from Montague?

Second Mess. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troop.

Enter Sir John Somerville.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces, and do expect him here some two hours hence.

[Drum heard.

War. Then Clarence is at hand; I hear his drum.

Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies:

The drum your honor hears mar-ches[ed] from Warwick.

War. Who should that be? belike, unlook’d-for Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

March: flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloucester, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.

Glou. See how the surly Warwick mans the wall! War. O unbid spite! is sportful Edward come?

Where slept our scouts, or how are they seduced,

That we could hear no news of his repair? [gates,

K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city

Speak gentle words and humbly bend thy knee,

Call Edward king and at his hands beg mercy?

And he shall pardon thee those outrages.

War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,

Confess who set thee up and pluck’d thee down,

Call Warwick patron and be penitent?

And thou shalt still remain the Duke of York.

Glou. I thought, at least, he would have said the

Or did he make the jest against his will? [king

War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

Glou. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give:

I’ll do thee service for so good a gift.

War. ’Twas I that gave the kingdom to thy brother. [wick’s gift.

K. Edw. Why then ‘tis mine, if but by War-

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:

And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again;

And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

K. Edw. But Warwick’s king is Edward’s pris-

And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this: [oner:

What is the body when the head is off?

Glou. Alas, that Warwick had no more forecast,

But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten,

And swell so much the higher by their ebb.

Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course;

Where peremptory Warwick now remains:

The sun shines hot; and, if we use delay,

Cold biting winter mars our hope-for hay.

Glou. Away betimes. before his forces join,

And take the great-grown traitors unawares:

Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry. [Exeunt.
THIRD

Perhaps thou wilt object my holy oath:
To keep that oath were more inpiety
Than Jephthah's, when he sacrificed his daughter.
I am so sorry for my trespass made
That, to deserve well at my brother's hands,
I hero proclaim myself a mortal foe.
With resolution, wheresoe'er I meet thee—
As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad—
To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.
And so, proudest hearted Warwick, I defy thee,
And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.
Paragon me, Edward, I will make amends:
And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,
For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more beloved,
Than if thou never hadst deserved our hate.
Glo. Welcome, good Clarence; this is brother-like.
War. O passing traitor, perfired and unjust!
K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town and fight?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?
War. Alas, I am not cooped here for defence
I will away towards Barnet and Warwick,
And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou darest.
K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way.

Lords, to the field; Saint George and victory!

[Exeunt King Edward and his company.
March. Warwick and his company follow.

SCENE II.—A field of battle near Barnet.

Alarum and excursions. Enter King Edward, bringing forth Warwick wounded.

K. Edw. So, lie thou there; die thou, and die our
For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all. [fear;
Now, Montague, sit fast; I seek for thee,
That Warwick's bones may keep thine company.

[Exit.
War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend or foe,
And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick?
Why ask I that? my mangled body shows,
My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows,
That I must yield my body to the earth
And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arm doth give shelter to the princely eagle,
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.
These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black veil,
Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,
To search the secret treasons of the world:
The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,
Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres;
For who lived king, but I could dig his grave?
And who diest smile when Warwick bent his brow?
Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood!
My parks, my walks, my mansions, yea, the fields I had,
Even now forsake me, and of all my lands
Is nothing left but my body's length.
What, why is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust?
And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter Oxford and Somerset.

Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! were thou as we
We might recover all our loss again:
Are, the queen from France hath brought a puissant power:
Even now we heard the news; ah, couldst thou fly!
War. Why, then I would not fly. Ah, Montague,
If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile:
Thou lovest me not; for, brother, if thou didst,
Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood
That gies my lips and will not let me speak.
Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead. [his last:
Som. Ah, Warwick! Montague hath breathed
And to the latest gasp cried out for Warwick
And said 'Comment me to my valiant brother,'
And more said he could not: he spoke,
Which sounded like a clamon in a vault,
That might not be distinguish'd; but at last
I well might hear, deliver'd with a groan,
'0, farewell, Warwick!' [yourselves;
War. Sweet rest his soul! Fly, lords, and save
For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in [Die.

Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power!
[Here they bear away his body.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another part of the field.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph; with Gloucester, Clarence, and the rest.

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course.
And we are grasped with wreaths of victory.
But, in the midst of this bright-shining day,
I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his useful western bed:
I mean, my lords, those powers that the queen
Lith raised: Gallia have arrived at our coast;
And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud
And blow it to the source from whence it came:
The very beams will dry those vapours up,
For every cloud engenders not a storm.

Glo. The queen is valued thirty thousand strong,
And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:
If she have time to breathe, she well assured
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.
K. Edw. We are advertised by our loving friends
That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury:
We, having now the best at Barnet field,
Will thither straight, for willingness rides way:
And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
In every county as we go along.

Strike up the drum; cry 'Courage!' and away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.

March. Enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.

Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail
Their loss,
But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.
What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding-anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood?
Yet lives our pilot still. 'Is't meet that he Should leave the helm and like a fearful lair
With tearful eyes add water to the sea?

Say Warwick was our anchor; what of that?
And Montague our topmast; what of him?
Our slaughter'd friends the tackles; what of these?
Why, is not Oxford here another anchor?
And Somerset another goodly mast?
The friends of France our shrouds and tackles?
And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I?
For once a while'd the skilful: wherefore?
We will not from the helm to sit and weep,
But keep our course, though the rough wind say no,
From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck.

454
As good to chide the waves as speak them fair.
And what is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit?
And Richard but a ragged fatal rock?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.
Say ye, sir, is it but a while?
Tread on the sand: why, there you quickly sink:
Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off,
Or else you famish; that's a threefold death.
This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
If case some one of you would fly from us,
That there's no hope for mercy with the brothers
More than with ruthless waves, with sands and rocks.
Why, courage then! what cannot be avoided
'Twere childish weakness to lament or fear.
Prince. Menthinks a woman of this valiant spirit
Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,
Infuse his breast with magnanimity
And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
I speak not this as doubting any here;
For did I but suspect a fearful man,
He should have leave to go away betimes,
Lest in our need he might infect another
And make him of like spirit to himself.
If any be here that God's good name
Let him depart before we need his help.
Oz. Women and children of so high a courage,
And warriors faint! why, 't were perpetual shame.
O brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee: long mayst thou live
To bear his image and renew his glories!
Som. And he that will not fight for such a hope,
Go home to bed, and like the owl by day,
If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.
Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset; sweet Oxford, thanks. [Exit.
Prince. And take his thanks that yet hath nothing
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand,
Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.
Oz. I thought no less: it is his policy
To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.
Som. But he's deceived; we are in readiness.
Q. Mar. This cheers my heart, to see your forwardness.
[Advancing.
Oz. Here pitch our battle; hence we will not Flourish and march. Enter King Edward, Gloucester, Clarence, and Soldiers.
K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heavens' assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
I need not add more fuel to your fire,
For well I wit ye blaze to burn them out;
Give signal to the light, and to it, lords!
Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say
My tears gainsay; for every word I speak,
Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes.
Therefore, no more but this: Henry, your sovereign,
Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,
His realm a slaughter-house, his subjects slain,
His statutes canceld and his treasure spent;
And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil.
You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,
Be valiant and give signal to the fight.
SCENE V.—Another part of the field.
Flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloucester, Clarence, and Soldiers; with Queen Margaret, Oxford, and Somerset, prisoners.
K. Edw. Now here a period of tumultuous broils,
Away with Oxford to James Castle straight:
For Somerset, off with his guilty head.
Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak.
Oxf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words.
Som. Nor I, but stoop with patience to my fortune.
[Exeunt Oxford and Somerset, guarded.
Q. Mar. So part, we sadly in this troublous world.
To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.
K. Edw. Is proclamation made, that who finds
Shall have a high reward, and he his life?
Glou. It is: and so, where youthful Edward comes!
Enter Soldiers, with Prince Edward.
K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him
What! can so young a threat be born to prick? [Speak.
Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make
For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?
Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York!
Suppose that I am now my father's mouth;
Resign thy chair, and where I stand kneel thou,
Whilst I propose the selfsame words to thee,
Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.
Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolved!
Glou. That, and have thou been the pettifog, And ne'er have stoll'n the breech from Lancaster.
Prince. Let 3'sop fable in a winter's night;
His currish riddles sort not with this place.
Glou. By heaven, brat, I'll plague ye for that word.
[men.
Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to Glou. For God's sake, take away this captive scold.
Prince. Nay, take away this scolding cockback rather.
[Hot.
K. Edw. Peace, willful boy, or I will charm your Clar. Untut'd lad, thou art too malapert.
Prince. I know my duty: you are all unprofitable:
Lascivious Edward, and thou perjured George,
And thou mis-shapen Dick, I tell ye all
I am your better, traitors as ye are:
And thou usurp't my father's right and mine.
K. Edw. Take that, thou likeness of this raider here.
[Stabs him.
Glou. Swarz!/st thou? take that, to end thy agony.
[Stabs him.
Cla. And there's for twitting me with perjury.
[Stabs him.
Q. Mar. O, kill me too!
Glou. Marry, and shall.
[Offers to kill her.
K. Edw. Ned, Richard, hold; for we have done too much.
[words?
Glou. Why should she live, to fill the world with
K. Edw. What, doth she swoon? use means for her recovery.
Glou. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother;
I'll hence to London on a serious matter;
Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.
Clar. What? what?
Glou. The Tower, the Tower.
[Exit.
Q. Mar. O Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!
Canst thou not speak? O traitors! murderers!
They that stab'd Cæsar shed no blood at all,
Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,
If this foul deed were by to equal it:
He was a man; this, in respect, a child:
And men ne'er spend their fury on a child.
What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?
No, no, my heart will burst, and if I speak,
And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.
Butchers and villains! bloody cannibals!
How sweet a plant have you untimely cropped?
You have no children, butchers! if you had,
The thought of them would have stind'd you remorse:
But if you ever chance to have a child,
Look in his youth! to have him so cut off
As, deathsmen, you have rid this sweet young prince!
K. Edw. Away with her; go, bear her hence perforce. [Here;]
Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, dispatch me here shall be thy sword. I'll pardon thee my death: What, wilt thou not? then, Clarence, do it thou. [Clarin. by heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.]
Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it. [do it?]
Clarin. Didst thou not hear me swear I would not Q. Mar. Ay, but thou useth to forswear thyself: 'T was sin before, but now 'tis charity.
Q. Mar. So come to you and yours, as to this prince! [Exit, led out forcibly.]
K. Edw. Where's Richard gone? [To London, all in post; and, as I guess, To make a bloody supper in the Tower.]

SCENE VI. — London. The Tower.

Enter King Henry and Gloucester, with the Lieutenant, on the walls.

Glo. Good day, my lord. What, at your book so hard!]
K. Hen. Ay, my good lord:—my lord, I should say rather;
'Tis sin to flatter; 'good' was little better: 'Good Gloucester' and 'good devil' were alike, And both preposterous; therefore, not 'good lord.'
Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must con- fer. [Exit Lieutenant.
K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. What scene of death hath Roscius now to act? K. brother Edward, and thyself the sea Whose envious gull did swallow up his life. Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words! My breast can better brook thy dagger's point Than can my ears that tragic history. But wherefore dost thou come? is 't for my life? Glo. Think'st thou I am an executioner? K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art: If murdering innocents be executing, Why, then thou art an executioner.
Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.
K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd when first thou spiegled? Thou hast not lived to kill a son of mine. And thus I prophesy, that many a thousand, Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear, And many an old man's sigh and many a widow's, And many an orphan's water-standing eye— Men for their sons, wives for their husbands, And orphans for their parents' timeless death — Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born. The owl shriek'd at thy birth,—an evil sign; The nightingale cry'd to the new-moon; Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempest shook down trees; The raven rook'd her on the chimney's top, And chattering pies in distain discords sung. Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain, And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope, To wit, an indigested and deformed bump, Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree. Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born, To signify thou camest to bite the world: And, if the rest be true which I have heard, Thou camest —
Glo. I'll hear no more: die, prophet, in thy speech: [Stabs him.]

For, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd. [this.]
K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after O, God forgive my sins, and pardon thee! [Dies.]
Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Shink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted. See how my sword weeps for the poor king's death! O, may such purple tears be alway shed From those that wish the downfall of our house! If any spark of life be yet remaining, Down, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither: [Stabs him again.]

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear. Indeed, 'tis true that Henry told me of; For I have often heard my mother say I came into the world with my legs forward: Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste, And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right? The midwife wonder'd and the women cried 'O, Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth!' And so I was; which plainly signified That I should snarl and bite and play the dog, Then, since the heavens have shaped my body so, Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it. I have no brother, I am like no brother; And this word 'love,' which greybeards call divine, Be resident in men like one another And not in me: I am myself alone. Clarence and I, thou keep'st me from the light: But I will sort a pitchy day for thee; For I will buzz abroad such prophecies That Edward shall be fearful of his life, And then, to purge his fear, I 'll be thy death. King Henry and the prince his son are gone: Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest, Counting myself but bad till I be best. I 'll throw thy body in another room And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom. [Exit, with the body.

SCENE VII. — London. The palace.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, Queen Elizabeth, Clarence, Gloucester, Hastings, a Nurse with the young Prince, and Attendants.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal Re-purchased with the blood of enemies. [throne, What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn, Have we now'd down in tops of all their pride! Three Dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd For hardly and undoubted champions; Two Cliffsords, as the father and the son, And two Northumberlands; two bravest men Ne'er spurn'd their courses at the trumpet's sound; With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Montague, That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion And made the forest tremble when they roard. Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat And made our footstool of security.
V. THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI. SCENE VII.

Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy.
Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles and myself
Have in our armours watch'd the winter's night,
Went all afoot in summer's scalding heat,
That thou mightest reposest the crown in peace;
And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain.
Glon. [Aside] I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid:
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thick to heave:
And leave it shall some weight, or break my back:
Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute.

K. Edw. Clarence and Gloucester, love my lovely
queen;
And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.
Clar. The duty that I owe unto your majesty
I seal upon the lips of this sweet-babe.
Q. Eliz. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks.

Glon. And, that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st,
Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit.
[Aside] To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master,
And cried 'All hail!' when as he meant all harm.
K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country's peace and brothers' loves.
Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret?
Reignier, her father, to the king of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ransom.
K. Edw. Away with her, and waft her hence to France.
And now what rests but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as betits the pleasure of the court?
Sound drums and trumpets! farewell sour annoy!
For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exeunt.

Richard.—Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone:
Suppose this arm is for the Duke of York,
And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.
Clifford.—Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:
This is the hand that stab'd thy father York;
And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;
And here's the heart that triumphs in their death
And cheers these hands that slew thy sire and brother
To execute the like upon thyself;
And so, have at thee!—ACT II., SCENE IV.

SCENE—England.

Enter Richard, Duke of Gloucester, solus.

Glov. Now is the winter of our discontent,
Made glorious summer by this sun of York:
And all the clouds that lour'd upon our house
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visaged war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
But I, that am not shaped for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Chaste of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unashionable
That dogs bark at me as I halt by them;
Why, I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity:
And therefore, since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair well-spoken days,
I am determined to prove a villain
And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence and the king
In deadly hate the one against the other:
And if King Edward be as true and just
As I am subtle, false and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up,
About a prophecy which says that G
Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be. [comes.
Dive, thoughts, down to my soul: here Clarence

Enter Clarence, guarded, and Brakenbury.

Brother, good day: what means this armed guard
That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,

Tendering your person's safety, hath appointed
This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glov. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is George.

Glov. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of yours;
He should, for that, commit your godfathers:
O, belike his majesty hath some intent
That you shall be new-christened in the Tower.

But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?

Clar. Ye, Richard, when I know; for I protest
As yet I do not: but, as I can learn,
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams:
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
KING RICHARD III.

ACT I.

And says a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherit'd should be;
And, for my name of George begins with G,
It follows in his thought that I am he.

These, as I learn, and such like toys as these
Have moved his highness to commit me now.

Glou. Why, this it is, when men are ruled by women:
'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower;
My Lady Grey his wife, Clarence, 'tis she
That tempers him to this extremity.

Was it not she and the devil's worship,
Anthony Woodville, her brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower,
From whence this present day he is deliver'd?
We are not safe, Clarence; we are not safe.

Clar. By heaven, I think there's no man is secure
But the queen's kindred and night-walking heralds
That trudge betwixt the king and Mistress Shore.

Heard ye not what an humble suppliant
Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glou. Humblily complaining to her deity
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty,
I'll tell you what; I think it is their way,
It would keep them in favour with the king,
To be her men and wear her livery:
The jealous o'er worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dub'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me;
His majesty hath straitly given in charge
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever, with his brother.

Glou. Even so; an't please your worship, Brak-
You may partake of any thing we say:
[obey, We speak no treason; man: we say the king
Is when virtuous, and his noble queen
Well struck in years, fair, and not jealous;
We say that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue;
And that the queen's kindred are made gentlefolks:
How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought
to do.

Glou. Naught to do with Mistress Shore! I tell
He that doth naught with her, excepting one,
Were best he do it secretly, alone.

Brak. What one, my lord?

Glou. Her husband, knave: wouldst thou betray
Forbear your conference with the noble duke. [obey.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will Glou. We are the queen's abjects, and must obey.
Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;
And whatsoever you will employ me in,
Were it to call King Edward's widow sister,
I will perform it to enfranchise you.

Meantime, this deep disgrace in brotherhood
Touche me deeper than you can imagine.

Clar. I know it pleaseth neither of us well,
I will devise you, or else lie for you:
Meantime, have patience.

Clar. [Exit Clarence, Brakenbury, and Guard.

Glou. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er re-
Simple, plain Clarence! I do love thee so; [turn,
That may fright the thought of heaven, if heaven
If heaven will take the present at our hands.

But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter Lord Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord!
Glou. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!
Well are you welcome to the open air.
How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must:
But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks
That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Glou. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence
For they that were your enemies are his,
[too; And have prevailed as you.

Hast. More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glou. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so bad abroad as this at home;
The king is sickly, weak and melancholy,
And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glou. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed.
O, he hath kept an evil diet long,
And overmuch consumed his royal person:
'T is very grievous to be thought upon.
What, is he in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Glou. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit Hastings.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die
Till George be pack'd with post-horse up to heaven.
I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With lies were fill'd with weighty arguments;
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:
Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bestow in!
For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter.
What though I kill'd her husband and her father?
The readiest way to make the wench amends
Is to become her husband and her father:
The which will I: not all so much for love
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her which I must reach unto.
But yet I run before my horse to market:
Clarence still breathe; Edward still lives and reigns:
When they are gone, then must I count my gains.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Another street.

Enter the corps of King Henry the Sixth, Gentlemen with halberds to guard it; Lady Anne being the mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,
If honour may be shroned in a hearse,
Whilst I awhile obsequiously lament
The unfailing fall of virtuous Lancaster.
Poor keel-like figure of a holy king!
The pale ashes of the house of York!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!
Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slayeth'd son, Stabb'd by the selisehand that made these wounds!

Lo, in these windows that let forth thy life,
I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes.
Cursed be the hand that made these fatal holes!
Cursed be the heart that had the heart to do it!
Cursed the blood that let this blood from hence!
More direful lap betide that hateful wretch,
That makes me wringe with the death of thee,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives!
If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious and untimely brought to light,
Whose ugly and unnatural aspect
Most sharply hatest the beholder in the view;
And that be heir to his unhappiness!
If ever he have wife, let her be made
As miserable by the death of him
As I am made by my poor lord and thee!
Come, now towards Chersley with your holy load,
Taken from Paul's to be interred there;
And still, as you are weary of the weight,
Rest you, whiles I lament King Henry's corse.
Enter Gloucester.

Glow. Stay, you that bear the corse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend, To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Glow. Villains, set down the corse; or, by Saint Paul, I'll make a corse of him that disobeys. [Paul, Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glow. Unmanier'd dog! stand thou, when I command:

Advance thy halberd higher than thy breast, Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot, And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

Anne. What all that? do you trouble? are you all afraid? Also, I blame you not; for you are mortal, And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.

Avaunt, thou dreadful minister of hell! Thou hadst but power over his mortal body, His soul thou canst not have; therefore, be gone.

Glow. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curt.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell, Filled it with cursing cries and deep execrations. If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds, Behold thy pattern of thy shameful life.

O, gentlemen, see, see! dead Henry's wounds Open their congeal'd mouths and bleed affreish! Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity; For 't is thy presence that exalts this blood From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells; Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural, Provokes this deluge most unnatural.

O God, which this blood madest, revenge his death! Or earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death! Either heaven with lightning strike the murderer, Or earth, gap open wide and eat him quick; [dead, As thou dost swallow up this living's blood, Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd!

Glow. Lady, you know no rules of charity, Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses. Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man:

No beast so fierce but knows some touch of pity.

Glow. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.

Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth!

Glow. More wonderful, when angels are so angry. Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman, Of these supposed evils, to give me leave, By circumstance, but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, defused infection of a man, For these known evils, but to give me leave,

By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Glow. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me Some patient leisure to excuse myself. [have

Anne. Fooler than heart can think thee, thou canst No excuse current, but to hang thyself. [make Glow. By such despair, I should accuse myself.

Anne. And, by despairing, shouldest thou stand excused;

For doing worthy vengeance on thyself, Which I should swinishly slaughter upon others.

Glow. Say that I slew them not?

Anne. Why, then they are not dead:

But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.

Glow. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.

Glow. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest: Queen Mary, Thy murderous falchion smoking in his blood, The which thou once didst bend against her breast, But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glow. By thy slanders tongue, Which laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,

Which never dreamt on aught but butcheries:

Didst thou not kill this king?

Glow. I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedgehog? then, God grant me too.

Thou mayst be damned for that wicked deed!

O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous!

Glow. The hotter for the King of heaven, that hath him. [come.

Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never Glow. Let him thank me, that I help to send him For he was fitter for that place than earth. [thither;

Anne. And thou shalt for any place but hell.

Glow. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me

Anne. Some dungeon. [name it.

Glow. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest!

Glow. So will it, madame, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glow. I know so. But, gentle Lady Anne, To leave this keen encounter of our wits, And fall somewhat into a slower method,

Is not the cause of the timeless deaths

Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward,

As blameful as the executioner? [effect.

Anne. Thou art the cause of most accused

Glow. Ye beauty beggaries.

O'er which that was the cause of that effect;

Thy beauty, which did haunt me in my sleep To undertake the death of all the world,

So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If that thought I. I tell thee, homely,

These nails should rend that beauty from my checks, [wreck;

Glow. These eyes could never endure sweet beauty's You should not blemish it, if I stood by:

Anne. As all the world is cheered by the sun, So I by that; it is my day, my life.

Glow. Black night o'cusher day, and death

Anne. I would I were, to be revenged on thee.

Glow. It is a quarrel most unnatural, To be revenged on him that loveth you.

Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable, To be revenged on him that slew my husband.

Glow. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband, Did it to help thee to a better husband.

Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.

Glow. He lives that loves thee better than he could.

Anne. Name him.

Anne. Plantagenet.

Anne. Why, that was he.

Anne. The selfsame name, but one of better nature.

Anne. Where is he?

Anne. Here. [She spitteth at him.]

Anne. Why dost thou spit at me?

Anne. Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!

Anne. Never came poison from so sweet a place.

Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.

Out of my sight! thou dost infect my eyes.

Anne. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.

Anne. Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead.

Anne. I would they were, that I might die at once; For now they kill me with a living death. Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears, Shamed their aspect with store of childish drops: These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear, No, when my father York and Edward wept, To hear the pitiful moan that Rutland made When black-faced Clifford shook his sword at him; Nor when thy wakirish father, like a child, Told the sad story of my father's death, And twenty times made pause to sob and weep, That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks.

Like trees bedazz'd with rain; in that sad time My many eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,
Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weep,
I would confound to friends my enemy;
My tongue could never learn sweet smoothing
But, now thy beauty is proposed my fee, [words];
My proud heart sues and prompts my tongue to speak.
[She looks scornfully at him.]
Teach not thy lips such scorn, for they were made
For kissing, lady, not for the enemy;
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo, here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
Which if thou please to hide in this true bosom,
And let the soul forth that adores thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.

[He lays his breast open: she offers at it with his sword.

Nay, do not pause: for I did kill King Henry,
But 'tis was thy beauty that provoked me. [Edward,
Nay, now dispatch; 'twas I that stabbed young
But 'tis was thy heavenly face that set me on.
[Here she lets fall the sword.

Take up the sword again, or take up me.
Anne. Arise, dispenser: though I wish thy death,
I will not be the executioner.
Glow. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.
Anne. I have already.
Glow. Aye, true. Tush, that was in thy rage:
Speak it again, and, even with the word,
That hand, which, for thy love, did kill thy love,
Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love;
To both their deaths thou shalt be accessory.
Anne. I would I knew thy heart.
Glow. 'Tis figured in my tongue.
Anne. I fear me both are false.
Glow. Then never man was true.
Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.
Glow. Say, then, my peace is made.
Anne. That shall you know hereafter.
Glow. But shall I live in hope?
Anne. All men, I hope, live so.
Glow. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.
Anne. To take is not to give.
Glow. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger,
Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart;
Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if my love devoted heart may
But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.
Anne. What is it?
[designs
Glow. That it would please thee leave these sad
To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,
And presently repair to Crosby Place;
Where, after I have solemnly inter'd
At Chertsey monastery this noble king,
And wet his grave with my repentant tears,
I will with all expedient duty see you;
For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,
Grant me this boon.
Anne. With all my heart; and much it joyes me too,
To see you are become so penitent.
Tressel and Berkeley, go along with me.
Glou. Bid me farewell.
Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve;
But since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I have said farewell already.
[Exeunt Lady Juyj, Tressel, and Berkeley.
Glou. Sirs, take up the corse.
Gent. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?
Glou. No, to White-Friars; there attend my coming.
[Exeunt all but Gloucester.

Was ever woman in this humour wool'd?
Was ever man in this humour won?
I'll have her; but I will not keep her long.
What! I, that kill'd her husband and his father,
To take her in her heart's extremest hate,
With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,
The bleeding witness of her hatred by;
Having God, her conscience, and these bars against
And I nothing to bear my suit at all,
But the plain devil and dissembling looks,
And yet to win her, all the world to nothing!
Ha!
Hath she forgot already that brave prince,
Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months since,
Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury?
A sweeter and a gentler gentleman,
Framed in the prodigality of nature,
Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,
The spacious world cannot again afford:
And will she yet desake her eyes on me,
That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me, that halt and am unshapen thus?
My dukedom to a beggarly denier,
I do mistake my person all this while:
Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,
And entertain some score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body:
Since I am crept in favour with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost.
But first I'll turn you fellow in his grave;
And then return lamenting to my love.
Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
That I may see my shadow as I pass. [Exit.

SCENE III. — The palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey.

Riv. Have patience, madam: there's no doubt his majesty
Will soon recover his accustomed health.
Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:
Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
And cheer his grace with quick and merry words.
Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would 'tibe of
Riv. No other harm but loss of such a lord. [me?
Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harm.
Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly
To be your own lord; better any port, no prince.
son,
Q. Eliz. Oh, he is young, and his minority
Is put unto the trust of Richard Gloucester,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.
Riv. Is it concluded he shall be protector?
Q. Eliz. It is determined, not concluded yet:
But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter Buckingham and Derby.

Grey. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Derby.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace!
Der. God make your majesty joyful as you have been! [of Derby,
Q. Eliz. The Countess Richmond, good my Lord
To your good prayers will scarcely say amen.
Yet, Derby, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good lord, assured
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.
Der. I do beseech you, either not believe
The curious whispers of these false accusers;
Or, if she be accused in true report,
Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.
Riv. Saw you the king to-day, my Lord of Derby?
Der. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I
Are come from visiting of his majesty.
Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?
Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.
[with him?
Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer
Enter Gloucester, Hastings, and Dorset.

Glou. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it: Who are they that complain unto the king,
That I, foresoon, am stern and love them not? By heaven, not so, for I am one of his grace, but lightly
That fill his ears with such discontented rumours.
Because I cannot flatter and speak fair,
Smile in men’s faces, smooth, deceive and cog,
Duck with French nods and aplaisie,
I must be held a rancorous enemy.
Cannot a plain man live and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abused
By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks? [grace?

Ric. To whom in all this presence speaks your Glou. To thee, that hast nor honesty nor grace.
When have I injured thee? when done thee wrong? Or that be dealt? a fair and gentle Jack?
A plague upon you all! His royal person,
Whom God preserve better than you would wish!—
Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing-while,
But you must trouble him with levied complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloucester, you mistake the
The king; of his own royal disposition, [matter.
And not provoked by any suitor else;
Aiming, belike, at your inferior hatred,
Which in your outward actions shows itself
Against my kindred, brothers, and myself,
Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather
True my lord; so will, and so resolve it.

Glou. I cannot tell: the world is grown so bad,
That wrens make prey where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack became a gentleman,
There’s many a gentle person a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloucester;
You envy my advancement and my friends’:
God grant we never may have need of you! [you

Glou. Meantime, God grants that we have need of

Q. Eliz. By Him that raised me to this careful height
From that contented lap which I enjoy’d,
I never did increase his majesty
Against the Duke of Clarence, but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.
My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glou. You may deny that you were not the cause
Of my lord Hastings’ late imprisonment.

Ric. She may, my lord, for— [not so?

Glou. She may, Lord Rivers! why, who knows
She may do more, sir, than denying that:
She may help you to many fair preferments,
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honours on your high deserts.

What may she not? She may your majesty, may she—

Ric. What, marry, may she?

Glou. What, marry, may she! marry with a king,
A bachelor, a handsome stripling too:
I wis your grandam had a worse match. [borne

Q. Eliz. Of Gloucester, I have too long
Your blunt upbraiding and your bitter scoffs:
By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty
With those gross taunts I often have endured.
I had rather be a country servant-maid

Than a great queen, with this condition,
To be thus taunted, scorn’d, and baited at:

Enter Queen Margaret, behind.

Small joy have I in being England’s queen. [thee!

Q. Mar. I needn’t be told that small, God, I beseech

Glou. What! threat you me with telling of the Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said
I will avouch in presence of the king:
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.
This time I will speak: nor you suppose me forgot.

Q. Mar. Out, devil! I remember them too well:
Thou slewest my husband Henry in the Tower,
And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury. [king,

I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;
A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends:

Q. Mar. Yea, and much better blood than his or

Thou cacodemon! there thy kingdom is.

Ric. My Lord of Gloucester, in those busy days
Which here you urge to prove us enemies,
We follow’d then our lord, our lawful king:
So should we you, if you should be our king.

Glou. If I should be! I had rather be a pedlar:
Far be it from my heart, the thought of it!

Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this country’s king,
That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless.
I can no longer hold me patient. [Advancing.

Bear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill’d from me!
Which of you trembles not that looks on me?
If not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects,
Yet that, by you deposed, you quake like rebels?
O gentle villain, do not turn away! [my sight?

Glou. Foul wrinkled witch, what makest thou in

Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast said;
That will I make before I let thee go.

Glou. Wert thou not banished on pain of death?

Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banishment
Than death can yield me here by my abode.
A husband and a son thou owest to me;
And thou hast Steward of England; as I know;
The sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glou. The curse my noble father laid on thee,
When thou didst crown his warlike brows with

Asp.

And with thy scorns drew’st rivers from his eyes,
And, then, to dry them, gavest the duke a clout
Steepl’d in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland,—
His curses, then from bitterness of soul
ACT I.

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE III.

Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you! you have all moved mine. [your duty.}
Riv. Were you well served, you would be taught
Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me duty,
Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects:
O, serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty! [pert.]

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquess, you are malayour fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current.
O, that your young nobility could judge
What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable!
They that stand high have many blasts to shake
them;
And if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.
Glow. Good counsel, marry: learn it, learn it, marquess.

Dor. It toucheth you, my lord, as much as me.
Glow. Yea, and much more: but I was born so high,
Our airy buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind and scornt he sun.
Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade: alas! alas!
Witness my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up
Your aery buildeth in its tender bud.
Q. Mar. O God, that seest it, do not suffer it:
As it was won with blood, lost be it so!

Buck. Have done! for shame, if not for charity.
Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me:
Uncharitably with me you have dealt,
And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd.
My charity is outrage, life my shame;
And in that shame still live my sorrow's rage!
Buck. Have done, have done. [hand,
Q. Mar. O princeley Buckingham, I'll kiss thy
In sign of league and amity with thee:
Now fair be thy face and thy noble horse!
Thy garments are not spotted with our blood,
Nor thou within the compass of my curse.

Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass
The lips of those that breathe them in the air.
Q. Mar. I'll not believe but they ascend the sky,
And there awake God's gentle-sleeping peace.
O Buckingham! take this of my hand,
Look, when he favs, he bites; and when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death:
Have not to do with him, beware of him:
Sin, death, and hell have set their marks on him,
And all their ministers attend on him. [ingham?
Glow. With all that God hath put in his hand.
Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.
Q. Mar. What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
And soothe the devil that I warn thee from?
O, but remember this another day.
When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow,
And say poor Margaret was a prophetess!
Live each of you the subjects to his hate,
And he to yours, and all of you to God's! [Exit.

Host. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.
Riv. And so doth mine: I must say why she's ill.
Glow. I cannot blame her; by God's holy mother,
She hath had too much wrong; and I repent
My part thereof that I have done to her.
Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.
Glow. But you have all the vantage of her wrong.

I was too hot to do somebody good,
That is too cold to think it's done now.
Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid;
He is frank'd up to fatting for his pains:
God pardon them that are the cause of it!
Riv. A virtuous and a Christian-like conclusion,
To pray for them that have done scathe to us.
For had I cursed now, I had cursed myself.

---

Denounced against thee, are all full'n upon thee;
And God, not we, hath plagued thy bloody deed.
Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.
Host. O, 'twas the foulest deed to slay that babe,
And the most merciless that e'er was heard of!
Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was re-dealt.

Dor. No man but prophesied revenge for it.
Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it. [came,
Q. Mar. What were you snarling all before I
Ready to catch each other by the throat.
And doth all your hatred rest on me?
Did York's dread curse prevail so much with heaven
That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,
Their kingdom's loss, my woful banishment,
Could all but answer for that peevish brat?
Can curses pierce the clouds and enter heaven?
Without, give way, dull clouds, to my quick
If not by war, by surest die your king, [curses!
As ours by murder, to make him a king!
Edward thy son, which now is Prince of Wales,
For Edward my son, which was Prince of Wales,
Died in his youth by like untimely violence!
Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,
Or but a child, like my wretched self!
Long mayst thou live to wail thy children's loss;
And see another, as I see thee now.
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art staid in mine!
Long die thy happy days before thy death;
And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,
Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!
Rivers and Dorset, you were standers by,
And so wast thou, Lord Hastings, when my son
Was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off! [hag!
Glow. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wick'd
Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.
If heaven have any grievous plague in store
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O, let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On that, the troubler of the poor world's peace!
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul!
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou livest,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be whilst some tormenting dream
Affright thou of the devil's hags and hell's
Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rootling hog
Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature and the son of hell!
Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!
Thou rasc of honour! thou detested—
Glow. Margaret.
Q. Mar. Richard! Ha!
Q. Mar. I cry thee mercy then, for I had thought
That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.
Q. Mar. Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply.
O, let me make the period to my curse!

Glow. 'Tis done by me, and ends in 'Margaret.'
Q. Eliz. Thus have you breathed your curse against yourself. [fortune!
Q. Mar. Poor painted queen! vain flourish of my Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply. Their,
Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about?
Fool, fool! thou whet'st a knife to kill thyself.
The time will come when thou shalt wish for me
To help thee curse that poisonous bunch-back'd foal.

Host. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse,
Lest to thy harm thou move our patience.
Enter Catesby.

Catesby. Madam, his majesty doth call for you:
And for your grace; and you, my noble lords. [as?]
Q. Elm. Catesby, we come. Lords, will you go with
Ric. Madam, we will attend your grace.

[Exeunt all but Gloucester.

Glow. I do the wrong, and, first begin to brawl.
The secret mischief that I set abroach
I lay upon the grievous charge of others,
Clarence, whom I, indeed, have lied in darkness,
I do beweep to many simple gulls;
Namely, to Hastings, Derby, Buckingham;
And say it is the queen and her allies
That stir the king against the duke my brother.
Now, they believe it false and will inform me
To be revenged on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:
But then I sigh; and, with a piece of scripture,
Tell them that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villany
With old old ells stolen out of holy writ;
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But, soft! here come my executioners.
How now, my hardy, stout resolved mates?
Are you now going to dispatch this deed?
First Murd. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant.

That we may be admitted where he is.
Glow. Well thought upon; I have it here about me.

When any have done, repair to Chelmsby Place.
But, sirs, be sudden in your execution,
Withal obdurate, do not hear him plead;
For Clarence is well-spoken, and perhaps
May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.
First Murd. Tush! Fear not, my lord; you will not stand to prate;
Talkers are no good doers: be assured.
We come to use our hands and not our tongues.
Glow. Your eyes drop millstones, when fools' eyes drop tears:
I like you, lads; about your business straight;
Go, go, dispatch.
First Murd. We will, my noble lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. The Tower.

Enter Clarence and Brakenbury.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
Clar. O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghostly dreams,
That, as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 't were to buy a world of happy days,
So full of dismal terror was the time!
Brak. What was your dream? I long to hear you tell it. [Tower.
Clar. Methought that I had broken from the And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;
And, in my company, my brother Gloucester;
Who led from my cabin tempest me to walk [land,
Upon the hatches: thence we look'd Eng- And cited up a thousand fearful tides,
During the wars of York and Lancaster That had befell'd us. As we paced along
Upon the gibbet footing of the hatches, [ing, Methought that Gloucester stumbled; and, in fall-
Strength, to the height that fishes gaw'd upon;
Into the tumbling billows of the main.
Lord, Lord! methought, what pain it was to drown! What dreadful noise of waters in mine ears! What ugly sights of death within mine eyes! Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks; Ten thousand anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea:
Some lay in dead men's skulls; none in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 't were in scores of eyes, reflecting gems,
Which wou'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brak. Had you such leisure in the time of death to gaze upon the secrets of thine own heart?
Clar. Methought I had; and often did I strive
To yield the ghost: but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To seek the empty, vast and wandering air;
But smother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst with all the sea within me.

Brak. Awaked you not with this sore agony?
Clar. O, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;
O, then began the tempest to my soul,
Who pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stronger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick;
Who cried aloud, 'What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?'
And so he vanish'd: then came wandering by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood; and, like a dead soul,
'Clarence is come; false, fleeting, perjured Clarence,
That stabb'd me in the field by Twake'sbury;
Seize on him, Furies, take him to your torments!'
With that, methoughts, a legion of foul heads
Environ'd me about, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd, and for a season after
Could not believe but that I was in hell,
Such terrible impression made the dream. [yon;
Brak. No marvel, my lord, though it affrighted
I promise you, I am afraid to hear you tell it.
Clar. O, Brakenbury, I have done those things,
Which now bear evidence against my soul,
For Edward's sake; and see how he requites me!
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be avenged on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath in me alone,
O, spare my guiltless wife and my poor children!
I pray thee, gentle keeper, stay by me;
My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.
Brak. I will, my lord: God give your grace good rest! [Clarence sleeps.

Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours,
Makes the short day longer, and the noon-tide night.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfuel imagination,
They often feel a world of restless cares:
So that, betwixt their titles and low names,
There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter the two Murderers.

First Murd. No! who's there? [you hither?
Brak. In God's name what are you, and how came
First Murd. I would speak with Clarence, and I came hither on my legs.
Brak. Yea, are you so brief?
Sec. Murd. O sir, it is better to be brief than to dious. Shew him our commission; talk no more.
[Brakenbury reads it.
Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant thereby.
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.
Here are the keys, there sits the duke asleep;
I 'll to the king; and signify to him
That thus I have resign'd my charge to you.
First Murd. Do so, it is a point of wisdom: fare you well.

[Exit Brakenbury.
Sec. Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?
First Murd. No; then he will say 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.
Sec. Murd. When he wakes! why, fool, he shall never wake till the judgment-day. [sleeping.]
First Murd. But, then he will say we stabbed him.
Sec. Murd. The urging of that word 'judgment' hath bred a kind of remorse in me.
First Murd. What, art thou afraid?
Sec. Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it; but to be damned for killing him, from which no warrant can defend us.
First Murd. Then thought thou hast been resolute. Sec. Murd. So I am, to let him live. [him so.
First Murd. Back to the Duke of Gloucester, tell Sec. Murd. I pray thee, stay a while: I hope my holy humour will change: 'twas wont to hold me but while one would tell twenty.
First Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?
Sec. Murd. 'Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.
First Murd. Remember our reward, when the deed is done. [ward.
Sec. Murd. Zounds, he dies: I had forgot the re-
First Murd. Where is thy conscience now?
First Murd. So when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.
Sec. Murd. Let it go; there's few or none will entertain it.
First Murd. How if it come to thee again?
Sec. Murd. I'll not meddle with it: it is a dangerous thing: it makes a man a coward: a man cannot steal, but he accuseth him; he cannot swear, but it checks him; he cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him: 'tis a blushing shamefast spirit that mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills him full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold that I found; it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man that means to live well endeavours to trust to himself and to live without it.
First Murd. Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.
Sec. Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee but to make thee sigh.
First Murd. Tut. I am strong-framed, he cannot prevail with me, I warrant thee.
Sec. Murd. Why, then he's a tall fellow that respects his reputation. Come, shall we to this gear?
First Murd. Take him over the costard with the hilts of thy sword, and then we will chop him in the maine-by-but in the next room.
Sec. Murd. O excellent device! make a sopf of him. First Murd. Hark! he stirres: shall I strike?
Sec. Murd. No, first let his reason with him. [wine.
Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of Sec. Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord, Clar. In God's name, what art thou? [unon.
Sec. Murd. A man, as you are.
Clar. But not, as I am, royal.
Sec. Murd. Nor you, as we are loyal. [humble.
Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are Sec. Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine own. Clar. How darkly and how deadly dost thou speak! thy eyes do menace me: why look you pale? Wo sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?
Both. To, to, to—
Clar. To murder me?
Both. Ay, ay.
Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so, And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it. Wherein, my friends, have I offended you? [king.
First Murd. Offended us you have not, but the Clar. I shall be reconciled to him again. [die.

Sec. Murd. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to Clar. Are you call'd forth from out a world of men To slay the innocent? What is my offence? Where are the evidence that do accuse me? What lawful cause have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounced The bitter sentence of poor Clarence's death? Before I be convict by course of law, To threaten me with death is most unlawful. I charge you, as you hope to have redemption By Christ's blood shed for our grievous sins, That you depart and lay no hand on me: The deed you undertake is damnable.
First Murd. What we will do, we do upon command. [king.
Sec. Murd. And he that hath commanded is the Clar. Erroneous vassal! the great King of kings Hath in the tables of his law commanded That thou shalt do no murder: and wilt thou, then, Spurn at his edict and fulfil a man's? Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hands, To hurl upon their heads that break his law. Sec. Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on his state. For false forswearing and for murder too: Thou didst receive the holy sacrament, To fight in quarrel of the house of Lancaster. First Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God, Didst break that vow; and with thy treacherous blade Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son. Sec. Murd. Whom thouwert sworn to cherish And defend. [law to us.
First Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful When thou hast broke it in so dear degree? Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed? For Edward, for my brother, for his sake: Why, sirs, He sends ye not to murder me for this; For in this sin he is as deep as I. If God will be revenged for this deed, O, know you yet, he doth it publicly: Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm; He needs no sword to cut a man's throat. To cut off those that have offended him. [jester,
First Murd. Who made thee, then, a bloody mini-
When gallant-springing brave Plantagenet, That princely novice, was struck dead by thee? Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage. First Murd. My brother, by the hand of law, didst Provoke us hither now to slaughter thee. [faul.
Clar. Oh, if you love my brother, hate not me; I am his brother, and I love him well. If you be hired for meed, go back again, And I will send you to my brother Gloucester, Who shall reward you better for my life Than Edward will for tidings of my death. Sec. Murd. You are deceived, your brother Gloucester hates you.

Clar. O, no, he loves me, and he holds me dear:
Go you to him from me.
Both. Ay, so we will. [York
Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm, And charged us from his soul to love each other, He little thought of this divided friendship; Bid Gloucester think of this, and he will weep. First Murd. Ay, millstones; as he lesson'd us to weep.
Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind. First Murd. Right,
As snow in harvest. Thou deceivest thyself: 'Tis he that sent us hither now to slaughter thee. Clar. It cannot be; for when I parted with him, He hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with oaths, That he would labour my delivery.
ACT II.

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE I. — London. The palace.

Flourish. Enter King Edward sick, Queen Elizabeth, Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Buckingham, Grey, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so, now have I done a good day's You peers, continue this united league: [work: I every day expect an embassy From my Redeemer to redeem me hence; And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven, Since I have set my friends at peace on earth. Rivers and Hastings, take each other's hand; Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love. [hate; Riev. By heaven, my heart is purged from grudging And with my hand I seal my true heart's love. Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like! K. Edw. Take heed you daily not before your lest he that is the supreme King of kings [king; Confound your hidden falsehood, and award Either of you to be the other's end. Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love! Riev. And, as I love Hastings with my heart! K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this, Nor your son Dorset, Buckingham, nor you; You have been factious one against the other. Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand; And what you do, do it unfeignedly. [member Q. Eliz. Here, Hastings; I will never more re- Our former hatred, so thrive I and mine! K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him; Hastings, love lord marquess. Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest, Upon my part shall be unviolable. Hast. And so swear I, my lord. [They embrace. K. Edw. Now, princesly Buckingham, seal thou this league With thy embracements to my wife's allies, And make me happy in thy unity. Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate On you or yours [to the Queen], but with all duteous Dole, cherish you and yours, God punish me [love With hate in those where I expect most love! When I have most need to employ a friend, And most assured that he is a friend, Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile, Be he unto me! this do I beg of God, When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. [They embrace.

Sec. Mard. Look behind you, my lord.

First Mard. Take that, and that: if all this will not do,

I'll drown you in the malmsy-butt within. [Exit, with the body.

Sec. Mard. A bloody deed, and desperately dis- patch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter First Murderer.

First Mard. How now! what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not? By heavens, the duke shall know how slack thou art! Sec. Mard. I would he knew that I had saved his life, and that I could not do it. Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say; For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit. First Mard. So do not I: go, coward as thou art. Now must I hide his body in some hole, Until the duke take order for his burial! And when I have my meed, I must away; For this the will out, and here I must not stay.

K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princesly Buckingham, Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart. There wanteth now our brother Gloucester here, To make the perfect period of this peace. [duke. Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble

Enter Gloucester.

Glow. Good morrow to my sovereign king and And, princesly peers, a happy time of day! [queen; K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day. Brother, we have done deeds of charity; Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate, Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers. Glow. A blessed labour, my most sovereign liege: Amongst this princely heap, if any here, By false intelligence, or wrong surmise, Hold me a foe. You unwarily, or in my rage, Have ought committed that is hardly borne By any in this presence, I desire To reconcile me to his friendly peace: 'Tis death to me to be at enmity; I hate it, and desire all good men's love. First, madam, I entreat true peace of you, Which I will purchase with my duteous service; Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham, If ever any grudge were lodged between us; Of you, Lord Rivers, and, Lord Grey, of you; That all without desert have from'd on me: Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all. I do not know that Englishman alive With whom my soul is any jot at odds More than the infant that is born to-night: I thank my God for my humility. Q. Eliz. A holy day shall this be kept hereafter: I would to God all strifes were well compounded. My sovereign liege, I do beseech your majesty To take our brother Clarence to your grace. Glow. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this, To be so floutted in this royal presence? Who knows not that the noble duke is dead? [They all start.

You do him injury to scorn his corse. Riv. Who knows not he is dead! who knows he is? Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this! Buck. Look I so pale, Lord Dorset, as the rest? Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no one in this presence But his red colour hath forsok his cheeks.
Enter Derby.

Der. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!
K. Edw. I pray thee, peace: my soul is full of sorrow.
Der. I will not rise, unless your highness grant.
K. Edw. Then speak at once what is it thou demand'st.

Der. The forfeit, sovereign, of my servant's life;
Who slew to-day a righteous gentleman
Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolk. [Death.

K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doth my brother's
And shall the same give pardon to a slave?
My brother knew no man; his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was cruel death.
Who sued to me for him? who, in my rage,
Kneel'd at my feet, and bade me be advised?
Who spake of brotherhood? who spake of love?
Who told me how the poor soul did forswear
The meanest trust? who in the dark night for me?
Who told me, in the field by Tewksbury,
When Oxford had me down, he rescued me,
And said, 'Dear brother, live, and be a king!'?
Who told me, when we both lay in the field
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me
Even in his own garments, and gave himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb, cold night?
All this from my remembrance brutal wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind.
But when your carters or your waiting-vassals
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defaced
The precious image of our dear Redeemer.
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon;
And I, unjustly too, must grant it you;
But, for my brother not a man would speak,
Nor I, ungracious, speak unto myself
For him, poor soul. The proudest of you all
Have been beholding to him in his life;
Yet none of you would once plead for his life.
O God, I fear thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours for this!
Come, Hastings, help me to my closet. Oh, poor
Clarence! [Exeunt some with King and Queen.

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness! Mark'd you how
That the guilty kindred of the queen [not Look'd pale when they did hear of Clarence' death?
O, they did urge it still unto the king!
God will revenge it. But come, let us in,
To comfort Edward with our company.

Duck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The palace.

Enter the Duchess of York, with the two children of Clarence.

Boy. Tell me, good grandam, is our father dead?
Duchess. No, boy.

Boy. Why do you wring your hands, and beat your
And cry 'O Clarence, my unhappy son!' [lead.
Girl. Why do you look on us, and shake your
And call us wretches, orphans, castaways,
If that our noble father be alive?
Duchess. My pretty cousins, you mistake me much;
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father's death;
It were lost sorrow to wail one that 's lost.

Boy. Then, grandam, you conclude that he is dead.
The king my uncle is to blame for this:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune
With daily prayers all to that effect.

Girl. And will we not? [you well:
Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love
Incapable and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who caused your father's death.

Boy. Grandam, we can; for my good uncle Glou-
Told me, the king, provoked by the queen, [ester
Devised immeasurable to imprison him:
And when my uncle told me so, he wept, [check:
And hugg'd me in his arm, and kindly kiss'd my
Bade me rely on him as on my father,
And he would love me dearly as his child.
Duch. Oh, that deceit should steal such gentle Shapes,
And with a virtuous vizard hide foul guile!
He is my son; yea, and therein my shame;
Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.

Son. Think you my uncle did dissemble, grandam?
Duch. Ay, boy.

Son. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this?

Enter Queen Elizabeth, with her hair about her cars; Rivers and Dorset after her.

Q. Eliz. Oh, who shall hinder me to wall and weep,
To exult my fortune, and torment myself?
I 'll join with black despair against my soul,
And to myself become an enemy, so deep:

Duch. What means this scene of rude impatience?

Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence:
Edward, my lord, your son, our king, is dead.
Why grow the branches now the root is wither'd?
Why wither not the leaves the sap being gone?
If you will live, lament; if die, be brief.
That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's:
Or, like obedient subjects, follow him
To his new kingdom of perpetual rest.

Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow
As I had title in thy noble husband
I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And lived by looking on his images:
But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death,
And I for comfort have but one false glass,
Which grieves me when I see my shame in him.
Thou art a widow; yet thou art a mother,
And hast lost the comfort of three children left thee:
But death hath snatch'd my husband from mine
arms
And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble limbs,
Edward and Clarence. O, what cause have I,
Thine being but a moiety of my grief,
To overgo thine plaints and drown thy cries! [death:

Boy. God, a good aunt, you wept not for our father's
How can we aid you with our kindred tears?

Girl. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow-colour likewise be unwept!

Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation;
I am not barren to bring forth complaints:
All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I, being govern'd by the watery moon,
May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!
Oh for my husband, for my dear lord Edward!

Chill. Oh for our father, for our dear lord Clarence!

Duch. Alas for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence! [gone.

Q. Eliz. What stay had I but Edward? and he's Chill. What stay had we but Clarence? and he's gone.

Duch. What stays had I but they? and they are

Q. Eliz. Was never widow had so dear a loss!

Chill. Was never mother had so dear a loss!

Duch. Was never mother had so dear a loss!
Alas, I am the mother of these moans!
Their woes are parcel'd, mine are general.

467
She for an Edward weeps, and so do I;
I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she:
These beads for Clarence weep, and so do I;
I for an Edward weep, so do not they:
Alas, you three, on me, threefold distress'd,
Pour all your tears! I am your sorrow's muse,
And I will water it with laments. [pleased

Dor. Comfort, dear mother: God is much dis-
That you take with unthankfulness his doing;
In common worldly things, 't is call'd ungrateful,
With dull unwillingness to repay a debt
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;
Much though we have spent our harvests, heaven,
For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

Ric. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,
Of the young prince your son: send straight for him;
Let him be crown'd; in him your comfort lives:
Drown desperate sorrow in dear Edward's grave,
And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter Gloucester, Buckingham, Derby,
Hastings, and Ratcliff.

Glou. Madam, have comfort: all of us have cause to wall the dimming of our shining star;
But heavy was the harm by bearing them.
Madam, my mother, I do cry you mercy:
I did not see your grace: humbly on my knee
I crave your blessing. [mind,
Duch. God bless thee; and put meekness in thy Love, charity, obedience, and true duty! [man!
Glou. [Aside] Amen; and make me die a good old
That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing:
I marvel-why her grace did leave it out. [peers,
buck. You cloudy princes and heart-sorlowing
Bear this mutual heavy load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love:
Though we spent much of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-swoln hearts,
But lately splinter'd, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserved, cherish'd, and kept:
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetch'd
Hither to London, to be crown'd our king.

Ric. Why with some little train, my Lord of Buckingham?

Duch. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green and yet nugovern'd:
Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glou. I hope the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm and true in me.

Ric. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which haply by much company might be urged:
Therefore I say with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glou. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow.
Madam, and you, my mother, will you go
To give your censures in this weighty business?

Q. Eliz. I With all our hearts.

[Exeunt all but Buckingham and Gloucester.

Buck. My Lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God's sake, let not us two be behind;
For, by the way, I'll sort occasion
As index to that story we last talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the king.
Glou. My other self, my counsel's consistory,
My oracle, my prophet! my dear cousin,
KING RICHARD III.

ACT III.

SCENE I.

The trumpets sound. Enter the young Prince, the Duke of Gloucester, Buckingham, Cardinal Bourchier, Catesby, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Glou. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign. The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy: I want more uncles here to welcome me. [years

Glou. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your Hath not yet dived into the world's deceit: Nor more can you distinguish of a man Than of his outward show; which, God he know, Scion or never jumpeth with the heart. Those uncles which you want were dangerous; Your grace attended to their sugar'd words, But look'd not on the poison of their hearts: God keep you from them, and from such false friends!

Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none.

Glou. My lord, the mayor of London comes to enter the Lord Mayor and his train.

May. God bless your grace with health and happy days! [you all.

Prince. I thank you, good my lord; and thank I thought my mother, and my brother York, Would long ere this have met us on the way: Fle, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not To tell us whether they will come or no!

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news then? [Pomfret,

Mess. Lord Rivers and Lord Grey are sent to With them Sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them? Mess. The mighty dukes of Gloucester and Buckingham.

Q. Eliz. For what offence? Mess. The sum of all I can, I have disclosed; Why or for what these nobles were committed Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ay, madam, I see the door full of our house! The tiger now hath seized the gentle hind; Insulting tyranny begins to jet Upon the innocent and aweless throne: Welcome, destruction, death, and massacre!

I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days, How many of you have mine eyes beheld! My husband lost his life to get the crown; And often up and down my sons were toss'd, For me to joy and weep their gain and loss: And being seater, and domestic broils Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors, Make war upon themselves; blood against blood, Self against self: O, preposterous And frantic outrage, end thy damned spleen; Or let me die, to look on death no more!

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy; we will to sanctuary. Madam, farewell.

Duch. I'll go along with you.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go; And thither bear your treasure and your goods. For my part, I'll resign unto your grace The seal I keep: and so betide to me As well I tender you and all of yours! Come, I'll conduct you to the sanctuary. [Exeunt.
You break no privilege nor charter there.
Oft have I heard of sanctuary plea;
But sanctuary children ne'er till now.  [once.
Card.  My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for Come on, Lord Hastings, will you go with me?
Hast.  I go, my lord.
Prince.  Good lords, make all the speed haste you may.  [Exit Cardinal and Hastings.
Say, uncle Gloucester, if our brother come,
Where shall we sojourn till our coronation?
Glou.  Where it seems best unto your royal self.
If I may counsel you, some day or two
Your highness shall reposse you at the Tower: [lit
Then where you please, and shall be thought most
For your health and recreation.
Prince.  I do not like the Tower, of any place.
Did Julius Caesar build that place, my lord?
Buck.  He did, my gracious lord, begin that place;
Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.
Prince.  Is it upon record, or else reported
Successively from age to age, he built it?
Buck.  Upon record, my gracious lord.
Prince.  But say, my lord, it were not register'd,
Methinks the truth should live from age to age,
As 't were retail'd to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day.  [livelong.
Glou.  [Aside] So wise so young, they say, do never Prince.  Say, uncle, why?
Glou.  I say, without characters, fame lives long.
[Aside] Thus, like the formal vice, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word.
Prince.  That Julius Caesar was a famous man;
With what his valour did enrich his wit,
Let us sit down to make his valour live:
Death makes no conquest of this conqueror;
For now he lives in fame, though not in life.
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham,—
Buck.  What, my gracious lord?
Prince.  An if I live until be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,
Or die a soldier, as I lived a king.  [ward spring.
Glou.  [Aside] Short summers lightly have a for-

Enter young York, Hastings, and the Cardinal.
Buck.  Now, in good time, here comes the Duke of York, my brother!
Prince.  Richard of York! how fares our loving York.  Well, my dread lord: so must I call you now.
Prince.  Ay, brother, to our grief, as it is yours:
Too late he died that might have kept that title,
Which by his death hath lost much majesty.
Glou.  For the mortality of your noble Lord of York?
York.  I thank you, gentle uncle, O, my lord,
You said that idle weeds are fast in growth:
The prince my brother hath outgrown me far.
Glou.  He hath, my lord.
York.  And therefore is he idle?
Glou.  O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.
York.  Then is he more beholding to you than I.
Glou.  He may command me as my sovereign;
But you have power in me as in a kinsman.
York.  I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.
Glou.  My dagger, little cousin? with all my heart.
Prince.  A beggar boy?
York.  Of my kind uncle, that I know will give;
And being but a toy, which is no grief to give.
Glou.  A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.
York.  A greater gift! O, that's the sword to it.
Glou.  Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.
York.  You will part but with light
In weightier things you'll say a beggar nay. [gifts;
Glou.  It is too heavy for your grace to wear.
York.  I weigh it lightly, were it heavier. [lord?
Glou.  What, would you have my weapon, little York. I would, that I might thank you as you York.  Little.

Prince.  My Lord of York will still be cross in talk:
Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.
York.  You mean, to bear me, not to bear with me:
Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me;
Because that I am little, like an ape,
[ters.  He thinks that you should bear me on your should.
Buck.  With what a sharp-prov'd wit he reasons!
To mitigate the scorn he bears his uncle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himself:
So cunning and so young is wonderful.
Glou.  My lord, will't please you pass along?
Myself and my good cousin Buckingham
Will to your mother, to entreat of her
To meet you at the Tower and welcome you.
York.  Who will will you?—will your mother, my lord?
Prince.  My lord protector needs will have it so.
York.  I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.
Glou.  Why, what should you fear?
York.  Marry, my uncle Clarence's angry ghost:
My grandam told me he was murder'd there.
Prince.  I fear no uncles dead
Glou.  Nor none that live, I hope.
Prince.  An if they live, I hope I need not fear.
But come, my lord; and with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower.

[A Scene.  Exeunt all but Gloucester, Buckingham, and Catesby.
Buck.  Think you, my lord, this little prating
Was not incensed by his subtle mother
York  To taint and scorn you thus opprobriously?
Glou.  No doubt, no doubt: O, 'tis a pardon boy;
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:
He is all the mother's, from the top to toe.
Buck.  Well, let them rest. Come hither, Catesby.
Thou art sworn as deeply to effect what we intend
As closely to conceal what we impart:
Thou know'st our reasons urged upon the way;
What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter
To make William Lord Hastings of our mind,
For the instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle?
Cate.  He for his father's sake so loves the prince,
That he will not be won to aught against him.
Buck.  What think'st thou, then, of Stanley? what will he?
Cate.  He will do all in all as Hastings doth. [by.
Buck.  Well, then, no more but this: go, gentle Cates-
And, as it were far off, sound thou Lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose;
And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,
To sit about the coronation.
If thou dost find him unamiable to us,
Encourage him, and show him all our reasons:
If he be leden, icy-cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too; and so break off your talk,
And give us notice of his inclination:
For we to-morrow hold divided-councils,
Wherein the Duke shall highly be employ'd. [Catesby,
Glou.  Command me to Lord William; tell him,
His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle;
And bid my friend, for joy of this good news,
Give Mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.
Buck.  Go, gentle Catesby, go, effect this business roundly.  [may.  Cate.  My good lords both, with all the heed I Glou.  Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we Cate.  You shall, my lord.  [sleep?
Glou.  At Crosby Place, there shall you find us Buck.  Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive
Lord Hastings will not yield to our compots?
Glou.  Chop off his head, king; somewhat we will
And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me [do:
The earldom of Hereford, and the moveables
Whereof the king my brother stood possess'd.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,

When men are unprepared and look not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out

With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey; and so 'twill do

As thou and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear

To princely Richard and to Buckingham.

Hast. The princes both make high account of you;

Enter Lord Stanley.

Come on, come on; where is your boar-spear, man?

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?

Enter a Priest.

Priest. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest;

Your honour hath no shriving work in hand.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,

Those men you talk of came into my mind.

What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I shall not stay-

I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. This will be enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. [Aside] And supper too, although thou know'st it not.

Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.
SCENE III.—Pomfret Castle.

Enter Sir Richard Ratcliff, with halterds, carrying Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan to death.

Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.
Ric. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this: To-day shall a subject the For truth, for duty, and for loyalty. [you!]
Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of A knot you are of damned blood-suckers. [after.
You. You live that shall cry woe for this here—
Rat. Dispatch: the limit of your lives is out.
Ric. O lord, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison, Fatal and ominous to noble peers! Within the guilty closure of thy walls Richard the second here was lack'd to death; And, for more shander to thy dismal seat, We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.
Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fall'n upon our heads,
For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.
Ric. Then cursed she the Hastings, then cursed she Buckingham,
Then cursed she Richard. O, remember, God, To hear their prayers for them, as now for us! And for my sister and her princely sons.
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood, Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.
Rat. Make haste; the hour of death is expiate.
Ric. Come, Grey, come, Vaughan, let us all embrace:
And take our leave, until we meet in heaven.

SCENE IV.—The Tower of London.

Enter Buckingham, Derby, Hastings, the Bishop of Ely, Ratcliff, Lovel, with others, and take their seats at a table.

Hast. My lords, at once: the cause why we are Is, to determine of the coronation. [met
In God's name, speak: when is the royal day?
Buck. Are all things fitting for that royal time?
Der. It is, and wants but nomination.
Ely. To-morrow, then, I judge a happy day.
Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?
Who is most inward with the royal duke?
Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind. [faces,
Buck. Who, I, my lord! we know each other's But for our hearts, he knows no more of mine,
Than I of yours:—
Nor I no more of his, than you of mine.
Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.
Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well; But, for his purpose in the coronation, I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd His gracious pleasure any way therein: But you, my noble lords, may name the time; And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice, Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Enter Gloucester.

Ely. Now in good time, here comes the duke himself.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins all, good morrow.
I have been long a sleeper: but, I hope.
My absence doth neglect no great designs, Which by my presence might have been concluded.
Buck. Had not you come upon your cue, my lord, William Lord Hastings had pronounced your part,— I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.
Glo. That my Lord Hastings no man might be bolder; His lordship knows me well, and loves me well. Hast. I thank your grace.

SCENE IV.—Pomfret Castle.

Glo. My lord of Ely!
Ely. My lord?
Glo. When I was last in Holborn, I saw good strawberries in your garden there: I do beseech you send for some of them.
Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.
[Exit.

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

Drawing him aside.

Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business, And finds the testy gentleman so hot, As he will lose his head ere this moment His master's son, as worshipful he terms it, Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. [you.
Buck. Withdraw you hence, my lord, I'll follow. [Exit Gloucester, Buckingham following.

Der. We have not yet set down this day of triumph. To-morrow, in mine opinion, is too sudden; For I myself am not so well provided As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Re-enter Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord protector? I have sent for those strawberries.

Hast. His face looks cheerful and smooth to—
There's some conceit or other like him well, [day; When he doth bid good morrow with such a spirit. I think there's never a man in Christendom That can less hide his love or hate than he; For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Der. What of his heart perceive you in his face By any likelihood he show'd to-day?
Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended; For, were he, he had shown it in his looks.
Der. I pray God he be not, I say.

Re-enter Gloucester and Buckingham.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve That do conspire my death with devilish plots Of damned witchcraft, and that have prevail'd Upon my body with their hellish charms?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord, Makes me most forward in this noble presence To doom the offenders, whatsoever they be: I say, my lord, they have deserved death.
Glo. Then be your eyes the witness of this ill: See how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up: And this is my father's wife, this monstrous wife, Consorted with that harlot Strumpet Shore, That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.
Hast. If they have done this thing, my gracious lord,— [pet,
Glo. If thou protector of this damned strump-
Telled thou me of 'tis? Thou art a traitor! Off with his head! Now, by Saint Paul I swear, I will not dine until I see the same.
Lovel and Ratcliff, look that it be done:
The rest, that love me, rise and follow me.

Enter all but Hastings, Ratcliff, and Lovel.

Hast. Woe, woe for England! not a whit for me; For, I too fond, might have prevented this.
Stanley did dream the boar did raze his helm; But I disdain'd it, and did scorn to fly:
Three times to-day my foot-clotl horse did stumble, And startled, when he look'd upon the Tower, As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house.
O, now I want the priest that sate to me: I now repent I told the pursuivant,
As 't were triumphing at mine enemies,
How they at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd, And I myself secure in grace and favour.
O Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse Lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head! [ner;

Rat. Dispatch, my lord; the duke would be at din-

Hast. O bloody Richard! miserable England!
I prophesy the fearful still time to thee
That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.
Come, lead me to the block; bear him my head:
They smile at me that shortly shall be dead.

SCENE V.—The Tower-walls.

Enter Gloucester and Buckingham, in rotten armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Glou. Come, cousin, cast thou quake, and change thy colour.
Murther thy breath in the middle of a word,
And then begin again, and stop again,
As if thouwert distraught and mad with terror?
Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak, speak! look back, and pry on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion; ghastly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time, to grace my stratagems.

Buck. What, is Catesby gone?
Glou. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Mayor and Catesby.

Buck. Lord mayor,—
Glou. Look to the drawbridge there!
Buck. Hark! a drum.
Glou. Catesby, or lock the walls.
Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent—
Glou. Look back, defend thee, here are enemies.
Buck. God and our innocency defend and guar-

Lovel. Be patient, they are friends, Ratcliff and Enter Lovel and Ratcliff, with Hastings' head.

Lor. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.
Glou. So dear I loved the man, that I must weep,
I took him for the plainest harmless creature
That breathed upon this earth a Christian;
Made him my book, whereon my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:
So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,
That, his apparent open guilt omitted,
I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife,
He lived from all attainer of suspect.

[traitor

Buck. Well, well, he was the covent's shelter'd
That ever lived.
Would you imagine, or almost believe,
Were't not that, by great preservation,
We live to tell it you, the subtle traitor
This day had plotted, in the council-house
To murder me and my good Lord of Gloucester?

May. What, what, what?
Glou. What, think you we are Turks or infidels?
Or that we would, against the form of law,
Proceed thus rashly to the villain's death,
But that the extreme peril of the case,
The peace of England and our persons' safety,
Enforced us to this resolution?

May. Now, fair befal you! he deserved his death;
And you my good lords, both have well proceeded,
to warn false traitors from the like attempts.
I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with Mistress Shore.
Glou. Yet had not we determined he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his death;
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Somewhat against our meaning, have prevented:
Because, my lord, we would have had you hear
The traitor speak, and timorous confess
The manner and the purpose of his treason;
Unto the citizens, who haply may
Misconstrue us in him and wall his death. [serve.
May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall
As well as I had seen and heard him speak:
And doubt you not, right noble princes both,
But I'll acquit our大厦,cousin, there.
With all your just proceedings in this cause. [here,

Glou. And to that end we wish'd your lordship
To avoid the carping censure of the world.

Buck. But since you come too late of our intents,
Yet witness what you hear we did intend:
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[Exit Mayor.

Glou. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.
The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post:
There, at your meet'st advantage of the time,
Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:
Tell them how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying he knew the father of
His heir to the crown; meaning indeed his house,
Which, by the sign thereof, was termed so.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust;
Which stretched to their servants, daughters, wives,
Even where he'd beauty; eat or savage heart,
Without control, listed to make his prey.

Nav. for a need, thus far come near my person:
Tell them, when that my mother went with child
Of that unsatiate Edward, noble York
My princely father then had wars in France;
And, by just computation of the time,
Found that the issue was not his begot;
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father;
But touch this sparingly, as 't were far off;
Because you know, my lord, my mother lives.

Buck. Fear not, my lord, I'll play the orator
As if the golden fee for which I plead
Were for myself; and so, my lord, adieu. [Castle;
Glou. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's
Where you shall find me well accompanied
With reverend fathers and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit.

Glou. Go, Lovel, with all speed to Doctor Slaug;
[To Catesby.] Go thou to Friar Penker; bid them both
Meet me within this hour at Baynard's Castle.

[Ereunt all but Gloucester.

Now will I in, to take some privy order,
To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;
And to give notice, that no manner of person
At any time have recourse unto the princes.

[Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same. A street.

Enter a Scrivener, with a paper in his hand.

Scriv. This is the indictment of the good Lord
Hastings:
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,
That it may be this day read over in Paul's,
And mark how well the sequel hangs together:
Eleven hours I spent to write it over,
For yesterday by Catesby was it brought me;
The precedent was full as long a-doing:
And yet within these five hours lived Lord Hastings,
Untainted, unexamined, free, at liberty.
Here's a good world the while! Why who's so gross,
That seeth not this palpable device?
Yet who is so blind, but sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such bad dealing must be seen in thought.

[Exit.
ACT III.

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE VII.—Bayard's Castle.

Enter Gloucester and Buckingham, at several doors.

Glow. How now, my lord, what say the citizens?

Buck. Now, by the Lord of our Lord, the citizens are mum and speak not a word.

Glow. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?

Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady Lucy, and his command by deputy in France; this is the greatness of his desires, and his enforcement of the city wives; his tyranny for trifles; his own bastards, as being got, your father then in France, and his resemblance, being not like the duke: Withall I did infer your lineaments, being the right idea of your father; both in your form and nobleness of mind; laid open all your victories in Scotland, your discipline in war, wisdom in peace, your bounty, virtue, fair humility; indeed, left nothing fitting for the purpose. Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse; and when mine oratory grew to an end, I bid them that did love their country's good cry 'God save Richard, England's royal king!'

Glow. Ah! and did they so?

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word; but, like dumb statues or breathing stones, gazed each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Which when I saw, I repreheended them: and ask'd the mayor what meant this wilful silence. His answer was, the people were not wont to be spoken to but by the recorder. Then he was urg'd to tell my tale again, 'Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke inferred;' but nothing spake in warrant from himself. When he had done, some followers of mine own, at the lower end of the hall, hurl'd up their caps, and some ten voices cried 'God save King Richard!' and thus I took the vantage of those few. 'Thanks, gentle citizens and friends,' quoth I; 'this general applause and loving shout argues your wisdoms and your love to Richard.' And even here brake off, and came away.

Glow. What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak?

Buck. No, by my troth, my lord. [Exeunt.]

Glow. Will not the mayor then and his brethren be not you spoken with, but by mighty suit: [fear; and look you get a prayer-book in your hand, and stand betwixt two churchmen, good my lord; for on that ground I'll build a holy descent:] and be not easily won to our request: Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.

Glow. I go; and if you plead as well for them as I can say nay to thee for myself.

Buck. Go, go, up to the heads; the lord mayor knocks.

[Exit Gloucester.

Enter the Mayor and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance here; I think the duke will not be spoke without.

Enter Catesby.

Here comes his servant: how now, Catesby, what says he?

Cate. My lord, he doth entreat your grace To visit him to-morrow or next day: He entendeth with two right reverend fathers, Divinely bent to meditation; And in no worldly suit would he be moved, To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to thy lord again; tell him, myself, the mayor and citizens, In deep designs and matters of great moment, No less importing than our general good, Are come to have some conference with the grace. Cate. I'll tell him what you say, my lord. [Exit.

Buck. Ah, by my lord, this council is not in Edward: He is not lodging on a lewd day-bed, But on his knees at meditation; Not dallying with a brace of courtzans, But meditating with two deep divines; Not sleeping, to engross his idle body, But praying, to curish his watchful soul: Happy were England, would this gracious prince Take on himself the sovereignty thereof: But, sure, I fear, we shall ne'er win him to it.

May. Marry, God forbid his grace should say us nay!

Re-enter Catesby.

How now, Catesby, what says your lord?

Cate. My lord, he wonders to what end you have assembled Such troops of citizens to speak with him, His grace not being wak'd in this discourse: My lord, he fears you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry am I my noble cousin should suspect me, that I mean no good to him; By heaven, I come in perfect love to him; And so once more return and tell his grace.

When holy and devout religious men Are at their Beads, 'tis hard to draw them thence, So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter Gloucester afoft, between two Bishops.

Catesby returns.

May. See, where he stands between two clergymen!

Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian prince, To stay him from the fall of vanity: And, see, a book of prayer in his hand, True ornamentals to know a holy man. Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince, Lend favourable ears to our request; And pardon us the interruption Of thy devotion and right Christian zeal.

Glow. My lord, there needs no such apology: I rather do beseech you pardon me: Who, earned in the seres of God, Neglect the visitation of my friends. But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure? Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God And all good men of this engross'd isle. [above.

Glow. I do suspect I have done some offence That seems disgraceful in the city's eyes, And that you came to repreheend my ignorance. Buck. You have, my lord: would it might please your grace, At our entertainies, to amend that fault! [and?

Glow. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian Bed. Tell me, Sir, is it your fault that you resign The supreme seat, the throne majestical, The scepter'd office of your ancestors, Your state of fortune and your due of birth, The lineal glory of your royal house, To the corruption of a blemish'd stock: Whilst, in the mildness of your sleepy thoughts, Which hereby do wake to waken our stock, This noble isle doth want her proper limbs; Her face defaced with scars of infamy, Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants, And almost shoulder'd in the swallowing gulf Of blind forgetfulness and dark oblivion. Which to renew, we heartily solicit your grace. Your gracious self to take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land; Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another’s gain;
But all successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizens,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I know not whether to depart in silence,
Or bitter to speak, when your citizens entreat you.

Buck. Best fittest my degree or your condition:
If not to answer, you might haply think
Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded
To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me;
If to reprieve you for this suit of yours,
So season’d with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check’d my friends.
Therefore, to speak, and to avoid the first,
And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,
Definitively thus I answer you.

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert
Unequalable shuns your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As my ripe revenue and due by birth;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty and so many my defects,
As I had rather hide me from my greatness,
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,
Than in my greatness covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my glory smother’d.
But, God be thanked, there’s no need of me,
And much I need to help you, if need were;
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, by a bow’d by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay what you would lay on me,
The right and fortune of his happy stars;
Which God defend that I should wring from him!

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace;
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.
You say that Edward is your brother’s son:
So say we too, but not by Edward’s wife;
For first he was contract to Lady Lucy —
Your mother lives a witness to that vow —
And afterward by substitute betroth’d
To Bona, sister to the King of France.
These both put by, a poor petitioner,
A care-crazed mother of a many children,
A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his lusty eye,
Seduced the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension and lowly bigotry:
By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners term the prince.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer’d benefit of dignity;
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing times,
Unto a lineal true-derived course.

May. Do, good my lord, speak, your citizens entreat you.

Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer’d love.
Cate. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful suit!

Glo. Alas, why would you heap these cares on me?
I am unfit for state and majesty;
I do beseech you, take it not amiss;
I cannot nor will I not yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it, — as, in love and zeal,
Loath to depose the child, your brother’s son;
As we know your tenderness of heart
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse,
Which we have noted in you to your kin,
And equally indeed to all estates, —
Yet whether you accept our suit or no,
Your brother’s son shall never reign our king;
But we will plant some other in the throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of your house;
And in this resolution here we leave you. —
Come, citizens: ’rounds! I’ll entreat no more.

Glo. O, do not swear, my lord of Buckingham.

[Exit Buckingham with the Citizens.

Cate. Call them again, my lord, and accept their suit.
[true it.

Another. Do, good my lord, lest all the land do
Glo. Would you enforce me to a world of care?
Well, call them again. I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreats,
Albeit against my conscience and my soul.

Re-enter Buckingham and the rest.

Cousin of Buckingham, and you sage, grave men,
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burthen, whether I will or no,
I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scouldal or foul-faced reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blot’s and stains thereof;
For God he knows, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the devil’s root.

May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will say
Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this kingly title:
Long live Richard, England’s royal king!

May, and Cate. Amen.

Buck. To-morrow will it please you to be crown’d?
Glo. Even when you please, since you will have it so.

Buck. To-morrow, then, we will attend your grace:
And so most joyfully we take our leave.

Glo. Come, let us to our holy task again.

Farewell, good cousin; farewell, gentle friends.
[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, Queen Elizabeth, Duchess of York, and Marguess of Dorset; on the other, Anne, Duchess of Gloucester, leading Lady Margaret Plantagenet, Clarence’s young Daughter.

Buck. Who meets us here? my niece Plantagenet.

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloucester?
Now, for my life, she’s wandering to the Tower,
On pure heart’s love to greet the tender princes.
Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both
A happy and a joyful time of day!
[away?
Q. Eliz. As much to you, my sister!
Whither Anne. No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
[gether.

Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks: we’ll enter all to-

Enter Brakenbury.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.
Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

475
Brak. Right well, dear madam. By your pa-
I may not suffer you to visit them; [tence,
The king hath straitly charged the contrary.
Q. Eliz. The king! why, who's that?
Brak. I cry you mercy; I mean the lord protector.
Q. Eliz. Injustice was written on that kingful
Hath he set bounds betwixt their love and me? [title!
I am their mother; who should keep me from them?
Duch. I am their father's mother; I will see them.
Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother:
Then bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame
And take thy counsel from thee, on my peril.
Brak. No, madam, no; I may not leave it so;
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me. [Exit.

Enter Lord Stanley.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,
And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,
An irreverend looker on of two fair queens. [minister,
[To Anne] Come, madam, you must straight to West-
There to be crowned Richard's royal queen. [heart
Q. Eliz. O, cut my face in smudg, that my pent
May have some scope to beat, or else I swoon
With this dead-felling news! Anne. Desiptful tidings! O unpleasing news!
Dor. Be of good cheer: mother, how faces your grace? [hence!
Q. Eliz. O Dorset, speak not to me, get thee
Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;
Thy mother's name is ominous to children.
If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas;
And live with Richard, from the reach of hell:
Go, hie thee, hie thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead;
And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,
Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.
So full were my cares, and this thy counsel, madam,
Take all the swift advantage of the hours;
You shall have letters from me to my son
To meet you on the way, and welcome you.
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.
Duch. O ill-dispens'ring wight of misery!
O my accursed wound, the bed of death!
A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,
Whose unavoidable eye is murderous. [sent.
Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was Anne. And I in all unwillingness will go.
I would to God that the inclusive verge
Of gold and all that must round my brow
Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom,
And die, ere men can say, God save the queen!
Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;
To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm. [now
Anne. No! why? When he that is my husband
And came to me, as I follow'd Henry's curse. [hands
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his
Which issued from my other angel husband
And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;
O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish: 'Be thou,' quoth I, 'accursed,
For making me, so young, so old a widow!
And, when thou wouldest, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And be thy wife—if any be so mad—
As miserable by the life of thee
As thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!' I, o, ere I can repeat this curse again,
Even in sob and sigh, to quench my torn heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words
And proved the subject of my own soul's curse,
Which ever since hath kept my eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Have I enjoy'd the golden dew of sleep,
But have been vex'd by his insomnious dreams,
Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me. [ing.
Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu! I pity thy complain-
Anne. No more than from my soul I mourn for yours.
Q. Eliz. Farewell, thou woful welcome of glory!
Anne. A devil, poor soul, that takest thy leave of it!
Duch. [To Dorset] Go thou to Richmond, and good
[To Anne] Go thou to Richard, and good angels
[To Queen Eliz.] Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee!
I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!
And partly off from thee, on my peril.

Brak. Stay, yet look back with me unto the Tower.

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes
Whom envy hath immured within your walls!
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse, old sullen playfellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. The palace.

Senet. Enter Richard, in pomp, crowned; Buckingham, Catesby, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart. Cousin of Buckingham!

Buck. My gracious sovereign?
K. Rich. Give me thy hand. [Here he ascendeth his throne.] Thus high, by thy advice
And thy assistance, is King Richard seated;
But shall we wear these honours for a day?
Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?
Buck. Still live they and for ever may they last!
K. Rich. O Buckingham, now do I play the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed!
Young Edward lives; think now what I would say.
Buck. Say on, my loving lord. [king
K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be
Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice renowned liege.
K. Rich. If I am king? 'tis so: but Edward Buck. True, noble prince. [lives.
K. Rich. O bitter consequence,
That Edward still should live! 'True, noble prince!
Cousin, thou wert not wont to be so dull;
Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly perform'd,
What sayest thou? speak suddenly; be brief.
Buck. Old grace may do your pleasure.
K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindness freezeth;
Say, have I thy consent that they shall die?
Buck. Give me some breath, some little pause, my Before I positively speak herein: [lord
I will recede thy grace immediately. [Exit.

Calc. [Aside to a stammerer] The king is angry: see,
he bites the lip.
K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with considerate eyes:
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.
Be it! [gold

Page. My lord?
K. Rich. Know'st thou not any whom corrupting
Would tempt unto a close exploit of death?
Page. My lord, I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means matches not his haughty mind:
Gold were as good as twenty orators.
And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.
K. Rich. What is his name?
Page. His name, my lord, is Tyrrel.
K. Rich. I partly know the man: go, call him kitchen. [Exit Page.

The deep revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsel;
Hath he so long held out with me united,
And stops he now for breath?
Enter Stanley.

How now! what news with you?

Stam. My lord, I hear the Marquis Dorset's fled To Richmond, in those parts beyond the sea. Where he abides. [Stands apart.]

K. Rich. Catesby! [Exit.]

Cate. My lord? [Exit.]

K. Rich. Rumour it abroad That Anne, my wife, is sick and like to die: I will take order for her keeping close.

Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman, Whom I will marry straight to Clarence' daughter: The boy is foolish, and I fear not him. Look, how I say it: first and again, give out That Anne my wife is sick and like to die: About it; for it stands me much upon, To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me.

[Exit Catesby.]

I must be married to my brother's daughter, Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass. Murder her brothers, and then marry her! Uncertain way of gain! But I am in So far in blood that sin will pluck on sin: Tear-falling pity dwell's not in this eye.

Re-enter Page, with Tyrrel.

Is thy name Tyrrel? [Exit.]

Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient subject.K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?Tyr. Prove me, my gracious sovereign.K. Rich. Darest thou resolve to kill a friend of mine? But I had rather kill two enemies.K. Rich. Why, thou hast it: two deep Foos to my rest and my sweet sleep's disturbers Are they that I would have thee deal upon: Tyrrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them, And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come hither, Tyrrel:

Go, by this token: rise, and lend thine ear; [Whispers.

There is no more but so: say it is done, And I will love thee, and prefer thee too.Tyr. 'Tis done, my gracious lord. [Exit.]

Re-enter Buckingham.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind The late demand that you did sound me in.K. Rich. Well, let that pass. Dorset is fled to Buck. I hear that news, my lord. [Richmond.]

K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son: well, look to it. [Promise.]

Buck. My lord, I claim your gift, my due by Fair which your honour and your faith is pawn'd— The earldom of Hereford and all moveables Which you promised I should possess. [Very K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife: if she con-

Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it. [Mamm.]

Buck. What says your highness to my just de-

K. Rich. As I remember, Henry the Sixth Did prophesy that Richmond should be king, When Richmond was a little peevish boy. A king, perhaps, perhaps,—

Buck. My lord! [That time]

K. Rich. How chance the prophet could not at Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him? [Exit.]

Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom, K. Rich. When last I was at Exe- The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle, [Ter, And call'd it Rongemont: at which name I started, Because a bard of Ireland told me once, I should not live long after I saw Richmond.
SCENE IV.—Before the palace.

Enter Queen Margaret.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Here in these confines slily have I lurk'd,
To watch the waning of mine adversaries.
A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. [here?]
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret: who comes Enter Queen Elizabeth and the Duchess of York.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my young princes! ah, my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings
And hear your mother's lamentation! [right]
Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.
Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my weary-tongue is mute and dumb,
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet.
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt. [lamb's,
Q. Eliz. Will thou, O God, fly from such gentle
And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
When didst thou sleep when such a deed was done?
Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son.
Duch. Blind sight, dead life, poor mortal living ghost, [usury'd,
Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life
Brief abstract and record of tedious days,
Rest thy unrest on England's lawful suitor.
[ Sitting down.
Unlawfully made drunk with innocents' blood!
Q. Eliz. O, that thou wouldst as well afford
As thou canst yield a melancholy seat! [grave
Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here.
O, who hath any cause to mourn but I?
[ Sitting down by her.
Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverend,
Give mine the benefit of senility,
And let my woes frown on the upper hand.
If sorrow can admit society.
[ Sitting down with them.
Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
I had a Harry, till a Richard kill'd him;
Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;
Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.
Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill
I had a Rutland too, thou help'dst to kill him. [him:
Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him.
From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To vomy lambs and lap their gentle blood,
That foul defacer of God's handiwork.
That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,
That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,
Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.

O upright, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee, that this carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow with others' woe?

Duch. O, my Queen's wife, how canst thou woe!
God witness with me, I have wept for thine.
Q. Mar. Bear with me; I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloye me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;
Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;
Young York there is but breed, and they
Match not the high perfection of my loss:
Thy Clarence he is dead that kill'd my Edward;
And the beholders of this tragic play,
The adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Untimely smoother'd in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligence,
Only reserved their factor, to buy souls
And send them thither: but at hand, at hand,
Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gaps, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convey'd away.
Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray,
That I may never say this day didst dye.
[ some
Q. Eliz. O, thou didst prophesy the time would
That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottleneck, that foul bunch-back'd toad!
Q. Mar. I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen:
The presentation of but what I was;
The flattering index of a direful pageant;
One heaved a-high, to be hurl'd down below;
A mother only mock'd with two sweet babes;
A dream of what thou wert, a breath, a bubble,
A sign of dignity, a garish flag.
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where are thy children? wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues to thee and cries 'God save the queen'?
Where be the binding peers that flatter thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?
Decline all this, and see what now thou art:
For happy wife, a most distresst widow;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For queen, a very caiffaun crowned with care;
For one beloved mother, to one that her heart;
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
To torture me the more, being what thou art.
Thou didst usurp my place, and dost thou not
Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now thy proud neck bears half my burch'ten'd yoke;
From which even here I slip my weary neck,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell, my Queen's wife, and all of sad mischance:
These English woe's will make me smile in France.
Q. Eliz. O thou well skill'd in curses, stay awhile,
And teach me how to curse mine enemies! [days;
Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the nights, and fast the Compare dead happiness with living woe;
Think that thy babes were fairer than they were,
And he that slew them fouler than he is:
Bettering thy loss makes the bad causer worse;
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse. [thine
Q. Eliz. My words are dull; O, quicken them with
Q. Mar. Thy woe's will make them sharp, and
A piece like mine, and mine too.
Duch. Why should calamity be full of words?
Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woe's,
Airy suceners of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries!
Let them have scope: though what they do impart
Help not at all, yet do they ease the heart.
Duch. If so, then be not tongue-tied; go with me,
And in the breath of bitter words let 's smoother
My damned son, which thy two sweet sons smooth-
I hear his drum: be copious in exclamations. [er'd.

Enter King Richard, marching, with drums and trompets.

K. Rich. Who intercepts my expedition?
Duch. O, she that might have intercepted thee,
By staying thee in her accused renown.
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done!
crown,

Q. Eliz. Hidest thou that forehead with a golden
Where should be graven, if that right were right,
The slaughter of the prince that owed that crown,
And the dire death of my two sons and brothers? I tell me, thou villain slave, where are my children?
Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother
And little Ned Plantagenet, his son? [Clarence?
Q. Eliz. Where is kind Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey?

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets! strike alarum,
Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
Rail on the Lord's anointed: strike, I say!

Flourish. Alarums.

Either be patient, and entreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war
Thus will I drown your exclamations.
Duch. Art thou mean to do so? [self.

K. Rich. Ay, I thank God, my father, and your-
Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience. [tian,
K. Rich. Madame, I have a touch of your condi-
Which cannot brook the accent of reproof.
Duch. O, let me speak!
K. Rich. Do then; but I'll not hear.
Duch. You will be mild and gentle in my speech.
K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.

Duch. Art thou so hasty? I have stay'd for thee,
God knows, in anguish, pain and agony.
K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?
Duch. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st it well,
Thou cam'st on earth to make the earth my hell.
A grievous burthen was thy birth to me;
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy:
Thy school-days frightful, desperate, wild, and furious,
Thy youth manhood daring, bold, and venturous,
Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, bloody, treacherous,
More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred:
What comfortable hour canst thou name,
That ever grace'd me in thy company?
K. Rich. Faith, none, but Humphrey Hour, that call'd your grace.

To breakfast once forth of my company.
If I be so disgraceful in your sight,
Let me march on, and not offend your grace.
Strike up the drum.

Duch. I prithee, hear me speak.
Duch. Hear me a word;
For I shall never speak to thee again.

Duch. Either thou wilt die, by God's just ordi-
Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror, [nance,
Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish
And new look upon thy face again.
Therefore take with thee my most heavy curse;
Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more
Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!
My prayers on the adverse party fight;
And there the little souls of Edward's children
Whisper the spirits of thine enemies
And promise them success and victory.

Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse

Abides in my soul: I say amen to all.
[you.
K. Rich. Stay, madam; I must speak a word with
Q. Eliz. I have no moe sons of the royal blood
For thee to murder: for my daughters, Richard,
They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens;
And therefore level not to hit their lives.
K. Rich. And my daughter call'd Elizabeth,
Virtuous and fair, royal and glorious.
Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O, let her live,
And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty;
Slander myself as false to Edward's bed;
Throw over her the veil of infancy:
So she may live unscarr'd of bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter.
K. Rich. Wrong not her birth, she is of royal blood.
Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say she is not so.
K. Rich. Her life is only safest in her birth.
Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers.
K. Rich. Le, at their births good stars were opposite.
[trary.
Q. Eliz. No, to their lives bad friends were con-
K. Rich. All unavoid'd is the doom of destiny.
Q. Eliz. True, when avoided grace makes destiny;
My babes were destined to a fairer death,
In grace had they s'hood thee with a fairer life:
K. Rich. You speak as if that I had slain my cousins.
[cozen'd

Q. Eliz. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle
Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life.
Whose hand soever lanced their tender hearts,
Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction:
No doubt the murderous life was dull and blunt
Till it was whetted in thy stone-hard heart,
To reveal in the entrails of my limbs.
But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;
And I, in such a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling rift,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.
K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise
And dangerous success of bloody wars,
As I intend more good to you and yours
Than ever you or yours were by the good of it:

Q. Eliz. Is good so capricious with the face of
To be discover'd, that can do me good? [heaven,
K. Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle lady.
[heads?
Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their
K. Rich. No, to the dignity and height of honour,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory.

Q. Eliz. Flutter my sorrows with report of it;
Tell me what state, what dignity, what honour,
Canst thou demise to any child of mine?
K. Rich. Even all I have; yea, and myself and Will I withal endow a child of thine; [all,
So, in the Lothe of thy angry soul
Thou drowrest the sad remembrance of those wrongs
Which thou suppos'dest I have done to thee.
Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness

Last longer telling than thy kindness' date.
K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul I love thy daughter.
Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her
Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soul:
So from thy soul's love didst thou love her brothers;
And from my heart's love I do thank thee for it.
K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning:
I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter, And mean to make her queen of England.

Q. Eliz. Say then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?

K. Rich. Even he that makes her queen: who should be else?

K. Rich. That would I learn of you, As one that are best acquainted with her humour.

Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me?

K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart.

Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that slew her brothers, A pair of bleeding hearts; thereto engrave Edward and York; and then haply she will weep: Therefore present to her,—as sometime Margaret Did to thy father, steep’d in Rutland’s blood,— A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain The purple sap from her sweet brother’s body. And bid her dry her weeping eyes therewith, If this inducement force her not to love, Send her a story of thy noble acts; Tell her thou madest away her uncle Clarence, Her uncle, and to it a king sake, Madest quicke conveyance with her good aunt Anne.

K. Rich. Come, come, you mock me; this is not To win your daughter.

Q. Eliz. There is no other way; Unless thou couldst put on some other shape, And not be Richard that hath done all this,

K. Rich. Say that I did all this for love of her.

Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed she cannot choose but hate thee.

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.

K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now Made purposely and mend’d, as I am maim’d: Which after hours give leisure to repent.

If I did take the kingdom from your sons, To make amends, I’ll give it to your daughter.

If I have kill’d the issue of your womb, To quicken your increase, I will beget

Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter: A grandam’s name is little less in love Than is the doting title of a mother;

They are as children but one step below, Even of your mettle, of your very blood;

Of all a pain, save for a night of groans Endured of her, for whom you did like sorrow. Your sorrow, and your son, and that I lose, But mine shall be a comfort to your age,
The loss you have is but a son being king, And by that loss your daughter is made queen.

I cannot make you what amends I would, Therefore accept such kindness as I can.

Dorset your son, that with a fearful soul Leads discontented steps in foreign soil, This fair alliance quickly shall call home To high promotions and great dignity: The king, that calls your beauteous daughter wife, Familiarly shall call thy Dorset brother; Advise you to become my kinsman, And all the ruins of distressful times Repair’d with double riches of content.

What! have we many goodly days to see: The liquid drops of tears that you have shed Shall come again, transform’d to orient pearl, Advances by the wave of each a king.

Of ten times double gain of happiness. Go, then, my mother, to thy daughter go; Make bold her bashful years with your experience; Prepare her cars to hear a woeer’s tale; Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame Of glorious sovereignty: acquaint the princess With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys; And when this arm of mine hath clastised

The petty rebel, dull-brain’d Buckingham, Bound with triumphant garlands will I come And lead thy daughter to a conqueror’s bed; To whom I will retal my conquest won, And she shall be sole victress, Caesar’s Caesar.

Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father’s brother?

Would be her lord? or shall I say, her uncle? Or, be that drew her brothers and her uncles? Under what title shall I woo for thee, That God, the law, my honour and my love, Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?

K. Rich. Infer fair England’s peace by this alliance, And call the present war.

Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still last,

K. Rich. Say that the king, which may command, entreats.

Q. Eliz. That at her hands which the king’s King. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.

K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly.

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last? [it.

K. Rich. So long as heaven and nature lengths

Q. Eliz. So long as hell and Richard likes of it.

K. Rich. Say, I, her sovereign, am her subject love.

Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loathes such sovereignty.

K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her. [told.

Q. Eliz. An honest tale speaks best being plainly

K. Rich. Then in plain terms tell her my loving tale.

Q. Eliz. Plain and not honest is too harsh a style.

K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick.

Q. Eliz. No, my reasons are too deep and dead; Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their grave.

K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam; that is past.

Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I till heart-strings

K. Rich. Now, by my George, by my garter, and my crown.— [usurp’d.

Q. Eliz. Profaned, dishonour’d, and the third

K. Rich. I swear—

Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath:
The George, profaned, hath lost his holy honour; The garter, blemish’d, pawn’d his knightly virtue; The crown, usurp’d, disgraced his kingly glory. If sometime you will swear to be believed,

Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong’d.

K. Rich. Now, by the world—

Q. Eliz. ’Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

K. Rich. My father’s death—

Q. Eliz. Thy life hath that dishonour’d.

K. Rich. Then, by myself—

Q. Eliz. Thyself thyself misusset.

K. Rich. Why then, by God—

Q. Eliz. God’s wrong is most of all.

If thou hadst fear’d to break an oath by Him, The unity the king thy brother made Had not been broken, nor my brother slain: If thou hadst fear’d to break an oath by Him, The imperial metal, circling now thy brow, Had grace the tender temples of my child, And both the princes had been breathing here, Which now, two tender playfellows for dust, Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms. What canst thou swear by now?

K. Rich. The time to come.

Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o’er For I myself have many tears to wash [past; Hereafter time, for time past wrong’d by thee. The children live, whose parents thou hast slaught’r’d; Ungovern’d youth, to wall in it in their age; [hed. The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher’d,
ACT IV.
KING RICHARD III.

OLD WITHER'D PLANTS, TO WAIL IT WITH THEIR AGE.
SWEAR NOT BY TIME TO COME: FOR THOU HAST
MISUSED ERE USED, BY TIME MISUSED O'ER-PAST.
K. RICH. AS I INTEND TO PROSPER AND REPENT,
SO THRIVE I IN MY DANGEROUS ATTEMPT
OF HOSTILE ARMS! MYSELF MYSELF CONFOUNDED!
HEAVEN AND FORTUNE BAR ME HAPPY HOURS!
DAY, DUSK, AND NOT THY LIGHT; NOR, NIGHT, THY REST!
BE OPPOSITE ALL PLANETS OF GOOD LUCK
TO MY PROCEEDINGS, IF, WITH PURE HEART'S LOVE, IMMUNACULATE DevOTION, HOLY THOUGHTS,
I TENDER NOT THY BEAUTIFUL PRINCESS DAUGHTER!
IN HER CONSISTS MY HAPPINESS AND THINE;
WITHOUT HER, FOLLOWING THIS LAND AND ME,
TO THEE, HERSELF, AND MANY A CHRISTIAN SOUL,
DEATH, DESOLATION, RUIN AND DECAY;
IT CANNOT BE AVOIDED BUT BY THIS;
IT WILL NOT BE AVOIDED BUT BY THIS.

Therefore, good mother,—I must call you so—
Be the attorney of my love to her:
PLEAD WHAT I WILL BE, NOT WHAT I HAVE BEEN;
NOT MY DESERTS, BUT WHAT I WILL DESERVE:
URGE THE NECESSITY AND STATE OF TIMES,
AND BE NOT PEEVISH-FOND IN GREAT DESIGNS.

Q. ELIZ. SHALL I BE TEMPTED OF THE DEVIL THNS?
K. RICH. AY, IF THE DEVIL TEP TEMPT THEE TO DO GOOD.
Q. ELIZ. SHALL I FORGET MYSELF AND MYSELF?
K. RICH. AY, IF YOURSELF'S REMEMBRANCE WRENCH YOURSELF.
Q. ELIZ. BUT THOU DIDST KILL MY CHILDREN, THEN?
K. RICH. BUT IN YOUR DAUGHTER'S WOBN I BURY
WHERE IN THAT NEST OF SPIRITY THEY SHALL BREEF
SELVES OF THEMSELVES, TO YOUR RESCOMFORT.
Q. ELIZ. SHALL I GO WIN MY DAUGHTER TO THY WILL?
K. RICH. AND BE A HAPPY MOTHER BY THE DEED.
Q. ELIZ. I GO. WRITE ME VERY SHORTLY,
AND YOU SHALL UNDERSTAND FROM ME MIND.
K. RICH. BEAR HER MY TRUE LOVE'S KISS; AND SO, FAREWELL. [EXIT QUEEN ELIZABETH.
RELENTING FOUL, AND SHALLOW, CHANGING WOMAN!

ENTER RATCLIFF; CATESBY FOLLOWING.

HOW NOW! WHAT NEWS?

RAT. MY GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN, ON THE WESTERN COAST
RIDE THE PAISANT NAVY; TO THE SHORE
THROUGH MERRY-HEARTED FRIENDS,
UNARM'D, AND UNRESOLVED TO BEAT THEM BACK;
T'IS THOUGHT THAT RICHMOND IS THEIR ADMIRAL;
AND THERE THEY HURL, EXPECTING THE AID.
OF BUCKINGHAM TO WELCOME THEM A-SHORE. [NORFOLK:
K. RICH. SOME LIGHT-FOOT FRIENDS POST TO THE DUKE OF RATCLIFF, THYSELF, OR CATESBY; WHERE IS HE?
CATE. HERE, MY LORD;
K. RICH. FLY TO THE DUKE: [TO RATCLIFF] POST THOU TO SALISBURY:
WHEN THOU COMEST THITHER, [TO CATESBY] DULL, UN-
MINDFUL VILAIN,
WHY STANDST THOU STILL, AND G0'ST NOT TO THE DUKE?
CATE. FIRST, MIGHTY SOVEREIGN, LET ME KNOW YOUR MIND,
WHAT FROM YOUR GRACE I SHALL DELIVER TO HIM.

K. RICH. O, TRUE, GOOD CATESBY: BID HIM LEAVY STRAIGHT
THE GREATEST STRENGTH AND POWER HE CAN MAKE,
AND MEET ME PRESENTLY AT SALISBURY.
CATE. I GO. [EXIT.
RAT. WHAT IS 'T YOUR HIGHNESS' PLEASURE I SHALL DO
AT SALISBURY? [I GO?
K. RICH. WHY, WHAT WOULDST THOU DO THERE BEFORE
RAT. YOUR HIGHNESS TOLD ME I SHOULD POST BEFORE.
K. RICH. MY MIND IS CHANGED, SIR, MY MIND IS CHANGED.

ENTER LORD STANLEY.

HOW NOW, WHAT NEWS WITH YOU? [HEARING;

NOR'ME SO BAD, BUT IT MAY WELL BE TOLD.
K. RICH. HOVYDAY, A RIDDLE! NEITHER GOOD NOR BAD!
ACT V.

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE III.

'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms.
Yet this good comfort bring I to your grace,
The Breton navy is dispersed by tempest:
Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks
If they were his assistants, yea or no:
Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham.
Upon his party: he, mistrusting them,
Routed sail and made away for Brittany.

K. Rich. March on, march on, for we are up in
If not to fight with foreign enemies,
Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Re-enter Catesby.

Cate. My liege, the Duke of Buckingham is taken;
That is the best news: that the Earl of Richmond
Is with a mighty power landed at Milford,
Colder tidings, yet they must be told.

K. Rich. A way towards Salisbury! while we read
A royal battle might be won and lost: [son here, some one take order Buckingham be brought To Salisbury; the rest march on with me.

[Vibrish. Exeunt.

In your embowell'd bosoms, this foul swine
Lies now even in the centre of this isle,
Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:
From Tamworth this is but one day's march.
In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Oxf. Every man's conscience is a thousand swords,
To fight against that bloody homicide.

Herb. I doubt not but his friends will fly to us.

Blunt. He hath no friends but who are friends for fear,
Which in his greatest need will shrink from him.

Richm. All for our vantage. Then, in God's name, march:
True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

SCENE III. — Bosworth Field.

Enter King Richard in arms, with Norfolk, the Earl of Surrey, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bos-
My Lord of Surrey, why look you so sad? [worth field.

Surr. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.

K. Rich. My Lord of Norfolk,—

Nor. Here, most gracious liege.

K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knockes; ha! must we not?

Nor. We must both give and take, my gracious

K. Rich. Up with my tent there! here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow? Well, all 's one for that.
Who hath descried the number of the foe?

Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.

K. Rich. Why, our battalion trebles that account:
Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,
Which they upon the adversary part want.
Up with my tent there! Valiant gentlemen,
Let us survey the vantage of the field;
Call for some men of sound direction:
Let's want no discipline, make no delay;
For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day.

Enter, on the other side of the field, Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and others. Some of the Soldiers pitch Richmond's tent.

Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a good day to-morrow.
Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.
Give me the roll and page in my tent:
I'll draw the form and model of our battle,
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small strength.
My Lord of Oxford, you, Sir William Brandon,
And you, Sir Walter Herbert, stay with me.

The Earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment:
Good Captain Blunt, bear my good-night to him,
And by the second hour in the morning
Desire the earl to see me in my tent:
Yet one thing more, good Blunt, before thou go'st,
Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, dost thou know?
Blunt. Unless I have mista'en his colours much,
When well I am assured I have not done,
His regiment lies half a mile at least
South from the mighty power of the king.

Rich. If without peril it be possible,
Good Captain Blunt, bear my good-night to him,
And give him from me this most needful scroll.
Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it;
And so, God give you quiet rest to-night!
Rich. Good-night, good Captain Blunt. Come, gentlemen,
Let us consult upon to-morrow's business:
In to our tent; the air is raw and cold.

Enter, to his tent, King Richard, Norfolk, Ratcliff, Catesby, and others.

K. Rich. What is 't o'clock?
Cate. It's supper-time, my lord;
'Tis nine o'clock.
K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.
Give me some ink and paper.
What, is my beaver easier than it was?
And all my armour laid into my tent?
[Note: Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.
K. Rich. Good Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge;
Use careful watch, watch trusty sentinels.
Nor. I, go, my lord.[N. Norfolk.
K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow, gentle Nor.
I warrant you, my lord.
K. Rich. Catesby! Cate. My lord?
K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
Before surprising, lest his son George fall
Into the blind cage of eternal night. [Exit Catesby.
Fill me a bowl of wine. Give me a watch.
Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.
Look that my steaves be sound, and not too heavy.

Ratcliff! Rat. My lord? [Exeunt Ratcliff and the other Attendants.

Enter Derby to Richmond in his tent, Lords and others attending.

Der. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!
Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford
Be to thy person, noble father-in-law!
Tell me, how fares our loving mother?
Der. I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother,
Who prays continually for Richmond's good:
So much for that. The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.
In brief,—for so the season bids us be,—
Prepare thy beds, and early in the morning,
And put thy fortune to the arbitrament
Of bloody strokes and mortal-staring war.
I, as I may—that which I would I cannot,—
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms:
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy brother, tender George,
Be executed in his father's sight.

Farewell; the leisure and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love
And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
Which so long sizzer'd friends should dwell upon:
God give us leisure for these rites of love!
Once more, adieu: be valiant, and speed well!
Rich. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment:
I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap,
Lest leaden slumber seize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory:
Once more, good-night, kind lords and gentlemen.
[Exeunt all but Richmond.

O Thou, whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye;
Put in their hands thy bruising iron of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in the victory!
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping and waking, O, defend me still! [Sleeps.

Enter the Ghost of Prince Edward, son to Henry the Sixth.

Ghost. [To Richmond] Let me sit heavy on thy soul
— to-morrow!
Think, how thou stab'dst me in my prime of youth
At Tewksbury: despair, therefore, and die! [To Richmond] Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wronged souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

Enter the Ghost of Henry the Sixth.

Ghost. [To Richmond] When I was mortal, my unointed body
By thee was punctured full of deadly holes;
Think on the Tower and me: despair, and die! [To Richmond] Be of good cheer, Richmond; for the wronged souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

Enter the Ghost of Clarence.

Ghost. [To Richmond] Let me sit heavy on thy soul— to-morrow!
I, that was slay'd to death with fulsome wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guile betrayed to death!
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword: despair, and die!— [To Richmond] Thou offspring of the house of Lan-
The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee: [sweat, Good angels guard thy battle: live, and flourish!

Enter the Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan.

Ghost of R. [To Richmond] Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow,
Rivers, that died at Pomfret: despair, and die!
Ghost of G. [To Richmond] Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

Ghost of V. [To Richmond] Think upon Vaughan, and, with guilty fear,
Let fall thy lance: despair, and die! [All. [To Richmond] Awake, and think our wrongs in Richmond's bosom
Will conquer him! awake, and win the day!
Enter the Ghost of Hastings.

Ghosts. [To Richard] Bloody and guilty, guiltily
And in a bloody battle end thy days; awake,
Think on Lord Hastings: despair, and die!
[To Richmond] Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!
Arms, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

Enter the Ghosts of the two young Princes.

Ghosts. [To Richard] Dream on thy cousins
sweater'd in the Tower:
Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard.
And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death!
Pity now's souls bid thee despair and die!
[To Richmond] Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace,
And wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy!
Live, and beget a happy race of kings!
Edward's unhappy sons do bid theeflower.

Enter the Ghost of Lady Anne.

Ghosts. [To Richard] Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,
That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:
To me, Lord; I have your death on my heart,
And fill thy edgeless sword: despair, and die!
[To Richmond] Thou quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet
Dream of success and happy victory! [sleep;
Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

Enter the Ghost of Buckingham.

Ghosts. [To Richard] The first was I that helped thee
The least I was that felt thy tyranny: [to the crown;
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness!
Dream on, dream on, of bloody deaths and death:
Pity now's souls bid thee despair and die!
[To Richard] I died for hope ere I could lend thee
But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd: [aid;
God and good angels fight on Richmond's side;
And Richard falls in height of all his pride.
[The Ghosts vanish. King Richard starts out of his dream.

K. Rich. Give me another horse: bind up my wounds.
Have mercy, Jesu!—Soft! I did but dream.
O coward conscience, how dost thou afflicthe me!
The lights burn blue. It is now dead midnight.
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
What do I fear? myself? there's none else by:
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
Is there a murderer here? No. Yes, I am:
Then fly. What, from myself? Great reason why:
Lest I revenge. What, myself upon myself?
Alack, I love myself. Wherefore? for any good
That I myself have done unto myself?
O, no! alas, I rather hate myself For hateful deeds committed by myself!
I am a villain: yet I live, I am not.
Fool, of myself speak well: fool, do not flatter.
My conscience hath a thousand carding tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.
Perjury, perjury, in the highest degree;
Murder, stern murder, in the direst degree;
All several sins, all used in each degree,
Thro'out the land, crying all, Guilty! guilty!
I shall despair. There is no creature loves me;
And if I die, no soul shall pity me:
Nay, wherefore should they, since that I myself
Find in myself no pity to myself?
Methought the souls of all that I had murder'd
Came unto my tent; and every one did threaten
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliff.

Rat. Ratcliff, my lord! 'tis I. The early village-
Hath twice done salutation to the morn; flock
Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour.
K. Rich. O Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream!
What is the test thou, will our friends prove all true?
Rat. No doubt, my lord?
K. Rich. O Ratcliff, I fear, I fear.—
Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows.
K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers
Armed in full array, and upon: yet remember me.
It is not yet near day. Come, go with me;
Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To see if any mean to shrink from me. [Exeunt.

Enter the Lords to Richmond, sitting in his tent.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond!
Richm. Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.
Lords. How have you slept, my lord? [dreams
Richm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding
That ever enter'd in a drowsy head,
Have I, I think, in the battle of Richmond. fuder,
Methought their souls, whose bodies Richard mur-
Came to my tent, and cried on victory;
I promise you, my soul is very jocund
In the remembrance of so fair a dream.
How far into the morning is it, lords?
Lords. Upon the stroke of four. [O.ion.
Richm. Why, then 'tis time to arm and give directions to his soldiers.
More than I have said, loving countrymen,
The leisure and enforcement of the time.
Forbids to dwell upon: yet remember this,
God and our good cause fight upon our side;
The prayers of holy saints and wronged souls,
Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces;
Richard except, those whom we fight against
Had rather have us win than them they follow:
For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant and a homicide;
One raised in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made means to come by what he hath.
And slaughter'd those that were the means to help
A base foil stone, made precious by the foil [him;
Of England's chair, where he is falsely set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy;
Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
God will in justice ward you as his soldiers;
If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
If you do fight against your country's foes,
Your country's fat shall you pay the pangs the hire;
If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conqueror;
If you do free your children from the sword,
Your children's children quit it in your age.
Then, in the name of God and all these rights,
Advance your standards, draw your willing swords.
For me, the ransom of my bold attempt
Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;
But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound drums and trumpets boldly and cheerfully;
God and Saint George! Richmond and victory! [Exeunt.

Re-enter King Richard, Ratcliff, Attendants and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland as touching Richmond?
Rat. That he was never trained up in arms.
K. Rich. He said the truth: and what said Surrey then? [pose.
Rat. He smiled and said 'The better for our pur-
KING RICHARD III.

ACT V.

SCENE V.

K. Rich. He was in the right; and so indeed it is. [Clock strikes.]

Tell the clock there. Give me a calendar. Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord. [Book to be open.]

K. Rich. Then he disdain'd to shine; for by the
He should have braved the east an hour ago:
A black day will it be to somebody.

Ratcliff!

Rat. My lord?

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day;
The sky doth frown and lour upon our army.

We should have ventured more from the ground.
Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me
More than to Richmond? for the selfsame heaven
That frowns on me looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the field.

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle; caparison my horse.

Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power:
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered:
My foremost out all will be drawn in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot.
Our archers shall be placed in the midst:
John Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.
They thus directed, we will follow
In the main battle, whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot! What think'st thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.

This found I on my tent this morning.

[He sheweth him a paper.]

K. Rich. [Reads] 'Jockey of Norfolk, be not too
For Dickon thy master is bought and sold.' [bold,
A thing devised by the enemy.
Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge:
Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls:
Conscience is but a word that cowards use,
Devised at first to keep the strong in awe:
Our strong arms be our conscience, their words our law.
March on, join bravely, let us to 't'pell-shell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.

His oration to his army.

What shall I say more than I was conferr'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withal;
A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways,
A scum of Bretons, and base huckey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assured destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring to you unrest;
You having lands, and blest with bounteous wives,
They would restrain the one, distress the other.
And who doth lead them but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost?
A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the sea again;
Lash hence these overweening rags of France,
These fainth's beggars, weary of their lives;
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd them—If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us, [selves; And not these bastard Bretons; whom our fathers Have in their valiant, beaten, hubb'd, and thumped, And in record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?
Ravish our daughters? [Drum after off.] Hark! I hear their drum.

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen! Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head! Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood; Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!

Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley? will he bring his power?

Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off with his son George's head!

Nor. My lord, the enemy is past the marsh:
After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are gone within my Advance our standards, set upon our foes: [bason; Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George, Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons! Upon them! Victory sits on our helms. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Another part of the field.

Alarum: excursions. Enter Norfolk and forces fighting; to him Catesby.

Cate. Rescue, my Lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescue!
The king enacts more wonders than a man,
During an opposite to every danger:
His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights.
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death.
Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarums. Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cate. Withdraw, my lord; I'll help you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die:
I think there be six Richmonds in the field;
Five have I slain to-day instead of him.
A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Another part of the field.

Alarum. Enter Richard and Richmond; they fight.

Rich. is slain. Read and flourish, Enter Richmond, Derby bearing the crown, with divers other Lords.

Richm. God and your arms be praised, victorious
The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead. [friends;

Der. Courageous Richmond, well last thou acquit
Lo, here, this long-usurped royalty
From the dead temples of this bloody wretch
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal;
Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say Amen to all!
But, tell me, is young George Stanley living?

Der. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town;
Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us.

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births:
Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled
That in submission will return to us:
And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose and the red:

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,
That long have frown'd upon their enmity!
What traitor hears me, and says not amen?

England hath long been mad, and scar'd herself;
The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,
The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,
The son, compell'd, butcher to the sire:

All this divided York and Lancaster,
Divided in their dire division,
O, now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
The true successors of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!
And let their heirs, God, if they will be so,
Enrich the time to come with smooth-faced peace.

With smiling plenty and fair prosperous days!
Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody days again,
And make poor England weep in streams of blood!

Let them not live to taste this land's increase
That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!
Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again:
That she may long live here, God say amen! [Exeunt.

THE PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh: things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow;
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow;
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it. Such as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too. Those that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree
The play may pass, if they be still and willing,
I'll undertake may see away their shilling
Richly in two short hours. Only they
That come to hear a merry bawdy play,
A noise of targets, or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat guarded with yellow,
Will be deceived; for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,
To make that only true we now intend,
Will leave us never an understanding friend.
Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make ye: think ye see
The very persons of our noble story
As they were living: think you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng and sweat
Of thousand friends; then in a moment, see
How soon this mightiness meets misery:
And, if you can be merry then, I'll say
A man may weep upon his wedding-day.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — London. An antechamber in the palace.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk at one door; at the other, the Duke of Buckingham and the Lord Abergavenny.

Buck. Good morrow, and well met. How have Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace,
Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely age
Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber when
Those suns of glory, those two lights of men,
Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. Twixt Guynes and Arde: I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four throned ones could
Such a compounded one?

ACT I.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I.

_Buck._

All the while
I was my chamber's prisoner.

_Nor._

Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: men might say,
Till this time pomp was single, but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Because the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders its. To-day the French, All else, all in gold, like heath gods, Shone down the English; and, to-morrow, they Made Britain India: every man that stood Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As churlsins, all gilt; the madams too,
Not used to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that the very labour
Was to them as a painting: now this masque
Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As presence did present them; him in eye,
Still him in praise; and, being present both,
'T was said they saw but one; and no discerner
Durst wag his tongue in censure. When these suns—
For so they phrase 'em — by their heralds challenged
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous
Being now seen possible enough, got credit, [story,
That This was believed.

_Buck._

O, you go far.

_Nor._

As I belong to worship and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discoursor lose some life,
Which action's self was tongue to.
All was royal;
To the disposing of it nought rebel'd,
Order gave each thing view; the office did
Distinctly his full function.

_Buck._

Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

_Nor._

One, certes, that promises no element
In such a business.

_Buck._

I pray you, who, my lord?

_Nor._

All this was order'd by the good discretion
Of the right reverend Cardinal of York.

_Buck._

The devil sped him! no man's pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. What had he to do in these fierce vanities? I wonder
That such a keech can with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun
And keep it from the earth.

_Nor._

Surely, sir,
There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends;
For, being not prop'd by ancestry, whose grace
Chafes successors their way, nor call'd upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assistants; but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note,
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys
A place next to the king.

_Aber._

I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him,—let some graver eye
 Pierce into that; but I can see his pride [that,
Peep through each part of him: whence has he
If not from hell? the devil is a niggar,
Or buck, not ruffian. He begins
A new hell in himself.

_Buck._

Why the devil,
Upon this French going out, took he upon him,
Without the privity o' the king, to appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the file
Of all his last part such,
To whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon: and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out,
Must fetch him in the papers.

_Aber._

I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

_Buck._

O, many
Have broke their backs with laying manors on 'em
For this great journey. What did this vanity
But minister communication of
A most poor issue?

_Nor._

Grievingly I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it.

_Buck._

Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspired; and, not consulting,
Broke into a general prophecy: That this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on 't.

_Nor._

Which is bidden out;
For France hath flawl'd the league, and hath
Our merchants' goods at Bordours. [tach'd
_Aber._

Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenced?

_Nor._

Marry, 't is.
_Aber._

A proper title of a peace; and purchased
At a superfluous-rate!

_Buck._

Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.

_Nor._

Like it your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you—
And take it from a heart that wishes towards you
Honour and plenteous safety — that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency
Together: to consider further that
What his high hatred would effect wants not
A minster in his power. You know his nature,
That he's revengeful, and I know his sword
Hath a sharp edge: it's long and, 't may be said,
It reaches far, and where 't will not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel, [rock
You'll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that
That I advise you shunning.

Enter Cardinal Welsey, the purse borne before him, certains of the Guard, and two Secretaries with papers. The Cardinal in his passage fixeth his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham, on him, both full of disdain.

_Wol._

The Duke of Buckingham's surveyor, ha? Where's his examination?

_First Secr._

Here, so please you.

_Wol._

Is he in person ready?

_First Secr._

Ay, please your grace.

_Wol._

We'll, we shall then know more; and Buckingham shall lessen this big look.

_Fingham (Ezraunt Welsey and his Train._

_Buck._

This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I have not the power to muzzle him; therefore best Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book Outworths a noble's blood.

_Nor._

What, are you chafed? Ask God for temperance; that's the appliance only
Which your disease requires.

_Buck._

I read in's looks Matter against me; and his eye reviled
Me, as his aibject object: at this instant
He bores me with some trick; he's gone to the king; I'll follow and outstare him.

_Nor._

Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your choleric question
What 't is you go about: to climb steep hills
Requires slow pace at first: anger is like
A full-hot horse, who being w'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England
Can advise me like you; be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

_Buck._

I'll to the king;
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down

457
ACT I. KING HENRY VIII. SCENE II.

This Ipswich fellow's insolence; or proclaim
There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advised; heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it do singe yourself: we may outrun,
By vifiting the country, that we run at,
And lose by over-rusting. Know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't run o'er,
In seeming to augment it wastes it? Be advised:
I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself,
If with the sum of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir, I am thankful to you; and I'll go along
By your prescription; but this top-prod fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not but
From sincere motions, by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as fountains in July when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not 'treasonous.

Buck. To the king I'll say 't; and make my vouch as strong
As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
Or wolf, or both,—for he is equal ravenous
As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief
As able to perform 't; his mind and place
Infesting one another, yea, reciprocally—
Only to show his pomp as well in France
As here at home, suggests the king our master
To this last costly treaty, the interview,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' the rising.

Nor. Faith, and so did it.

Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning
The articles o' the combination drew [cardinal
As himself pleased; and they were ratified
As he cried 'Thus let be!': to as much end
As give a crutch to the dead: but our count-cardinal
Has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy Wolsey,
Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,—
Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
To the old dam, treason.—Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,—
For 't was indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey,—here makes visitation:
His fears were, that the interview betwixt
England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menaced him: he privily
Deals with our cardinal; and, as I trow,—
Which I do well; for I am sure the emperor
Faid ere he promised; whereby his suit was granted
Ere it was ask'd; but when the way was made,
And paved with gold, the emperor thus desired,
That he would please to alter the king's course,
And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know,
As soon he shall by me, that thus the cardinal
Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in 't.

Buck. No, not a syllable: I do pronounce him in that very shape
He shall appear in proof.

Enter Brandon, a Sergeant-at-arms before him,
and two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Ser. Sir, my lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earl
Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I
Arrest thee of high treason, in the name
Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo, you, my lord, the net has fall'n upon me! I shall perish
Under device and practice.

Bran. I am sorry
To see you tu'en from liberty, to look on
The business present: 't is his highness' pleasure
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whitest part black. The will of
Be done in this and all things! I obey. [heaven
O my Lord Abergavenny, fare you well!
Buck. Nay, he must bear you company.
The king
To Abergavenny.

Is pleased you shall to the Tower, till you know
How he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd!

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The king to attach Lord Montacute; and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car,
One Gilbert Peek, his chancellor,—

Buck. So, so;
Theem are the limbs o' the plot; no more, I hope.
Buck. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins?
Buck. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal
Hath show'd him gold; my life is span'd already:
I am the comforter of poor Buckingham,
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on,
By darkening my clear sun. My lord, farewell.

Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. The council-chamber.

Cornets. Enter the King, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder, the Nobles, and Sir Thomas Lovell; the Cardinal places himself under the King's feet on his right side.

King. My life itself, and the best heart of it.

Cornets. Enter Queen Katherine, ushered by the Duke of Norfolk, and the Duke of Suffolk: she kneels. The King riseth from his state, takes her up, kisses and placed her by him.

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a suitor.

King. Arise, and take place by us: half your suit
Never name to us; you have half our power;
The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;
Repeat your will and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty.

That you would love yourself, and in that love
Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point
Of my petition.

King. Lady mine, proceed.

Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: there have been commissions
Sent down among them, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties: wherein, although,
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter on
Of these exactions, yet the king our master—
Whose honour heaven shield from soil!—even he escapes not
Language unmanners, yea, such which breaks
The sides of loyalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,
It doth appear; for, upon these taxations, The clothiers all, not able to maintain The payment to them long-continued, are, The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who, Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger And lack of other means, in desperate manner During the event to the teeth, are all in uproar, And danger serves among them.

K. "Taxation! Wherein? and what taxation? My lord cardinal, You that are blamed for it alike with us, Know you of this taxation?"

W. "Please you, sire, I know but of a single part, in aught Pertains to the state; and front but in that file Where others tell steps with me.

Q. Kath. "No, my lord, You know no more than others; but you frame [some Things that are known alike; which are not whole To those which would not know them, and yet must Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions, Whereof my sovereign would have note, they are Most pestilent to the hearing; and, to bear 'em, The back is sacrifice to the load. They say They are devised by you; or else you suffer Too hard an exclamation.

K. "Still exaction! The nature of it? in what kind, let's know, Is this exaction?"

Q. Kath. "I am much too venturesome In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd Under your promised pardon. The subjects' grief Comes through commissions, which compel from The sixth part of his substance, to be levied [each Without delay; and the pretence for this [mouths: Is named, your wars in France: this makes bold Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze Allegiance in them; their curses now Live where their prayers did: and it's come to pass, This tractable obedience is a slave To each incensed will. I would your highness Would give it quick consideration, for There is no primer business.

K. "This is against our pleasure.

W. "And for me, I have no further gone in this than by A single voice; and that not pass'd me but By learned approbation of the judges. If I am Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither know My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing, let me say'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake That virtue must go through. We must not stint Our necessary actions, in the fear To cope malicious censurers; which ever, As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow That is new-trimm'd, but benefit no further Than vainly longing. What we oft do best, By sick interpreters, one sense work on; is Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft, Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up For our best act. If we shall stand still, In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at, We should take root here where we sit, or sit Statured staves only.

K. Things done well, And with a care, exempt themselves from fear; Things done without example, in their issue Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent Of this commission? I believe, not any. We must not bend our faculties to fear's claws, And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each? A trembling contribution! Why, we take From every tree top, bark, and part of the timber; And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd, The air will drink the sap. To every county

Where this is question'd send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has deigned The force of this commission: pray, look to't; I put it to your care.

W. "A word with you...

[To the Secretary."

L. "Let there be letters writ to every shire, Of the king's grace and pardon. The grieved Comfortably of me; let it be noised [mons That through our intercession this revolvement And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you Further in the proceeding.

Q. Kath. "I am sorry that the Duke of Buckingham Is run in your displeasure. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker; To nature none more bound; his training such, That he may furnish and instruct great teachers, And never seek for aid of himself. Yet see, When these so noble benefits shall prove Not well disposed, the mind growing once corrupt, They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly Than ever they were fair. This man so complete, Who was entoll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we, Almost with ravish'd listening, could not find His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady, Hath into monstrous habits put the graces That once were his, and is become as black As if besmirch'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear — This was his gentleman in trust — of him Things to strike honour sad. Bid him recount The fore-recited practices; whereas We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

W. "Wol. Stand forth, and with bold spirit relate what Most like a careful subject, have collected you, Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

K. "Speak freely.

S. "First, it was usual with him, every day It would infect his speech, that if the king Should without issue die, he'll carry it so To make the sceptre his: these very words I've heard him utter to his son-in-law, Lord Abergavenny: to whom by oath he menac'd Revenge upon the cardinal.

W. "Please your highness, note This dangerous conception in this point. Not friends'd by his wish, to your high person His will is most malignant; and it stretches Beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath. "My learn'd lord cardinal, Deliver all with charity.

K. "Speak on:

How ground'd he his title to the crown, Upon our fall? to this point hast thou heard him At any time speak aught?

S. "He was brought to this By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. "What was that Hopkins?

S. "Sir, a Chartreux friar, His confessor; who fed him every minute With words of sovereignty.

K. "How know'st thou this?

S. "Not long before your highness spake to France, The duke being at the Rose, within the parish Saint Lawrence Poultnay, did of me demand What was the speech among the Londoners Concerning the French journey: I replied, Men fear'd the French would prove pernicious, To the king's danger. Presently the duke Said, 'it was the fear of the French, and that he doubted 'T would prove the verity of certain words Spoke by a holy monk: 'that off,' says he, 'Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit John de la Car, my chaplain, a choice hour To hear from him a matter of some moment:
Whom after under the confession's seal
He solemnly had sworn, that what he spoke
My chaplain to no creature living, but
To me, should utter, with demure confidence
This was rudely ensued: Neither the king nor his heirs,
Tell you the duke, shall prosper; bid him strive
To gain the love o' the commonalty: the duke
Shall govern England.'

Q. Kath. 'If I know you well,
You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
On the complaint o' the tenants: take good heed
You charge not in your spleen a noble person
And spoil your nobler soul: I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.

King. Let him on.

Go forward. Sirw. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
I told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions
The monk might be deceived; and that 't was dangerous for him
To ruminate on this so far, until
It forg'd him some design, which, being believed,
It was much like to do: he answer'd, 'Tush,
It can do no damage; ' adding further.
That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
The cardinal's and Sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.

King. Ha! what, so rank? Ah ha!
There's mischief in this man: caus't thou say fur-
Sure I can, my liege. [their]

King. Proceed.

Sirw. Being at Greenwich,
About your highness had reproved the duke
About Sir William Blomer,—

King. I remember
Of such a time; being my sworn servant.
The duke retain'd him his. But on; what hence?
Sirw. 'If', quoth he, 'I for this had been com-
mitt'd,
As, to the Tower, I thought, I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
The usurper Richard; who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in's presence: which if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
Have put his knife into him.

King. A giant traitor!

Sirw. Now, madam, may his highness live in free-and is man out of prison? [glom,
Q. Kath. God mend all!

King. There's something more would out of thee;
what say'st?
Sirw. After 'the duke his father,' with 'the
He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on 's breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
Was,—were he evil used, he would outgo
His father by as much as a performance
Does an irreproachable purpose.

King. There's his period,
To sheathe his knife in us. He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial: if he may
Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not seek 't of us; by day and night.
'Em traitor to the height.

Exeunt.

SCENE III. — An antechamber in the palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain and Lord Sands.

Cham. Is't possible the spells of France should Men into such strange mysteries? [juggle
Sands. They be never so ridiculous.

Cham. Nay, let 'em be unmanly, yet are follow'd.

Sands. As far as I see, all the good our English
Have got by the late voyage is but merely
A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones;
For when they hold 'em, you would swear directly
Their very noses had been counsellors
To Pepin or Clotharius, they keep state so.

Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones:
One would take it,
That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin
Or springhalt reign'd among 'em.

Cham. Death! my lord,
Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,
That, sure, they've worn out Christendom.

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell. How now!

The news, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Lov. Faith, my lord,
I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.

Cham. What is it for?

Lov. The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.

Cham. I'm glad 't is there; now I would pray our monseirs
To think an English courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louvre.

Lov. They must either,
For so run the conditions, leave those remnants
Of fool and feather that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance
Pertaining thereunto, as fights and fireworks,
Abusing better men than they can be,
Out of a foreign wisdom, renouncing clean
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bluster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understand again like honest men;
Or pack to their old playfellows; there, I take it,
They may, 'cum privilegio,' wear away
The lag end of their levendness and be laugh'd at.
Sands. 'T is time to give 'em physic, their dis-
Are grown so catching.

[Exeunt.

What a loss our ladies
Will have of these trim vanities!

Loc. Ay, marry,
There will be woe indeed, lords: the sly whoresons
Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song and a fiddle has no fellow.

Sands. The devil fiddle 'em! I am glad they are Going.

For, sure, there's no converting of 'em: now
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song
And have an hour of hearing; and, by t' lady,
Held current music too.

Cham. Well said, Lord Sands;
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

No, my lord;
Nor shall not, while I have a stump.

Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a-going?

Loc. To the cardinal's:
Your lordship is a guest too.

Cham. O, 't is true:
This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
To many lords and ladies; there will be
The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.

Loc. That churchman bears a bounteous mind
Indeed.
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dews fall every where.

Cham. No doubt he's noble;
He had a black mouth that said other of him.

Sands. He may, my lord; has wherewithal: in him
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine:
Men of his way should be most liberal;
They are set here for examples.

Cham. True, they are so;
But few now give so great ones. My barge stays:
Your lordship shall along. Come, good Sir Thomas,
ACT I.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE IV. — A Hall in York Place.

Hautboys. A small table under a state for the Cardinal, a longer table for the guests. Then enter Anne Bullen and divers other Ladies and Gentlemen as guests, at one door; at another door, enter Sir Henry Guildford.

Gild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace, Salutes ye all; this night he dedicates To fair content and you: none here, he hopes, In all this noble bery, has brought with her One care abroad; he would have all as merry As, first, good company, good wine, good welcome, Can make good people. O, my lord, you're tardy:

Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord Sands, and Sir Thomas Lovell.

The very thought of this fair company Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Harry Guildford.

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal But half my lay thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested, I think would better please 'em: by my life, They are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lov. O, that your lordship were but now confessor To one or two of these!

Sands. They should find easy penance.

Lov. Faith, how easy?

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry, Place you that side; I'll take the charge of this: His grace is entering. Nay, you must not freeze; Two women placed together makes cold weather: My Lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em wakening; Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith, And thank your lordship. By your leave, sweet ladies: If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me; I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?

Sands. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too: But he would bite none; just as I do now, He would kiss you twenty with a breath.

Cham. Well said, my lord. So, now you're fairly seated. Gentlemen, The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure, Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal Wolsey, and takes his state.

Wol. You're welcome, my fair guests: that noble Or gentleman, that is not freely merry, [lady, Is not my friend: this, to confirm my welcome; And to you all, good health. [Drinks.

Sands. Your grace is noble: Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks, And save me so much talking.

Wol. My Lord Sands, I am beholding to you: cheer your neighbours.

Ladies, you are not merry: gentlemen, Whose fault is this?

Sands. The red wine first must rise In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamester,

My Lord Sands.

Sands. Yes, if I make my play.

Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam, For 't is to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot show me.

Sands. I told your grace they would talk anon.

Wol. [Drawn and trumpet, chambers discharged.

What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of ye. [Exit Servant.

Wol. What warlike voice, And to what end, is this? Nay, ladies, fear not; By all the laws of war you're privileged.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now! what is't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers; For so they seem: they've left their large and landed; And hither make, as great ambassadors From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain, Go, give 'em welcome; you can speak the French tongue; And, pray, receive 'em nobly, and conduct 'em Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty Shall shine at full upon them. Some attend him.

[Exit Chamberlain, attended. All rise, and tables removed.

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it.

A good digestion to you all: and once more I shewer a welcome on ye; welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the King and others, as musiquers, habited like shepherds, ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures? [pray'd Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they To tell your grace, that, having heard by fame Of this so noble and so fair assembly This night to meet here, they could do no less, Out of the great respect they bear to beauty, But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct, Crave leave to view these ladies and entreat An hour of revels with 'em.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain, They have done my poor house grace; for which I pay' em [tunes. A thousand thanks, and pray 'em take their pleasure. [They choose Ladies for the dance. The King chooses Anne Bulben.

Wol. My lord!

Cham. Your grace?

Wol. Pray, tell 'em thus much from me: There should be one amongst 'em, by his person, More worthy this place than myself; to whom, If I but knew him, with my love and duty I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.

Wol. [Whispers the Musiquers.

What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess, There is indeed; which they would have your grace Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see, then, By all your good leaves, gentlemen; here I'll make My royal choice.

King. Ye have found him, cardinal; [Unmasking.

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord: You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal, I should judge now unhappily.

Wol. I am glad Your grace is grown so pleasant.

King. My lord chamberlain, Pr thee, come hither: what fair lady's that?

Cham. Ain't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bul len's daughter,— 491

The Viscount Rochford,—one of her highness' women.

King. By heaven, she is a dainty one. Sweet-heart, I was unmanfully, to take you out, and not to kiss you. A health, gentlemen! Let us go round.

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready? I' the privy chamber?

Loo. Yes, my lord. Your grace,

I fear, with dancing is a little heated.

ACT II.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

First Gent. Whither away so fast?

Sec. Gent. O, God save ye! Even to the hall, to hear what shall become Of the great Duke of Buckingham.

First Gent. I' ll save you That labour, sir. All 's now done, but the ceremony Of bringing back the prisoner.

Sec. Gent. Were you there?

First Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.

Sec. Gent. Pray, speak what has happen'd.

First Gent. You may guess quickly what.

Sec. Gent. Is he found guilty?

First Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon't.

Sec. Gent. I am sorry for't.

First Gent. So are a number more.

Sec. Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?

First Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke Came to the bar sent thither to his accusations He pleaded still not guilty and alleged Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney on the contrary Urged on the examinations, proofs, confessions Of divers witnesses: which the duke desired To have brought vivâ vocis to his face: At which appear'd against him hissurveyor; Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor; and John Car, Confessor to him; with that devil-monk, Hopkins, that made this mischief.

Sec. Gent. That fed him with his prophecies? That was he.

First Gent. The same.

All these accused him strongly: which he fain Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could And so his peers, upon this evidence, not: Have found him guilty of high treason. Much He spoke, and learnedly, for life: but all Was either pitted in him or forgotten.

Sec. Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?

First Gent. When he was brought again to the bar, to hear His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd With such an agony, he sweat extremely, And something spoke in cholera, ill, and hasty: But he fell to himself again, and sweetly In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.

Sec. Gent. I do not think he fears death.

First Gent. Sure, he does not: He never was so womanish; the cause

He may a little grieve at.

Sec. Gent. Certainly

The cardinal is the end of this.

First Gent. 'Tis likely, By all conjectures: first, Kildare's attainer, Then deputy of Ireland; who removed, Earl Surrey the bar sent thither to his accusations, Lest he should help his father.

Sec. Gent. That trick of state

Was a deep envious one.

First Gent. At his return No doubt he will requite it. This is noted, And generally, whoever the king favours, The cardinal instantly will find employment, And far enough from court too.

Sec. Gent. All the commons Hate him perniciously, and, 'o my conscience, Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much They love and hate on: call him bounteous Buck. The mirror of all courtesy: — [Exeunt with trumpets.

Enter Buckingham from his arraignment; tipstaffs before him; the axe with the edge towards him; halberds on each side: accompanied with Sir Thomas Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir William Sands, and common people.

Sec. Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him. Buck, All good people, You think thus far have come to pit me, Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me. I have this day received a traitor's judgment, [norrss, And by that name must die: yet, heaven bear wit- And if I have a conscience, let it sink me, Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful! The law I bear no malice for my death; 'T has done, upon the premises, but justice: But those that sought it I could wish more Chris- Be what they will, I heartily forgive 'em: [mains: Yet let 'em look they glory not in mischief, Nor build their evils on the graves of great men; For then my guiltless blood must cry against 'em. For further life in this world I ne'er hope, Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies More than I dare make faults. You few that loved And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham, [me, His noble friends and fellows, whom to leave Is only bitter to him, only dying, Go with me, like good angels, to my end; And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me, Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice, And lift my soul to heaven. Lead on, o' God's name.

Loc. I do beseech your grace, for charity, If ever any malice in your heart Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly. Buck, Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you As I would be forgiven: I forgive all; There cannot be those numberless offences [envy 'Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with: no black Shall mark my grave. Command me to his grace; And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake, Shall cry for blessings on him: may he live Longer than I have time to tell his years! Ever beloved and loving may his rule be! And when old time shall lead him to his end, Goodness and he fill up one monument! Loc. To the water side I must conduct your grace; Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux, Who undertakes you to your end.
Vaux. Prepare there, The duke is coming: see the barge be ready; And let with such furniture as suits The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas, Let it alone; my state now will but mock me. When I came hither, I was lord high constable And Duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward V. I am richer than my base accusers (Bolingbroke: That never knew what truth meant: I now seal it; And with that blood will make 'em one day groan My noble father, Henry of Buckingham, [for 't. Who first raised head against usurping Richard, Flying for succour to his servant Banister, Being thus abjured, was by that wretch betray'd, And without trial fell; God's peace be with him! Henry the Seventh succeeding, truly pitying My father's loss, like a most royal prince, Restored me to my honours; and, out of ruins, Made my name once more noble. Now his son, Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name and all That made me happy at one stroke has taken For ever from the world. I had my trial, And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me A little happier than my wretched father; Yet thus far we are one in fortunes: both Fell by our servants, by those men used most; A most unnatural and faithless service! Heaven has an end in all: yet, you that hear me, This from a dying man receive as certain: Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels Be sure you be not loose; for those you make friends And give your hearts to, when they once perceive The least rub in your fortunes, fall away Like water from ye, never found again But where they mean to sink ye. All good people, Pray for me! I must now forswake ye: the last hour Of my long weary life is come upon me. Farewell: And when you would say something that is sad, Speak how I fell. I have done; and God forgive me! [Exeunt Duke and Train.

First Gent. O, this is full of pity! Sir, it calls, I fear, too many curses on their heads That were the authors. See, sir, If the duke be guiltless, 'Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inhaling Of an ensuing evil, if it fall, Greater than this.

First Gent. Good angels keep it from us! What may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir? Sec. Gent. This secret is so weighty, 't will require A strong faith to conceal it. Let me have it; I do not talk much.

Sec. Gent. I am confident; You shall, sir: did you not of late days hear A buzzing of a separation Between the king and Katharine?

First Gent. Yes, but it held not: For when the king once heard it, out of anger He sent command to the lord mayor straight To stop the rumour, and allay those-tongues That durst disperse it.

Sec. Gent. But that slander, sir, Is found a truth now: for it grows again Fresher than e'er it was; and held for certain The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal, Or some about him, have, out of malice To the good queen, possess'd her with a scruple That will undo her: to confirm this too, Cardinal Campeius is arrived, and lately; As all think, for this business.

First Gent. 'T is the cardinal; And merely to revenge him on the emperor For not bestowing on him, at his asking, The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purposed.

Sec. Gent. I think you have hit the mark: but is 't not cruel That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal Will have his will, and she must fall.

First Gent. We are too open here to argue this; Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — An antechamber in the palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a letter.

Cham. 'My lord, the horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young and handsome, and would bear the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission and main power, took 'em from me; with this reason: His master would be served before a subject, if not before the king; which stopped our mouths, sir.'

I fear he will indeed: well, let him have them: He will have all, I think.

Enter, to the Lord Chamberlain, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Nor. Well met, my lord chamberlain.

Cham. Good day to both your graces.

Suf. How is the king employ'd?

Cham. I left him private, Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?

Cham. It seems the marriage with his brother's Has crept too near his conscience;

wife

No, his conscience Has crept too near another lady.

Nor.

'Tis so: This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal: That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune, Turns what he list. The king will know him one day.

Suf. Pray God he do! he'll never know himself else.

Nor. How Hollie he works in all his business! And with what zeal! for, now he has crack'd the league nephew Between us and the emperor, the queen's great He divests into the king's soul, and there scatters Dangers, plots, writing of the conscience, Fears, and despair; and all these for his marriage: And out of all these to restore the king, He counsels a divorce; a loss of her That, like a jewel, has hung twenty years About his neck, yet never lost her lustre; Of her that loves him with that excellence That angels love good men with; even of her That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls, Will bless the king: and is not this course pious? Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'T is most true

These news are everywhere; every tongue speaks And every true heart weeps for 't: all that dare Look into these affairs see this main end, The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon This bold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray, And heartily, for our deliverance; Or this imperious man will work us all From princes into pages: all men's honours Lie like one lump before him, to be fashioned into what pitch he please.

Suf. For me, my lords, I love him not, nor fear him: there's my creed: As I am made without him, so I'll stand, If the king please; his curses and his blessings Touch me alike, they're breath I not believe in. I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him To him that made him proud, the pope.
ACT II.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE III.

Nor.  Let's in;
And with some other business put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
My lord, you 'll bear us company?  [hin
[Exit.

Cham.  Excuse me;
The king has sent me otherwho: besides,
You 'll find a most unfit time to disturb him:
Health to your lordships.

Nor.  Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain; and the King draws the curtain, and sits reading pensively.

Suf.  How sad he looks! sure, he is much afflic't.

King.  Who 's there, ha?

Nor.  Pray God he be not angry.

King.  Who 's there, I say? How dare you thrust
Into my private meditations?  [yourselves
Who am I? ha?

Nor.  A gracious king that pardons all offences.
Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty this way
Is business of estate; in which we come
To know your royal pleasure.

King.  Ye are too bold:
Go to; I 'll make ye know your times of business:
Is this an hour for temporal affairs, ha?

Enter Wolsey and Campeius, with a commission.

The quiet of my wounded conscience; [sey,
Thou art a cure fit for a king.  [To Camp.]
You 're welcome,
Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom:
Use us and it.  [To Wol.] My good lord, have great
I be not found a talker.  [care
Wol.  Sir, you cannot,
I would your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.

King.  [To Nor. and Suf.] We are busy; go.

Nor.  [Aside to Suf.] This priest has no pride in
Suf.  [Aside to Nor.] Not to speak of: [him?
I would not be so sick though for his place:
But this cannot continue.

Nor.  [Aside to Suf.] If it do,
I 'll venture one have-at-him.

Suf.  [Aside to Nor.] I another.  [Exit Wol. and Suf.

Wol.  Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom
Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom:
Who can be angry now? who dare heavy reach you?
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble.  All the clerks,
I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms
Have their free voices: Rome, the nurse of judg-
Invited by your noble self, hath sent [ment,
One general tongue unto us, this good man:
This just and learned priest, Cardinal Campeius;
Whom once more I present unto your highness,

King.  And once more in mine arms I bid him
welcome,
And think the holy conclave for their loves: [for.
They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd
Cam.  Your grace must needs deserve all strangers'
You are so noble. To your highness' hand [loves,
I tender my commission; by whose virtue,
The court of Rome commanding, you, my lord
Cardinal of York, are join'd with me their servant
In the impartial judging of this business.

King.  Two equal men. The queen shall be acqui-

anted
Forthwith for what you come. Where 's Gardiner?

Wol.  I know your majesty has always loved her
So dear in heart, not to deny her that
A woman of less place might ask by law:

Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her. [favour

King.  Ay, and the best she shall have; and my
To him that does best: God forbid else. Cardinal,

Prithie, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary;
I find him a fit fellow.

[Exit Wolsey.

Re-enter Wolsey, with Gardiner.

Wol.  [Aside to Gard.] Give me your hand: much joy and favour to you;
You are the king's now.

Gard.  [Aside to Wol.] But to be commanded
For ever by your grace, whose hand has raised me.

King.  Come hither, Gardiner.

Wol.  [Walks and whispers.

Cam.  My Lord of York, was not one Doctor Pace
In this man's place before him?

Wol.  Yes, he was.

Cam.  Was he not held a learned man?

Wol.  Yes, surely.

Cam.  Believe me, there 's an ill opinion spread
Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

[Then Wol.

Cam.  How! of me?
They will not stick to say you envied him,
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so grieved him,
That he ran mad and died.

Wol.  Heaven's peace be with him!
That 's Christian care enough; for living murmurers
There 's places of rebuke. He was a fool;
For he would needs be virtuous: that good fellow,
If I command him, follows my appointment:
I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,
We live not to be grip'd by meaner persons.

King.  Deliver this with modesty to the queen.

[Exit Gardiner.

The most convenient place that I can think of
For such receipt of learning is Black-Friers;
There ye shall meet about this weighty business.
My Wolsey, see it furnish'd. O, my lord,
Would it not grieve an able man to leave
So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience!
O, 't is a tender place; and I must leave her.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—An antechamber of the Queen's apartments.

Enter Anne Bullen and an Old Lady.

Anne.  Not for that neither: here's the pang that pinches:
His highness having lived so long with her, and she
So good a lady that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life,
She never knew harm-doing: O, now, after
So many courses of the sun enthroned,
Still growing in a majesty and pomp, the which
To leave a thousand-fold more bitter than
'T is sweet at first to acquire,—after this process,
To give her the avantage! it is a pity
Would move a monster.

Old L.  Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.

Anne.  O, God's will! much better
She ne'er had known pomp: though 't be temporal,
Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer, 't is a suffrance panging
As soul and body's severing.

Old L.  Alas, poor lady!
She 's a stranger now again.

Anne.  So much the more
Must pity drop upon her. Verily,
I swear, 't is better to be lowly born.
And range with humble lives in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glittering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L.  Our content
Is our best having.

Anne.  By my troth and maidenhead,
I would not be a queen.

Old L.  Beshrew me, I would,
And venture maidenhead for 't; and so would you, For all this spice of your hypocrisy: You, that have so fair parts of woman on you, Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty; Which, to say sooth, are blessings; and which gifts, Saving your gracing, the capacity Of your soft cherisht conscience would receive, If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth. Old L. Yes, troth, and troth; you would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven. Old L. 'Tis strange: a three-pence bow'd would Old as I am, to queen it: but, I pray you, [hire me, What think you of a duchess? have you limbs To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made: pluck off a I would not be a young count in your way, [little; For more than blushing comes to: if your back Cannot vouchsafe this burthen, 't is too weak Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk! I swear again, I would not be a queen For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England You 'd venture an embalming: I myself Would for Carnarvonshire, although there long'd No more to the crown but that. 'Lo, who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were't worth The secret of your conference? [to know Anne. My good lord,

Not your demand; it values not your asking: Our mistress' sorrows were we pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming The action of good women: there is hope All will be well.

Anne. Now, I pray God, amen! Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady, Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note's Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty Commends his good opinion of you, and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing Than Marchioness of Pembroke; to which title A thousand pound a year, annual support, Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know What kind of my obedience I should tender; More than my all is nothing: nor my prayers Are not words duly hallowed, nor my wishes More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers and wishes Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship, Vouchsafe to speak my thanks and my obedience, As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness; Whose health and royalty I pray for.

Cham. Lady, I will not fail to approve the fair conceit The king hath of you. [Aside] I have perus'd her Beauty and honour in her are so mingled [well; That they have caught the king: and who knows But from this lady may proceed a gem Yet to lighten all this isle? I'll to the king, And say I spoke with you. [Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Anne. My honour'd lord.

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see! I have been begging sixteen years in court, Am yet a courtier beggarly, nor could Come pat betwixt too early and too late For any suit of pounds; and you, O fate! A very fresh-dish here—fic, fic, fic upon

This compell'd fortune!—have your mouth fill'd up Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me. Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence, There was a lady once, 't is an old story, [no. That would not be a queen, that would she not, For all the mud in Egypt, do you hear it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant. Old L. With your theme, I could O'ermount the lark. The Marchioness of Pembroke! A thousand pounds a year for pure respect! No other obligation! by my life. That promises nooe thousands: honour's train Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time I know your back will bear a duchess: say, Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady, Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy, And leave me out on 't. Would I had no being, If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me, To think what follows. The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful In our long absence; pray, do not deliver What here you've heard to her.

Old L. What do you think me? [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A hall in Black-Friars.

Trumpets, senet, and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habit of doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and Saint Asaph; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a cardinal's hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman-usher bareheaded, accompanied with seven gentlemen-at-arms bearing a silver mace; then two Gentlemen bearing two great silver pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals; two Noblemen with the sword and mace. The King takes place under the clotbe of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The Queen takes place some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court, in manner of a consistory; below them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read, Let silence be commanded.

King. What's the need? It hath already publicly been read, And on all sides the authority allowed; You may, then, spare that time.

Wol. Be't so. Proceed.

Scribe. Say, Henry King of England, come into the court.

King. Here.

Scribe. Say, Katharine Queen of England, come into the court.

[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you do me right and justice; And to bestow your pity on me: for I am a most poor woman, and a stranger, Born out of your dominions; having here No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir, In what have I offended you? what cause Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure, That thus you should proceed to put me off, [mess, And take your good grace from me? Heaven with- I have been to you a true and humble wife, At all times to your will conformable; Ever in fear to kindle your dislike, Yea, subject to your countenance, glad or sorry
As I saw it inclined: when was the hour
I ever contradicted your desire,
Or made it not mine too?  Or which of your friends
Have I to love above all other I knew
He were mine enemy? what friend of mine
That had to him derived your anger, did I
Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharged?  Sir, call to mind
That I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been blest
With many children by you: if, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty,
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
Turn me away: and let the foul's contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me up
To the sharpest kind of justice.  Please you, sir,
The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand,
My father, king of Spain, was reckoned one
The wisest prince that there had reign'd by many
A year before: it is not to be question'd
That they had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business,
Who deem'd our marriage lawful: wherefore I
Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may [humbly
Be by my friends in Spain advised; whose counsel
I will implore: if not, I the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!
Wol.  You have here, lady, and
Of your choice, these reverend fathers; men
Of singular integrity and learning,
Yea, the elect o' th' land, who are assembled
To plead your cause: it shall be therefore bootless
That longer you desire the court; as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king.
Cam.  His grace hath spoken well and justly: therefore, madam,
It's fit this royal session do proceed;
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produced and heard.
Q. Kath.  Lord cardinal,
Tell to me speak.
Wol.  Your pleasure, madam?  Sir,
I am about to weep: but, thinking that
We are a queen, or long have dream'd so certain
The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll return to sparks of fire.
Wol.  Be patient yet. [fore,
Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induced by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy, and make my challenge
You shall not be my judge: for it is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me;
Which God's dew quench'd! Therefore I say again,
Utterly abhor, yea, from my soul
Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malignant foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.
Wol.  I do profess
You speak not like yourself: who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom [wrong:
Overtopping woman's power. Madam, you do me
I have no spleen against you; nor injustice
For fear I offend you: how far I have proceeded,
Or how far further shall, is warranted
By a commission from the constitory, [me
Yea, the whole constitory of Rome.  You charge
That I have blown this coal: I do deny it:
The king is present: if it be known to him
That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood! yea, as much
As you have done my truth.  If he know
That I am free of your report, he knows
I am not of your wrong.  The devil on him
It lies to cure me: and the cure is, to Remove these thoughts from you: the which before
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking
And to say so no more.
Q. Kath.  My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak [month'd;
To oppose your cunning.  You're meek and humble,
You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is crann'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune and his highness' favours,
Gone slightly o'er low steps and now are mounted,
Where powers are your retainers, and your words,
Domestics to you, serve your will as 'tis please
Yourself pronounce their office.  I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour than
Your high profession spiritual: that again
I do refuse you for my judge; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judged by him.
Cam.  [She curtsies to the King, and offers to depart.
Wol.  He is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by 't: 'tis not well.
She's going away.
Q. Kath.  Call her again. [the court.
Crier.  Katharine Queen of England, come into Crier.  Madam, you are call'd back.  [Your way:
Q. Kath.  What need you note it? pray you, keep
When you are call'd, return.  Now, the Lord help,
They vex me past my patience! Pray you, pass on:
I will not tarry; no, nor ever more.
Upon this business my appearance make
In any of their courts.
Q. Kath.  [Exeunt Queen, and her Attendants.
Q. Kath.  Go thy ways, Kate:
That man i' the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that: thou art, alone,
If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness, saint-like, win the government,
Obeying in command, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out,
The queen of earthly queens: she's noble born;
And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.
Wol.  Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears,—for where I am robb'd and bound,
There must I be unloosed, although not there
At once and fully satisfied,—whether ever I Did breach this business to your highness; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on 't? or ever
Have to you, but with thanks to God for such A royal lady, speak one the least word that might Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?
Q. Kath.  My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from 't.  You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village-curs,
Fork when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger.  You're excused:
But will you be more justifi'd? you ever [sired
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never de-
It to be stirr'd; but oft have hinder'd, oft,
The passages made toward it: on my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
With me, a poor weak woman, fall'n from favour?
I do not like their coming. Now I think on't,
They should be good men: their airs as righteous:
But all hoods make not monks.

Enter the two Cardinals, Wolsey and Campeius.

Wol. Peace to your highness!

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a house—
I would be all, against the worst may happen. [wife,
What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?
Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw
Into your private chamber, we shall give you
The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here; there's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,
Deserves a corner: would all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not, so much I am happy
Above a number, if my actions
Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw 'em,
Envoy and base opinion set against 'em,
I know my life so even. If your business
Seek me out, and that way I am wise in,
Out with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.
Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina.

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have lived in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange, suspicious,
ACT III.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I.

Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you, If you speak truth, for their poor mistress' sake; Believe me, she has had much wrong: lord cardinal, The willing'st sin I ever yet committed May be absolved in English.

Noble lady, I am sorry my integrity should breed, And service to his majesty and you, So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant. We come not by the way of accusation, To taint that honour every good tongue blesses, Nor to betray you any way to sorrow. You have too much, good lady; but to know How you stand minded in the weighty difference Between the king and you; and to deliver, Like free and honest men, our just opinions And comforts to your cause.

My Lord of York, out of his noble nature, Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace, Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure Both of his truth and him, which was too far, Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace, His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. [Aside] To betray me,— My lords, I thank you both for your good wills; Ye speak like honest men; pray God, ye prove so! But how to make ye suddenly an answer, In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,— More near my life, I fear,—with my weak wit, And to such men of gravity and learning, In truth, I know not. I was set at work Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. For her sake that I have been,—for I feel The last fit of my greatness,—good your graces, Let me have time and counsel for my cause: Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these Your hopes and friends are infinite. [jeers]

Q. Kath. In England, but little for my profit: can you think, lords, That any Englishman dare give me counsel? Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness' pleasure, Though he be grown so desperate to be honest, And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends, That they must weigh out my affections, That they my trust must grow to, live not here: They are all my only comforts, far hence In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would your grace Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir?

Cam. Put your main cause into the king's pro-

He's loving and most gracious: 't will be much Both for your honour better and your cause; For if the trial of the law o'ertake ye, You'll part away disgraced.

Wol. He tells you rightly.

Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both—is this your Christian counsel? o' out upon ye! [ruein: Heaven is above all ye; there sits a judge That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.

Q. Kath. The more shame for ye: holy men I thought ye. Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues; But cardinal sins and hollow hearts I fear ye: MEND 'em, for shame, my lords. Is this your con- The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady, [fort? A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scornd? I will not wish ye half my miseries; I bade you be charg'd: but say, I charge'd ye; Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once The burthen of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction; You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: woe upon ye And all such false professors! would you have me— If you have any justice, any pity; If ye be anything but churchmen's habits— Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me? Alas, has banish'd me his bed already His love, too long ago! I am old, my lords, And all the fellowship I hold now with him Is only my obedience. What can happen To me above this wretchedness? all your studies Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I lived thus long—let me speak myself, Since virtue finds no friends—a wife, a true one? A woman, I dare say without vain-glory, Never yet branded with suspicion? Have I with all my full affections [him? Still met the king? loved him next heaven? obey'd, Been out of fondness, superstitious to him? Almost forgot my prayers to content him? And am I thus rewarded? 't is not well, lords, Bring me a constant woman to her husband, One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure; And to the woman, where she's done most, Yet will I add an honour, a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.

Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty, To give up willingly that noble title Your master wed me to: nothing but death Shall e'er divorce my dignities. [Pray, hear me.

Wol. Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English Or felt the flatteries that grew upon it! [earth, Ye have angels' faces, but heaven knows your hearts. What will become of me now, wretched lady! I am the most unhappy woman living. Alas, poor wenches, where are now your fortunes! Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity, No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me; Almost no grave allow'd me: like the lily, That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd, I'll hang my head and perish.

Wol. If your grace Could but be brought to know our ends are honest, You 'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady, Upon what cause, wrong you? alas, our places, The way of our profession is against it: We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow 'em. For goodness' sake, consider what you do; How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this car- The hearts of princes kiss obdience, [riage. So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits They swell, and grow as terrible as storms. I know you have a gentle, noble temper, A soul as even as a calm: pray, think us [vants. Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and ser- Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues With these weak women's fears: a noble spirit, As yours was put into you, ever casts [you; Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves Beware you lose it not: for us, if you please To trust us in your business, we are ready To use our utmost studies in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: and, pray, forgive me, If I have used myself unmannishly; You know I am a woman, lacking wit To make a seemly answer to such persons. Pray, do my service to his majesty: He has my heart yet; and shall have my prayers While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers, Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs. That little thought, when she set footing here, She should have bought her dignities so dear.

[Execut.
SCENE II.—Antechamber to the King's apartment.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints, and force them with a constancy, the cardinal cannot stand under them: if you omit the offer of this time, I cannot promise but that you shall sustain new disputes, with these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful to meet the least occasion that may give me remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke, to be revenged on him.

Suf. Which of the peers have uncontro'm'd gone by him, or at least strangely neglected? when did he regard the stamp of nobleness in any person out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures: what does he deserve of you and me I know; what we can do to him, though now the time gives way to us, I much fear. If you cannot ban his access to the king, never attempt any thing on him; for he hath a witchcraft over the king in's tongue.

Nor. His spell in that is out: the king hath found matter against him that for ever mends. The honey of his language. No, he's settled, not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. I should be glad to hear such news as this once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true: in the divorce his contrary proceedings are all unfolded; wherein he appears as I would wish mine enemy.

Sur. His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O, how, how?

Suf. The cardinal's letters to the pope miscarried; and came to the eye o' the king: wherein was read, how that the cardinal did entreat his holiness to stay the judgment o' the divorce; for if it did take place, 'I do,' quoth he, 'perceive my king is tangled in affection to a creature of the queen's, Lady Anne Bullen.'

Sur. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it.

Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he counts and hedges his own way. But in this point all his tricks founder, and he brings his physic after his patient's death: the king already hath married the fair lady.

Sur. Would he had!

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord! for, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now, all my joy trace the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to 't! All men's.

Suf. There's order given for her coronation: marry, this is yet but young, and may be left to some ears unrecounted. But, my lords, she is a gallant creature, and complete in mind and feature: I persuade me, from her will fall some blessing to this land, which shall in it be memorized.

Sur. But, will the king digest this letter of the cardinal's? The Lord forbid!

Suf. Marry, amen! No, no.

There be moe wasps that buzz about his nose will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius is stol'n away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave; has left the cause o' the king unhandled; and is posted, as the agent of our cardinal, to second all his plot. I do assure you the king cried Ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him, and let him cry Ha! louder!

Nor. But, my lord, when returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd in his opinions; which have satisfied the king for his divorce; together with all famous colleges almost in Christendom: shortly, I believe, his second marriage shall be publish'd, and her coronation. Katherine no more shall be call'd queen, but princess dowager; and widow to prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's a worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain in the king's business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him for it an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear. Tis so.

The cardinal!

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

Nor. Observe, observe, he's moody; Wol. The packet, CromweIl, gave 't you the king?

Crom. To his own hand, in 's bedchamber. Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper? Crom. Presently He did unseal them; and the first he view'd, he did it with a serious mind; a heed was in his countenance. You he bade attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready to come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me awhile. [Exit Cromwell. [Aside] It shall be to the Duchess of Alencon, the French king's sister: he shall marry her. Anne Bullen! No; I'll no Anne Bullens for him: There's more in 's than fair visage. Bullen! No, we'll no Bullens. Speedily I wish to hear from Rome. The Marchioness of Pembroke! Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king does what his anger to him.

Sur. Lord, for thy justice! Sharp enough.

Wol. [Aside] The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter, to be her mistress? mistresse! the queen's queen! This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it; then out it goes. What though I know her virtuous and well deserving? yet I know her for a sappery Luthern; and not wholesome to our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of our hard-ruled king. Again, there is sprung up an heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one hath craw'd i' the favour of the king, and is his oracle.

Nor. I would 't were something that would fret the master-cord on's heart! [the string, Enter the King, reading of a schedule, and Lovell.

Suf. The king, the king! King. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated to his own portion! and what expense by the hour seems to flow from him! How, I' the name of thrift, does he make this together? Now, my lords, say you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have stood here observing him: some strange commotion
ACT III.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I.

Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait; then stops again,
Sticks his breast hard, and anon breasts
His eye against the moon: in most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

King. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse:
As I read them: and wot you what I found
There,—on my conscience, but unwittingly?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing;
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure,
Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. It's heaven's will;
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

King. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but I am afraid
His thoughts are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[King takes his seat; whispers Lovell, who goes to the Cardinal.

Heaven forgive me!

King. Ever God bless your highness!

Good my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inven-
Of your best graces in your mind; the which
You were now running o'er: you have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span
To keep your earthly audit: sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband, and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir, for holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business which
I bear the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation, which perchance
I, her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendency to.

King. You have said well.

And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well saying?

King. 'T is well said again;
And 't is a kind of good deed to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father loved you:
He said he did; and with his deed did crown
His word upon you. Since I had my office,
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,
But pared my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. [Aside] What should this mean?

Ser. [Aside] The Lord increase this business!

King. Have I not made you
The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce you have found true:
And, if you may confess it, say withal,
If you are bound to us or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess your royal graces
Shower'd on me daily, have been more than could
My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours: my endeavours
Have ever come too short of my desires,
Yet coupled with my ability; mine own ends
Have been mine so that evermore they pointed
To the good of your most sacred person
And the profit of the state. For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiance thanks,
My prayers to heaven for you, my loyalty,

500

Which ever has and ever shall be growing,
Till death, that winter, kill it.

King. A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: the honour of it
Does pay the act of it; as it, the contrary.
The foulness is the punishment. I presume
That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour,
On you than upon any; so your soul, the more
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 't were in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than nine own; that am, have, and will be—
Though all the world should crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make 'em, and Appear in forms more horrid,—yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should be the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

King. It's nobly spoken:
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open't. Read o'er this;
[Giving him papers.

And after this: and then to breakfast with
What appetite you have.

[Exit King, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey:
the Nobles throng after him, smiling and whispering.

Wol. What should this mean?

What sudden anger's this? how have I rea'd it?
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leapt from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gali'd him;
Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper:
I fear, the story of his anger. 'T is so?
This paper has undone me: 't is the account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom,
And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence!
Fit for a fool to fall by: what cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet?
I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to bet this from his brains?
I know 't will stir him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune [Pope!]
Will bring me off again. What's this? 'To the Letter, as I live, with all the business
I writ to 's holiness. Nay then, farewell! I
Have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness;
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting: I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.
KING HENRY VIII.

ACT III.

YE appear in every thing may bring my ruin! Follow your curious courses, men of malice; You have Christian warrant for 'em, and, no doubt, In time will find their fit rewards. That seal, You ask with such a violence and pride, Mine and your master, with his own hand gave me; Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours, During my life; and, to confirm his goodness, Tied it by letters-patents: now, who'll take it? Sur. The king, that gave it. Wol. It must be himself, then. Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest. Wol. Proud lord, thou liest: Within these forty hours Surrey durst better Have burnt that tongue than said so. Sur. Thy ambition, Thou scarlet sin, rob'd this bewailing land Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law: The heads of all thy brother cardinals, With thee and all thy best parts bound together, Weigh'd not a hair of his, Plague of your policy! You sent me deputy for Ireland; Farward the king, my ever royal master, That might have mercy on the fault thou gavest him; Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity, Absoled him with an axe. Wol. This, and all else This talking lord can lay upon my credit, I answer is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts: how innocent I was From any private malice in his end; His noble jury and foul cause can witness. If I loved many words, lord, I should tell you You have as little honesty as honour, That in the way of loyalty and truth Toward your power legantine, within this kingdom, Dare make a sounder man than Surrey can be, And all that love his follies. Sur. Your long coat, priest, protects you; thou shouldstst My sword! the life-blood of thee else, My lords, Can ye endure to hear this arrogance? And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely, To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward, And dare us with his cap like larks. Wol. All goodness Is poison to thy stomach. Sur. Yes, that goodness Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one, Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion; The goodness of your intercepted packets [ness, You write to the pope against the king; your good- Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. My Lord of Norfolk, as you are truly noble, As you respect the common good, the state Of our despised nobility, our issues, Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen, Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles Collected from his life. I'll starte you Worse than the siring bell, when the brown wench Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal, How much, methinks, I could despise this man, But that I am bound in charity against it! Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's But, thus much, they are foul ones. [hand: Wol. So much fairer And spotless shall mine innocence arise, When the king knows my truth. Sur. This cannot save you: I thank my memory, I yet remember Some of these articles; and out they shall. Now, if you can blush and cry 'guilty,' cardinal, You'll show a little honesty. Wol. Speak on, sir; I dare your worst objections: if I blush, It is to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want those than my head. Have at you! First, that, without the king's assent or knowledge, You wrought to be a legate; by which power You main'd the disembarkation of the Pope, Nor. Then, that in all you write to Rome, or else To foreign princes, 'Ego et Rex mens?' Was still inscribed; in which you brought the king To be your servant. Sur. Then that, without the knowledge Either of king or counsell, when you went Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold To carry into Flanders the great seal. Sur. Item, you sent a large commission To Gregory de Cassado, to conclude, Without the king's will or the state's allowance, A league between his highness and Ferrara. Sur. That, out of mere ambition, you have caused Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin. Sur. Then that you have sent innumerable substance — By what means got, I leave to your own conscience— To furnish England's justice, within this kingdom, You have for dignities: to the mere undoing Of all the kingdom. Many more there are; Which, since they are of you, and odious, I will not taint my mouth with. Chum. Do my lord, Press not a falling man too far! 'tis virtue; His faults be open to the laws; let them, Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him So little of his great self. Sur. I forgive him. Sur. Lord cardinal, the king's further pleasure is, Because all those things you have done of late, By your power legantine, within this kingdom, Fall into the compass of a prevarication, That therefore such a writ be sued against you; To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements, Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. This is my charge. Sur. And so we'll leave you to your meditations How to live better. For your stubborn answer About the giving back the great seal to us, [you. The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal. [Exeunt all but Wolsey. Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear me. Farewell! a long farewell, to all my greatness! This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hopes: to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honours thick upon him; The third day comes a frost, a killing frost, And, when he thinks, good easy man, full surely His greatness is a-ripening, nips his root, And then he falls, as I do. I have ventured, Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders, This many summers in a sea of glory, But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride At length broke under me and now has left me, Weary and old with service, to the mercy Of that sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin. More pangs and fears than wars or women have: And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer, Never to hope again.

Enter Cromwell, and stands amazed.

Why, how now, Cromwell! Crom. I have no power to speak, sir. Wol. What, amazed At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep, I am full'n indeed.
ACT IV.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I. A street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

First Gent. You're well met once again.

Sec. Gent. So are you.

First Gent. You come to take your stand here, and The Lady Anne pass from her coronation? Behold Sec. Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter, The Duke of Buckingham came from his trial.

First Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd this general joy. [sorrow; Sec. Gent. 'Tis well: the citizens, I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds — As, let 'em have their rights, they are ever forward — In celebration of this day with shows, Pageants and sights of honour.

First Gent. Never greater, Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

Sec. Gent. May I be bold to ask what that con- That paper in your hand? [tains, First Gent. Yes: 'tis the list Of those that claim their offices this day By custom of the coronation.

What and how true thou art: he will advance thee; Some little memory of me will stir him — I know his noble nature — not to let Thy hopeful service perish too: good Cromwell, Neglect him not: make use now, and provides For thine own future safety.

Crom. My lord, Must I, then, leave you? must I needs forego So good, so noble and so true a master? Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron, With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord, The king shall have my service; but my prayers For ever and for ever shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me, Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman. Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me, Crom- And, when I am forgotten, as I shall be, [well; And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention Of me more must be heard of, say, I taught thee, Say, Wolsey, that once trod the ways of glory, And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour, Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in; A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it. Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me. Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition: By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then, The image of his Maker, hope to win by it? Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate Corruption wins not more than honesty. [thee; Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace, To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not: Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fall'st, O Thou fall'st a blessed martyr! Serve the king; And, — priceth, lead me in: There take an inventory of all I have, To the last penny; 'tis the king's: my robe, And my integrity to heaven, is all I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell! Had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king, he would not in mine age Have left me naked to mine enemies.

Crom. Good sir, have patience. Wol. So I have. Farewell The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do dwell. [Exit.
THE ORDER OF THE CORONATION.

1. A lively flourish of Trumpets.

2. Then, two Judges. [him.

3. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before

5. Marquis of London, bearing the mace. Then Garter, in his coat of arms, and on his head a gilt copper crown.

6. Marquess Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronal of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dukes, crowned with an earl's coronet. Co-

lars of SS.

7. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Colours of SS.

8. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports;

under it, the Queen in her robe; in her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

9. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronet of gold, with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.

10. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

They pass over the stage in order and state.

Sec. Gent. A royal train, believe me. These I

Wh's that that bears the sceptre? [know:

First Gent. Marquess Dorset:

And that the Earl of Surrey, with the rod.

Sec. Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should

The Duke of Suffolk? [be

First Gent. 'Tis the same: high-steward.

Sec. Gent. And that my Lord of Norfolk?

First Gent. Yes. [know:

Sec. Gent. Heaven bless thee! [Bowing on the Queen.

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.

Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel:

Our king has all the Indies in his arms,

And more and richer, when he strains that lady;

I cannot blame his conscience.

First Gent. They that bear

The cloth of honour over her, are four barons

Of the Cinque-ports. [near her.

Sec. Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all

I thank thee, she that carries up the train !

Is that a noble lady, Duchess of Norfolk?

First Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.

Sec. Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars

And sometimes falling ones. [indeed;

First Gent. No more of that.

[Exit procession, and then a great flourish of trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.

First Gent. God save you, sir! where have you been broling?

Third Gent. Among the crowd I 't the Abbey;

where a finger

Could not be wedged in more: I am stifled

With the mere rankness of their joy.

Sec. Gent. You saw

The ceremony? That I did.

Third Gent. That I did. How was it?

First Gent. Third Gent. Well worth the shipping.

Sec. Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

Third Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream

Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen

To a prepared place in the choir, fell off

A distance from her; while her grace sat down

To rest a while, some half an hour or so,

In a rich chair of state, opposing freely

The beauty of her person to the people.

Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman

That ever lay by man: which when the people

Had the full view of, such a noise arose

As the shrudors make at sea in a stiff tempest,

As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,—

Doublets, I think,—flew up; and had their faces

Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy

I never saw before. Great-bellied women

That had not half a week to go, like rams

In the old time of war, would shake the press,

And make 'em reel before 'em. No man living

Could say 'This is my wife' there; all were so

Strange in one particular.

Sec. Gent. But, what follow'd?

Third Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and saint-like

Cast her fair eyes to heaven and pray'd devoutly.

Then rose again and bow'd her to the people:

When by the Archbishops of Canterbury

She had all the royal makings of a queen;

As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,

The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems.

Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,

With all the choicest music of the kingdom,

Together sung; 'To Deum.' So she parted,

And with the same full state paced back again

To York-place, where the feast is held.

First Gent. Sir,

You must no more call it York-place, that 's past;

For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost:

'Tis now the King's, and call'd Whitehall.

Third Gent. Yes. I know it;

't is so lately alter'd, that the old name

Is fresh about me.

Sec. Gent. What two reverend bishops

Were those that went on each side of the queen?

Third Gent. Stokesly and Gardiner; the one of Worcester, Newly preferr'd from the king's secretary,

The other, London.

Sec. Gent. He of Winchester

Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,

The virtuous Cranmer.

Third Gent.

All the land knows that:

However, yet there is no great breach; when it comes,

Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

Sec. Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

Third Gent. Thomas Cromwell;

A man in much esteem with the king, and truly

A worthy friend. The king has made him master of the jewel house.

And one, already, of the privy council.

Sec. Gent. He will deserve more.

Third Gent. Yes, without all doubt.

Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which

Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests:

Something I can command. As I walk thither,

I tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Ezeunt.

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter Katharine, Dowager, sick: led between Griff-

th, her gentlewoman usher, and Patience, her woman.

Grif. How does your grace?

Kath. O Griffith, sick to death!

My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth;

Willing to leave their burthen. Reach a chair:

So; now, methinks, I feel a little ease.

Dost thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,

That the great child of honour, Cardinal Wolsey,

Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam; but I think your grace,

Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to it.

Kath. Prif thee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:

If well, he stopp'd before me, happily

For my example.

503
ACT IV.  KING HENRY VIII.  SCENE II.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? are ye all gone,
And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?
Strad. We are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for:
Saw ye none enter since I slept?
Strad. None, madam.

Kath. No? Saw you not, even now, a blessed
Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces [troop
Cost thousand beans upon my head, and the sun?
They promised me eternal happiness:
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall, assuredly.
Griff. She is going, wench: pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An't like your grace,—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow: Dissemble we no more reverence?

Mess. Forsooth, you are to blame,

Kath. Knowing she will not lose her wonted greatness,
To use so rude behaviour; go to, kneel.

Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon;
My haste made me unmannerly.  There is staying
A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him at entrance, Griffith: but this
Let me see it again.  [fellow

Re-enter Griffith, with Capucius.

Griff. With Capucius.
ACT V.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE I. — London. A gallery in the palace.

Enter Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy; is't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gar. These should be hours for necessities, not for delights; times to repair our nature.

To waste these times. Good hour of night, Sir, Whither so late?

Lov. D'you come from the king, my lord?

Gar. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at primo With the Duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too.

Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gar. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell. What's the matter?

It seems you are in haste; an if there be no great offence belongs to 't, give your friend some touch of your late business; affairs, that walk, as they say spirits do, at midnight, have in them a wilder nature than the business that seeks dispatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you; And durst commend a secret to your ear [labour, much weightier than this work. The queen's in They say, in great extremity; and fear'd she'll with the labour end.

Gar. The fruit she goes with I pray for heartily, that it may find Good time, and live: but for the stock, Sir Thomas, I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks I could cry the amen; and yet my conscience says She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does deserve our better wishes.

But, sir, sir, hear me, Sir Thomas; you're a gentleman of mine own way: I know you wise, religious; and, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well, 'Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take 't of me, Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she, sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two

The most remark'd i'the kingdom. As for Cromwell, beside that of the jewel house, is made master

That they may have their wages duly paid 'em, and something over to remember me by: If heaven had pleased to have given me longer life and able means, we had not parted thus.

These are the whole contents: and, good my lord, by that you love the dearest in this world, as you wish Christian peace to souls departed, stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king To do me this last right.

By heaven, I will, or let me lose the fashion of a man!

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me In all humility unto his highness:

Say his long trouble now is passing Out of this world; tell him, in death I bless'd him, For so I will. Mine eyes grow dim. Farewell, My lord. Griffith, farewell. Nay, patience, You must not leave me yet: I must to bed;

Call in more women. When I am dead, good wenches, Let me be used with honour; strew me over With maiden flowers, that all the world may know I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me, Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. I can no more.

[Exeunt, leading Katherine.]
ACT V.

KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE II.

For I must think of that which company
Would not be friendly to.

'Suf. I wish your highness
A quiet night; and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

King. Charles, good-night. [Exit Suffolk.

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Well, sir, what follows?

Den. Sir, I have brought my lord the archbishop,
As you commanded me.

King. Ha! Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord.

King. 'Tis true: where is he, Denny?

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

King. Bring him to us.

[Exit Denny.

Lov. [Aside] This is about that which the bishop
I am happily come hither. [speake:

Re-enter Denny, with Cranmer.

King. Avoid the gallery. [Lovell seems to stay.] Ha! I have said. Be gone.

What?

Cran. [Aside] I am fearful: wherefore frowns he
'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well. [thus?

King. How now, my lord! you do desire to know
Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. [Kneeling] It is my duty
To attend your highness' pleasure.

King. Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious Lord of Canterbury.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together; [hand
I have news to tell you: come, come, give me your
Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And I am right sorry to repeat what follows: I have,
and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,
Grievous complaints of you; which, being consider'd,
Have moved us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us: where, I know,
You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
But that, till further trial in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented [us,
To make your house our Tower: you a brother of
It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. [Kneeling] Humbly thank your highness;
And I am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my claff
And corn shall fly asunder: for, I know,
There's no stand unsubmerged of the common tongue
Than myself, poor man.

King. Stand up, good Canterbury:
Thy truth and thy integrity is rooted
In us, thy friend: give me thy hand, stand up:
Prithie, let's walk. Now, by my hollardame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you,
Without indulgence, further.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The good I stand on is my truth and honesty:
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh not,
Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

King. Know you not
How your state stands i' the world, with the whole world? [tles
Your enemies are many, and not small; their praec-
Must bear the same proportion; and not ever
The justice and the truth o' the question carries
The due o' the verdict with it: at what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knives as corrupt
To swear against you? such things have been done.

You are potently opposed; and with a malice
Of as great size. Ween you of better luck,
I mean, in perjured witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, whiles here he lived
Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to;
You take a precipice for no less of danger,
And woe your own destruction.

Cran. God and your majesty
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me!

King. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail than we give way to.
Keep comfort to you; and this morning see
You do appear before them: if they shall chance,
In charging you with matters, to commit you,
The best persuasions to the contrary
Fall not to use, and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us [weeps!
There make before them. Look, the good man
He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother! I
Swear he is true-hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom. Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you. [Exit Cranmer.] I have
His language in his tears. [has strangled

Enter Old Lady, Lovell following.

Gent. [Within] Come back: what mean you?

Old L. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring [gets Will make my boldness manners. Now, good an-
Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person
Under their blessed wings!

King. Now, by thy looks
I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?
Say, ay, and of a boy.

Old L. Ay, ay, my liege;
And of a lovely boy; the God of heaven
Both now and ever bless her! 'tis a girl,
Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen
Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger: 'tis as like you
As cherry is to cherry.

King. Lovell!

Lov. Sir?

King. Give her an hundred marks. I'll to the queen. [Exit.

Old L. An hundred marks! By this light, I'll
An ordinary groom is for such payment. [ha'more,
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the girl was like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay 't; and now,
While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before the council-chamber.

Persuaders, Pages, &c., attending.

Cran. I hope I am not too late; and yet the gentleman,
That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me
To make great haste. All fast? what means this?
Who waits there? Sure, you know me? [Ho!

Enter Keeper.

Keep. Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

Enter Doctor Butts.

Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Cran. Stay.

Butts. [Aside] This is a piece of malice. I am glad
I came this way so happily: the king
Shall understand it presently. [Exit.

Cran. [Aside] Tis Butts,
The king's physician: as he pass'd along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me! [takin,
Pray heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For cer-
This was the purpose laid by some that hate me —
Scheme on their hearts! I never sought their mal-
[make me
To quench mine honour: they would shame to Wait else at door, a fellow-counsellor, [fures
'Mong boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleas-
Must be fuly'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King and Butts at a window above.
Butts. I'll show your grace the strangest sight —
King. What's that, Butts?
Butts. I think your highness saw this many a day.
King. Body o' me, where is it?

There, my lord:
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants,
Pages, and footboys.

King. Hal! 'tis he, indeed:
Is this the honour they do one another?
If it be there's 'one above 'em yet. I had thought
They had parted so much honestly among 'em,
At least, good manners, as not thus to suffer
A man of his place, and so near our favour,
To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures,
And at the door too, like a post with packets.

By 's law, Butts, there's a knavery:
Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close;
We shall hear more anon.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Council-Chamber.
Enter Lord Chancellor; places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for Canterbury's seat. Duke of Suffolk, Duke of Norfolk, Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, seat themselves in order on each side. Cromwell at lower end, as secretary, Keeper at the door.
Cham. Speak to the business, master secretary:
Why are we met in council?
[Please your honours,
The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.
Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?
Crom. Yes.
Nor. Who waits there?
Keep. Without, my noble lords?
Crom. Yes.
Keep.
My lord archbishop:
And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.
[Cham. Let him come in.
Keep.
Your grace may enter now.
Crom. [Cromer enters and approaches the council-table.
Cham. My good lord archbishop, I'm very sorry
To sit here at this present, and behold
That chair stand empty: but we all are men,
In our own natures frail, and capable
Of our flesh; few are angels: out of which frailty
And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
Have misrule your' self, and not a little,
Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling
The whole realm, by your teaching and your chap,
For so we are inform'd, with new opinions, brains,
Divers and dangerous; which are heresies,
And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.
Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too,
My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses
Face'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle:
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur
Till they obey the manage. If we suffer, [ 'em,
Out of our easiness and childish pity.
To one man's honour, this contagious sickness,
Farewell all physic: and what follows then?
Confusions, passions, with ye wars, with ye wars,
Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours,
The upper Germany, can dearly witness,
Yet freshly pitted in our memories.
Crom. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress
Both of my life and office, I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching
Might go one way, and safely; and the end
Was ever, to do well: nor is there living,
I speak it with a single heart, my lords,
A man that more detests, more stirs against,
Both in his private conscience and his place,
Defacers of a public peace, than I do.
Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart
With less allegiance in it! Men that make Envy and crooked malice nourishment
Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships,
That, in this case of justice, my accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord,
That cannot be: you are a counsellor,
And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.
Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment,
We will be short with you. 'T is his highness' pleas-
Our consent, for better trial of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower;
Where, being but a private man again,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More than, I fear, you are provided for. [you;
Crom. Ah, my good Lord of Winchester, I thank
You are always my good friend. If your will pass,
I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful: I see your end;
'T is my undoing: love and meekness, lord,
Become a churchman better than ambition:
Win straining souls with modesty again,
Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,
Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt, as you do conscience
In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling makes me modest.
Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted glass discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness.
Crom. My Lord of Winchester, you are a little,
By your good favour, too sharp: men so noble,
However faulty, yet should find respect.
For what they have been: 't is a cruelty
To load a falling man.
Gar. Good master secretary,
I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst.
Of all this table, say so.
Crom. Why, my lord?
Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer
Of this new sect? ye are not sound.
Crom. Not sound, I say.
Crom. Would you were half so honest!
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.
Gar. I shall remember this bold language.
Crom. Do.
Remember your bold life too.
Cham. This is too much;
Forbear, for shame, my lords.
Gar. I have done.
Crom. And I.
Cham. Then thus for you, my lord: it stands
I take it, by all voices, that with forth with [agreed,
You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner:
There to remain till the king's further pleasure
Be known unto us: are you all agreed, lords?
All. We are.
Cham.
Gar. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?
Gar. What other
Would you expect? you are strangely troublesome.
Let some of the guard be ready there.

Guard.
Cham. Must I go like a traitor thither?
For me?

507
ACT V.  KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE IV.

Gar. Receive him, and see him safe to the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords, I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords; by virtue of that ring, I take my cause out of the grises of cruel men, and give it to a most noble judge, the king my master. Cran. This is the king's ring.

Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven: I told ye all, when we first put this dangerous stone a-rolling, I would fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords, the king will suffer but the little finger of this man to be vex'd?

Cran. 'Tis now too certain: How much more is his life in value with him? Would I were fairly out on 't!

Cran. My mind gave me, In seeking tales and informations, Against this man, whose honesty the devil And his disciples only envy at, Ye blew the fire that burns ye: now have at ye!

Enter King, frowning on them; takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince: [heaven Not only good and wise, but most religious: One that, in all obedience, makes the church The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen That holy duty, out of dear respect, His royal self in judgment comes to hear The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

King. You were ever good at sudden commendation. Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not [tions, To hear such flattery now, and in my presence; They are too thin and bare to hide offences. To hear you cannot reach, you play the spaniel, And think with wagging of your tongue to win me; But, whatsoever thou takest me for, I'm sure Thou hast a cruel nature and a bloody, [proudest [ToO'rammer]Good man, sit down. Now let me see the He, that dares most, but wags his finger at thee: By all that's holy, he had better starve Than but once think this place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your grace, —

King. No, sir, it does not please me. I had thought I had had men of some understanding And wisdom of my council; but I find none. Was it discretion, lords, to let this man, This good man, — few of you deserve that title, — This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy At chamber-door? and one as great as you are? Why, what a shame was this? — Did my commission Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power as he was a counsellor to try him, Not as a groomsman: there's some of ye, I see, More out of malice than integrity, Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean; Which ye shall never have while I live.

Cran. Thus far, Majesty, but sovereigns may it like your grace To let my tongue excuse all. What was purposed Concerning his imprisonment, was rather, If there be faith in men, meant for his trial, And fair purgation to the world, than malice, I'm sure, in me.

King. Well, well, my lords, respect him; Take him, and use him well, he's worthy of it. I will say thus much for him, if a prince May be beholding to a subject, I; Am, for his love and service, so to him. Make me no more ado, but all embrace him: [burry, Be friends, for shame, my lords! My Lord of Canter- I have a suit which you must not deny me: That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism, You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory In such an honour: how may I deserve it, That am a poor and humble subject to you? King. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons: you shall have two noble partners with you; the old Duchess of Norfolk, and Lady Marquess Dorset: will these please you? Once more, my Lord of Winchester, I charge you, Embrace and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart And brother-love I do it.

Cran. And let heaven Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation. [heart: Gar. Good man, may these joyous tears show thy true The common voice, I see, is verified: [bury Of thee, which says thus, 'tis my Lord of Canter- A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever.' Come, lords, we trifle away time; I long To have this young one made a Christian. As I have made ye one, lords, one remain; So I grow stronger; you more honour gain. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — The palace yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter and his Men.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gapings. [ladder. [Within] Good master porter, I belong to the Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, ye rogue! is this a place to roar in? Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches to 'em. I'll scratch your heads: must be seeing christenings? do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? [sible— Mon. Pray, sir, be patient: 'tis as much imposs— Unless we sweep 'em from the door with cannons — To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep On May-day morning, when the world we: We may as well push against Powle's, as stir 'em. Port. How got they in, and be hang'd? Mon. Alas, I know not; how gets the tide in? As much as one sound cudgel of four foot — You see the poor remainder — could distribute, I made no spare, sir. Port. You did nothing, sir.

Mon. I am not Samson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colbrand, To mow 'em down before me: but if I spared any That had a head to hit, either young or old, He or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, Let me now have that for to hang them; And that I would not for a cow, God save her! [Within] Do you hear, master porter? Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy. Keep the door close, sirrah.

Mon. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock 'em down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a try of fornication is at door! On my Christian con- science, this one christening will beget a thousand; here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Mon. Their spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in 's nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: that fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times his nose discharged against me; he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that nailed upon me till her pinked porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a com- busion in the state. I missed the meteor once, and hit that woman; who cried out, 'Chubs!' when I might see from far some forty wasp-nesters draw to her succour, which were the hope o' the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made 508 good my place: at length they came to the brougham-staff to me; I defied 'em still: when suddenly a file of boys behind 'em, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let 'em win the work: the devil was amongst 'em, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples: that no audience, but the tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the running banquet of two beaddles that is to come.

Enter Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too: from all parts they are coming, as if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters, These lazy knives? Ye have made a fine hand, fel. There's a trim rabble let in: are all these [lows? Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An' please your honour, We've but men; and what so many do, Not being torn a-pieces, we have done:
An army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I live, If the king blame me for 't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round fines for neglect: ye are lazy knives; And here ye lie batting of bombards, when Ye should do service. Hark! the trumpets sound; They're come already from the christening To break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marshalsea shall hold ye play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Mar. You great fellow, Stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You t' the camlet, get up the rail; I'll peck you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — The palace.

Enter trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk with his natural son, two Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child richly hight in a wattle, &c., upon a chair by Lady; then follows the Marchioness Dorset, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth!

FLOURISH. Enter King and Guard.

Cran. [Kneeling] And to your royal grace, and the good queen, My noble partners, and myself, thus pray: All comfort, in this most gracious lady, Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy, May hourly fall upon ye.

King. Thank you, good lord archbishop:

Cran. Elizabeth.

King. [The King kisses the child.

Cran. What is her name?

King. Stand up, lord.

Cran. With this kiss take my blessing: God protect thee! Into whose hand I give thy life.

King. Amen.

Cran. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal: I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir, For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find 'em truth.

King. This royal infant — heaven still move about her! — Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings.

Cran. Which time shall bring to ripeness: she shall be — But few now living can behold that goodness — A pattern to all princes living with her.

Cran. And all that shall succeed: Salus was never — More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces, That mould up such a mighty piece as this is, With all the virtues that attend the good, Shall still be the badge of her princely virtue, And shall nurse her, Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her: She shall be loved and fear'd: her own shall bless Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn, [her; And hang their heads with sorrow: good grows with In her days every man shall eat in safety, [her: Under his own vine, what he plants: and sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours: God shall be truly known; and those about her From her shall read the perfect ways of honour, And by those claim their greatness, not by blood. Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when The bird of wonder digs the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new create another heir, As great in admiration as herself;

Cran. So shall she leave her blessedness to one, [ness, When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness Who from the sacred ashes of her honour Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was, And so stand fix'd: peace, plenty, love, truth, terror, That were the servants to this chosen infant, Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him: Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine, His honour and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations: he shall flourish, And, like a red human phoenix, shall ascend To all the plains about our children's children Shall see this, and bless heaven.

King. Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England, An aged princess; many days shall see her, And yet no day without a deed to crown it. Would I had known no more! but she must die. She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin, Most unspotted liy shall she pass To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her. King. O lord archbishop, Thou hast made me now a man! never, before This happy event, I have not thought of any thing: This oracle of comfort has so pleased me, That when I am in heaven I shall desire To see what this child does, and praise my Maker. I thank ye all. To you, my good lord mayor, And your good brethren, I am much beholding; I have received much honour by your presence, And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way, lords: Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye, She will be sick else. This day, no man think Has business at his house; for all shall stay: This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.

EPilogue.

'Tis ten to one this play can never please All that are here: some come to take their ease, And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear, We have frightened with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear, They'll say 'tis nought: other, who hear the city, Used exactly, and to cry 'That's witty!' Which we have not done neither: that, I fear, All the expected good we're like to hear For this play at this time, is only in The merciful construction of good women: For such a one we should 'em: if they smile, And say 't will do, I know, within a while All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap, If they hold when their ladies bid 'em clap.

PROLOGUE.

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes orgulous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fought with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore
Their crownets regal, from the Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia; and their vow is made
To ransom Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.
To Tenedos they come;
And the deep-drawing ranks do there disgorge
Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenorides, with massy staples
And corrosive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard: and hither am I come
A prologue arm'd, but not in confidence
Of author's pen or actor's voice, but suited
In like conditions as our argument,
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils,
Beginning in the middle, starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like or find fault; do as your pleasures are:
Now good or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

Enter Troilus armed, and Pandarus.

Tro. Call here my varlet: I'll unarm again:
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Each Trojan that is master of his heart,
Let him to field; Troilus, alack! hath none.
Pan. Will this gear no'ere be mended? [strength,
Tro. The Greeks are strong and skilful to their Fierce to their skill and to their fierceness valiant;
But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance,
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skilless as unpractised infancy.
Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must needs tarry the grinding.

510

Tro. Have I not tarried? [bolting.
Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the Tro. Have I not tarried? [leavening.
Pan. Ay, the bolting, but you must tarry the Tro. Still have I tarried.
Pan. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word 'hereafter' the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven and the baking: nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.
Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,
Doth lesser blest at sufferance than I do.
At Priam's royal table do I sit;
And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,— So, traitor! 'When she comes!' When is she thence?
Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.
Tro. I was about to tell thee:—when my heart,

SCENE II.

As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain,
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have, as when the sun doth light a storm,
Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:
But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladness,
Is like that ninth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Helen's—well, go to—there were no more parable
Comparision between the women: but, for my part, she
Is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her: but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Pandarus's wit, but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathom's deep
They lie indrench'd. I tell thee I am mad
In Cressid's love: thou answer'st 'she is fair;'
Four'st in the open ulcer of my heart.
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice,
Handlest in thy discourse, O, that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach, to whose soft seizure
The cygnet's down is harsh and spirit of sense
Hard as the palm of ploughman: this thou tell'st as
As true as tell'st a lie. He that liseth her; [ine,
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me.
The knife that made it

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in 't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus, how now, Pandarus!

Pan. I have had my labour for my travaile; I thought on of her and ill-thought on of you; gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with

Pan. Because she's kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not an she were a black-a-poor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father; let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more: the Tro. Pandarus,— [matter.

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace, rude sounds! Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair, When with your blood you daily paint her thus. I cannot fight upon this argument; It is toostarved a subject for my sword. But Pandarus, O gods, how do you plague me! I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar; And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo, As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit. Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love, What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we? Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl: [betwixt the Ilion and Abydus. Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood, Ourself the merchant, and this sailing Pandar Our doubtful hope, our convoy and our bark.

Alarum. Enter Aneas.

Aenea. How now, Prince Troilus! wherefore not afield?
ACT I.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE II.

Pan. Was he angry?
Cres. So he says here.
Pan. True, he was so: I know the cause too: he'll look about him to-day, I can tell them that; and 's Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that.
Pan. What, is he angry too? [too.
Cres. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.
Pan. Jupiter! there's no comparison.
Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector?
Do you know a man if you see him?
Cres. Ay, if I ever saw him before and knew him.
Pan. Well, I say Troilus is Troilus.
Pan. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.
Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.
Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.
Pan. Himself! Alas, poor Troilus! I would he were so.
Cres. So he is.
Pan. Condition. I had gone barefoot to India.
Pan. He is not Hector.
Cres. Himself! no, he's not himself; would a' were himself! Well, the gods are above; time must friend or end; well, Troilus, well: I would my heart were in her body. No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.
Cres. Excuse me.
Pan. He is elder.
Pan. Pandion me, pardion me.
Pan. Th' other's not come to 't; you shall tell me another tale, when th'other's come to 't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.
Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.
Pan. Nor his qualities.
Cres. No matter.
Pan. Nor his beauty.
Pan. 'T would not become him; his own's better.
Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour—for so 'tis, I must confess,—not brown neither.
Cres. No, but brown.
Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.
Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.
Pan. She praised his complexion above Paris.
Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.
Pan. So he has.
Pan. Then Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too. I have a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.
Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.
Cres. Then she's a merry Greek indeed.
Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th' other day into the compassed window,—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin,— Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.
Pan. Why, he is very young: and yet will he, with three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.
Cres. Is he so young a man and so old a litter? Pan. But to prove to you that Helen loves him: she came and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin.
Cres. Juno have mercy! how came it cloven?
Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all.
Cres. O, he smiles valiantly. [Purgia.
Pan. Does he not?
Cres. Yes, and 't were a cloud in autumn.
Pan. Why, go to, then: but to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,— Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.
Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.
Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens? the shell.
Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled my chin: indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess,— Cres. Without the rack.
Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.
Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.
Pan. But there was such laughing! Queen Hecuba laughed that her eyes ran o'er.
Cres. With mill-stones.
Pan. And Cassandra laughed.
Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run o'er too?
Pan. And Hector laughed.
Cres. At what was all this laughing?
Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin. [Laughed too.
Pan. An't had been a green hair, I should have seen.
Cres. They laughed not so much at the hair as at her pretty a hair.
Pan. What was his answer?
Pan. Quoth she, 'Here's but two and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.'
Cres. This is her question.
Pan. That's true; make no question of that. 'Two and fifty hairs,' quoth he, 'and one white that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons.' 'Jupiter!' quoth she, 'which of these hairs is Paris my husband?' 'The forked one,' quoth he, 'pluck to out, and give it him.' But there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.
Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.
Pan. [think on 't.
Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday;
Cres. So I do.
Pan. I'll be sworn 't is true; he will weep you, an't were a man born in April.
Pan. And I'll spring up in his tears, an't were a nettle against May. [A retreat sounded.
Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field: shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do, sweet niece Cressida.
Cres. At your pleasure.
Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by; but mark Troilus above.
Pan. Speak not so loud. [the rest.

Eneas passes.

Pan. That's Eneas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Antenor passes.

Cres. Who's that?
Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person. When comes Troilus? I'll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.
Cres. Will he give you the nod?
Pan. You shall see.
Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

Hector passes.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow! Go thy way, Hector! There's a brave man, niece. O brave Hector! Look how he looks! there's a countenance! is 't not a brave man? Cres. O, a brave man! Pan. Is 'a not? it does a man's heart good. Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there: there's no jesting: there's laying on, take 't off who will, as they say: there he hacks! Cres. Be those with swords? Pan. Swords! any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: by God's lid, it does one's heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris.

Paris passes. Look ye yonder, niece; 'is 't not a gallant man too, 'is 't not? Why, this is brave now. Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha! Would I could see Troilus now! You shall see Troilus anon.

Helemlus passes.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Troilus passes.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus. 'Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece! Hen! Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry! Cres. Peace, for shame, peace! Pan. Mark him; note him. O brave Troilus! Look well upon him, niece: look how your sword is bloodied, and his helm more hacked than Hector's, and how he looks, and how he goes! O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way! Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris! Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye Cres. Here come more. [To boot.

Force passes.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chalk and bran, chalk and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die? the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eyes of Troilus: crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece. Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus. Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel. Cres. Well, well. Pan. 'Well, well!' Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberal- ity, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man? Cres. Ay, a mincer man: and then to be baked with no date in the pie, for then the man's date's out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie. Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty: my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches. Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow: unless it swell past hiding, and then it's past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter Troilus's Boy.

Cres. By the same token, you are a bawd. [Exit Pandarus. Words, vows, gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice, He offers in another's enterprise: But more in Troilus thousand-fold I see Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be; Yet hold I off. Women are angels, woeing; Things won are done; joy's soul lies in the doing. That she beloved knows nought that knows not this: Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is: That she was never yet that ever knew Love got so sweet as when desire did sue. Therefore this maxim out of Chaucer I teach: Achievement is command; ungain'd, besech! Then though my heart's content firm love doth bear, Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Grecian camp. Before Agamemnon's tent, Senet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others.

Agam. Princes. What grief hath set the jamblicle on your cheeks? The ample proposition that hope makes In all designs begun on earth below Fails in the promised largeness: checks and disasters Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd, As knots, by the confluf of meeting sup, Infect the sound pine and divert his grain Tortive and errant from his high and growth. Nor, princes, is it matter new to us That we come short of our purpose so far That after seven years' siege yet Troy walls stand; Sith every action that hath gone before, Whereof we have record, trial did draw cats and their ways; erring, not answering the aim, And that unbodyed figure of the thought That gave 't surmised shape. Why then, you princes, Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works, And call them shame's? which are indeed nought else But the protractive trials of great Jove To find persitve constancy in men: The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune's love: for then the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unread, The hard and soft, seem all aligned and kin: But, in the wind and tempest of her frown, Distinction, with a bread and powerful fan, Pulling at all, winnowing, with aaim. And what hath mass or matter, by itself Lies rich in virtue and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat, Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth, How many shallow balie boats dare sail Upon her patient breast, making their way With those of nobler bulk! But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage The gentle Theod, and anon behold [cut. The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains.
ACT I.  TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.  SCENE III.

Bounding between the two moist elements,
Like Perseus' horse: where 's then the saucy boat
Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rivall'd greatness? Either to harbour fled,
Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so
Do we so industriously and uniformly
In storms of fortune; for in her ray and brightness
The herd hath more annoyance by the breeze
Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, [course
And flies fled under shade, why, then the thing of
As rough, contrary, proportion'd doth sympathize,
And with an accent tuned in selfsame key
Retorts to chiding fortune.

Ulyss.  Agamemnon,
Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece,
Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit,
In whom the temper and will of all minds of all
Should be shut up, hear what Ulysses speaks.
Besides the applause and approbation
The which, [To Agamemnon] most worthy for thy place and sway,
[To Nest.] And thou most reverend for thy stretch'ld
I give thee thanks, which was such as
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass, and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axletree
On which heaven rides, knit all the Greekish ears
To his expedient tongue, yet let it please both,
Thou great, and wise, to hear Ulysses speak.
Again.  Speak, Prince of Ithaca; and be 't of less
That matter needless, of importune burden, [expect
Divide thy lips, than we are confident,
When runk Thersites ope's his mastic jaws,
We shall hear music, wit and oracle.

Ulyss.  Troy, yet upon his back had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
But for these instances.
The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And, lo! how many Greekish tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
When that the general is not like the hive
To whom the foragers shall all repair.
What honey is expected?  Degree being wizarded,
The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.
The heavens themselves, the planets and this centre
Observe degree, priority and place,
Insinuate, course, proportion, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order;
And therefore is the glorious planet Sol
In noble eminence enthroned and spred
Amidst the other; whose meddleable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And poets, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check to good and bad: but when the planets
In evil mixture to disorder wander,
What plagues and what portents! what mutiny!
What raging of the sea! shaking of earth!
Commotion in the winds! frights, changes, horrors,
Divine and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture!  O, when degree is shaken,
Which is the ladder to all high designs,
Then enterprise is sick!  How could communities,
Degrees in schools and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from divisible shores,
The primogentive and desert of the shore,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
In more oppugnance: the bounded waters
Should out his fair, more than the shores
And make a sop of all this solid globe:
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:

Force should be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice resides,
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite,
And appetite and universal divide
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up himself.  Great Agamemnon,
This chaos, when degree is suffocated,
Follows the choking.

And, by this negligence of degree it is
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb. The general 's disdain'd
By him one step below, he by the next,
That next by him beneath; so every step,
Exampled by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation:
And 't is this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest.  Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
The fever, root of all our power is sick.
Agam.  Again, the nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
What is the remedy?
Ulyss.  The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host,
Having his ear full of his airy fame,
Grows dainty of his worth and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs: with him Patroclus
Upon a lazy bed the livelong day
Breaks ssurr jests,
And with ridiculous and awkward action
Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,
He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,
Thy topless reputation he puts on,
And, like a strutting player, whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
'Twixt his stretch'ld foot and the scaffolding,—
Such to-be-pitted and o'er-wrested seeming
He acts thy greatness: and when he speaks,
'Is like a chime a-mending; with terms unsquared,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon drop'd,
Would seem hyperboles. At this rusty stuff
The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries 'Excellent! 't is a true imitation just
Now play me Nestor: hem, and stroke thy beard,
As he be'ring to some oration.'
That 's done, as near as the extremest ends
Of parallels, as like as Vulcan and his wife;
Yet god Achilles still cries 'Excellent!
'Is Nestor right.  Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm,'
And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit,
And, with a palsy-fumbling on his gorget,
Shake in and out the rivet: and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries 'O, enough, Patroclus;
Can give no more of steel it can well;
In pleasure of my spleen.'  And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severals and generals of grace exact,
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Success or delays, what is in and out
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest.  And in the imitation of these twain—who,
Who, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice—many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will'd, and bears his head
In such a reem, in full, if I may presume
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him,
Makes factious feasts; rades on our state of war,
Bold as an oracle, and sets Thersites,
ACT I.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE III.

A slave whose gait soars slanders like a mint,
To match us in comparisons with dirt,
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice,
Count wisdom as no member of the war,
Foretell preface and esteeem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness calls them on, and know by measure
Of their observant toil the enemies' weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:
There call his bed-work, mappery, closet-war;
So that the ram that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and ruddiness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine,
Or those that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons. [A trumpet.

Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

Men. From Troy.

Enter Æneas.

Agam. What would you 'fore our tent?

Æne. Is this great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?

Agam. Even this.

Æne. May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm
'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.

Æne. Fair leave and large security. How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. Ay, Ay!

I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phœbus:
Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan sears us; or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonair, unarm'd,
As bending angels; that's their fame in peace:
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove's
Ravish'd record,

Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!
The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the praised himself bring the praise forth;
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure,
Transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Æneas?

Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?

Æne. Sir, pardon; 't is for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears nought privy that comes
Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him:
I bring a trumpet to awake his ear,
To set his sense on the attentive bent,
And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind;
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:
That you shall know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Æne. Trumpet, blow loud, send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoken aloud.
[Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy
A prince call'd Hector,—Priam is his father,—
Who in this dull and long-continued truce
Is rusty grown: he made me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords!
If there be one among the fair'st of Greece
That holds his honour higher than his ease;
That seeks no praise more than he fears his peril,
That knows his valour, and knows not his fear,
That loves his mistress more than in confession,
With truant vows to her own lip he loves,
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.
Hector, in the name of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it;
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did compass in his arms,
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call
Midway between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love:
If any say, Hector shall honour him;
If no, he'll say in Troy when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sunburnt and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, Lord Æneas;
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them at home; but we are soldiers;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's granularity suck'd; he is old now;
But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire,
To answer for his heart, tell him from me
I'llhide my silver beard in a gold beaver
And in my vantage put this with'er'd brawn,
And meeting him will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam and as chaste
As may be in the world: his youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Æne. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!

Ulyss. Amen.

Agam. Fair Lord Æneas, let me touch your hand;
To our paviour shall I lead you, sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent:
Yourself shall feast with us before you go
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but Ulysses and Nestor.

Ulyss. Nestor!

Nest. What says Ulysses?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain;
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is 't?

Ulyss. This 'tis:
Blunt wedges give hard knots: the seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles must or now be crop'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how?

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector
However it is spread in general name, [sends,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles. [stance,

Nest. The purpose is peripatetic even as sub-
Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And, in the publication, make no strain.
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Alpena,—though he knows,
'Tis dry enough,—will, with great speed of judg-
Aly, with celerity, find Hector's purpose [ment,
Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. Yes, 't is most meet: whom may you else op-
That can from Hector bring his honour off, [pose,
If not Achilles? Though 'tis a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells;
For here the Trojans taste our dearst repute
With their finest palates: and trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly poised
In this wild action; for the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling
Of good or bad unto the general;
And in such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The laby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is supposed
He that meets Hector issues from our choice;
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election, and doth boil,
As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues; who miscarrying, [part,
What heart receives from hence the conquering
To steal a strong opinion to themselves?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,
In no less working than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech:
Therefore 't is meet Achilles meet not Hector.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell: if not,
The lustre of the better yet to show,
Shall show the better. Do not consent
That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honour and our shame in this
Are dog'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
Wore he not proud, we all should share with him:
But he already is too insolent:
And we were better parch in Afric sun
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,
Should he 'scape Hector fair: if he were foil'd,
Why then, we did our main opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery;
And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves
Give him allowance for the better man:
For that will physic the great Myrmidon
Who broils in loud applause, and make him full
His crest that prouder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices: if he fall,
Yet go we under our opinion still
That we have better men. But, hit or miss,
Our project's life this sheathe of sense assumes:
Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,
Now I begin to relish thy advice;
And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon: go bid him straight
Two casks shall tame each other: pride alone
Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 't were their bone.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A part of the Grecian camp.

Enter Ajax and Thersites.

Ajax. Thersites!

Thers. Agamemnon, how if he had boils? full,
all over, generally?

Ajax. Thersites!

Thers. And those boils did run? say so: did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?

Ajax. Dog!

Thers. That would come some matter from him;
I see none now.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear?

[Beating him] Feeling, then.

Thers. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak, thou villainest leaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Thers. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but, I think, thy horse will sooner con an occupation than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murraun o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation.

Thers. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strikkest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation!

Thers. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, perpendicit, do not: my fingers itch.

Thers. I would thou didst itch from head to foot and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathsomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strikkest as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation!

Thers. Thou grumbllest and railest every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Thers. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobolat! [Exit Ajax.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,

But he already is too insolent:

[Exeunt.]

Thers. Why, how now, Ajax! wherefore do you thus? How now, Thersites! what's the matter?

Thers. You see him there, do you? [man?

Achil. Ay: what's the matter?

Thers. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Thers. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. 'Well!' why, I do so.

Thers. But yet you look not well upon him; for, whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Thers. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Achil. Therefore I beat thee.

Thers. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what a medicum of wit he utters! his eavisons have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones: I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax, who wears his wit in his belly and his guts in his head, I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Thers. I say, this Ajax—[Ajax offers to beat him.
ACT II.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE II.

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.
Ther. Has not so much wit—
Achil. Nay, I must hold you.
Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.
Achil. Foolish, Ther.
Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: be there: that he: look you there.
Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall—
Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's? [It.
Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame
Patr. Good words, Therites.
Achil. What's the quarr'd? [Ajax.
I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.
Ther. I serve thee not.
Ajax. Well, go to, go to.
Ther. I serve here voluntary.
Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 't was not voluntary: no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.
Ther. E'en so; a great deal of your wit, too, lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains. Alas, the objen of his infinite Achil. What, with me too, Therites? [Kernel.
Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor, whose wit was muddly ere your grandsires had nails on their toes, yoke like draught-oxen and make you plough up the wars.
Ther. Yes, good sooth: to, Achilles! to, Ajax! to Achil. I shall cut out your tongue.
Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as then afterwards.
Patr. No more words, Therites; peace! For
I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I?
Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.
Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring and leave the faction of fools. [Exit.
Patr. A good reclamation. [Our host:
I have promised to go through all that Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun,
Will with a trumpet 'twixt our tents and Troy
To-morrow morning call some knight to arms
That hath a stomach; and such a one that dare maintain— I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.
Ajax. Who shall answer him?
Achil. I know not: 'tis put to lottery: otherwise He knew his man.
Ajax. O, meaning you. I will go learn more of it.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Troy. A room in Priam's palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Trosillus, Paris, and Helenus.

Prit. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:
'Deliver Helen, and all damage else—
As honour, loss of time, trawl, expense, [sumed Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is con-hot digestion of this coromant war—
Shall be struck off.' Hector, what say you to 't?
Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than As far as toucheth my particular,
Yet, those priests with lasting Priam:
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spong to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out 'Who knows what follows?' Than Hector is: the wound of peace is surely,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The half of these two, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
ACT II.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.
SCENE III.

Beggar the estimation which you prized Richer than sea and land? O, theft most base, That we have stol'n what's least you dare to keep! But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stol'n, That in their country did them that disgrace, We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within] Cry, Trojans, cry!
Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?
Troi. Tis our house, sister, I do know her voice.
Cas. [Within] Cry, Trojans!
Hec. It is Cassandra.

Enter Cassandra, raging.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes, And I will with prophetic tears.
Hec. Peace, sister, peace.
Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled eld, Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry, Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes A moiety of that mass of moan to come, Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears! Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand; Our firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all. Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen and a woe: Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.
Hec. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high Divination in our sister's work [strains Some drops of remorse? or is your blood So madly hot that no discourse of reason, Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause, Can qualify the same?

Pro. Why, brother Hector, We may not think the justice of each act Such and no other than event hath form'd it, Nor once deject the courage of our minds, Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel Which hath our several honours all engaged To make it gracious. For my private part, I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons: And Jove forbid there should be done amongst us Such things as might offend the weakest spiken To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity As well my undertakings as your counsels: But I await the gods, your full consent Gave wings to my propension and cut off All fears attending on so dire a project. For what, alas, can these my single arms? What propagation is in one man's valour, To stand the push and enmity of those This good work would execute? Yet I protest, Were I alone to pass the difficulties And had as ample power as I have will, Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done, Nor faint in the pursuit.

Par. Paris, you speak Like one besotted on your sweet delights: You have the honey still, but these the gall; So to be valiant is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself The pleasures such a beauty brings with it; But I would have the soil of her fair rape Wiped off, in honourable keeping her. What treason were it to the rundack'd queen, Disgrace to your great worths and shame to me, Now to deliver her possession On terms of base compulsion? Can it be That so degenerate a strain as this Should be feeding in your generous bosoms? There's not the meanest spirit in our party Without a heart to dare or sword to draw When Helen is defended, nor none so noble Whose life were ill bestow'd or death unfamed Where Helen is the subject; then, I say, Well may we fight for her whom, we know well, The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hec. Paris and Troilus, you have both said well, And on the cause and question now in hand Have glory'd but succeeded in the end: Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought Unfit to hear moral philosophy: The reasons you allege do more conduce To the hot passion of distemper'd blood Than to make up a free determination 'Twixt right and wrong, and revenge Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice Of any true decision. Nature craves All dues be render'd to their owners: now, What nearer debt in all nature Than wife is to the husband? If this law Of nature be corrupted through affection, And that great minds, of partial indulgence To their benumbed wills, resist the same, There is a law in each well-order'd nation To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king, As it is known she is, these moral laws Of nature and of nations speak aloud To have her back return'd: thus to persist In doing wrong exterminates not wrong, But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion Is this in the light of truth! ye wise, wise, My spritely brethren, I propound to you In resolution to keep Helen still, For 't is a cause that hath no mean dependence Upon our joint and several dignities. [sign:

Tro. Why, there you touched the life of our de- We're not great men that we more deplore Than the performance of our heaving spleens, I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector, She is a theme of honour and renown, A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds, Whose present courage may beat down our foes, And fame in time to crown and honor us: For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose So rich advantage of a promised glory As smiles upon the forehead of this action For the wide world's revenue.

Hec. I am yours, You valiant offspring of great Priamus. I have a roasting challenge sent amongst The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits: I was advertised their great general slept, Whilst emulation in the army crept: This, I presume, will wake him.

Enter Thersites, solus.

Thers. How now, Thersites! what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury! Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O, worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 's foot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful executions. Then there's Achilles, a rare engine. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods, and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus, if ye take not that little little less than half a wit from them that they have! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or rather, the bone-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for placket. I have said my prayers and devil Envy say Amen. What ho! my Lord Achilles!

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gift counterfeit, thou couldst not have slipped out of my contemplation: but it is no matter; thusly upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she that lays thee out says thou art a fair corse. I'll be sworn and sworn upon 't she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen. Where's Achilles? Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer? Ther. Ay: the heavens hear me!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where? Art thou come? why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come, what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Patroclus. Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus: then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell that knowest.

Achil. O, tell, tell. Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower, and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, Patroclus! I have not done. [sits. Achil. He is a privileged man. Proceed, Ther.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool, and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a Achil. Derive this; come. [fool. Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool, and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover. It suffices me thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus. I'll speak with nobody. Come in, Patroclus. Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold and a whore; a good quarrel to draw emulous factions and bleed to death upon. Now, the dry serpigo on the subject! and war and lechery confound all! [Exit. Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent; but ill disposed, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here. He shorn our messengers; and we lay by our appartements, visiting of him: Let him be told so; lest perchance he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit. Ther. We saw him at the opening of his tent: He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride; but why, why? let him show us the cause. A word, my lord. [Takes Agamemnon aside. Nest. What moves Ajax thus to buy at him? Ulyss. Achilles has inveigled his fool from him. Nest. Who, Thersites?

Ulyss. I'llc. Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No, you see, he is his argument that has his argument, Achilles.

Nest. All the better: their fraction is more our wish than their faction: but it was a strong com- posure a fool could disunite. Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily unite. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry, If anything more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness and this noble state To call upon him; he hopes it is no other But for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner's breath.

Agam. Hear ye, Patroclus; We are too well acquainted with these answers: But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Much attribute he hath, and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues, Not virtuously on his own part beheld, Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss, Pea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin, If you do say we think him over-proud And under-honest, in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself.

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous preponderance; yea, watch His pettish lunes, his ebsos, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his side. Go tell him this; and add, That if he overholds his price so much, We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report: 'Bring action hither, this cannot go to war: A stirring dwarf do allowance give Before a sleeping giant.' Tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently. [Exit. Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied; We come to speak with him. Ulysses, enter you. [Exit Ulysses. Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question. [Exit Ajax. Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud eats up himself; pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chromele; and whatsoever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the en-gendering of toads.

Nest. Yet he loves himself: is 't not strange? [Aside.
ACT III.  TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.  SCENE I.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. But smiles on the stream of his dispose Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not upon our fair request
Untent his person and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake by.

He makes important; possess'd he is with greatness,
And speaks not to himself but with a pride
That quarrels at self-breath: imagined worth
Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse
That twixt his mental and his active parts
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages
And batters down himself: what should I say?

He is so plague proud that the death-tokens of it
Cry 'No recovery.'

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent:
'Tis said he holds you well, and will be led
At your request a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!

We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes
When they go from Achilles: shall the proud lord
That bastes his arrogance with his own seam
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts, save such as do revolve
And ruminat himself, shall he be worshipp'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?

No, this thrice worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so stake his palm, nobly acquired;

Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is,

By going to Achilles:

That were to enlaid his fat already pride
And add more coals to Cancer when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.

This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid,
And say in thunder 'Achilles go to him.'

Nest. [Aside to Dio.] O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him.

Dio. [Aside to Nest.] And how his silence drinks up this applause!

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist
I'll bash him o'er the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An a' be proud with me, I'll please his
Let me go to him. [pride]

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our Ajax. A paity, insolent fellow! [quarrel

Nest. How he describes himself!

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss. The raven chides blackness.

Ajax. I'll let his humour's blood.

Agam. He will be the physician that should be the patient.

Ajax. An all men were o' my mind,—

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion.

Ajax. A' should not bear it so, a' should eat words first; shall pride carry it?

Nest. An 't would, you 'd carry half.

Ulyss. A' would have ten shares.

Ajax. I will knead him; I'll make him supple.

Nest. He's not yet through warm: force him with praises; pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.

Ajax. [To Agam.] My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does he?

Here is a man — but 'tis before his face; [harm.

I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus

Would he were a Trojan! [with us!

Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now,—

Ulyss. If he were proud,—

Dio. Or covetous of praise,—

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne,—

Dio. Or strange, or self-affect'd! [composure;

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee suck:

Famed be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Three famed, beyond all erudition:

But that he disciplin'd thy arms to fight,

Let Mars divide eternity in twain,

And give him half: and, for thy vigour,

Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield

To sneer Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,

Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts: here's Nestor;

Instructed by the antiquary times,

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;

But pardon, father Nestor, were your days

As green as Ajax' and thy brain so temper'd,

You should not have the eminence of him,

But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be ruled by him, Lord Ajax.

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hurt Achilles

Keeps thicket. Please it our great general

To call together all his state of war;

Fresh kings are come to Troy: to-morrow

We must with all our main of power stand fast;

And here 's a lord,—come knights from east to west,

And eull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:

Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep. [Excit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.— Troy. Priam's palace.

Enter a Servant and Pandarus.

Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the Lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace.

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles. [Music within.] What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir: it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

530
SCENE II.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.
Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.
Helen. Ay, ay, prithee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.
Pan. Ay, you may, you may.
Helen. Let thy song be love; this love will undo us all.
Pan. Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!
Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, faith.
Pan. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.
Pan. In good troth, it begins so. [Sings.
Love, love, nothing but love, still more!
For, O, love's bow
Shoots back and do:'e
The shaft confounded,
Not that it wounds,
But tickles still the sore.
These lovers cry Oh! oh! they die!
Yet that which seems the wound to kill,
Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!
So dying love lives still:
Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!
Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!
Heigh-ho!

Helen. In love, I' faith, to the very tip of the nose.
Par. He eats nothing but doves, love, and that breed hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.
Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?
Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-day; but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not in?
Helen. He hangs the lip at something: you know all, Lord Pandarus.
Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen, I long to hear how they sped to-day. You'll remember your brother—
Pan. To a hair. [Par's excuse?
Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.
Helen. Commend me to your niece.
Pan. I will, sweet queen. [Exit.
Par. They're come from field: let us to Primm's hall.
[To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo To help unarm our Hector; his stubborn buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd, Shall more obey than to the edge of steel Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings,—disarm great Hector.
Helen. 'T will make us proud to be his servant, Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty [Paris; Gives us more pain in beauty than we have, Yea, overshines ourself.
Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.
Helen. O, sir,—
Pan. Rude, in sooth; in sooth, very rude.
Pan. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fits.
Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen.
My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?
Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.
Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me. But, marry, thus, my lord: my dear lord and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus,—
Helen. My Lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—
Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you.—
Helen. You shall not rob us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy upon your head!
Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen! that's a sweet queen, I' faith.
Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour
Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no. And, my lord, he desires you, that if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.
Helen. My Lord Pandarus,—
Pan. What says my sweet queen, my very very sweet queen? [night?
Pan. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to—
Helen. Nay, but, my lord,
Pan. What says my sweet queen? My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he says.
Pan. I'll lay my life, with my disposer Cressida.
Pan. No, no, no such matter; you are wide: come, your disposer is sick.
Pan. Well, I'll make excuse.
Helen. Ay, good my lord, Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.
Pan. I spy.
Helen. Why, this is kindly done.
Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet Helen. [lord Paris.
Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twin.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus' Boy, meeting.
Pan. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's? [quite
Boy. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him
Pan. O, here he comes.

Enter Troilus.
Where I may wallow in the illy-beds
Proposed for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here 1 the orchard, I'll bring her straight.

[Exit. Too

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirs me round.
The imaginary relish is so sweet
That it enchant's my sense: what will it be,
When that the watery patate tastes indeed
Love's thrice repur'd nectar? death, I fear me,
Swooning destruction, or some joy too fine,
Too subtle an art for our mistress to devise.

For the capacity of my ruder powers:
I fear it much: and I do fear besides,
That I shall lose distinction in my joys;
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight:
you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fraied with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain:
she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrance my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encumbering
The eye of majesty.

Re-enter Pandarus with Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.
Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me. What, are you going to say? you must be watchful ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you in the fills. Why do you not speak to her? Come, draw curlier to your picture. Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 't were dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress. Now! now! a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks 1 the river: go to,
go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.
Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? There's in witness whereof the parties interchangably —
Come in, come in: I'll go get a fire. [Exit.
Cres. Will you walk in, my lord? [thus!
Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me Cres. Wished, my lord! The gods grant,—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious Mad esqus my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?
Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear:
'to fear the worst oft cures the worse.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all
Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to wreap seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrousness in love, lady, that the will is infinite and the execution confined, that the desire is boundless and the act a slave to Cres. They say all lovers swear more performance than they are able and yet reserve an ability that they never perform, vowing more than the perfection of men and women; charging us with less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall we have a praise in present: we will not name the desert before his birth, and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith:

Trolus shall be such to Cressid as what envy can say worst shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truest not truer than Trolus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too: our kindred, though they be long ere they are wood, they are constant being won: they are burs, I can tell you;
they'll stick where they are thrown. [heart.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me
Prince Trolus, I have loved you night and day
For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won: but I was won, my lord,
With the first glance that ever — pardon me —
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much
But I might master it: in faith, I lie: My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown
Too headstrong for their mother. See, see, fools!
Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?
But, though I loved you well, I wo'd you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man,
Or that we'd given had men's privilege
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue,
For in this rapture I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence,
Cunning in dummy, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel! stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pan. Pretty, I faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me;
'T was not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss:
I am ashamed. O heavens! what have I done?
For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid!
Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning,—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company. You
You cannot shun
Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try:
I have a kind of self resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave,
To be another's fool. I would be done:
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than
And fell so roundly to a large confession,
ACT III.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE III.

To angle for your thoughts: but you are wise,
Or else you love not, for to be wise and love
Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Troy. O that I thought it could be in a woman—
As, if it can, I will presume in you—
To feel for aye her lamp and flames of love;
To keep me constant in my faith and truth,
Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than devil decays!
or that persuasion could but thus convince me,
That my integrity and truth to you
Might be avouched with the match and weight
Of such a woman's convertibility:
How then I then uplifted! but, alas!
I am as true as truth's simplicity
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Troy. When right with right wars who shall be most right!
True swains in love shall in the world to come
Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath and big compare,
Want similes, truth tired with iteration,
As true as steel, as plottage to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to a furnace man in the centre,
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
'As true as Troilus' shall crown up the verse,
And sanctify the numbers:

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing, yet let memory,
From false to false, among false minds in love,
Upbray'd my falsehood! when they've said 'as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the blind, or stepdame to her son,'
'Yea,' let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
'As false as Cressid.'

Patr. Too great a deal made: seal it, seal it; I'll be the witness.
Here I hold your hand, here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name; call them all Pandars; let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers between Pandars! say amen.

Troy. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Patr. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber with a bed; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away! And Cymid grant all tongue-tied maids here
Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear! [Exeunt.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me alond
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind
That, through the sight I bear in things to love,
I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,
Incurred a traitor's name; exposed myself,
From certain and possessor'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes: sequestering from me all
That time, acquaintance, condition and condition
Made tame and most familiar to my nature,
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

A Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,
Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you—often have you thanks therefore—
Desired my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: but this Antenor,
I know, is such a wrest in their affairs
That their negotiators shall not lack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter: and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.

A Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have
What he requests of us. Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal bring word if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

[Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, before their tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands ! the entrance of his tent:
Please it our general to pass strangely by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:
I will come last. 'Tis like he'll question me
Why such unpleasing eyes are bent on him:
If so, I have derision medicable,
To use between your strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink:
It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To show itself but pride, for supple knees
Feed arrogance and are the proud man's fees.

A Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along:
A do each other, and, other greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shame him more
Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?
You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

A Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with Achil.

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?
Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

A Agam. The better.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

A Ajax. How now, Patroclus!

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

A Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

A Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. [Exit.

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?

Patr. They pass by strangely: they were used to
To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly as they used to creep
To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late?
I'm certain, greatness, once fall'n out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: what the declined is
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others
As feel in his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
Show not their melancholy wings but to the summer,
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honour, but honour for those honours That are without him, as place, riches, favour, Prizes of accident as oft as merit: When which they fall, as being slippery standers, The love that lean'd on them as slippery too, Do in his life down and together Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me: Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy At ample point all that I did possess, Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find out Something not worth in me such rich beholding As they have often given. Here is Ulysses: I'll interrupt his reading. How now, Ulysses!

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son!

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here

Writes me: 'That man, now dearly ever parted, How much in having, or without or in, Cannot make boast to have that which he hath, Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection; As when his virtues shining upon others Heat them and they retort that heat again To the first giver.'

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses.

Th' beauty that is borne here in the face The bearer knows not, but commends itself To others' eyes; nor doth the eye itself, That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself, Not going from itself; but eye to eye opposed Sabots each other with each other's form; For speculation turns not to itself, Till it hath travel'd and is mirror'd there Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,— It is familiar,—but at the author's drift; Who, in the circumstance, expressly proves That no man is the lord of any thing, Though in and of him there be much consisting, Till he communicate his parts to others; Nor doth he of himself know them for aught Till he behold them form'd in the applause Where they're extend'd; who, like an arch, re- verterates The voice again, or, like a gate of steel Fronting the sun, receives and renders back His figure and his heat. I was much wrapt in this; And apprehended here immediately The link'd, the clasp'd, the haps, Heaven's, what a man is there! a very horse, That has he knows not what. Nature, what things Most abject in regard and dear in use? [there are What things again most dear in the esteem And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow— An act that very chance doth throw upon him— Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do, While some men leave to do! How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall, While others play the idlers in her eyes! How one man eats into another's pride, While pride is fasting in his wantonness! To see these Grecian lords, even already They clap the rubber Ajax on the shoulder, As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast And great Troy shrieking.

Achil. I do believe it; for they pass'd by me As misers do by beggars, neither gave to me Good or bad, what, are my deeds forgot?

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back, Wherein he puts alms for oblivion, A great-sized monster of ingratiations: [your'd Those scraps are good deeds past; which are de- As fast as they are made, forgot as soon As dews, in precious dew. He keeps his honour bright: to have done is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty nail In monumental mockery. Take the instant way; For honour travels in a strait so narrow, Where one but goes abreast: keep then the path; For emulation hath a thousand sons That one by one pursue; if you give way, Or hedge aside from the direct forthright, Like to an entwined vine, may all rush by And leave you hithmost; Or, like a gallant horse fall'n in first rank, Lie there for pavement to the abject rear, [present, O'er-run and trampled on: then what they do in Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop yours; For time feeds a fashionable lust

That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand, And with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly, Grasps in the corner: welcome ever smiles, [seek And farewell goes out sighing. O, let virtue Remuneration for the thing it was; For beauty, wit,

High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service, Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all To envious and calumniating time. One touch of nature makes the whole world kin, That all with one consent praise new-born gawds, Though they are made and moulded of things past, And give to dust that is but little gill More laud than girt o'er-dusted.

The present eye praises the present object:

Then marvel not, thou great and complete man, That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax; Since things in motion sooner catch the eye Than what not stirs. The cry went out on thee, And still it might, and yet it may again, If thou wouldest not entomb thyself alive And case thy reputation in thy tent; Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late, Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves And brave great Mars to faction's arms.

Achil. Of this my privacy I have strong reasons.

But 'gainst your privacy

The reasons are more potent and heroic!

'T is known, Achilles, that you are in love With one of Priam's daughters.

Achil. Ha! known!

Ulyss. Is that a wonder?

The providence that's in a watchful state Knows almost every grain of Plutos' gold, Finds bottom in the uncomprehending deeps, Keeps place with those the gods are like, Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles.

There is a mystery — with whom relation Durst never meddle — in the soul of state; Which hath an operation more divine Than breath or pen can give expressre to: All the commerce that you have had with Troy As perfectly is ours as yours, my lord; And better would it fit Achilles much

To throw down Hector than Polyxena: But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home, When fame shall in our islands sound her trump, And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing, 'Great Hector's sister had Achilles win, But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.'

Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak; The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.

[Exit.

Petr. To this effect, Achilles, have I moved you: A woman insatiate and manish grown Is not more loathed than an effeminate man In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this; They think my little stomach to the war And your great love to me restrains you thus: Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cúpid shall dash from your neck unleas his amorous fold, And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane, Be shooed to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?
Patr. Ay, and perhaps receive much honour by Achil. I see my reputation is at stake; [him.
My fame is shrewdly gored.
Patr. O, then, beware;
Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves:
Omission to do what is necessary
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an agony, subtly taints
Even then when we sit sily in the sun.
Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus:
I'll send the fool to Ajax and desire him
To invite the Trojan fards after the combat
To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace,
To talk with him and to behold his visage,
Even to my full of view.

Enter Thersites.

A labour saved!

Ther. A wonder!
Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for Achil. How so?
Ther. He must fight single to-morrow with Hector, and is so prophetically proud of an heroic act carrying with him vain nothing.
Achil. How can that be?
Ther. Why, he walks up and down like a peacock,—a stride and a stand: ruminate like an hostess that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning; bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say 'There were wit in this head, an't would out;' and so there is, but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck to the comb-tate, he'll break 't himself in vain-glory. He knows not me; I said 'Good morrow, Ajax;' and he replies 'Thanks, Agamemnon.' What think you of this man that takes me for the general? He's grown a very land-iish, languageless, a monster.
A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. [Thersites.
Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, ther.
Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody: he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; we see it wears the tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.
Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous
Hector to come unarmed to my tent, and to procure safe-conduct for his person of the magnanimous and most illustrious six-or-seven-times-honored captain-general of the Grecian army, Aga-memnon, et cetera. Do this.
Patr. Jove bless great Ajax!
Ther. Hum!
Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—
Ther. Ha!
Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent,—
Ther. Hum!
Patr. And to procure safe-conduct from Aga-memnon.
Ther. Agamemnon! [non.
Patr. Ay, my lord.
Ther. Ha!
Patr. What say you to 't?
Ther. God b' wi' you, with all my heart.
Patr. Your answer, sir.
Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other: however, he shall pay for me ere he has me.
Patr. Your answer, sir.
Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.
Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?
Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, none, less the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings on.
[straight.
Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.
Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stim'd;
And I myself see not the bottom of it.
[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.
Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep than such a valiant ignorance.
[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Troy. A street.
Enter, from one side, Eneas, and Servant with a torch; from the other, Paris, Diomedes, Antenor, Dione, and others, with torches.
Par. See, ho! who is that there?
Ene. It is the Lord Eneas.
Ene. Is the prince there in person?
Had I so good occasion to lie long [ness
As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly busi-
Should rob my bed-mate of my company. [Eneas.
Dio. That's my mind too. Good morrow, Lord
Power, a valiant Greek, Eneas,—take his hand,— Witnless the process of your speech, wherein
You told how Diomed, a whole week by days,
Did haunt you in the field.
Ene. Health to you, valiant sir,
During all question of the gentle truce;
But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance
As heart can think or courage execute.
Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.
Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, health!
But when contention and occasion meet,
By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life
With all my force, pursuit and policy.
Rouse him and give him note of our approach, With the whole quality wherefore: I fear We shall be much unwelcome.

\[Enter.\] That I assure you: Troilus had rather Troy were born to Greece Than Cressid born from Troy. There is no help; The bitter disposition of the time Will have its so. On, lord; we'll follow you. \[Exit.\]

\[Exit with Servant.\] And tell me, noble Diomed, faith, tell me true, Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship, Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best, Myself or Menelaus?

\[Both alike.\] He merits well to have her, that doth seek her, Not making any scruple of her soiree, With such a hell of pain and world of charge, And you as well to keep her, that defend her, Not palating the taste of her dishonour, With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece; You, like a lecher, out of whorship loins Are pleased to break out your incontinents: Both merits praised, each weighed nor less nor more; But he as he, the heavier for a whore.

\[Par.\] You are too bitter to your countrywoman. \[Dio.\] She's bitter to her country: hear me, Paris: For every false drop in her bawdy veins A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple Of her contaminate carrion weight, A Trojan hath been slain: since she could speak, She hath not given so many good words breath As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

\[Par.\] Fair Diomed, you do as Chapman do, Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy: But we in silence hold this virtue well, We'll but commend what we intend to sell. Here lies our way. \[Exeunt.\]

SCENE II.—The same. Court of Pandarus' house.

\[Enter Troilus and Cressida.\]

\[Tro.\] Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold. \[Cres.\] Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle He shall unboilt the gates. \[Dow;\]

\[Tro.\] Trouble him not; To bed, to bed: sleep kill those pretty eyes, And give as soft attachment to thy senses As infants' empty of all thought!

\[Cres.\] Good morrow, then. \[Tro.\] I prithee now, to bed.

\[Cres.\] Are you a-weary of me? \[Tro.\] O Cressida! but that the busy day, Waked by the lark, hath roused the frigid crows, And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer, I would not from thee.

\[Cres.\] Night hath been too brief. \[Tro.\] Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights she stays As terribly as hell, but flies the grasps of love With wings more momentary-swift than thought. You will catch cold, and curse me.

\[Cres.\] You men will never tarry. O foolish Cressid! I might have still held off, And then you would havemarried. Hark! there's Olympic O!\[Pan. [Within.] What, 's all the doors open here? \[Tro.\] It is your uncle.

\[Cres.\] A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking: I shall have such a life! \[Enter Pandarus.\]

\[Pan.\] How now, how now! how go maidenheads? Here, you maid! where 's my cousin Cressid?
ACT IV.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE IV.

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor; thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troy: 't will be his death; 't will be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods! I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle; I have forgot my father; I know no touch of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me As the sweet Troilus. O you gods divine!

Make Cressida's name the very crown of falsehood, If ever she leave Troy! Time, force, and death, Do to this body what extremities you can; But the strong base and building of my love Is as the very centre of the earth, Drawing all things to it. I'll go in and weep,—

Pan. Do, do. [cheeks.

Cres. Tear my bright hair and scratch my praised Crack my clear voice with sob and break my heart With sounding Troy. I will not go from Troy. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Street before Pandarus' house.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Æneas, Delphobus, Antenor, and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the hour prefix'd Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon. Good my brother Troilus, Tell you the lady what she is to do, And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk into her house;

I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:

And to his hand when I deliver her, Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus A priest there offering to it his own heart. [Exeunt.

Par. I know what 'tis to love: And would, as I shall pity, I could help! Please you walk in, my lords. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. Pandarus' house.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?

The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste, And violenteth in a sense as strong

As that which causeth it: how can I moderate it? If I could temporize with my affection, Or know it to a worse, well order'd palate, The like allayment could I give my grief: My love admits no qualifying dross;

No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.

Enter Troilus.

Ah, sweet ducks!

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too. 'O heart,' as the goodly saying is,

O heart, heavy heart,

Why sigh'st thou without breaking? where he answers again,

Because thou canst not ease thy smart

By friendship nor by speaking.

There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it. How now, lambs?

Tro. Cressida, I love thee so strait'd a purity, That the bless'd gods, as angry with my fancy, More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities, take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 't is too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance

Puts back leave-taking, justices roughly by

All time of pause, rudest beguiles our lips

Of all rejoinders, forcibly presents

Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows

Even in the birth of our own labouring breath:

We two, that with so many thousand sighs

Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves

With the rude brevity and discharge of one.

Injurious they now with a robber's haste

Crams his rich thievish up, he knows not how:

As many farewells as be stars in heaven,

With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,

He fumbles up into a loose adieu,

And scantus us with a single famish'd kiss,

Distasteful with the salt of broken tears.

Æne. If this is true, my lord, is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd; some say the Genius so

Cries 'come!' to him that instantly must die.

Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root. [Exeunt.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woful Cressida! 'mongst the merry Greeks!

When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love: be thou but true of Cres. I true! how now! what wicked deed is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,

For it is parting from us: I speak not 'be thou true,' as fearing thee,

For I will throw my glove to Death himself,

That there's no maculation in thy heart:

But 'be thou true,' say I, to fashion in

My sequent protestation; be thou true,

And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be exposed, my lord, to dangers

As infinite as imminent! but I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve,

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentiments,

To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet be true.

Cres. O heavens! 'be true!' again!

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love:

The Grecian youths are full of quality;

They're loving,宽容'd with gifts of nature,

Flowing and swelling o'er with arts and exercise:

How novelty may move, and parts with person,

Alas, a kind of godly jealousy—

Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin—

Makes me afeard.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain, then!

In this I do not call your faith in question

So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,

Nor feel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk,

Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all, [nant:

To which the Grecians are most prompt and preg-

But I can tell that in each grace of these

There lurks a still and dumb-discursive devil

That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

But something may be done that we will not:

And sometimes we are devils to ourselves:

When we will temp the fruitlet of our powers,

Presuming on their changeful potency.

Æne. [Within] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;

And bring Æneas and the Grecian with you.

527
ACT IV.  TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.  SCENE V.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?
Troy. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning glid their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit
Is 'plain and true'; there's all the reach of it.

Enter Æneas, Paris, Antenor, Deiphobus, and Diomedes.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, lord, I'll give her thy hand;
And by the way possess thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou, Deiphobus, and mine own name
Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilion.

Die. Fair Lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Fleets your fair visage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Troy. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the zeal of my petition to thee
In praising her; I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-sounding o'er thy praises
As the unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Die. Yet 'tis not be moved, Prince Troilus:
Let me be privileged by my place and message,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust: and know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: to her own worth
She shall be prized; but that you say 'be 't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour, 'no,'
Troy. Come, to the port. I'll tell thee, Diomed,
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.
Lady, give me your hand, and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend we our needful talk.
[Exeunt Troilus, Cressida, and Diomedes.  [Trumpet within.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Enter Ajax, armed; Agamemnon, Achilles, Patroclus, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh
And anticipating time with starting courage. [fair,
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.
Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe;
Blow, villain, till thy sphere be clay.
Outswell the colic of puff'd Aquilon
Bloody; pour in all thy power, and blot the cutter
Thou blow'st for Hector.  [Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not yond Diomed, with Calchas' daugh-

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait; [fer;

He rises on the toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomedes, with Cressida.

Agam. Is this the Lady Cressid?
Die. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;
'Twere better she was kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courteously: I'll begin.

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair
Achilles bids you welcome. [lady
Men. I had good argument for kissing once.
Par. But that's no argument for kissing now;
For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment,
And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O dearly gall, and theme of all our scorns!
For which we lose our heads to gild his horns.

Par. The first was Menelaus' kiss; this, mine;
Patroclus kisses you. 0, this is trim!

Par. Paris and I kiss evermore for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir. Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Par. Both take and give.

Men. I'll make my match to live,
The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You 're an old man; give even, or give none.

Men. An old man, lady! every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for you know 'tis true,
That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You fillip o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Agam. Why, beg, then.

Ulyss. Why then for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I can my debtor claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never 's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Die. Lady, a word: I'll bring you to your father.

[Exit with Cressida.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss. Fie, fie upon her!

Par. There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.
O, these encounters, so glib of tongue,
That give accoating welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity
And daughters of the game.

[Trumpet within.

All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Under comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed; Æneas, Troilus, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Æne. Hail, all you state of Greece! what shall be done
To him that victory commands? or do you purpose
A victor shall be known? will you the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other, or shall be divided
By any voice or order of the field?
Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Æne. He cares not; he'll obey conditions.

Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
The knight opposed.

Ach. If not Achilles, sir,
What is your name?

Troil. Lo, therefore Achilles: but, whate'er, know
In the next act it shall be expected: and this:
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that which looks like pride is courtesy.
This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:
In love of self, half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
This blendeft knelt, half Trojan and half Greek.
Ach. A maiden battle, then? O, I perceive you.

Ajax and Hector enter the lists.

Ulyss. They are opposed already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight,
Not yet mature, yet matchless, firm of word,
Speaking in deeds and deedless in his tongue;
Not soon provoked nor being provoked soon calm'd;
His heart and hand both open and both free;
For what he has he gives, what thinks he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impure thought with breath;
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes
To tender objects, but he in heat of action
Is more vindicative than jealous love:
They call him Troilus, and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.

Thus says Aeneas; one that knows the youth
Even to his inches, and with private soul.
Did in great lion thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. Hector and Ajax fight.]

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;
Ajax, wake thee! Ajax!

Nest. This blows are well disposed; there, Ajax! Dio.

Ajax. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.]

Aene. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet; let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why, then will I no more:
Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory enmity 'twixt us twain:
Were they connivance Greek and Trojan so
That thou couldst say, This hand is Greekian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy: my mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bonds in my father's; by Jove multipotent,
Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish member
Wherein my sword had not impression made
Of other flesh feud: but the just gods say
That any man should slay thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
Be slain! Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast justly arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:
Thou art too gentle and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable,
On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st Oyes
Cries 'This is he,' could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Ajax. There is expectation here from both the sides,
What further you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;
The issue is embracement: Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in courtships find success —
As said I have the chance — I would desire
My favour to come to our Trojan tents.

Dio. It is Agamemnon's wish, and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarmed the valiant Hector.

Hect. Aeneas, call my brother Troilus to me,
And signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part;
Desire them home. Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee and see your knights.

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by name;
But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an entrance.
But that's no welcome: understand more clear,
What's past and what's to come is stew'd with
And formless ruin of oblivion;
[husks But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Stain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawings,
Tides thee, with most divine integrity.

From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

Agam. To Troilus, My well-famed lord of Troy,
No less to you.

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greet
You bear of warlike brotherly welcome hither.

Hect. Who must we answer?

An. The noble Menelaus.

Hect. O, you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet
Mock not, that I affect the unmasked oath; thanks!
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:
She's well, but have thee not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.

Hect. O, pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft Labouring for destiny make cruel way
[thee,
Through ranks of Greekish youth, and I have seen
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Ow'ring thy foes and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword in the air,
Not letting it decline on the declined,
That I have said to some of my standers by
'Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!'
And I have seen thee pause and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hem'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grand sire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Ajax. The old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time;
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contest;
As they do affect with thee in courtesy;
[tenion,
Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha! By this white beard, I'll fight with thee to-morrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! — I have seen the time.

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands.
When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favour, Lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.
Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that pertly front your town,
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you:
There they stand yet, and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all,
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome:
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!
Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perceived thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.

Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O, like a book of sport thou 'rt read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand'st.
Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him? whether there, or there,
That I may give the local wound a name
And make distinct the very breach whereat
Hector's great spirit flew: answer me, heavens!

Hect. It would discredit the blest gods, proud man,
To answer such a question: stand again:
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly
As to prenominate in nice conjecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well;
For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there;
But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er.
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag;
His insolence draws folly from my lips;
But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—

Agam. Do not chafe thee, cousin:
And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident or purpose bring you to 't:
You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have stomach; the general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field:
We have had pelting wars, since you refused
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector? To-morrow do I meet thee, fell as death;
To-night all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.

Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my There in the full convive we: afterwards, [tent; As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Conuere together, severally entreat him.
Beat loud the tabourines, let the trumpets blow,
That this great soldier may his welcome know.

Exeunt all except Troilus and Ulysses.

Ther. To-morrow, I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,
After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there
That waits her absence?

Ther. O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?
She was beloved, she loved; she is, and doth:
But still sweet love is food for fortunate's tooth.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Grecian camp. Before Achilles' tent.

[Enter Achilles and Patroclus.]

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

[Enter Thersites.]

Achil. How now, thou core of envy! Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest,
And idol of idiot-worshippers, here's a letter for
Achil. From whence, fragment? [thee.

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, adversity! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Prithree, be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk: thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now, the rotten diseases of the south, the guts-gripping, raptures, catarrhis, loads o' gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold pulsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of impost-humor, sciaticas, limekilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled freemanship of the tetter, take and take again such prosterous discoveries!

Patr. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt, you whoreson indistinguishable ear, my body.

Ther. No! why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of slave-silk, thou green serenit flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such waterlilies, diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Fine egg!

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.
Here is a letter from Queen Hecuba,
A token from her daughter, my fair love,
Both taxing me and gaging me to keep
An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:
ACT V.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE II.—The same. Before Calchas’ tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Dió. What, are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within] Who calls?

Dió. Diomed, Calchas, I think. Where’s your Cal. [Within] She comes to you. [daughter?

Enter Troilus and Ulysses, at a distance; after them, Thersites.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

 Dio. [Whispers.] How now, my charge?

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian! Hark, a word with you.

Tro. Yea, so familiar?

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff; she’s noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember! yes.

Dio. Nay, but do, then;

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List.

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to Ther. Rognery! [folly.

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres. I’ll tell you what—

Dio. Foh, foh! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn.

Cres. In faith, I cannot: what would you have me do?

Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open.

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I prithee, do not hold me to mine oath;

Bid me do anything but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan!

Cres. Diomed.—

Dio. No, no, good-night: I’ll be your fool no more.

Ther. Thy better match.

Cres. Hark, one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness! [pray you,

Ulyss. You are moved, prince; let us depart, I

Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself

To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Ther. Schold, I pray you!

Ulyss. Nay, good my lord, go off:

You flow to great distraction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pray thee, stay.

Ulyss. You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell and all hell’s tor-

I will not speak a word!—

Dio. [Within] My lords, do, and so, good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither’d truth!—

Ulyss. Why, how now, lord! By Jove,

I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!

Dio. Foh, foh! adieu; you palter.

Cres. In faith, I do not: come hither once again.

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will you go?

You will break out.

She strikes his cheek!

Ther. How the devil Luxury, with his fat rump and potato-finger, tickles these together! Fry, lecbery, fry! 531

Dio. But will you, then?
Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.
Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.
Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.

Ulyss. You have sworn patience.
Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord;
I will not be myself, nor have cognition
Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter Cressida.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now!
Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.
Tro. O beauty! where is thy faith?
Ulyss. Old man, I care not.
Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.
Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.
If he loved me — O false wench! — Give 't me again.
Dio. Whose was 't?
Cres. It is no matter, now I have 't again.
I will not meet with you to-morrow night:
I prithee, Diomed, visit me no more.
Ther. Now she sharpens: well said, witchstone!
Dio. I shall have it.
Cres. What, this?
Dio. Ay, that.
Cres. O, all you gods! O pretty, pretty pledge!
Try masters now lies thinking in his bed.
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it,
As I kiss thee. Nay, do not snatch it from me;
He that takes that doth take my heart withall.
Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.
Tro. I did swear patience.
Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed: faith, you
I'll give you something else. [shall not;
Dio. I will have this: whose was it?
Cres. It is no matter.
Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.
Cres. You shall not go: one cannot speak a word,
But it straight starts you.
Dio. I do not like this fooling.
Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you pleases me best.
Dio. What, shall I come? the hour?
Cres. Ay, come: — O Jove! — do come: — I shall
Dio. Farewell till then. [be plagued.
Cres. Good night: I prithee, come.

[Exit Diomedes.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;
but what my heart the other eye doth see,
Ah, poor our sex! this fault in us I find,
The error of our eye directs our mind:
What error leads must err; O, then conclude
Minds sway'd by eyes are full of turpitude. [Exit.
Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more.
Unless she said 'My mind is now turn'd whore.'
Ulyss. All's done, my lord.

Tro. It is.

Ulyss. Why stay we, then?
Tro. To make a recordation to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke.
But if I tell how these two did co-act,
Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so constantly strong,
That doth invert the attis of eyes and ears,
As if those organs had decepitions functions,
Created only to calumniate.

Was Cressid here?
Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.
Tro. She was not, sure.
Ulyss. Most sure she was.
Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness.
Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but
Tro. Let it not be believed for womanhood! [now.
Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage
To stubborn critics, apt, without a theme,
To deprivation, to square the sex,
By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.
Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?
Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.
Ther. Will he swagger himself out on 's own eyes?
Tro. This she? — no, this is Diomed's Cressida:
If beauty have a soul, this is not she:
If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies,
If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she. O madness of discourse,
That cause sets us up with and against itself!
Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt
Without perdition, and loss assume all reason
Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid.
Within my soul there doth conduct a fight
Of this strange nature that a thing inseparate
Divides more wider than the sky and earth,
And yet the spacious breadth of this division
Admits no orifex for a point as subtle
As Ariachne's broken woof to enter.
Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates;
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven;
Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself:
The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolved, and
With and another knot, five-finger-tied, [loosed;
The frictions of her faith, ors of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy relics
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.
Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd
With that which here his passion doth express?
Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged well
In characters as red as Mars his heart
Infamed with Venus: never did young man fancy
With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.
Hark, Greek: as much as I do Cressid love,
So much by weight hate I her Diomed:
That sleeve is mine that he'll bear on his helm;
Were it a casque composed by Vulcan's skill,
My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spot
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Construng in mass by the almighty sun,
Shall dizzy with more clear than Neptune's ear
In his descent than shall my promted sword
Falling on Diomed.
Ther. He'll tickle it for his concupis. [false!
Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false,
Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
And they'll seem glorious.
Ulyss. O, contain yourselves;
Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter Aeneas.

Ene. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord:
Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.
Tro. Have with you, prince. My courteous lord,
Farewell, revolted fair! and, Diomed, [adieu.
Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!
Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.
Tro. Accept distracted thanks.
[Exit Troilus, Aeneas, and Ulysses.
ACT V.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE III.

TROILUS. Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven; I would hale, I would hale. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this where: the parrot will not do more for an almonde than lie for a commodious drab. Leechery, leechery; still, wars and leechery; nothing else holds fashion: a burning devil take them!

[Exit.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my lord so much ungently tender'd, not to stop his ears against admonishment? [sighs,] Unarm, unarm, and do not fight today. Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in: By all the everlasting gods, I'll go! And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the Hector. No more, I say. [day.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector? And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent. Consort with me in loud and dear petition, Pursue we him on knees: for I have dream'd Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter. Cas. O, 'tis true. [sighs.]

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound! Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother: [swear.]

Hect. Be gone, I say: the gods have heard me. Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows: They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. And. O, be persuaded! do not count it holy To hurt by being just: it is as lawful, For we would give much, to use violent thefts, And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow; But vows to every purpose must not hold: Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say; Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate: Life every man holds dear; but the brave man Holds honour far more precious dear than life.

Enter Troilus.

How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight to-day? And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus: Halt thy harness, I am to-day! the veins of clavary: [sighs.]

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong, And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Unarm thee, go, and doubt thou not, brave boy, I'll stand to-day for thee and me and Troy. Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you, Which better fits a Lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecian falls, Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword, You bid them rise, and live.

Hect. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now! how now!

Tro. For the love of all the gods, Let's leave the hermit pity with our mothers, And when we have our armours buckled on, The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords, Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

Hect. Fie, savage, fie!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me? Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire; Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees, Their eyes o'erralled with recourse of tears; Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn, Opposed to hinder me, should stop my way, But by my ruin.

Re-enter Cassandra, with Priam.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast: He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay, Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee, Full all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back: Thy wife hath dream'd thy; thy mother hath had visions; Andromache doth foresee; and I myself Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt: To tell thee that this day is ominous: Therefore, come back.

Hect. Aneas is a-field; And I do stand engaged to many Greeks, Even in the faith of valour, to appear This morning to them.

Pri. Ay, but thou shalt not go. Hect. I must not break my faith. You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir, Let me not blame respect; but give me leave To take that course by your consent and voice, Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam. Cas. O Priam, yield not to him!

And. Do not, dear father.

Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you: Upon the love you bear me, get you in. [Exit Andromache.

TRO. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl Makes all these bodeaments.

Cas. O, farewell, dear Hector! Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale! Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents! Dark, how Troy roars! how Hecula cries out! How poor Andromache shrills her dolors forth! Behold, distraction, frenzy and amazement, Like witless antics, one another meet, And all cry, Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector! Tro. Away! away!

Cas. Farewell! yet, soft! Hector, I take my leave: Thou dost thyself and all our Trojans deceive. [Exit. Hector. You are amazed, my liege, at her exclain: Go in and cheer the town: we'll forth and fight, Do deeds worth praise and tell you them at night.

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee! [Exit severally Priam and Hector. Alarums. Tro. They are at it, hark! Proud Diomed, believe, I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter come from yond poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson tisick, a whoreson rascally tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl: and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one of these days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too, and such an ache in my bones that, unless a man were curset, I cannot tell what to think on 't. What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart: The effecteth operate another way.

[Exit Pandarus.}

Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together. My love with words and errors still she feeds; But edifies another with her deeds. [Exit severally.
SCENE IV.—Plains between Troy and the Grecian camp.

Alarums: excursions. Enter Thersites.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another: I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm: I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish wholemasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, of a sleeveless errand. O the 'tither side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor; and that same dog-fox, Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry; they set me up, in policy, that unmangled cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur Ajax prouter than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day; whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here comes sleeve, and 't other.

Enter Diomedes, Troilus following.

Tro. Fly not; for shouldst thou take the river I would swim after.
[Styx, Dio. Thou dost miscall retire: I do not fly, but advantageous care Withdraw me from the odds of multitude: Have at these! Thers. Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve!
[Exeunt Troilus and Diomedes, fighting.

Enter Hector.

[Exit. Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me but a plague break thy neck for frightening me! What's become of the wenching rogues? I think they have swallowed one another; I would laugh at that miracle: yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—Another part of the plains.

Enter Diomedes and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse: Present the fair steed to my lady Cressida: Fellow, commend my service to her beauty: Tell her I have chastised the amorous Trojan, And am her knight by proof.

Serve. I go, my lord.
[Exit.

Enter Agamemnon.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polyaetides Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margareton Hath Doreus prisoner, And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam, Upon the pashed corsest of the kings Epistrophus and Cedius: Polyxenes is slain, Amphimachus and Thoas deadly hurt, Patroclus ta'en or slain, and Palamedes Sure hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary Apps our numbers: haste we, Diomed, To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles; And bid the swift-paced Ajax arm for shame. There is a thousand Hectors in the field: Now here he fights on Gagathe his horse, And there lacks work: anon he's there afoot, And there they fly or die, like scaled seals Before the belching whale: then is he yonder, And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge, Fall down before him, like the mower's swath: Here, there, and every where, he leaves and takes, Dexterity so obeying appetite: That what he will be does, and does so much That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance: Patroclus' wounds have roused his drowsy blood, Together with his mangled Myrmidons, That Trustless, handless, lack'd and chipp'd, come to him, Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend And foams at mouth; and he is arm'd and at it, Roaring for Troilus, who hath done to-day Mad and fantastic execution, Engaging and redeeming of himself With such a careless force and forceless care As if that luck, in very spite of cunning, Bade him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector? Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face; Know what it is to meet Achilles angry: Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another part of the plains.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter Diomedes.

[Office Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my Ere that correction. Troilus, I say what, Troilus!

Enter Troilus.

Tro. O traitor Diomed! turn thy false face, thou traitor, And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse! Dio. Ha, art thou there? Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed. Dio. He is my prize; I will not look upon. Tro. Come, both you cogging Greeks, have at you both!
[Exeunt, fighting.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now do I see thee, ha! have at thee, Hector! Hect. Pause, if thou wilt. Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan: Be happy that my arms are out of use: My rest and negligence befriends thee now; But thou anon shalt hear of me again; Till when, go seek thy fortune.
[Exit. Hect. Fare thee well: I would have been much more a fresher man, Had I expected thee. How now, my brother!

Re-enter Troilus.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Eneas: shall it be? No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven, He shall not carry him: I'll be ta'en too. Or bring him off: fate, hear me what I say! I reck not though I end my life to-day.
[Exit.
ACT V.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SCENE VII.—Another part of the plains.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

_Achill._ Come here about me, you my Myrmidons! Mark what I say. Attend me where I wheel: Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath; And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In fullest manner execute your aims. Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings: It is decreed Hector the great must die.

_Exit._

SCENE VIII.—Another part of the plains.

Enter Hector.

_Hec._ Most putrefied core, so fair without, Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life. Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath: Take off your helmet and hang his shield behind him.

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

_Achill._ Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set; How ugly night comes breathing at his heels: Even with the vail and darkening of the sun, To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

_Hec._ I am unarm'd; forgo this vantoge, Greek. _Achill._ Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek.

[Exit. _Hector falls._

So, Iion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down! Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone. On, Myrmidons, and cry you all amain, 'Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain!'

[A retreat sounded.

_Hark! a retire upon our Greekian part._

Myr._ The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my _Achill._ The dragon wing of night overspreads the And, stickler-like, the armies separates. _earth._ My half-supert'd sword, that frankly would have fed, Pleased with this dainty bait, thus goes to bed.

_Sheaves his sword._

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail; Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Another part of the plains.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. _Shouts within._

_Agam._ Hark! hark! what shout is that? _Nest._ Peace, drums!

[Within] Achilles! Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles! _Dio._ The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles. _Ajax._ If it be so, yet bragless let it be; Great Hector is a man as good as he.

_Agam._ March patiently along, and one be sent To pray Achilles see us at our tent. If in his death the gods have us befriended, Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE X.—Another part of the plains.

Enter _Æneas_ and Trojans.

_Æne._ Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field: Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter _Troilus_.

_Tro._ Hector is slain.

_Ath._ Hector! the gods forbid! _Tro._ He's dead: and at the murderer's horse's tail, In chastely sort, dragg'd through the shameful field. _Men._ Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed! Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy! I say, at once let your chief pledges be mercy, And linger not our sure destructions on!

_Æne._ My lord, you do discomfort all the host. _Tro._ You understand me not that tell me so: I do not speak of life, of fear, of death, But dare all immiscence that gods and men Address their dangers in. Hector is gone: Who shall tell Priam so, or _Hecuba_? Let him that will a screech-owl aye be call'd, Go in to Troy, and say there, Hector's dead: There is a word will Priam turn to stone; Make wellς and _Niobe_ of the maidens and wives, Cold statues of the youth, and, in a word, Scare Troy out of itself. But, march away: Hector is dead: there is no more to say. Stay yet. You vile abominable tents, Thus proudly light upon our Phrygian plains, Let Titan rise as early as he dare. [caward, I'll through and through you! and, thou great-sized No space of earth shall surder our two hates: I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still, That mouldeth godlies swift as frenzy's thoughts. Strike a free march to Troy! with comfort go: Hope of revenge shall hide out inward woe.

[Exeunt. _Æneas_ and _Trojans._

As _Troilus_ is going out, enter, from the other side, _Pandarus._

_Pau._ But hear you, hear you! _Tro._ Hence, broker-lackey! ignomy and shame Pursue thy life, and live aye with thyname!

[Exit. _Pau._ A goodly medicine for my aching bones! O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a-work, and how ill requited! why should our endavour be so loved and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it? Let me see:

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing, Till he hath lost his honey and his sting; And being once subdu'd in armed tail, Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail.

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted As many as be here of pander's hall, Of clothes. Your eyes, half out, weep out at _Pandar'_s fall; Or if you cannot weep, yet give some groans, Though not for me, yet for your aching bones. Heart and the letters of the bold-thieves trade, Some two months hence my will shall here be made: It should be now, but that my fear is this, Some gall'd goose of _Winchester_ would hiss: Till then I'll sweat and seek about for cases, And at that time bequeath you my diseases.

[Exit.

Enter a company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

First Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me All. Speak, speak.

First Cit. You are all resolved rather to die than to famish?

All. Resolved, resolved.

First Cit. First, you know Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

All. We know t, we know t.

First Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict?

All. No more talking on 't; let it be done: away, Sec. Cit. One word, good citizens. [Away! First Cit. We are accounted poor citizens, the patricians good. What authority surfeits on would relieve us: if they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humbly; but they think we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them. Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes: for the gods know I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

Sec. Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

All. Against him first: he's a very dog to the commonalty.

Sec. Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

First Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

Sec. Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

First Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

Sec. Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him. You must in no way say he is covetous.

536

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page LIX.]
and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious,
Or be accused of folly. I shall tell you
A pretty tale: it may be you have heard it;
But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To state 't a little more.

First Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale: but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body's men,
Rebell'd against the belly, thus accused it:
That only like a gulf it did remain
I' the midst o' the body, idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest, where the other instruments
Did see and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And, mutually participate, did minister
Unto the appetite and affection common
Of the whole body. The belly answer'd—
First Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?
Men. Sir, I shall tell you. With a kind of smile,
Which came from the humps, but even thus—
For, look you, I may make the belly smile
As well as speak—it tauntingly replied
To the discontented members, the mutinous parts
That envied his receipt; even so most finely
As you malign our senators for that
They are not such as you.

First Cit. Your belly's answer? What? What?
The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye,
The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier,
Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,
With other members and petty helps
In this our fabric, if that they—
What then?

Fore me, this fellow speaks! What then? what then
First Cit. Should by the corrombent belly be re-
Who is the sink o' the body,—[strain'd,
Men.]
First Cit. The former agents, if they did com-
What could the belly answer?—[plain,
Men.
I will tell you;
If you'll bestow a small—of what you have little—
Patience awhile, you'll hear the belly's answer.

First Cit. Ye're long about it.

Men. Note give this, good friend;
Your most grave belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:
'Tis true, your corporeal friends, quoth he,
That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and fit it is,
Because I am the store-house and the shop
Of the whole body: but, if you do remember,
I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart, to the seat o' the brain;
And, through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves and small inferior veins
From me receive that natural competency
Whereby they live: and thus, I say that all at once.
You, my good friends,—this says the belly, mark
First Cit. Ay, sir: well, well...

Men. Though all at once cannot
See what I do deliver out to each,
Yet I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back return and the flour of all,
And leave me but the bran. What say you to 't?
First Cit. It was an answer: how apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome is this good belly,
And you the mutinous members; for examine
Their counsels and their cares, digest things rightly
Touching the well' the common, you shall find
No public benefit which you receive
But it proceeds or comes from them to you

And no way from yourselves. What do you think,
You, the great toe of this assembly?

First Cit. I the great toe! why the great toe?

Men. For that, being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,
Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,
Lead'st first to win some vantage.
But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs:
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle;
The one side must have bale.

Enter Caius Marcius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That, rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs?

First Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you, have you ears,
That like nor peace nor war? the one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts you,
Wit with every minute you do change a mind, [eye;
And call him noble that was now your hate;
His vile that was your garland. What's the matter,
That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble senator, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another? What's their seeking?

Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof, they
The city is well stored. [say,
Mar. Hang 'em! They say!
They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know
What's done i' the Capitol: who's like to rise,
Who thrives and who declines; side factions and Conjectural marriages; making parties strong
And feebling such as stand not in their liking
Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain
Would the nobility lay aside their ruth, [enough!
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded;
For though abundantly they lack discretion,
Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you,
What says the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolved: hang 'em! They said they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth prov-ers,

That hunger broke stone walls, that dogs must eat,
That meat was made for mouths, that the gods sent Corn for the rich men only: with these shreds [not They vented their complaining; which being an-swer'd,
And a petition granted them, a strange one—
To break the heart of generosity,

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five tribunes to defend their vulgar wis-doms,
Of their own choice: one’s Junius Brutus, Sicinius Velutus, and I know not—sdeath! The rabble should have first unroof’d the city, Ere we prevail’d with me: it will in time Win upon power and throw forth greater themes For insurrection’s urging.

Men. This is strange.

Marc. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger, hastily.

Mess. Where’s Caius Marcius?

Marc. Here: what’s the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volscæ are in arms. Marc. I am glad on ‘t; then we shall ha’ means to Our musty superfluity. See, our best elders. [vent

Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators; Junius Brutus and Sicinius Velutus.

First Sen. Marcius, ’tis true that you have lately The Volscæ are in arms. [told us; They have a leader, Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to ‘t. I sin in envying his nobility, And were I any thing but what I am, I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together. Marc. Were half to half the world by the ears and Upon my party, I’d revolt, to make [he Only my wars with him: he is a lion That I am proud to hunt.:

First Sen. Then, worthy Marcius, Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Marc. Sir, it is;
And I am constant. Titus Lartius, thou Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus’ face. What, art thou stiff? stand out?

Tit. No, Caius Marcius; I’ll lean upon one crutch and fight with t’other, Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true-bred!

First Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, Our greatest friends attend us. I know, Tit. [To Com.] Lead you on.

[To Marc.] Follow Cominius; we must follow you; Right worthy you priority.

Com. Noble Marcius!

First Sen. [To the Citizens] Hence to your houses; Marci. Nay, let them follow: [be gone! The Volscæ have much corn; take these raths thither To gnaw their garners. Worshipful mutiners, Your valour puts well forth: pray, follow. [Citizens steal away. [Excitant all but Sicinius and Brutus. Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius? Bru. He has no equal. [people. Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the Mark’d you his lip and eyes? Sic. Nay, but his countenance. Bru. Being moved, he will not spare to gird the Sic. Be-mock the modest moon. [gods. Bru. The present wars devour him: he is grown Too proud to be so valiant.

Sic. Such a nature, Tickled with good success, disdain the shadow Which he treads on at noon; but I do wonder His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Cominius.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims, In whom already he’s well graced, can not Better be held nor more attain’d than by A place below the first: what miscarries Shall be the general’s fault, though he perform To the utmost of a man, and giddily censure Will then cry out of Marcius "O, if he Had borne the business!"

Sic. Besides, if things go well, ing, I, considering how honour would become such a person, that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir, was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned mail'd hand with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. [how then?]

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam; Vol. Then his good report should have been my sole. I think that issue. Hear me profess sincerely: had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius. I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country than one voluptuously surfeit of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you. Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself. Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks I hear hither your husband's drum, See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair, As children from a bear, the Volsces shunning him: Methinks I see him bid them thus, and call thus: 'Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome!' his bloody brow With his mail'd hand when wiping, forth he goes, Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow Or all or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O Jupiter, no blood! Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man Than gilt his trophy: the breasts of Heeuba, When she did snaffle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood At Grecian sword, contemning. Tell Valeria, We are fit to bid her welcome.

[Exit Gent. Vir. Heaven bless my lord from fell Aufidius! Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee And tread upon his neck.

Enter Valeria, with an Usher and Gentlewoman.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? a fine spot, in good faith. How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam. Val. I'll send them third words and hear a drum, than look upon his schoolmaster.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly: and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again: and over and over he comes, and up again; catching it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas, he did set his teeth and tear it; O, I warrant, how he maimmocked!

Vol. One on 's father's moods. [it]

Val. Indeed, la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery: I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Val. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Vol. Not out of doors!

Val. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed no, by your patience: I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the wars.

Val. Ple, you confine yourself most unreasonably: come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Val. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come; I would your canvas were sensible as your finger, that you might leave prickling it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, in truth, madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true: I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is: the Volsces have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord and Titus Lartius are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam: I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Val. Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will burst disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think she would. Fare you well, then. Come, good sweet lady. Prithee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed, I must not.

I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter, with drum and colours, Marcus, Titus Lartius, Captains and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news. A wager they have.

Lart. My horse to yours, no. [bet.

Mar. 'Tis done. Agreed.

Lart. Say, has our general met the enemy?

Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll nor sell nor give him: lend you him I will.

For half a hundred years. Summon the town.

Mess. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'harum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I prithee, make us quick in work, That we with smoking swords may march from hence To help our fielded friends! Come, blow thy blast.

They sound a parley. Enter two Senators with others on the walls.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls? [he,

First Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than That 's lesser than a little. [Dreams after off.] Hark! our drums Are bringing forth our youth. We'll break our walls, Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates, Which yet seem shut, we have but plin'd with ruffles; They 'll open of themselves. [Atrium a ter off.] Hark you, far off!

There is Aufidius; list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it!

Lart. Their noise be our instruction. Ladders, ho!

Enter the army of the Volsces.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city. Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight With hearts more proof than shields. Advance, brave Titus:
They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts, Which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on, my fellows: He that retires, I'll take him for a Volscian, And he shall feel mine edge.

_Alarum._ The Romans are beat back to their trenches. Re-enter Marcus, cursing.

_Marcus._ All the contagion of the south light on you, You shame of Rome! you herd of — Bols and plagues Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhorred Further than seen and one infect another Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese, That bear the shapes of men, how have you run From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto and hell! All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale With flight and agued tear! Mend and charge home, Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe And make my wars on you: look to 't: come on; If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives, As they us to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. The Volscians fly, and Marcus follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are open; now prove good seconds; 'Tis for the followers fortune widens them, Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

_Enter the gates._

_First Sol._ Fool-hardiness; not I.

_Second Sol._ Nor I.

_Marcus._ Marcus is shut in.

_First Sol._ See, they have shut him in.

_All._ To the pot, I warrant him.

[ALARUM continues.

_Re-enter Titus Lartius._

_Lartius._ What is become of Marcus?

_Alf._ Shin, sir, doublet.

_First Sol._ Following the fliers at the very heels, With them he enters; who, upon the sudden, Clapp'd to their gates: he is himself alone, To answer all the city.

_Lartius._ O noble fellow! Who soberly outdreses his senseless sword, And, when it bows, stands up. Thou art left, Marcus, A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, _Eius_ Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks and The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds, Thou maddest thine enemies shake, as if the world Were feverous and did tremble.

_Re-enter Marcus, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy._

_First Sol._ Look, sir.

_Lartius._ O, 'tis Marcus! Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.

[They fight, and all enter the city.

_SCENE V._—Coriol. A street.

_Enter certain Romans, with spoils._

_First Roman._ This will I carry to Rome.

_Second Roman._ And I this.

_Third Roman._ A murmur on 't! I took this for silver.

[ALARUM continues still after off.

_Enter Marcus and Titus Lartius with a trumpet._

_Marcus._ See here these movens that do prize their hours At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves Ere yet the fight be done, pack up; down with them! And hark, what noise the general makes! To him! There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, piercing our Romans: then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city; Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste To help Cominius.

_Lartius._ Worthy sir, thou bleed'st! Thy exercise hath been too violent for A second course of fight.

_Marcus._ Sir, praise me not; My work hath yet not warn'd me: fare you well: The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: to Aufidius thus I will appear, and fight.

_Lartius._ Now the fair goddess, Fortune,

Full deep in love with thee; and her great charms Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

_Marcus._ Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest! So, farewell.

_Lartius._ Thou wastherest Marcus! [_Exit Marcus._ Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place; Call thither all the officers o' the town, Where they shall know our mind: away! _Exeunt._

_SCENE VI._—Near the camp of Cominius.

_Enter Cominius, as it were in retire, with soldiers._

_Cominius._ Breathe you, my friends: well fought; we are come off Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands, Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs, We shall be charged again. Whiles we have struck, By interims and conveying gusts we have heard The charges of our friends. Ye Roman gods! Let their successes as we wish our own, That both our powers, with smiling fronts encom- May give you thankful sacrifice.

[Enter a Messenger._

_Mess._ Thy news?

_Cominius._ The citizens of Corioli have issued, And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle: I saw our party to their trenches driven, And then I came away.

_Cominius._ Though thou speak'st truth, Methinks thou speak'st not well. How long is 't _Mess._ Above an hour, my lord.

_Cominius._ 'T is not a mile; briefly we heard their drums: How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour, And bring thy news so late?

_Mess._ Spies of the Volscians Held me in chase, that I was forced to wheel Three or four miles about, else had I, sir, Half an hour since brought my report.

_Cominius._ Who's yonder, That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods! He has the stamp of Marcus; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

_Marcus._ [Within] Come I too late?

_Cominius._ The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor More than I know the sound of Marcus' tongue From every meager man.

_Enter Marcus._

_Marcus._ Come I too late?

_Cominius._ Ay, if you come not in the blood of others, But mantled in your own.

_Marcus._ O, let me clip ye In arms as sound as when I woo'd, in heart As merry as when our nuptial day was done, And tapers burn'd to bedward!

_Cominius._ Flower of warriors, How is 't with Titus Lartius?

_Marcus._ As with a man busied about decrees: Condemning some to death, and some to exile: Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other; Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
ACT I.

CORIOLANUS.

Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash, To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave Which told me they had beat you to your trenches? Where is he? call him hither.

Mar. He did inform the truth: but for our gentlemen, The common file—a plague! tribunes for them!— The mouse ner’er shunn’d the cat as they did budge From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail’d you? Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think. Where is the enemy? are you lords o’ the field? If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcus, we have at disadvantage fought and did Retire to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their battle? know you on which They have placed their men of trust? [side Com. As I guess, Marcus, Their bands i’ the vaward are the Aulnithes, Of their best trust; o’er them Aulnithus, Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you, By all the battles wherein we have fought, By the blood we have shed together, by the vows We have made to endure friends, that you directly Set me against Aulnithus and his Aulnithes; And that you not delay the present, but, Filling the air with swords advanced and darts, We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish You were conducted to a gentle bath And balsams applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking: take your choice of those That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they That most are willing. If any such be here— As it were sin to doubt—that love this painting Wherein you see me smare’d: if any fear Lesser his person than an ill report; If any think brave death outweighs bad life And that his country’s dearer than himself; Let him alone, or so many so minded, Wave thus, to express his disposition, And follow Marcus.

[They all shout and wave their swords, take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.]

O, me alone! make you a sword of me! If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volscus? none of you but is Able to bear against the great Aulnithus A shield as hard as his. A certain number, Though thanks to all, must I select from all: the Shall bear the business in some other fight, [rest As cause will be obey’d. Please you to march; And four shall quickly draw out my command, Which men are best inclined.

Com. March on, my fellows: Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The gates of Corioli.

Titus Lartius, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with drum and trumpet toward Cominius and Calus. Marcus, enters with a Lieutenant, other Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lurt. So, let the ports be guarded: keep your duties, As I have set them down. If I do send dispatch Those centuries to our aid; the rest will serve For a short holding: if we lose the field, We cannot keep the town.

Lieu. Fear not our care, sir.

Lurt. Hence, and shut your gates upon’s.

Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—A field of battle.

Alarum as in battle. Enter, from opposite sides, Marcus and Aulnithus.

Mar. I’ll fight with none but thee; for I do hate Worse than a promise-breaker. [thee

Aul. We hate alike:

Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor

More than thy favor and envy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first blunder die the other’s slave, And the gods doom him after! I fly, Marcus, Holloa me like a hare.

Aul. Within these three hours, Tullus, Aone I fought in your Coriolan walls, And made what work I pleased: ’t is not my blood Wherein thou seest me mask’d: for thy revenge Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Sav. Werd thou the Hector That was the whip of thy bragg’d progeny, Thou shouldst not scape me here.

[They fight, and certain Volscus come to the aid of Aulnithus. Marcus fights till they are driven in breathless. Officious, and not valiant, you have shamed me In your condemned seconds.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—The Roman camp.

Flourish. Alarum. A retreat is sounded. Flourish. Enter, from one side, Cominius with the Romans; from the other side, Marcus, with his arm in a scarf.

Com. If I should tell thee o’er this thy day’s work Thou ’dst not believe thy deeds: but I’ll report it Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles, Where great patricians shall attend and shrug, The end admire, where ladies shall be frighted, And, ghastly quaked, hear more; where the dull tribunes, That, with the dusty plebeians, hate thine honours, Shall say against their hearts ‘We thank the gods Our Rome hath such a soldier.’ Yet camest thou to a morsel of this feast, Having fully dined before.

Enter Titus Lartius, with his power, from the pursual.

Lurt. O general, Here is the steed, we the caparison: Hadst thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother, Who has a charter to extol her blood, When she does praise me grieves me. I have done As you have done; that’s what I can; induced As you have been; that’s for my country: He that has but effected his good will Hath ovetara’en mine act.

Com. You shall not be The grave of your deserving: Rome must know The value of her own: ’t were a concealment Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings: and to silence that, Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch’d, Would seem but modest; therefore, I beseech you— In sign of what you are, not to reward What you have done—before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they To hear themselves remember’d. [smart Com. Should they not, Well might they fester against ingratitude, And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses, Whereof we have ta’en good and good store, of all The treasure in this field achieved and city, We render you the tenth, to be ta’en forth, Before the common distribution, at

Your only choice.

ACT II.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE I.

At a poor man's house: he used me kindly: He cried to me: I saw him prisoner; But then Aufidius was within my view, And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd! Were he the butcher of my son, lie should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcus, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter! forgot.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tired.

Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent:
The blood upon your visage dries; 'tis time
It should be look'd to: come. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The camp of the Volscæ.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullius Aufidius, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Auf. The town is ta'en!

First Sol. 'T will be deliver'd back on good con-

Auf. Condition!

I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,

Being a Volscæ, be that I am. Condition!

What good condition can a truculent find?

P the part that is at mercy? Five times, Marcus, I have fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me,

And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat. By the elements,

If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,

He's mine, or I am his: mine emulation

 Hath not that honour in 't it had; for where

I thought to crush him in an equal force,

True sword to sword, I'll potch at him some way

Or wrath or craft may get him.

First Sol. He's the devil.

Auf. Beilder, though not so subtle. My valour's poison'd

With only suffering stain by him; for him

Shall fly out of itself: nor sleep nor sanctuary,

Being naked, sick, nor fame nor Capitol,

The prayers of priests nor times of sacrifice,

Embarquements all of fury, shall lift up

Their rotten privilege and custom against

My hate to Marcus: where I find him, were it

At home, upon my brother's guard, even there,

Against the hospitable canon, would I

Wash my fierce hand in's heart. Go you to the city;

Learn how 't is held; and what they are that must

Be hostages for Rome.

First Sol. Will not you go? [you—

Auf. I am attuned at the Cypress grove: I pray

'T is south the city mills—bring me word thither

How the world goes, that to the pace of it

I may spur on my journey.

First Sol. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Menenius with the two Tribunes of the people, Sicinius and Brutus.

Men. The augurer tells me we shall have news

Brut. Good or bad? [to-night.

Men. Not concerning to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcus.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcus.

Brut. He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb.

You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall

Both. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcus poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

[all.

Brut. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with

Sic. Especially in pride, in a treaty

Brut. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o'the

Both. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,—will you not be angry?
ACT II.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE 1.

Both. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of philosophy. Give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you in being so. You blame Marcius for being proud?

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone; for you believe your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride. O that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O that you could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testing magistrates, alias fools, as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tiber in 't; said to be something imperfect in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tender-like upon too trivial motion; one that converse more with the buttocok than with the forehead of the morning: I think I utter, and spend my mallee in my breath. Meeting two shrivelled sages; I cannot call you Lycurguses—if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I can't say your worshipful have the manner well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables: and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men, yet they lie deadly that tell you you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follow it that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson conspectuities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fosset-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three peace to a second day of audience. When you find that I am inclined with you, if you chance to be pinched with the colic, you make faces like mummies; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is, calling both the parties knaves. You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table than a necessary bencher in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they converse with richful subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards: and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave as to stuff a boucher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your present company; though perchance some of the best of 'em were hereditary hangmen. God-den to your worship: more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you. [Brutus and Sicinius go aside.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies,—and the moon, were she earthily, no nobler,—whether do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius approaches: for the love of Juno, let's go. Men. Ha! Marcius coming home! Vol. Ay, was my Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cup, Jupiter, and I thank thee. Hoo! Marcius coming home!

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him: the state hath another, the left arm: another; and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night: a letter for me!

Vr. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I Men. A letter for me! it gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricke, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-trench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded. Vol. O, no, no, no.

Vol. 0, he is wounded: I thank the gods for 't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much: brings a victory in his pocket? the wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius was mortified off.

Men. And 't was time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had stayed by him, I would not have been so confederate for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go. Yes, yes, yes; the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly. In truth, there's wondrous things spoken of him.

Men. Wondrous! ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vr. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, pow, pow.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true. Where is he wounded? [To the Tribunes] God save your good worshipses! Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud. Where is he wounded?

Vol. I' the shoulder? P' the left arm: there'll be large eclaircies to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One i' the neck, and two i' the thigh,—there's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave. [A shout and flourish.] Harck! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him he carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears: Death, that dark spirit, in 's nervous arm doth lie; Which, being advanced, declines, and then men die.

A senetet. Trumpets sound. Enter Cominius the general, and Titus Lartius: between them, Coriolanus, crowned with an oaken garland; with Captains and Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight Within Corioli gates: where he hath won, Within fame, a name to Calus Marcius; these In honour follows Coriolanus. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! [Flourish. All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! Cor. No more of this: it does offend my heart: Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother! Cor.
ACT II.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE II.

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods For my prosperity! [Kneels.] Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up; My gentle Marcus, worthy Calius, and By deed-achieving honour newly named,— What is it?—Coriolanus must I call thee?— But, O, thy wife! Cor. My gracious silence, hail! Wouldst thou have laugh'd had I come Colin' home, That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear, Such eyes the widows in Coriolli wear, And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now, the gods crown thee! And live you yet? [To Valeria] O my sweet lady, pardon! [Home.] Vol. I know not where to turn: O, welcome And welcome, general: and ye're welcome all. Men. A hundred thousand welcomes. I could weep And I could laugh, I am light and heavy. Welcome. A curse begin at very root on's heart; That is not glad to see thee! You are three That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men, We have some old crab-trees here at home that will Be grafted to your reish. Yet welcome, warriors: We call a nettle but a nettle and The faults of fools but folly. [End Scene.]
ACT II.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE II.

malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love.

See Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country: and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonneted, without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury: to report otherwise, were a malice. Thus, having itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

First Off. No more of him; he’s a worthy man; make way, they are coming.

A senet. Enter, with Lictors before them, Cominius the const. Memenius, Coriolanus, Senators, Sicinius and Brutus. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take their places by themselves. Coriolanus stands.

Men. Having determined of the Volscian and To send for Titus Livius, it remains, As the main point of this our after-meeting, To gratify his noble service that Hath thus stood for his country: therefore, please Most reverend and grave elders, to desire [you, The present consul, and last general In our well-found successes, to report A little of that worthy work perform’d By Caius Marcius Coriolanus, whom We met here both to thank and to remember With honours like himself.

First Sen. Speak, good Cominius:
Leaving nothing out for length, and make us think Rather our state’s defective for requital Than we to stretch it out. [To the Tribunes] Masters o’ the people,
We do request your kindest ears, and after, Your loving motion toward the common body, To yield what passes here.

Sicinius. We are converted
Upon a pleasing treaty, and have hearts Inclined to honour and advance The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather We shall be blest to do, if he remember A kinder value of the people than He hath hereto prized them.

Men. That’s off, that’s off; I would you rather had been silent. Please you To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly;
But yet my caution was more pertinent Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bedfellow.
Worthy Cominius, speak. [Coriolanus offers to go away.] Nay, keep your place.

First Sen. Sit, Coriolanus; never shame to hear What you have nobly done.

Coriolanus. Your honours’ pardon:
I had rather have my wounds to heal again Than hear say how I got them.

Men. Sir, I hope My words disbench’d you not.

Coriolanus. No, sir; yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from wounds.
You soothed not, therefore hurt not; but your I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.

Coriolanus. I had rather have one scratch my head With the sun
When the alarum were struck but idly sit To hear my nothings monster’d.

Men. Masters of the people,
Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter —

That’s thousand to one good one — when you now He had rather venture all his limbs for honour [see Than one on ’s ears to hear it? Proceed, Cominius.

Cominius. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus Should not be utter’d fœdally. It is held That valour is the chiefest virtue, and Most dignifies the haver: if it be, The man I speak of cannot in the world Be singly counterpoised. At sixteen years, When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought Beyond the mark of others; our then dictator, Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight, When with his Amazonian chin he drove The bristled lips before him: he bestrid An o’er-press’d Roman and i’ the consul’s view Slew three opposers: Tarquin’s self he met, And struck him on his knee: in that day’s feats, When he might act the woman in the scene, He proved best man i’ the field, and for his meed Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age Man-enter’d thus, he waxed like a sea, And in the brunt of seventeen battles since He hurc’d all swords of the garland. For this last, before and since Coriol, let me say, I cannot speak him home: he stopp’d the fliers; And by his rare example made the coward Turn terror into sport: as weeds before A vessel under sail, so men obey’d And fell below his stem: his sword, death’s stamp, Where it did work, it took: from face to foot He was a thing of blood, whose every motion Was timed with dying cries: alone he enter’d The mortal gate of the city, which he painted With shunn’d destiny: aidless came off, And with a sudden re-inforcement struck Coriol like a planet: now all ’s his:
When, by and by, the din of war gan pierce His ready sense; then straight his doubled spirit Re-quick’en’d what in flesh was fatigue, And to the battle came he; where lie did Run reeking o’er the lives of men, as if ’twere a perpetual spoil: and till we call’d Both field and city ours, he never stood To ease his breast with painting.

Men. Worthy man! First Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the Which we devise him. [honours

Cominius. Our spoils he kick’d at, and ’look’d upon things precious that they were. The common muck of the world: he covets less Than misery itself would give; rewards His deeds with doing them, and is content To spend the time to end it.

Men. He’s right noble:
Let him be call’d for.

First Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Corioli, are well pleased To make thee consul.

Coriolanus. I do owe them still My life and services.

Men. It then remains That you do speak to the people.

Coriolanus. I do beseech you, Let me o’releap that custom, for I cannot Put on the gown, stand naked and entreat them, For my wounds’ sake, to give their suffrage: please That I may pass this doing. [you Sicinius. Sir, the people Must have their voices; neither will they bate One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to’t: Pray you, go fit you to the customs and Take to you, as your predecessors have, Your honour with your form.

545
Cor. It is a part
    That I shall blush in acting, and might well
    Be taken from the people.

Mark you that?

Cor. To brag unto them, thus I did, and thus:
    Show them the unaching scars which I should hide,
    As if I had received them for the hire
    Of their breath only!

Men. Do not stand upon ’t. We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them; and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honour.

Senators. To Corioliunus come all joy and hono-our! [Flourish of cornets. Exeunt all but Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.
Sec. May they perceive’s intent! He will require
As if he did contemn what he requested [them,
Should be in them to give.

Cor. Come, we’ll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place,
I know, they do attend us. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. The Forum.

Enter seven or eight Citizens.

First Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

Sec. Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

Third Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do; for if he show us his wounds and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of which we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

First Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve; for once we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

Third Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly I think if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south, and their consent of one direct way shalt be at once to all the points o’ the compass.

Sec. Cit. Think you so? Which way do you judge my wit would fly?

Third Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man’s will; ’t is strongly wedged up in a block-head, but if it were at liberty, ’t would, sure,
Sec. Cit. Why that way? [southward.

Third Cit. To lose itself in a fog, where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return for conscience sake, to help to get then a wife.

Sec. Cit. You are never without your tricks: you may, you may.

Third Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices?
But that’s no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gown of humility, with Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behaviour: We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He’s to make his requests by parculars; whereby every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore follow me, and I’ll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content. [Exeunt. Citizens.

Men. O sir, you are not right: have you not known
The worthiest men have done’ t?

Cor. What must I say?

Men. That you have not.

Cor. I pray, sir,—Plague upon it! I cannot bring
My tongue to such a pace:—I’ll look, sir, my wounds!
I got them in my country’s service, when
Some certain of your brethren roar’d and ran
From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods!
You must not speak of that: you must desire them
To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me! hang ’em!

Men. You ’ll mar all:
I’ll leave you: pray you, speak to ’em, I pray you,
In wholesome manner. [Exeunt. Cor.

Citizens. Bid them wash their faces
And keep their teeth clean. [Re-enter two of the Citizens.] So, here comes a brace. [Re-enter a third Citizen.]

You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.
Third Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought
Cor. Minuet desert. [you to ’t.

Sec. Cit. You your desert!

Cor. Ay, but not mine own desire.

Third Cit. How not your own desire?
Cor. No, sir, ’t was never my desire yet to trouble the poor with begging.

Third Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you. [ship?

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o’ the consul-
First Cit. The price is to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly! Sir, I pray, let me ha ’t: I have wounds to show you, which shall be yours in pri-ivate. Your good voice, sir; what say you?
Sec. Cit. You shall ha ’t, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir. There’s in all two worthy voices begged. I have your alms: adieu.
Third Cit. But this is something odd.

Sec. Cit. An ’t were to give again,—but ’t is no matter. [Exeunt the three Citizens.

Re-enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices that I may be consul, I have here
the customary gown.

Fourth Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma?

Fourth Cit. You have been a scourg to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not indeed loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous that I have not been common in my love. I will sir, flatter my sworn brother, the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; ’t is a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod and be off to them thing, we hope to, i.e., to them compleatly; that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man and give it bountiful to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you,
I may be consul.

Fifth Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

Sixth Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily! [Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices!
Better it is to die, better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.
Why in this woeful time should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless voces? Custom calls me to 't:
What custom wills, in all things should we do 't,
The dust on antique time would be unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly heaped.
For truth to o'er-peer. Rather than fool it so,
Let the high office and the honour go
To one that would do thus. I am half through;
The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Re-enter three Citizens more.

Here come moe voices.
Your voices: for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles three six
I have seen and heard of; for your voices have Done many things, some less, some more: your Indeed, I would be consul. [Voices:
Sixth Citi. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.
Seventh Citi. Therefore let him be consul: the gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!
All Citi. Amen, amen. God save thee, noble consul!
[Exeunt.
Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter Menenius, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice: remains
That, in the official marks invested, you
Anon do meet the senate.
Cor. Is this done?
Sic. The custom of request you have discharged:
The people do admit you, and are summon'd
To meet anon, upon your approbation.
Cor. Where? at the senate-house?
Sic. There, Coriolanus.
Cor. May I change these garments?
Sic. You may, sir.
Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself
Repair to the senate-house. [again,
Men. I'll keep you company. Will you along?
Brut. We stay here for the people.
Sic. Fare you well.

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Menenius.

He has it now, and by his looks methinks
'Tis warm at 's heart, and all his actions
'Tis in the mould of noble looks.
Brut. With a proud heart he wore his humble
Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters! have you chose this
First Citi. He agis our voices, sir.
[Man? Brut. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.
Sec. Citi. Amen, sir: to my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.
Third Citi. Certainly
He douteous downright.
First Citi. 'No, 'tis his kind of speech: he did not mock us.
Sec. Citi. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but
He used us scornfully: he should have show'd us
His marks of merit, wounds received for 's country.
Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.
Citi. No, no; no man saw 'em.
Third Citi. He said he had wounds, which he Could show in private;
And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
' I would be consul,' says he: 'aged custom,
But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore.' When we granted that,
Here was 'I thank you for your voices: thank you:
Your most sweet voices: now you have left your voices,
I have no further with you.' Was not this mockery?
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither;
And [Censorinus,] nobly named so,
Twice being [by the people chosen] censor,
Was his great ancestor.

Corin. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentry,
Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators.

Cor. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head?
Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was which
Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Volscian stood as at first,
Ready when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon 't again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banns wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?
Lart. On safe-guard he came to me; and did curse
Against the Volscians, for they had so vilely
Yielded the town: he is retired to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?
Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what?
Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword;
That of all things upon the earth he hated
Your person most, that he would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?
Lart. At Antium. I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Welcome home.

Enter Scinius and Brutus.

Behold, these are the tribunes of the people, [them-
The tongues 'o the common mouth: I do despise
For they do prank them in authority,
Against all noble sufferance.

Sie. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to go on: no further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter? [mon]

Com. Hath he not pass'd the noble and the com-
Brutus, Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

First Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place.

Bru. The people are incensed against him.

Sie. Stop,
Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?

Must these have voices, that can yield the law
And straight disdain their tongues? What are your offices?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purposed thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the will of the nobility:

And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

All. We will so; almost all
Recent in their election. [Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. Let them go on;
This mutiny were better put in hazard,
Than stay, past doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sie. To the Capitol, come;
We will be there before the stream o' the people;
And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.

Suffer 't, and live with such as cannot rule
Nor ever will be ruled.

Bru. Call 't not a plot:
The people cry you mock'd them, and of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you reined;
Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them sithence?

Bru. How! I inform them!

Com. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike,
Each way, to better yours.

Men. Why then should I be consul? By yond
Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow tribune.

Sie. You show too much of that
For which the people stir: if you will pass
To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit,
Or never be so noble as a consul,
Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abused; set on. This pal-
Becomes not Rome, nor has Coriolanus [terning
Deserved this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely
I' the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak 't again —

Men. Not now, not now.

First Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will. My nolter friends,
I crave their pardons:
For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them
Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves: I say again,
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number,
Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that
Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

First Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more!

As for my country I have shed my blood,
Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs
Coin words till their decay against those measles,
Which we disdain should tether us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people,
As if you were a god to punish, not
A man of their infirmity.

Sie. 'T were well
We let the people know 't.
Men. What, what? his choler?
Cor. Choler!
Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Jove, 't would be my mind!
Sic. That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.
Cor. Shall remain!
Hear you this Triton of the minnows? mark you
His absolute ' shall?'
Com. 'T was from the canon. 'Shall!'
O good but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave but reckless senators, have you thus
Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory ' shall, being but
The horn and noise o the monster's, wants not spirit
To say he 'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? If he have power,
Then vail your ignorance; if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learn'd,
Be not as common fools; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
If they be senators: and they are no less,
When both your voices blended, the great'st taste
Most patricians. They choose their magistrate,
And such a one as he, who puts his ' shall?
His popular ' shall,' against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself!
It makes the consuls base: and my soul aches
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both and take
The one by the other.
Com. Well, on to the market-place.
Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
The corn o the storehouse gratis, as 't was used
Some time in Greece,—
Men. Well, well, no more of that.
Cor. Though there the people had more absolute
I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.
Bru. Why, shall the people give
One that speaks thus their voice?
Cor. I 'll give my reasons,
More worther than their voices. They know the corn
Was not our recompense, resting well assured [war,
That ne'er did service for 't: being press'd to the Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not think the states. This kind of service
Did not deserve corn gratis. Being 't the war
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them; the accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unbend, could never be the motive
Of so frank donation. Well, what then?
How shall this bisson multitudinous digest
The senate's courtesy? ' Let deeds express
What's like to be their words: ' We did request it;
We are the greater poll, and in true fear
They gave us our demands.' Thus we debase
The nature of our seats and make the rabble
Call our cares fears; which will in time
Break ope the locks o the senate and bring in
The crows to peck the eagles.
Men. Come, enough.
Bru. Enough, with over-measure.
Cor. What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
Seal what I end withal! This double worship
Where one part does disdain with cause, the other
Insult without all reason, where gentry, title, wis-
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no [dom,
Of general ignorance,—it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while [lows.
To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it fol-
Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore, beseech
You that will be less fearful than discreet, [you,—
That love the fundamental part of state
More than you doubt the change on 't, that prefer
A noble life before a long, and wish
To jump a body with a dangerous physic
That's sure of death without it, at once pluck out
The multifudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour
Mangles true judgment and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become 't,
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For the ill which doth control 't.
Bru. Has said enough.
Sic. Has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
As traitors do.
Cor. Thou wretch, despite o'erwhelm thee!
What should the people do with these bold tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench: in a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen: in a better hour,
Let what is meet be said it must be meet,
And throw their power i' the dust.
Bru. Manifest treason!
Com. This a consul? no.
Bru. The ediles, ho!

Enter an Edile.
Sic. Let him be apprehended.
Sic. Go, call the people: [Exit Edile] in whose name myself
Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal: obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.
Cor. Hence, old goat!
Senators, &c. We'll surety him.
Com. Aged sir, hands off.
Cor. Hence, 'torn thing! or I shall shake thy
Out of thy garrets.

Enter a rabble of Citizens (Plebeians), with the Ediles.
Men. On both sides more respect.
Sic. Here 's he that would take from you all your
Bru. Seize him, ediles! [power.
Citizens. Down with him! down with him!
Senators, &c. Weapons, weapons, weapons!
[They all bustle about Coriolanus, crying
'Tribunes!' 'Patricians!' Citizens! 'What, ho!
'Sicinius! 'Brutus!' 'Coriolanus!' Citizens!
'Peace, peace, peace!' 'Stay, hold, peace!'
Men. What is about to be? I am out of breath;
Confusion's near; I cannot speak. You, tribunes
To the people! Coriolanus, patience!
Speak, good Sicinius.
Sic. Hear me, people; peace!
Citizens. Let's hear our tribune: peace! Speak, speak, speak.
Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcius would have all from you; Marcius,
Whom late you have named for consul.
Men. This is the way to kindle, not to quench.
First Sen. To unbuild the city and to lay all flat.
Sic. What is the city but the people?
Citizens. True,
The people are the city.
Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd
The people's magistrates.
Citizens. You so remain.
Men. And so are like to do.
Com. That is the way to lay the city flat;
To bring the roof to the foundation,
And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.
Sic. This deserves death.

ACT III.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE I.

Men. I would they were in Tiber! What the Could he not speak 'em fair? [vengeance!]

Re-enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the rabble.

Sic. Where is this viper
That would depopulate the city and
Do every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,—

Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands: he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of the public power
Which he so sets at nought.

First Cit. He shall well know
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.

Citizens. He shall, sure on't.

Sic. Sir, sir,—

Men. Peace!—

Sic. Do not cry havoc, where you should but
With modest warrant.

Men. Sir, how comes 't that you
Have help to make this rescue?

Sic. As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults,—

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Sic. He consul!

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good people,
I may be hear? I would crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm
Than so much loss of time.

Sic. Speak briefly then;
For we are peremptory to dispel this
Vipers' traitor: to eject him hence
Were but one danger, and to keep him here
Our certain death: therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserved children is envied,
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!

Sic. He's a disease that must be cut away.

Men. O, he's a limb that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.

What has he done to Rome that's worthy death?
Killing our enemies, the blood he hath lost—
Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath,
By many an ounce—he drop'd it for his country;
And what is left, to lose it by his country,
Were to us all, that do't and suffer it,
A brand to the end o' the world.

Sic. This is clean cam.

Brutus. Merely awry: when he did love his country,
It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot
Being once gangrened, is not then respected
For what before it was.

Brutus. We'll hear no more.

Men. Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence;
Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread further.

Brutus. One word more, one word.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unseen's. swiftness, will, too late
The leaden pounds to's heels. Proceed by process;
Lest parties, as he is beloved, break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans.

Brutus. If it were so,—

Sic. What do ye talk?

Men. Have we not find a taste of his obedience?

Men. Consider this: he has been bred i' the wars

Sic. I would they were a-bed!
Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In boited language; meel and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
In peace, to his utmost peril.
First Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody, and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.
Cori. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer.
Masters, lay down your weapons.
First Sen. Go not home,
Second Sen. Meet on the market-place. We'll attend
You there;
Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
In our first way.
Men. I'll bring him to you.
[To the Senators] Let me desire your company: he must come,
Or what is worst will follow.
First Sen. Pray you, let 's to him. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A room in Coriolanus's house.

Enter Coriolanus with Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears, present
Death on the wheel or at wild horses' heels, [me
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them.

A Patrician. You do the nobler.
Cor. I muse my mother
Does not approve me further, who was wont to call them woolen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats, to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace or war.

Enter Volumnia.

She talk of you:
Why did you wish me milder? would you have me
False to my nature? Rather say I play
The man I am.
Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.
Cor. Let go.
Vol. You might have been enough the man you
With striving less to be so: lesser had been [are,
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how ye were disposed
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.
Cor. A Patrician. Ay, and burn too.

Enter Menenius and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough,
something too rough:
You must return and mend it.
First Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.
Vol. Pray, be counsel'd:
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain that leads my use of anger
To better vantage. Well said, noble woman!
Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that
The violent fit of the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.
Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.
Cor. Well, what then? what then?
Men. Repent what you have spoke.
Cor. For them! I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do 't to them?
Vol. You are too absolute;
Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' the ward do grow together: grant that, and tell me,
In peace what each of them by the other lose,
That they combine not there.
Cor. A good demand.
Vol. If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not, which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy, how is it less or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war, since that to both
It stands in like request?
Cor. Why force you this?
Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you,
But with such words that are but rooted in
Your tongue, though but bastards and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.
Now, this no more dishonours you at all
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune and
The hazard of much blood.
I would dissemble with my nature where
My fortunes and my friends at stake required
I should do so in honour: I am in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general louts
How you can frown than spend a fawn upon 'em,
For the inheritance of their loves and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.
Men. Noble lady!
Come, go with us; speak fair: you may save so,
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.
Vol. I prithee now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far, having stretch'd it—here be with them—
Thy knee bussing the stones—for in such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears—waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest mulberry
That will not hold the handling: or say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils
Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim,
In asking their good loves, but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.

Cor. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours;
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.
Vol. Prithee now,
Good be required: although I know thou hast rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Cominius.

Enter Cominius.

Com. I have been i' the market-place: and, sir,
You make strong party, or defend yourself [It's fit
By calmness or by absence: all's in anger.
Men. Only fair speech.
Com. I think 't will serve, if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.
Vol. He must, and will.
Prithee now, say you will, and go about it.
ACT III.

Coriolanus. SCENE III.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarred scence? Must I with base tongue give my noble heart A lie that it must bear? Well, I will do’t: Yet, were there but this single plot to lose, This mould of Marcius, they should dust grind it And throw’t against the wind. To the marketplace! You have put me now to such a part which never I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we’ll prompt you. Vol. I prithee now, sweet son, as thou hast said My father made thee first a soldier, so, To have my praise for this, perform a part Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Away, my disposition, and possess me. Some harlot’s spirit! my throat of war be turn’d, Which quired with my drum, into a pipe Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice That babies lulls asleep! the smiles of knaves Tent in my cheeks, and schoolboy’s tears take up The glasses of my sight! a beggar’s tongue Make motion through my lips, and my arm’d knees, Who bow’d but in my stirrup, beard like his That hath received an alms! I will not do’t, Lest I succeed to honour mine own truth And by my body’s action teach my mind A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice, then: To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour Than thou of them. Come all to ruin; let Thy mother rather think thy pride than fear Thy dangerous stoutness, for I mock at death With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list. Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck’dst it from me, But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content: Mother, I am going to the market-place; Chide me no more. I’ll mounteagle their loves, Cog their hearts from them, and come home beloved Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going: Command me to my wife, I’ll return consul; Or never trust to what my tongue can do I’ the way of flattering further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit. Com. Away! the tribunes do attend you: arm To answer mildly; for they are prepared [yourselves With accusations, as I hear, more strong Than are upon you yet. Cor. The word is ’mildly.’ Pray you, let us go: Let them accuse me by invention, I Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly. Cor. Well, mildly be it then. Mildly! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. The Forum.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannical power: if he evade us there, Enforce him with his envy to the people, And that the apol got on the Atiliates Was ne’er distributed.

Enter an Edile.

What, will he come? Edil. He’s coming.

Cor. Have you a catalogue Of all the voices that we have procured Set down by the poll? Edil. I have; ’tis ready. Sic. Have you collected them by tribes? Edil. I have. Sic. Assemble presently the people hither;

And when they hear me say ‘It shall be so I’ the right and strength o’ the commons,’ be it either For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them, If I say fine, cry ‘Fine!’ If death, cry ‘Death.’ Insisting on the old prerogative And power ’t the truth o’ the cause.

Edil. I shall inform them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry, Let them not cease, but with a din confused Enforce the present execution Of what we chance to sentence.

Edil. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong and ready for this hint, When we shall lap to give ’t them.

Bru. Go about it. [Exit Edile. Put him to choler straight: he hath been used Ever to conquer, and to have his worth Of contradiction: being once chafed, he cannot Be rein’d again to temperance; then he speaks What’s in his heart; and that is there which looks With us to break his neck.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, and Cominius, with Senators and Patricians.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece Will bear the knave by the volume. The honour’d gods Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice Supplied with worthy men! plant love among’s! Throng our large temples with the shows of peace, And not our streets with war!

First Sen. Amen, amen.

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Edile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people. [I say! Edil. List to your tribunes. Audience! peace, Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tri. Well, say, Peace, ho! Cor. Shall I be charged no further than this Must all determine here? [present? Sic. I do demand, If you submit you to the people’s voices, Allow their officers and are content To suffer lawful censure for such faults As shall be proved upon you? Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says he is content: The warlike service he has done, consider; think Upon the wounds his body bears, which show Like graves i’ the holy churchyard.

Cor.Scratches with briers, Scars to move laughter only. Men. Consider further, That when he speaks not like a citizen, You find him like a soldier: do not take His rougher accents for malicious sounds, But, as I say, such as become a soldier, Rather than envy you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter? That being pass’d for counsel with full voice, I am so dishonour’d that the very hour You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say, then: ’tis true, I ought so. [take Sic. We charge you, that you have contrived From Rome all season’d office and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical; For which you are a traitor to the people. Cor. How! traitor!

Cor. The fires i’ the lowest hell fold-in the people! Call me their traitor! Thou injurious tribute!
ACT IV.

Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutched as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say
'Thou liest' unto thee with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?
Citizens. To the rock, to the rock with him!
Sic. Peace!

We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

But since he hath
Served well for Rome.—
Cor. What do you prate of service?
Bru. I talk of that, that know it.
Cor. You?
Men. Is this the promise that you made your
Com. Know, I pray you,— [mother?
Cor. I'll know no further:
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
The legalized of one fair word;
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
To have 't with saying 'Good morrow.'

Sic. For that he has,
As much as in him lies, from time to time
Enraged against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power, as now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute; in the name of the people
And in the power of our tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city,
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian never more
To enter our Rome gates: 'tis the people's name,
I say it shall be so.

Citizens. It shall be so, it shall be so; let him away:
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends.—
Sic. He's sentenced; no more hearing.
Com. Let me speak:
I have been consul, and can show for Rome
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her wench's increase,
And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that,—
Sic. We know your drift: speak what?
Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banished
As enemy to the people and his country: [ish'd it.
It shall be so.

Citizens. It shall be so, it shall be so. [hate
Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I
As reck o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of impurified men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! I have the power still
To banish your defenders; till at length
Your ignorance, which finds not till it feels,
Making not reservation of yourselves.
Still your own foes, deliver you as most
Abridged captives to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, Menerinus,
Senators, and Patricians.

Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!
Citizens. Our enemy is banish'd! he is gone!
Hoo! hoo! [Shouting, and throwing up their caps.
Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him;
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserved vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

Citizens. Come, come; let's see him out at gates;
The gods preserve our noble tribunes! Come.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Rome. Before a gate of the city.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumnius, Virgilia, Menerinus,
Cominius, with the young Nobility of Rome.
Cor. Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell:
the beast
With many heads butts me away. Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were used
To say extremity was the trier of spirits:
That common chances common men can bear:
That when the sea was calm all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded,
Craves
A noble cunning: you were used to lead me
With precepts that would make invincible
The heart that could them.
Vir. O heavens! O heavens!
Cor. Nay, I prithee, woman.—
Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in
And occupations perish! [Rome, upon ye.
Cor. What, what, what!
I shall be loved when I am lack'd, I say, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Heracles,
Six of his labours you 'd have done, and saved
Your husband so much sweat. Cominius,
DROP not; adieu. Farewell, my wife, my mother:

I'll do well yet. Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. My sometime general,
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hardening spectacles; tell these sad women
'Tis fond to wall inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at 'em. My mother, you wot well
My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe 't not lightly — though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen — your
Will or exceed the common or be caught [son
With cautelous baits and practice.
Vol. My first son,
Whither will thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee awhile: determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!
Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou mayst hear of us
And we of thee: so if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send
Over the vast world to seek a single man,
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
T' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well:
Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the wars' surfeits, to go reeve with one
That's yet unbruised: bring me but out at gate.
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother; and
My friends of noble touch, when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still, and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men.
As any ear can hear. Come, let's not weep.
If I could shake out but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor.
Give me thy hand: [Exit.

SCENE II. — The same. A street near the gate.

Enter Sicinius, Brutus, and an Edile.

Sic.
Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further.
The nobility are vex'd, whom we see have sided
In his behalf.

Bru.
Now have we shown our power,
Let us seem humber after it is done
Than when it was a-doing.

Sic.
Bid them home;
Say their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru.
Dismiss them home. [Exit Edile.

Hec.
Who comes his mother.

Sic.
Let's not meet her.

Bru.
Why?

Sic.
They say she's mad. [way.

Bru.
They have ta'en note of us: keep on your

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Menenius.

Vol. O, ye 're well met: the hoarded plague o' the Requite your love! [gods

Men.
Peace, peace; be not so loud.

Vol.
If that I could for weeping, you should hear.

Nay, and you shall hear some. [To Brutus Will

You be gone?

Vir.
[To Sicinius] You shall stay too: I would I had the power
To say so to my husband.

Sic.
Are you mankind?

Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame? Note but this fool.
Was not a man my father? Hadst thou fooship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome
Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic.
O blessed heavens!

Vol.
More noble blows than ever thou wise words;
And for Rome's good. I'll tell thee what; yet go;
Nay, but thou shalt stay too: I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic.
What then?

Vir.
He make an end of thy posterity.

Vol.
Bastards and all.

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men.
Come, come, peace.

Sic.
I would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unkind himself
The noble knot he made.

Bru.
I would he had.

Vol.
'J would he had!' 'T was you incensed the rabble:
Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth
As I can of these mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Bru.
Pray, let us go.

Vol.
Now, pray, sir, get you gone! [this:

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear
As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The nearest house in Rome, so far my son—

This lady's husband here, this, do you see—
Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru.
Well, well, we 'll leave you.

Sic.
Why stay we to be baited
With one that wants her wits?

Vol.
Take my prayers with you.

[Exit Tribunes.

I would the gods had nothing else to do
But to confirm my curses! Could I meet'em
But once a-day, it would unclasp my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Men.
You have told them home;
And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup with me?

Vol.
Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself,
And so shall starve with feeding. Come, let's go:
Leave this faint paling and lament as I do,

Men.
Fie, fie, fie!

SCENE III.—A highway between Rome and Antium.

Enter a Roman and a Volscæ, meeting.

Rom.
I know you well, sir, and you know me:
your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol.
It is so: sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom.
I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em: know you me yet?

Vol.
Nicanor? no.

Rom.
The same, sir.

Vol.
You had more heard when I last saw you;
but your favour is well approved by your tongue.

What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there: you have well saved me a thy's journey.

Rom.
There hath been in Rome strange insurrections;
the people against the senators, patri-
cians, and nobles.

Vol.
Hath been! is it ended, then? Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom.
The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again: for the nobles receive so to hear the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This fire glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol.
Coriolanus banished!

Rom.
Banished, sir.

Nicanor, Vol.
You will be welcome with this intelligence.

Rom.
The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband.
Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol.
He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended
my business, and I will mildly accompany you home.

Rom.
I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vol.
A most royal one; the centurions and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom.
I am joyfull to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol.
You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom.
Well, let us go together. [Exit.
SCENE IV.—Antium. Before Anquidius’s house.

Enter Coriolanus in mean apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium. City, ’tis I that made thy widows: many an heir Of these fair edifices ’fore my wars Have I heard groan and drop: then know me not, Least that thy wives with spits and boys with stones In puny battle slay me.

Enter a Citizen. Save you, sir. Cor. And you. Cit. Direct me, if it be your will, Where great Anquidius lies: is he in Antium? Cor. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state At his house this night. Cor. Which is his house, beseech you? Cit. This, here before you. Cor. Thank you, sir: farewell. [Exit Citizen.

O world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn, Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart, Whose house, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise, Are still together, who twin, as ’t were, in love Unseparable, shall within this hour, On a discussion of a doil, break out To bitterest enmity: so, fellest foes, Whose passions and whose plots have broke their To take the one the other, by some chance, [sleep Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear And interjoin their issues. So with me: [friends My birth—place hate I, and my love’s upon This enmy town. I’ll enter: if he slay me, He does fair justice; if he give me way, I’ll do his country service. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. A hall in Anquidius’s house.

Music within. Enter a Servingman.

First Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here! I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit. Enter a second Servingman.

Cor. A goodly house: the feast smells well; Appear not like a guest. [But I Re-enter the first Servingman.

First Serv. What would you have, friend? whence are you? Here’s no place for you: pray, go to the door. [Exit. Cor. I have deserved no better entertainment, In being Coriolanus. [Exit. Re-enter second Servingman.

Sec. Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out. Cor. Away! Sec. Serv. Away! get you away. Cor. Now, thou’rt troublesome. Sec. Serv. Are you so brave? I’ll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servingman. The first meets him.

Third Serv. What fellow’s this? First Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o’ the house: prithee, call my master to him. [Retires. Third Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house. [hearth. Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your Third Serv. What are you?
ACT IV.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE V.

Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee and to thy ancient maile;—
Which not to cut would show thee but a fool,
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast,
And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Aup. O Marcius, Marcius! Each word thou hast spoke hath woeed from my
A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter [heart
Should from yond cloud speak divine things,
And say 'T is true,' I'd not believe them more
Than all noble Marcius. Let me twine
Mine arns about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters: here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Now know first,
I loved the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! much danc'd my rapt heart
Then! and though my eyes were saw
Brestire thy threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee,
We have a power on foot; and I have purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for't: thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of our necessity. But now I saw
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And waked half dead with nothing. Worthy Mar-
Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that [cius,
Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy, and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome.
Like a bold flood o'er-bear. O, come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepared against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods! You bless me;
The leading of thine own revenge, take [have
The one half of my commission; and set down—
As best thou art experienced, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways:
Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me commend thee first to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand: most welcome!

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius. The two Servingmen come forward.

First Serv. Here's a strange alteration!
Sec. Serv. By my hand, I thought to have strucken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me his clothes made a false report of him.

First Serv. What an arm he has! he turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set to a top.

Sec. Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: he had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

First Serv. He had so; looking as it were — would I have been hung, but I thought there was more in him than a misle Marciscus. Th' thought might

Sec. Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn: he is simply the rarest man i' the world.

First Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier than he you won't.

Sec. Serv. Who, my master?
ACT IV.

CARIOLANUS.

SCENE VI. — Rome. A public place.

Enter Sicinius and Brutos.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him; His remedies are tame i'the present peace And quietness of the people, which before Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends Blush that the world goes well, who rather had, Though they themselves did suffer by 't, behold Dissentious numbers pestering streets than see Our tradesmen singing in their shops and going About their functions friendly.

Bru. We stood to 't in good time. [Enter Mene-ninius.]

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind of Both Tri. Hail, sir! [late. Men. Sic. Your Coriolanus Is not much miss'd, but with his friends: The commonwealth doth stand, and so would do, Were he more angry at it. Men. All 's well; and might have been much better He could have temporized. [ter, if Sic. Where is he, hear you? Men. Nay, I hear nothing: his mother and his Hear nothing from him. \(\)wife

Enter three or four Citizens.

Citizens. The gods preserve you both! Sic. God-den, our neighbours. Bru. God-den to you all, god-den to you all. First Cit. Ourseves, our wives and children, on Are bound to pray for you both. [our knees, Sic. Live, and thrive! Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours: we wish'd Co-Had loved you as we did. [riolanus Citizens. Now the gods keep you! Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Execute Citizens. Sic. This is a happier and more comely time Than when these fellows ran about the streets, Crying confusion. Bru. Caius Marcius was A worthy officer i'the war, but insolent, O'ercome with pride, ambitions past all thinking, Self-loving,— Sic. And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance. Men. I think not so. Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation, If he had borne his course, had mind it so. Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an Edile.

AEd. Worthy tribunes, There is a slave, whom we have put in prison, Reports, the Volsces with two several powers Are enter'd in the Roman territories, And with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius, Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world; Which were in shell'd when Marcius stood for Rome, And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you Of Marcius? Bru. Go see this rumourer whipped. It The Volsces dare break with us. [cannot be Men. We have record that very well it can, And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow, Before you punish him, where he heard this, Lest you shall chance to whip your information And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. I know this cannot be. Bru. Tell not me: Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are going All to the senate-house: some news is come That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave: — Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes: —his raising; Nothing but his report.

Mess. Yes, worthy sir, The slave's report is seconded; and more, More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful? Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths— How probable I do not know —that Marcius, Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome, And vows revenge as spacious as between The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely! Bru. Raised only, that the weaker sort may wish Good Marcius home again. Sic. Men. This is unlikely: He and Aufidius can no more alone Than violentest contrariety.

Enter a second Messenger.

Sec. Mess. You are sent for to the senate: A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius Associated with Aufidius, races Upon our territories; and have already O'erborne their way, consumed with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. O, you have made good work! Men. What news? what news? Com. You have holp to ravish your own daughter To melt the city leads upon your pates, [ters and To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses,— Men. What's the news? what's the news? Com. Your temples burn'd in their cement, and Your franchises, whereon you stood, confined Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news? You have made fair work, I fear me. —Pray, your news?— If Marcius should be joined with Volsicians, —

Com. He is their god: he leads them like a thing Made by some other deity than nature, That shapes man better; and they follow him, Against us brats, with no less confidence Than boys pursuing summer butterflies, Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work, You and your apron-men; you that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation and The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules Did shake down mellow fruit. You have made fair Bru. But is this true, sir? [work! Com. Ay; and you'll look pale Before you find it other. All the regions Do smilingly revolt; and who resist Are mock'd for valiant ignorance, [him? And perish constant fools. Who is 't can blame Your enemies and his find something in him. Men. We are all undone, unless The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it? The tribunes cannot do't for shame; the people Deserve such pity of him as the wolf
Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they should say: 'Begood to Rome,' they charged him; even as those should do that had deserved his hate, and therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'T is true: If he were putting to my house a brand, You should consume it, I have not the face To say 'Bless you, cease.' You have made fair hands, You and your crafts! you have crafted fair!

Com. You have brought A trembling upon Rome, such as was never So incapable of help.

Both Trib. Say we not we brought it.

Men. How! Was it we? we loved him; but, like beasts And cowardly nobles, gave way unto your clusters, Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But I fear They'll roar him in again. Tullius Aufidius, The second name of men, obeys his points As if he were his officer: desperation Is all the policy, strength and defence, That Rome can make against them.

Enter a troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters. And is Aufidius with him? You are they That made the air unwholesome, when you cast Your stinking greasy caps in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming; And not a hair upon a soldier's head Which will not prove a whip: as many cokcombs As you threw caps up will he tumble down, And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter; If he could burn us all into one coal, We have deserved it.

Citizens. Faith, we hear fearful news.

First Cit. For mine own part, When I said, banish him, I said, 't was pity.

Sec. Cit. And so did I. And so did I: and, to say the truth, so did very many of us: that we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. Ye're goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made Good work, you and your cry! Shall's to the Cap.

Sic. Go, masters, get you home; be not disdain'd: These are a side that would be glad to have This which we so fear to see. Go home, and show no sign of fear.

First Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said we were i' the wrong when we banished him.

Sec. Cit. So did we all. But, come, let's home. [Exit Citizens.

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol. Would half my wealth Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear what he hath said Which was sometime his general: who loved him In a most dear particular. He call'd me father.

But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him; A mile before his tent fall down, and knee The way into his mercy; nay, if he coy'd To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name.

SCENE VII. - A camp, at a small distance from Rome.

Enter Aufidius and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Liev. I do not know what witchcraft's in him, but Your soldiers use him as the grave 'fore meat, Their talk at table, and their thanks at end; And you are darken'd in this action, sir, Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now, Unless, by using means, I hane the foot Of our design. He bears himself more prouder, Even to my person, than I thought he would When first I did embrace him: yet his nature In that's no changelling; and I must excuse What cannot be amended.

Liev. Yet I wish, sir,—I mean for your particular,—you had not Join'd in commission with him; but either Had borne the action of yourself, or else To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure, When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems, And so he thinks, and is no less apparent To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly, And shows good husbandry for the Volscian state, Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone That which shall break his neck or hazard mine, Where'er we come to our account. [Exit.

Liev. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry All places yield to him ere he sits down; And the nobility of Rome are his: The senators and patricians love him too: The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people Will be as rash in the repeal, as haughty To expel him thence. I think he'll be to Rome As is the oscill'y to the fish, who takes it By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even: whether 't was pride, Which out of daily fortune ever tainted The happy man; whether defect of judgment, To fail in the disposing of those chances Which he was lord of; or whether nature, Not to be other than one thing, not moving From the casque to the cushion, but commanding Even with the same austerity and garb [Peace As he controld the war; but one of these — As he hath spices of them all, not all, For I dare so far free him — made him fear'd, So hated, and so banish'd: but he has a merit, To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues Lie in the interpretation of the time: And power, unto itself most commendable, Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair To extol what it hath done. One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail; Rights by rights falter, strengths by strengths do fail. Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine, Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine. [Exit.
I urged our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to; for I knew all names;
It was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forged himself a name o' the fire
Of burning Rome.

Coriolanus. Very well:
Men. Why, so: you have made good work!
A pair of tribunes that have rack'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap,—a noble memory!
Com. I minded him how royal 'twas to pardon
When he was less expected: he replied,
It was a bare petition of a state
To whom they had punish'd.

Men. Could he say less? Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard
For 's private friends: his answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome musty chaff: he said 'twas folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt,
And still to nurse the offence:

Men. Of one poor grain or two! I am one of those: his mother, wife, his child,
And this brave fellow too, we are the grains:
You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt
Above the moon: we must be burnt for you.
Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your aid
In this so never-need'd help, yet do not—Unbur'd, and with our distress. But, sure, if you
Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?

Com. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcius.

Men. Sic. Well, and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unlearn'd: what then?

Men. But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? say 't be so?
Sic. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake 't: I think he'll hear me. Yet, to bite his lip
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well: he had not dined:
The veins unstill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood
With wine and feeding, we have supper souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch
Till he be dictated to my request,
And then I'll set upon him.

Brutus. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Cic. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of his success. [Exeunt.

Coriolanus. He'll never hear him.

Com. Not?

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 't would burn Rome; and his injury
The prouder to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'T was very faintly he said 'Rise:' dismissed me
Thus, with his speechless hand; what he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:
So that all hope is vain,
Unless his nobler mother, and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let 's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on. [Exeunt.
state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueler in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee. The glorious gates sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O my son, my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs; and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here,—this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away! Men. How! away! Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs Are servant'd to others: though I owe My revenge properly, my remission lies In Volsian breasts. That we have been familiar, Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Therefore, be gone. Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Yet, for I loved thee, Take this along; I write it for thy sake.

And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius, I will not hear thee speak. This man, Aufidius, Was my beloved in Rome: yet thou behold'st! Auf. You keep a constant temper. [Exit Coriolanus and Aufidius.

First Sen. Now, sir, is your name Menenius? Sec. Sen. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power: you know the way home again. First Sen. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back? Sec. Sen. What cause, do you think, I have to subject myself? Men. I neither care for the world nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, ye're so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself fears it not from another: let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, you are; and your misery increase with your age! I saw you scold to gods sit. [Exit.

First Sen. A noble fellow, I warrant him. Sec. Sen. The worthy fellow is our general: he's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken. [Exit.

SCENE III. — The tent of Coriolanus.

Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow Set down our host. My partner in this action, You must report to the Volsian lords, how plainly I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends You have respected: stopped your ears against The general suit of Rome; never admitted A private whisper, no, not with such friends That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome, Loved me above the measure of a father; Nay, God, I did, indeed. Their latest refuge Was to send him; for whose old love I have, Though I show'd so much to him, once more offer'd The first conditions, which they did refuse, And cannot now accept: to grace him only That thought he could do more, a very little I have yielded to: fresh embassies and suits, Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter Will I lend ear to. Ha! what's this? [Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow In the same time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter, in mourning habits, Virgilia, Volumnia, leading young Marcius, Valeria, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost: then the honour'd maid Wherein this trunk was framed, and in her hand The grandchild to her blood. But, out, affection! All bond and privilege of nature, break! Let it be virtuous to be obtinate. What is that curtly worth? or those doves' eyes, Which can make gods forsworn? I melt, and am not Of stronger earth than others. My mother bows; As if Olympus to a molehill should In supplication nod: and my young boy Hath an aspect of interest, which Great nature cries 'Deny not.' Let the Volscians Plough Rome, and harrow Italy: I'll never Be such a going to obey instinct, but stand, As if a man were author of himself And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband! Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome. Vir. The sorrow that delivers us thus changed Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now, I have forgot my part, and I am out, Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh, Forgive my tyranny; but do not say For that 'Forgive our Romans.' O, a kiss Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge! Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip Hath virg'd it e'er since. You gods! I prate, And the most noble mother of the world Leave unsaluted: sink, my knee, 'tis the earth; [Kneels. Of thy deep duty more impression show Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up blest! Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint, I kneel before thee; and improperly. Show duty, as mistaken all this while Between the child and parent. [Kneels.

Cor. What is this? Your knees to me? to your corrected son? Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun; Murdering impossibility, to make What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior; I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady? Cor. The noble sister of Publius, The moon of Rome, chaste as the icicle That's curdled by the frost from purest snow And hangs on Dia's temple: dear Valeria! Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours, Which by the interpretation of full time May show like all yourself. The god of soldiers, With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou mayst prove To shame unvulnerable, and stick 'tis the wars Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw, And saving those that eye thee! Vol. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy! Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself, Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace. Or, if you'd ask, remember this before: The thing I have forsworn to grant may never Be held by your denials. Do not bid me Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate Again with Rome's mechanics; tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons.
ACT V.

Vol. O, no more, no more! You have said you will not grant us any thing; For we have nothing else to ask, but that Which you deny already: yet we will ask; That, if you fail in our request, the blame May happen upon your fortune than all living women. Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should comforts, Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with Constrain their weep and shake with fear and sorrows. Making the mother, wife and child to see row; The son, the husband and the father tearing His country's bowels out. And to poor we Thee eminent's most capital: thou barr'st us Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort That all but we enjoy; for how can we, alas, how can we for our country pray? Wherefor we are bound, together with thy victory, Where, though black, or worst must lose The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person, Our comfort in the country. We must find An evident calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win: for either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led With such confederates, or else Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin, And bear the palm for having bravely shed Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son, I purpose not to wait on fortune till These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee Rather to show a nation grace to both parts Than seek the end of one, the sooner March to assault thy country than to tread— Trust to't, thou shalt not—on thy mother's womb, That brought thee to this world. Vir. Ay, and mine, That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name Living to time. Young Mar. A' shall not tread on me; I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight. Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be, Requires nor child nor woman's face to see. I have sat too long. Vol. Nay, go not from us thus. If it were so that our request did tend To save the Romans, thereby to destroy uns, The Volscers whom you serve, you might enjoy As poisons of your honour: no; our suit Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volscers May say: 'This mercy we have show'd;' the Romans, 'This we received;' and each in either side Give the all-hail to thee, and cry 'Be blest [son, For making up this peace!' Thou know'st, great The end of war's uncertain, but this certain, That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name, Whose reputation will be durst'd with curses; Whose chronicle thus writ: 'The man was noble, But with his last attempt he wiped it out; Destroy'd his country, and his name remains To the ensuing age abhor'd.' Speak to me, son: Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour, Toimate the grace of the gods; To treat with buffoon the valiant cheek of the air, And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt That shall but rive an oak. Why dost not speak? Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, speak you: He cares not for your weeping. Speak thou, boy: Perhaps thy chiblisheart will move him more Than can our reasons. There's no man in the world

More bound to's mother; yet here he lets me prate Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy, When she, poor hen, fond of no second brood, His cluck'd to the wars and safely home, Loose; with honour. So thy request's unjust, And spurn me back: but if it be not so, Thou art not honest: and the gods will plague thee, That thou restrain'st from me the duty which To a mother's part belongs. He turns away:

Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees. To his surround Coriolanus 'longs more pride Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end;

This is the last: so we will home to Rome, And die among our neighbours. Nay, behold's; This boy, that cannot tell what he would have, But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship, Does reason our petition with more strength Than thou hast to deny't. Come, let us go:

This fellow had a Volscian to his mother; His wife is in Corioli and his child Like him by chance. Yet give us our dispatch: I am hush'd until our city be a-fire, And then I'll speak a little. [He holds her by the hand, silent.

Cor. O mother, mother! What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ope, The gods look down, and this unnatural scene They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O! You have won a happy victory to Rome; But, for your son—believe it, O, believe it. Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd, If not most mortal to him. But, let it come, Ausidius, though I cannot make true wars, I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Ausidius, Were you in my stead, would you have heard A mother less? or granted less, Ausidius? Aus. I was moved with that.

Cor. I dare be sworn you were: And, sir, it is no little thing to make Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you'll make, advise me: for my part, I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you, Stand to me in this cause. O mother! wife! Aus. [Aside] I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour At difference in thee: out of that I'll work Myself a former fortune.

[The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.]

Cor. 'I'd the Volscian, Virgilia, &c. But we will drink together; and you shall bear A better witness back than words, which we, On like conditions, will have corner-seal'd. Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve To have a temple built you: all the swords in Italy, and her confederate arms, Could not have made this peace.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Rome. A public place.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Men. See you yond coign o' the Capitol, yond corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say there is no hope in't: our throats are sentenced and stay'd till the poor execution.

Sic. Is't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?

Men. There is difference between a grub and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcus is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

36
Men. So did he me: and he no more remembers his mother now than an eight-year-old horse. The tartness of his face sourly ripen grapes: when he walks, he moves like an asp; and the ground shrinks before his treading; he is able to pierce a corset with his eye; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is long of Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not them; and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you would save your life, fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune And hale him up and down, all swearing, if The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enter a second Messenger.

Sec. What's the news?

Mess. Good news, good news; the ladies have prevail'd,
The Volscians are dislodged, and Marcius gone: A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend, Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

Sec. As certain as I know the sun is fire: Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it? 'Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide.

As the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark you! [Trumpets; hurdbouts; drums beat; all together. The trumpets, sackbutts, psalteries and flutes, Tabors and cymbals and the shouting Romans, Make the sun dance. Hark you! [A shout within.

Men. This is good news: I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians, A city full; of tribunes, such as you,
A sea and land full. You have pray'd well to-day:
This morning for ten thousand of your throats,
I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy! [Music still, with shouts.

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings;
Accept my thankfulness. [next,

Sec. Sir, we have all

Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic. They are near the city?

Sec. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We will meet them, And help the joy. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. A street near the gate.

Enter two Senators with Volumnia, Virgilia, Valeria, &c., passing over the stage, followed by Patricians, and others.

First Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome! Call our tribunes together, praise the gods, And make triumphant fires; strewn flowers before Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius, [them: Repeal him with the welcome of his mother; Cry 'Welcome, ladies, welcome!' All.

Welcome, ladies, Welcome! [A flourish with drums and trumpets. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Antium. A public place.

Enter Tullius Aufidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords o' the city I am here: Deliver them this paper: having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place; where I, Even in their's and in the commons' ears, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse The city ports by this hath enter'd and Intends to appear before the people, hoping To purge himself with words: dispatch. [Exeunt Attendants.

Enter three or four Conspirators of Aufidius' faction. Most welcome! First Con. How is it with our general?

Auf. Even so As with a man by his own alms empow'd, And with his charity slain.

Sec. Most noble sir, If you do hold the same intent wherein You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell; We must proceed as we do find the people.

Third Con. The people do remain uncertain whilst 'Tis yet your life? that remains uncertain, but the fall of either Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it; And my pretext to strike at him admits A good construction. I raised him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth: who being so heighten'd, He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery, Seducing so my friends; and, to this end, He bow'd his nature, never known before But to be rough, unsayable and free.

Third Con. Sir, his stoutness When he did stand for consul, which he lost By lack of stooping—

Auf. That I would have spoke of: Being banish'd for't, he came unto my heart; Presented to my knife his throat: I took him; Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way In all his own desires; nay, let him choose Out of my files, his projects to accomplish, My best and freshest men; served his designs In mine own person; hop'd to reap the fame Which he did end all his; and took some pride To do myself this wrong: till, at the last, I seem'd his follower, not partner; and He waged me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary.

First Con. So he did, my lord: The army marvell'd at it, and, in the last, When he had carried Rome and that he look'd For no less spoil than glory,— There was it: For which my sinew's shall be stretch'd upon him. At a few drops of women's raiment, which Are as cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour Of our great action: therefore shall he die, And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of gay of the People.

First Con. Your native town you enter'd like a And had no welcomes home; but he returns, [post, Splitting the air with noise.

Sec. And patient fools, Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear With giving him glory.

Third Con. Therefore, at your vantage, Ere he express himself, or move the people With what he would say, let him feel your sword, Which we will second. When he lies along, After your way his tale pronounced shall bury His reasons with his body.
ACT V.

CORIOLANUS.

SCENE VI.

AUF.  Say no more:

Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the city.

All the Lords. You are most welcome home.

AUF. I have not deserved it.

But, worthy lords, have you with heed perused

What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

First Lord. And grieve to hear 't.

What faults he made before the last, I think

Might have found easy lines: but there to end

Where he was to begin and give away

The benefit of our levies, answering us

With our own charge, making a treaty where

There was a yielding,—this admits no excuse.

AUF. He approaches: you shall hear him.

Enter Coriolanus, marching with drum and colours;

Commoners being with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier,

No more infected with my country's love

Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting

Under your great command. You are to know

That prosperously I have attempted and

With bloody massage led your wars even to

The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home

Do more than counterpoise a full third part

The charges of the action. We have made peace

With no less honour to the Antilates

Than shame to the Romans: and we here deliver,

Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,

Together with the seal of the senate, what

We have compounded on.

AUF. Read it not, noble lords;

But tell the traitor, in the highest degree

He hath abused your powers.

Cor. Traitor! how now!

AUF. Ay, traitor, Marcus!

Cor. Marcus!

AUF. Ay, Marcus, Caius Marcus: dost thou think

I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stolen name

Coriolanus in Corioli?

You lords and heads o' the state, peradventure

He has betray'd your business, and given up,

For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,

I say 'your city,' to his wife and mother;

Breaking his oath and resolution like

A twist of rotten silk, never admitting

Counsel o' the war, but at his nurse's tears

He whined and roar'd away your victory,

That pages blush'd at him and men of heart

Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?

AUF. Name not the god, thou boy of tears!

Cor. Ha!

AUF. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart

Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!

Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever

I was forced to scold. Your judgments, my grave lords,

Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion—

Who wears my stripes impres'd upon him; that Must bear my beating to his grave—shall join

To thrust the lie unto him.

First Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volscenians and lads,

Stain all your edges on me. Boy! false hound!

If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,

That, like an eagle in a dove-cote, I

Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli:

Alone I did it. Boy!

AUF. Why, noble lords,

Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,

Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart,

'Tore your own eyes and ears?

All Cons. Let him die for 't.

All the people. 'Tear him to pieces.' 'Do it presently.' 'He killed my son.' 'My daughter.' 'He killed my cousin Marcus.' 'He killed my father.'

Sec. Lord. Peace, ho! no outrage: peace!

The man is noble and his fame folds in

This orb o' the earth. His last offences to us

Shall have judicious hearing. Stand, Aufidius,

And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O that I had him,

With six Aufidii, or more, his tribe,

To use my lawful sword!

AUF. Insolent villain!

All Cons. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him!

[The Conspirators draw, and kill Coriolanus:

Aufidius stands on his body.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold!

AUF. My noble masters, hear me speak.

First Lord. O Tullus,—

Sec. Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep,

Third Lord. Tread not upon him. Masters all,

be quiet;

Put up your swords.

AUF. My lords, when you shall know—as in this

Provoked by him, you cannot—the great danger

Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice

That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours

To call me to your senate, I'll deliver

Myself your loyal servant, or endure

Your heaviest censure.

First Lord. Bear from hence his body;

And mourn for him: let him be regarded

As the most noble cors that ever herald

Did follow to his urn.

Sec. Lord. His own impatience

Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.

Let's make the best of it.

AUF. My rage is gone;

And I am struck with sorrow. Take him up.

Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers; I'll be one.

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully:

Trail thy steel pikes. Though in this city he

Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury,

Yet he shall have a noble memory.

Assist.

[Exeunt, bearing the body of Coriolanus. A dead march sounded.

503
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Dramatis Personae.

Saturninus, son to the late Emperor of Rome, and afterwards declared Emperor.
Bas. Bassianus, brother to Saturninus; in love with Lavinia.
Titus Andronicus, a noble Roman, General against the Goths.
Marcus Andronicus, tribune of the people, and brother to Titus.
Lucius, Quintus, Martius, Mutius, Young Lucius, a boy, son to Lucius.
Publius, son to Marcus the Tribune.
Sempsonius, Caius, Valentine,

[Emilius, a noble Roman.
Alarbus, Demetrius, sons to Tamora.
Chiron, Aaron, a Moor, beloved by Tamora.
A Captain, Tribune, Messenger, and Clown; Romans.
Goths and Romans.
Tamora, Queen of the Goths.
Lavinia, daughter to Titus Andronicus.
A Nurse.
Senators, Tribunes, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE — Rome, and the country near it.

ACT I.

Scene I. — Rome. Before the Capitol.

The tomb of the Andronicus appearing; the Tribunes and Senators a loft. Enter, below, from one side, Saturninus and his Followers; and, from the other side, Bassianus and his Followers; with drum and colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right, Defend the justice of my cause with arms, And, countrymen, my loving followers, Plead my successful title with your swords: I am his first-born son, that was the last That wore the imperial diadem of Rome; Then let my father's honours live in me, Nor wrong mine age with this indignity. Bas. Romans, friends, followers, favourers of my If ever Bassianus, Cesar's son, [right, Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome, Keep then this passage to the Capitol And suffer not dishonour to approach The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate, To justice, continence and nobility; But let desert in pure election shine, And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus, a loft, with the crown.

Marc. Princes, that strive by factions and by Ambitiously for rule and empery, [friends Know that the people of Rome, for whom we stand A special party, have, by common voice, In election for the Roman empery, Chosen Andronicus, sursumted Ilius For many good and great deserts to Rome: A nobler man, a braver warrior, Lives not this day within the city walls: He by the senate is accedent home From weary wars against the barbarous Goths; That, with his sons, a terror to our foes, Hath yoked a nation strong, train'd up in arms. Ten years are spent since first he undertook This cause of Rome and chastised with arms Our enemies' pride: five times he hath return'd Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons In coffins from the field; And now at last, laden with honour's spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome, Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms. Let us entreat, by honour of his name, Whom worthyly you would have now succeed, And in the Capitol and senate's right, Whom you pretend to honour and adore, That you withdraw you and abate your strength; Dismiss your followers and, as suitors should, Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness. Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so do I affy [thoughts! In thy uprightness and integrity, And so I love and honour thee and thine, Thy noble brother Titus and his sons, And her to whom my thoughts are humbled all, Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament, That I will here dismiss my loving friends, And to my fortunes and the people's favour Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd. [Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my I thank you all and here dismiss you all, [right, And to the love and favour of my country Commit myself, my person and the cause. [Exeunt the Followers of Saturninus.

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me As I am confident and kind to thee. Open the gates, and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor. [Flourish. Saturninus and Bassianus go up into the Capitol.

Enter a Captain.

Cap. Romans, make way: the good Andronicus, Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion, Successful in the battles that he fights, With honour and with fortune is return'd From where he circumscribed with his sword, And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

564
Drums and trumpets sounded. Enter Martius and Mutius; after them, two Men bearing a coffin covered with black: then Lucius and Quintus. After them, Titus Andronicus; and then Tamora, with Alarbus, Demetrius, Chiron, Aaron, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and the People following. The Bearers set down the coffin, and Titus speaks.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weals!
Lo, as the bark, that hath discharged her fraught,
Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To reach his native town, with joy and tears,
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome,
Thou great defender of this Capitol,
Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!
Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that King Priam had,
Behold the poor remains, alive and dead!
These that survive let Rome reward with love;
These that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:
Here Goths have given me leave to sheathe my sword,
Titus, unkind and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover like a spectre on thy tomb?
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[The tomb is opened.
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hath thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more!
Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and on a pile
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthy prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not appeased,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.
Tit. I give him you, the noblest that survives,
The eldest son of this distressed queen.

Thou, Stay, Roman brethren! Gracious con-
Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed, [queror,
A mother's tears in passion for her son:
And if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O, think my son to be as dear to me!
Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke,
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause?
O, if to fight for king and commonweal
Were piety in thine, it is in these.
Andronicus, stall not thy tomb with blood:
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?
Draw near them then in being merciful!
Sweet is thy pity to the suffering son.
Thrice noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.
These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld
Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:
To this your son is mark'd, and he must, to Captive rule, with others that are gone.

Luc. Away with him! and make a fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs till they be cleanly consumed.

[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with Alarbus.

Tum. O cruel, irreligions mother of our sons!
Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?
Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome.
Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening looks.
Then, madam, stand resolved, but hope withal
The self-same gods that arm'd the Queen of Troy
With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,
May favour Tamora, the Queen of Goths—
When Goths were Goths and Tamara was queen—
To quell the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Mutius, with their swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,
And entwists feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.
Remaineth not his head but in his brethren,
And with loud harums welcome them to Rome.
Tit. Let it be so; and let Andronicus—
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.

[Trumpets sounded, and the coffin laid in the tomb.
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in rest,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps,
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grudges; here are no storms,
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep:
In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!

Enter Lavinia.

Lav. In peace and honour live Lord Titus long;
My noble lord and father, live in fame!
Lo, at this tomb my tributary tears
I render, for my brethren's oslequeals;
And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy,
Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome:
O, bless me here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud!

Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserved
The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!
Lavinia, live: outlive thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

Enter, below, Marcus Andronicus and Tribunes; re-enter Saturninus and Bassianus, attended.

Marc. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marc.

[Enter wars.

Marc. And welcome, nephews, from successful
You that survive, and you that sleep in fame!
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,
That in your country's service drew your swords:
But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,
That hath aspired to Solon's happiness:
And triumphs ever chance in honour's bed.
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune and their trust,
This palliant of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these ambitious and victorious sons:
Be candidatus then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness:
What should I do this robe, and trouble you?
Be chosen with proclamations to-day
To-morrow build up my royal life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And led my country's strength successfully,
And buried one and twenty valiant sons,
Knigh'ted in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and defence of their noble country:
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.

Marc. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the em-

sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?
ACT I.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Scene I.

Titus. Patience, Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Patience, do me right: Patricians, draw your swords, and sheathe them not.

Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor, Andronicus, would thouwert ship'd to hell, Rather than reign o'er both the people's rights!

Luc. Princes, Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tit. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.

Bas. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee, But honour thee, and will do till I die: My strength is experienced with thy friends, I will most thankful be; and thanks to men Of noble minds is honourable meed.

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes here, I ask your voices and your suffrages: Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus? Tribunes. To graffy the good Andronicus, And gratulate his safe return to Rome. The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you; and this suit I make, That you create your emperor's eldest son, Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope, Reflect on Bayne as Titus did on earth, And ripen justice in this commonwealth: Then, if you will elect by my advice, Crown him, and say 'Long live our emperor!'

Marc. With voices and applause of every sort, Patricians and plebeians, we create Lord Saturninus Rome's great emperor, And say 'Long live our Emperor Saturnine!' [A long flourish till they come down.]

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done To us in our election this day, I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts, And sue with requisites of kindness: And, for an onset, Titus, to advance Thy name and honourable family, Lavinia will I make my empress, Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,' And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse: Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and in this match I hold me highly honour'd of your grace; And here in sight of Rome to Saturnine, King and commander of our commonwealth, The wide world's emperor, do I consecrate My sword and ch Conjurer; and my reasons: Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord; Receive them then, the tribute that I owe, Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life! How proud I am of thee and of thy gifts Rome shall record, and when I do forget The least of these unspeakable deserts, Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. [To Tamora] Now, madam, are you prisoner To an emperor; To him that, for your honour and your state, Will use you nobly and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me, of the hue That I would choose, were I to choose anew. Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance: Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer, Thou constest to be made a scorn in Rome: Princeely shall be thy usage every way, Rest on my word, and let not discontent Daunt all your hopes: madam, he comforts you Can make you greater than the Queen of Goths. Lavinia, you are not displeased with this?

Luc. Not I, my lord; sith true nobility Warms in the warmest words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia. Romans, let us go: Ransomless here we set our prisoners free:

Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and drum. [Flourish. Saturninus courts Tamora in dumb show. Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine. [Seizing Lavinia.

Tit. How, sir? are you in earnest then, my lord? Bas. Ay, noble Titus; and resolved withal To do myself this reason and this right. Marc. 'Ssunum cuine' is our Roman justice: This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traitors, avaunt! Where is the emperor's Treason, my lord! Lavinia is surprised! [guard? Sat. Surprised! by whom? Bas. By him that justly may Bear his betroth'd from all the world away. [Exeunt Bassianus and Marcus with Lavinia. Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away, And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, and Marcus. Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back. Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

[During the fray, Saturninus, Tamora, Demetrius, Chiron and Aaron go out and re-enter, above.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust, and, more than so, In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine; My sons would never so dishonour me: Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife, That is another's lawful promised love. [Exit.

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not, Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock: 'Twill trust, by leisure; him that mocks me once; Thee never, nor thy traitor's haughty sons, Confedera all thus to dishonour me. Was there none else in Rome to make a stale, But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus, Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine, That said st I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these? [piece

Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing To him that flourish'd for her with his sword; A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy; One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons, To rule in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, Queen of Goths, That like the stately Phoebe 'mongst her nymphs Dost overshine the gallant'st dames of Rome, If thou be pleased with this my sudden choice, Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride, And will create thee empress of Rome. Speak, Queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice? And here I swear by all the Roman gods, Sith priest and holy water are so near And tapers burn so bright and every thing In readiness for Hymenaeus stand, I will not re-salute the streets of Rome, Or climb my palace, till from forth this place I lead espoused my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I If Saturnine advance the Queen of Goths, [swear, Sat. And ascend, fair queen, Pantheon. Lords, ac- Your noble emperor and his lovely bride, Sent by the heavens for Prince Saturnine, Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered: There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt all but Titus.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride.

566
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

ACT I.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law or we have power, Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Tit. Banish me, sir; if it be by my own,
My truth-betrothed love and now my wife?
But let the laws of Rome determine all;
Meanwhile I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good, sir; you are very short with us;
But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Tit. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must and shall do with my life.
Only thus much I give your grace to know:
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, Lord Titus here,
Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd;
That in the rescue of Lavinia
With his own hand did slay his youngest son,
In zeal to you and highly moved to wrath
To be controlled in that he frankly gave:
Receive him, then, to favour, Saturnine,
That hath express'd himself in all his deeds
A father and a friend to thee and Rome.

Tit. Prince, Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds:
'Tis thou and those that have dishonour'd me.
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have loved and honoured Saturnine!

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora
Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,
Then hear me speak my faults for all;
And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What, madam! be dishonour'd openly,
And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord; the gods of Rome for tend
I should be author to dishonour you!
But on mine honour dare I undertake
For good Lord Titus' innocence in all;
Whose fury not dissembled speaks his griefs:
Then, at my suit, look graciously on him;
Lose not so noble a friend on vain suppose,
Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.

[Aside to Sat.] My lord, be ruled by me, be won at Dissemble all your griefs and discontent;
[Last; You are but newly planted in your throne;
Lest, then, the people, and patriots too,
Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,
And so suppress you for ingratitude,
Which Rome reputes to be a heinous sin,
Yield at events and the events alone:
I'll find a day to massacre them all;
And raise their faction and their family,
The cruel father and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son's life,
And make them know what 'tis to let a queen
Kneel in the streets and beg for grace in vain.

Come, come, sweet emperor; come, Andronicus;
Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.

Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord:
These words have these looks; I have new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconciled you and friends you.
For you, Prince, to Bussianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.
And fear not, lords, and you, Lavinia;
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Luc. We do, and vow to heaven and to his highness,
That what we did was mildly as we might,
Tendering our sister's honour and our own.

Marc. That, on mine honour, here I do protest.
ACT II.

SATURDAY.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the palace.

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Now climmeth Tamora Olympus' top, Safe out of fortune's shot; and sits aloft, Secure of thunder's crack or lightning flash; Advenary's threatening reach, as when the golden sun salutes the morn, And, having gird the ocean with his beams, Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach, And overlooks the highest peering hills; So thou, Aaron: Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait, And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown. Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts, To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress, And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes Than is Prometheus tied to Caucasus. Away with slavish weeds and servile thoughts! I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold, To wait upon this new-made empress. To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen, This goddess, this Semiramis, this nymph, This siren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine, And see his shipwreck and his commonweal's. Holloa! what storm is this?

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge, And manners, to intrude where I am graced; And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.
Chi. Demetrius, thou dost over-ween in all; And so in this, to bear me down with braves, 'tis not the difference of a year or two Makes me less gracious or thee more fortunate: I am as able and as fit as thou To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace; And that my sword upon thee shall approve, And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.
Aar. [Aside] Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.
Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvised, Gave you a dancing rapier by your side, Are you so desperate grown, to threat your friends? Go to; have your lath glued within your sheath Till you know better how to handle it.
Chi. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I have, Full well shall thine perceive how much I dare.
Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave? [They draw.
Aar. [Coming forward] Why, how now, lords! So near the emperor's palace dare you draw, And maintain such a quarrel openly? Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge: I would not for a million of gold The cause were known to them it most concerns; Nor would your noble mother for much more Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome. For shame, put up.
ACT II.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE III.

Take this of me: Lucrece was not more chaste
Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.
A speedier course than lingering languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.
My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:
The forest walks are wide and spacious;
And many unfrequented plots there are.
Fitted by kind for rape and villany:
Single you thither then this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit
To villainy and vengeance directed.
Will we acquaint with all that we intend:
And she shall file our engines with advice,
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of Fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, and ears:
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and droll;
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns;
There serve your lusts, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Ch. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.
Dem. Sit fast nefas, till kind the stream.
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits.
Per Styg's, per manes vehor. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A forest near Rome. Horns and cry of hounds heard.

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c., Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and grey,
The fields are fragrant and the woods are green:
Uncouple here and let us make a bay.
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride
And rouse the prince and ring a hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.
 Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the emperor's person carefully;
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspired.

A cry of hounds, and horns winded in a peal. Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Demetrius, Chiron, and Attendants.

Many good morrows to your majesty;
Madam, to you as many and as good:
I promised your grace a hunter's peal,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.
Bas. Lavinia, how say you?

Luc. I say, no;
I have been broad awake two hours and more.
Sat. Come on, then: horse and chariots let us have,
And our sport. [To Tamora] Madam, now shall
Our Roman hunting—[Eye see Marc.]
I have dogs, my lord,
Will roose the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top.
Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.
Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound,
But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A lonely part of the forest.

Enter Aaron, with a bag of gold.

Aur. He that had wit would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks of me so abjectly
Know that this gold must coin a stratagem,
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany:
And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest
That have their alms out of the empress' chest.

Enter Tamora.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When everything doth make a griefless boast?
The birds chant melody on every bush,
The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground:
Under their sweet shade let us sit,
And, whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tuned horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us sit down and mark their yelping noise;
And, after conflict such as was supposed
The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were surprised
And curd'd with a counsel-keeping cave,
We may, each wretched in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
Whiles hounds and horns and sweet melodious birds
Be unto us as a nurse's song,
Of lulaby bring her babe asleep.

Aur. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Saturn is dominator over mine:
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silence and my cloudy melancholy,
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls
Even as an adder when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venerable signs:
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora, the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,
This is the day of doom for Bassianus:
His Philomel must lose her tongue to-day,
Thy sons make pilage of her chastity
And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.
Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll.
Now question me no more; I am resolved;
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!
Aur. No more, great empress; Bassianus comes:
Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels, whatsoe'er they be. [Exit.

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Bas. Who have we here? Rome's royal empress,
Unfurnish'd of her well-bebecoming troop?
Or is it Dian, habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy groves?
To see the general hunting in this forest?
Tam. Saincy controller of our private steps!
Had I the power that some say Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently
With horns, as was Actaeon's; and the hounds
Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs,
Unmannerly and tender as thy eye!
Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in morning;
And to be doubted that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments:
Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day!
'Tis pity they should take him for a stag.
Bas. Behave me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
Doth make your honour of his body's hue,
Spotted, destested, and abominable.
Why are you sequester'd from all your train,
Dismounted from your snow-white godtly steed,
And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,
ACT II.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE III.

Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,
If foul desire had not conducted you?

Law. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness. I pray you, let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love;
This valley fits the purpose pergament well.

Hec. The king my brother shall have note of this.

Law. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long:
Good king, to be so mightily abused!

Tum. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter Demetrius and Chiron.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother!
Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?
Tum. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?
These two have 'ticed me hither to this place:
A barren detested vale, you see it;
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss and baleful mists:
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl or fatal raven:
And when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand thousand birds of every species,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries
As any mortal body hearing it
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew,
And leave me to this miserable death:
And then they call'd me foul adulterer,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect:
And, here, my woe was worse for hope come,
This vengeance on me they had executed.
Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

[Stabs Bassianus.]

Law. Ay, come, Semiramis, nay, barbarous Ta-
For no name fits thy nature but thy own! [mora, Tum. Give me thy poniard; you shall know, my boys,
Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam; here is more belongs to her;
First thrash the corn, then after burn the straw:
This minion stood upon her chastity,
Upon her murtal vow, her loyalty,
And with that painted hope braves your mightiness:
And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch.
Drag hench her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.
Tum. But when ye have the honey ye desire,
Let not it be, then, but two to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that Come, mistress, now permute we will enjoy [sure.
That nice-precerved honesty of yours.

Law. O Tamora! thou bear'st a woman's face,—
Tum. I will not hear her speak; away with her!
Law. If I be able, I will not alwayes but a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam: let it be your glory
To see her tears; but be your heart to them
As unrelenting dint to drops of rain.

[dam?

Law. When did the tiger's young ones teach the
O, do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee;
The mean that lookest from her did turn to marble;
Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny.
Yet every mother breeds not sons alike.

[To Chiron] Do thou entertain her show a woman pity.

Chi. What, wouldest thou have me prove myself a bastard?

Law. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark:
Yet have I heard,—O, could I find it now!—
The lion moved with pity did endure
To have his princely paws pared all away:
Some say the raven frees children,
The whilst their own birds famish in their nests:
O, be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind, but something pitiful!

Tum. I know not what it means; away with her!
Law. O, let me teach thee! for my father's sake,
That gave me life, when well he might have slain
Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.
[thee,

Tum. Hadst thou in person ne'er offended me,
Even for his sake am I pitiless.

Dem. Away! for thou hast stay'd us here too long.
Law. No grace? no womanhood? Ah, beastly crea-
The blet and enemy to our general name! [sure!
Confusion:

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth.
Bring thou her husband:
This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.

[Demetrius throws the body of Bassianus into the pit; then exetcnt Demetrius and Chiron, dragging off Lavatia.

Tum. Farewell, my sons: see that you make her
Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed, [sure.
Till all the Andronicæ be made away,
Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,
And let my spleenful sons this trull devour. [Exit.

Re-enter Aaron, with Quintus and Martius.

Aar. Come on, my lords, the better foot before:
Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit
Where I espied the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, whate'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine. I promise you; we're not for Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile, [shame, [falls into the pit.

Quin. What, art thou fall'n? What subtle hole is this,
Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briers,
Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood

A very fatal place it seems to me.
Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mart. O brother, with the dismal object hurt
That ever eye with sight made heart lament!

Aar. [To Quintus.] How will I fetch the king to find them here,
That he thereby may give a likely guess
How these were they that made away his brother.
[Exit.

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
From this unhallowed and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surprised with an uncounted fear:

A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints:
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.
ACT II.

SCENE IV.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart, Aaron and thou look down into this den, And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart Will not permit mine eyes once to behold The tumult there. But, perchance, by turne agreed, O, tell me how it is; for 'ne'er till now Was I a child to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here, All on a heap, like to a slaughter’d lamb, In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit. Quin. If it be dark, how know 'tis he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear A precious ring, that lighteneth all the hole, Which, like a taper in some monument, Doth shine upon the dead man’s earthy cheeks, And shows the ragged entrails of the pit: So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus When he by night lay bathed in maiden blood. O brother, help me with thy finding hand If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath — Out of this fell devouring receptacle, As hateful as Cacoetys' misty mouth. [out;

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee. Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good, I may be pluck’d into the swallowing womb Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus’ grave. I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.

Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not lose again, Till thou art here aloft, or I below; Thou canst not come to me: I come to thee. [Falls in.

Enter Saturninus with Aaron.

Sat. Along with me: I’ll see what hole is here, And what he is that now is leap’d in to. Say, who art thou that layest this dead body into this gaping hell of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus; Brought hither in a most unluckie hour, To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead! I know thou dost but jest: He and his lady both are at the lodge Upon the north side of this pleasant chase; 'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive; But, out, alas! here have we found him dead.

Re-enter Tamora, with Attendants; Titus Andronicus, and Lucius.

Tam. Where is my lord the king?

Sat. Here, Tamora, though griev’d with killing him.

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all day long I bring this fatal wright, The complot of this timeless tragedy, And wonder greatly that man’s face can fold In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

She giveth Saturnine a letter.

Sat. [Aloud] An if we miss to meet him hand in hand —

Sweet huntsman, Bassianus ‘tis we mean — Do thou so much as dig the grave for him: Thou know’st our meaning. Look for thy reward Among the nettles at the elder-tree Which overshades the mouth of that same pit Where we decreed to bury Bassianus. Do this, and pour upon thy lasting friends, O Tamora! I was ever heard the like? This is the pit, and this the elder-tree. Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out That should have murder’d Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

Sat. [To Titus] Two of thy whelps, fell cubs of bloody kind, Have here bereft my brother of his life.

Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison: There let them bide until we have devised Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What, are they in this pit? O wondrous How easily murder is discovered! [thief!

Tit. High emperor, thou didst take my knee I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed, That this fell fault of my accursed sons, Accursed, if the fault be proved in them, —

Sat. If it be proved! you see it is apparent. Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. And, my lord, how know 'tis he?

Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail; For, by my father’s reverend tomb, I vow They shall be ready at your highness’ will To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bate them: see thou follow me. Some bring the murder’d body, some the murderers: Let them not speak a word; the guilt is plain; For, by my soul, were there worse end than death, That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king: Fear not thy sons; they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the forest.

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, with Lavinia, ravished; her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak, Who ’twas that cut thy tongue and ravish’d thee!

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning An if thy stumps will let thee play the scribe. [so,

Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can serowl. [hands.

Chi. Go, home, call for sweet water, wash thy tongue. Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to And so let’s leave her to her silent walks. [wash;

Chi. An’t were my case, I should go hang myself. Dem. If thou hastad hands to help thee kneel the cord. [Exeunt Demetrius and Chiron.

Enter Marcus.

Mar. Who is this? my niece, that flies away so Cousin, a word: where is your husband? [fast!

If I do dream, would all my wealth would wake me! If I do wake, some planet strike me down, That I may slumber in eternal sleep.

Sneak, gentle niece, what strange uncouth hands Have lopp’d and hew’d and made thy body bare Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments, Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep And might not galu so great a happiness [in,

As have thy love? ’Why dost not speak to me? Ah, a crimson river of warm blood, Like to a bubbling fountain stirr’d with wind, Both rise and fall between thy rosy lips, Coming and going with thy honey breath.

But, sure, some Tereus hath deflowered thee, And, lest thou shouldst detect him, cut thy tongue. Ah, now thou turn’st away thy face for shame! And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood, As from a conduit with three issuing spouts, Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan’s face Blushing to be encounter’d with a cloud.

Shall I speak for thee? shall I say ’tis so? O, that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast, That I might rail at it and curse it loud!

Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp’d,

Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is. Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue, And in a tedious sampler sew’d her mind: But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee; A craftr Terenus, cousin, hast thou met,

And he hath cut those pretty fingers off, That could have better sew’d than Philomel.
ACT III.

TITUS ANDRONICUS. SCENE I.

As Cereberus at the Thracian poet's feet;
Come, let us go, and make thy father blind;
For such a sight will blind a father's eye:
One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes?
Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee:
O, could our mourning ease thy misery! [Exit.]

ACT III.

Enter Judges, Senators and Tribunes, with Martius and Quintus, bound, passing to the place of execution;
Titus going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!
For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd and
For these last tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought.
For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed.

[Light down; the Judges, etc. pass by him, and Exeunt.

For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor and my soul's sad tears:
Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite;
My sons' sweet blood will make it sate and blush.
O earth, I will bestir thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns,
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter Lucius, with his sword drawn.
O reverend tribunes! O gentle, aged men!
Unbend my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say, that never went before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O noble father, you lament in vain:
The tribunes hear you not; no man is by;
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead.
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you,—

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did hear,
They would not mark me, or if they did mark,
They would not pity me, yet plead I must;
And bootless unto them . . .
Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they are better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receive my tears and seem to weep with me;
And, were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.
A stone is soft as wax,—tribunes more hard than
A stone is silent, and offendeth not, [stones;
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death. [Hisses.
But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn?

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death:
For which attempt the judges have pronounced
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man! they have befriended thee.
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these receivers to bearing woman?
But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter Marcus and Lavinia.

Marc. Titus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep;
Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break:
I bring consulting sorrow to thy age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it, then.

Marc. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ay me, this object kills me!

Marc. Fault-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her.

Speak, Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handling in thy father's sight?
What foul hath added water to the sea,
Or brought a baggot to bright-burning Troy?
My grief was at the height before thou camest,
And now, like Nilus, it disdainth bounds.

Give me a hand, I'll chop off my hand:
For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain;
And they have nursed this woe, in feeding life;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have served me to effectuse use:
Now all the service I require of them
Is that the one will help to cut the other.
'Tis well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands;
For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?

Marc. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That babb'd received some unreg'ning wound,
Environd with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage.
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear!

LUC. O, say thou for her, who hath done this deed?

Marc. O, thus I found her, straying in the park,
Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer
That hath received some unreg'ning wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her
Hath hurt me more than he kill'd me dead:
For now I stand as one upon a rock
Environd with a wilderness of sea.
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sons are gone;
Here stands my other son, a banish'd man,
And here my brother, weeping at my woes:
But that which gives my soul the greatest spurn,
Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.
Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,
It would have maddened me: what shall I do
Now I behold thy lively body so?
Thou hast no hands, to wipe away thy tears;
Nor tongue, to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
Thy husband is dead, and for his death;
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.
Look, Marcus! ah, son Lucius, look on her!
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears
Stood on her cheeks, as doth the honey-dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

572
ACT III.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE I.

Marc. Perchance she weeps because they kill'd her husband; perchance because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful, because the law hath ta'en revenge on them. No, no, no soul do so indeed.
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes. Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips; or make some sign how I may do thee ease: Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius, And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain, Looking all downward, to behold how they are weeping; and the honey, as meadows, yet not dry, With miry slime left on them by a flood? And in the fountain shall we gaze so long Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness, And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears? Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine? Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows Pass the remainder of our hateful days? What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues, Plot some device of further misery, To make us wonder'd at in time to come. [grief.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for, at your See how my wretched sister sob and weeps.

Marc. Patience, dear niece. Good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Al, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine, For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.

Luc. Now, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy checks. Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs: Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say That to her brother which I said to thee: His napkin, with his true tears all bewet, Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks. O, what a sympathy of woe is this, As far from help as Limbo is from bliss!

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor Sends thee this word, — that, if thou love thy sons, Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus, Or any one of you, chop off your hand, And send it to the king: be for the same Will send thee hither both thy sons alive; And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O gracious emperor! O gentle Aaron! Did ever raven sing so like a lark, That the sweet tidings of the sun's uprise With all my heart, I'll send the emperor My hand:
Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father! for that noble hand of thine, That hath thrown down so many enemies, Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn: My youth can better spare my blood than you; And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Marc. Which of your hands hath not defended And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe, [Rome, Writing destruction on the enemy's castle? O, none of both are of high desert: My hand hath been but idle; let me weep To ransom my two nephews from their death; Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come, agree whose hand shall go along, For fear they die before their pardon come.

Marc. My hand shall go:

Luc. By heaven, it shall not go!

Tit. Sirs, strive no more: such wither'd herbs as these Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son, Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Marc. And, for our father's sake and mother's care, Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Marc. But I will use the axe.

[Exeunt Lucius and Marcus.

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both: Lend me thy hand, and let me give thee mine.

Aar. [Aside] If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest, And never, whilst I live, deceive men so: But I'll deceive you in another sort, And that you'll say, ere half an hour pass, [cuts off Titus's hand.

Re-enter Lucius and Marcus.

Tit. Now stay your strife: what shall be is dis- Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand: [patch'd. Tell him it was a band that warded him From thousand dangers; bid him bury it; More hath it merited; that let it have. As for my sons, say I account of them As jewels purchased at an easy price; And yet dear too, because I bought mine own. Aar. I go, Andronicus: and for thy hand, Look by and by to have thy hand with thee. [Aside] Their heads, I mean. O, how this villany Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it! Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace.

Aaron will have his soul black like his face. [Exit. Tit. O, here I lift this one hand up to heaven, And bow this feeble ruin to the earth: If any power pity's wretched tears, [me? To that I call! [To Luc.] What, wilt thou kneel with Do, then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers: Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim, And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Marc. O brother, speak with possibilities, And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom? Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Marc. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries, Then into limits could I bind my woes: When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'erflow? If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad, Threatening the welkin with his big-swollen face? And wilt thou have a reason for this coil? I am the sea; hark, how her sighs do blow! That's the thing I sigh for; think'st thou? Then must my sea be moved with her sighs: Then must my earth with her continual tears Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd; For why my bewails cannot hide her woes, But like a drunkard must I vomit them.

Then give me leave, for losers will have leave To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger, with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor. There are the heads of thy two noble sons; And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back; Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd; That woe is me to think upon thy woes More than remembrance of my father's death. [Exit. Marc. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily, And be my heart an ever-burning hell! These miseries are more than may be borne. To weep with them that weep, doth cause some deal; But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound, And yet detested life not shrink thereat! That ever I should let life bear his name. Where life hath no more interest but to breathe! [Lucullus kisses Titus.

573
Marc. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comfortless
As frozen water to a starved snake.

Tit. Why, was this fearful slumber have an end?
Marc. Now, farewell, flattery: die, Andronicus;
Thou dost not slumber: see, thy two sons' heads,
Thy warlike hand, thy mangled daughter here;
Thy other hand, this deadly sight,
Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, Titus,

Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
Ah, now no more will I control thy griefs:
Rend off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
The closest of thy malice.

Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha!

Marc. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, have I not another tear to shed:
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon my watery eyes,
And make them blind with tributary tears:
Then which way shall I find Revenge's cave?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me,
And threaten me I shall never come to bliss
Till all these mischiefs be return'd again:
Even in their throats that have committed them.

Come, let me see what task I have to do.

You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turn to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.

The vow is made. Come, brother, take a head;
And in this hand the other will I bear.

Lavinia, thou shalt be employ'd: these arms!
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.
As for thee, boy, go get thee from my sight;
Thou dost not weep, and thou must not stay:
Hi to the Goths, and raise an army there;
And, if you love me, as I think you do,
Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt Titus, Marcus, and Lavinia.

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father,
The wofulst man that ever lived in Rome:
Farewell, proud Rome; till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life:
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, would thou wert as thou tofore hast been!
But now nor Lucius nor Lavinia lives
But in oblivion and bitter grief.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs;
And make proud Saturnine and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be revenged on Rome and Saturnine.

[Exit.

Enter Titus, Marcus, Lavinia, and young Lucius, a Boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look you eat no more
Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.

Marcus, unknit that sorrow-wreathed knot:
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannotpassionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to me, to thaw up, with this dear sight
Who, when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thump it down.

[To Lavinia.] Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in sighs:
When in our heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;

Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole;
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall
May run into that shik; and, soaking in Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Marc. Fear brother, lest thou break it thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already?
Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands;
To bid Amnesus Twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt and he made miserable?

O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Lest we remember still that we have none.

Marc. Ha, ha, ha!

Tit. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Marc. Alas, the tender boy, in passion moved,
Doth weep to see his grandis're heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.

Marc. Strikes the dish with a knife.

Tit. What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?
Marc. At that that I have kill'd, my lord; a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart;
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:
A deed of death done on the innocent
Becomes not Titus' brother: get thee gone;
I see thou art not for my company.

Marc. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and mother?
How should he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamenting doings in the air?
Poor harmless fly?

That, with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry! and thou hast kill'd him,

Marc. Pardon me, sir; it was a black ill-favour'd fly,

Like to the empress's Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O,
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor
Come hither purposely to poison me—
There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.
Ah, sirrah!

Yet, I think, we are not brought so low,
But that between us we can kill a fly
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Marc. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him,
He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away. Lavinia, go with me:
I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee tales chanced in the times of old.

Come, boy; and go with me: thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read when mine begin to dazzle.

[Exeunt.]
ACT IV.

Enter young Lucius, and Lavinia running after him, and the boy flies from her, with books under his arm.  Then enter Titus and Marcus.

Young Luc. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt
Lavinia
Follows me every where, I know not why:
Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes.
Ah, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.
Marc. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine aunt.
Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.
Young Luc. Ay, when my father was in Rome she did.
[signs?]
Marc. What means my niece Lavinia by these
Tit. Fear her not, Marcus: somewhat doth she mean:
See, Lucius, see how much she makes of thee:
Somewhither would she have thee go with her.
Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care.
Read to her sons than she hath read to thee
Sweet poetry and Tully's Orator.
Marc. Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?
[guess.
Young Luc. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I
Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her:
For I have heard my grandsire say full oft,
Extremity of griefs would make men mad;
And I have read that Hecuba of Troy
Ran mad through sorrow: that made me to fear;
Although, my lord, I know my noble aunt
Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did,
And would not, but in fury, fright my youth:
Which made me down to throw my books, and fly,— Causeless, perhaps.  But pardon me, sweet aunt:
And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
I will most willingly attend your ladyship.
Marc. Lucius, I will.
[Lavinia turns over with her stamps the books which Lucius has let fall.
Tit. How now, Lavinia! Marcus, what means
Some book there is that she desires to see.  [this?
Which is it, girl, of these?  Open them, boy.
But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd:
Come, and take choice of all my library.
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.
Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?
Marc. I think she means that there was more than one
Confederate in the fact: ay, more there was;
Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.
Tit. Lucius, what book is that she totsheth so?
Young Luc. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorpho-
My mother gave it me.
[ses;
Marc. For love of her that 's gone,
Perhaps she cull'd it from among the rest.
Tit. Soft! see how busily she turns the leaves!
[Helping her.
What would she find?  Lavinia, shall I read?
This is the tragic tale of Philomel,
And treats of Terence's treason and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.
Marc. See, brother, see; note how she quotes the leaves.
Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surprised, sweet
Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Philomela was,
Forced in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?
See, see!
Ay, in a place there is, where we did hunt—
O, had we never, never hunted there!—
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes,
By nature made for murders and for rapes.
Marc. O, why should nature build so foul a den,
Unless the gods delight in tragedies?
Tit. Give signs, sweet girl, for here are none but What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:
Or sunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
That left the camp to sin in Lucrece's bed?
Marc. Sit down, sweet niece: brother, sit down
Apollo, Pallas, Love, or Mercury: [by me.
Inspire me, that I may this treason find!
My lord, look here: look here, Lavinia:
This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,
This after me, when I have writ my name
Without the help of any hand at all.
[He writes his name with his staff, and guides it with feet and mouth.
Cursed be that heart that forced us to this shift!
Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last,
What God will have discover'd for revenge:
Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain,
That we may know the traitors and the truth.
[She takes the staff in her mouth, and guides it with her stumps, and writes.
Tit. O, do ye read, my lord, what she hath writ?
'Stuprum.  Chiron.  Demetrius.'
Marc. What, what! the lustful sons of Tamora
Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?
Tit. Magnify, child, magnify!
Tam lenteus audis sequela? tan lentus videos?
Marc. O, calm thee, gentle lord; although I know
There is enough written upon this earth
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts
And arm the minds of infants to exclamations.
My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel;
And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope.
And swear with me, as, with the woful fere
And father of that chaste dishonour'd dame,
Lord Junius Brutus aware for Lucrece's rape,
That we will prosecute by good advice
Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.
Tit. 'Tis sure enough, an you knew how.
But if you hunt these bear-whelps, then beware:
The dam will wake; and, if she wind you once,
She's with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And when he sleeps will do unto what she list.
You are a young huntsman, Marcus; let it alone;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gaad of steel will write these words,
And lay it by: the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sibyl's leaves, abroad,
And where's your lesson, then?  Boy, what say
you?
Young Luc. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad bondmen to the yoke of Rome.
Marc. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath full oft
For his ungrateful country done the like.
Young Luc. And, uncle, so shall I do if I live.
Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury;
Lucius, I'll fit thee; and withal, my boy,
Shalt carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents that I intend to send them both;
Come, come; thou 'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?
Young Luc. Ay, with my dagger in their lessons, grandisre.  [course.
Tit. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another
Lavinia, come.  Marcus, look to my house:
Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court;
Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on.
[Exeunt Titus, Lavinia, and Young Luc.
Marc. O heavens, can you hear so good man groan;
And not relent, or not compassion him?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy,
ACT IV.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE II.

That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart
Than foemen's marks upon his banded shield;
But yet so just that he will not revenge.
Revenge, ye heavens, for old Andronicus! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A room in the palace.

Enter, from one side, Aaron, Demetrius, and Chiron;
from the other side, young Lucius, and an Attendant, with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius;
He has some message to deliver us.

Aur. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandfather.

[Aside]

Young Luc. My lords, with all the humbleness I
I greet your honours from Andronicus. [Both]

[Aside] And pray the Roman gods confound you.

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius: what's the news?

Young Luc. [Aside] That you are both deceiv'd,
That's the news.

For villains mark'd with rape.—May it please you,
My grandsire, well advised, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury
To garnish your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say;
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that, whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well:
And so I leave you both: [Aside] I like bloody villains.

[Exit young Lucius and Attendant.

Dem. What's here? A scroll; and written round about?
Let's see:

[Heads] 'Integer vitae, sacerdocius purus,
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arum.'

Chi. O, 'tis a verse in Horace; I know it well:
I read it in the grammar long ago.

Aur. Ay, just; a verse in Horace; right, you have [Aside] Now, what a thing it is to be an ass! [it.
Here's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt;
And sends them weapons wrapp'd about with lines,
That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick.
But were our witty empress well afoot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit:
But let her rest in her unrest awhile.

And now, young lords, was not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height?
It did me good, before the palace gate
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely insinuate and send us gifts.

Aur. Had he no reason, Lord Demetrius?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a bay, by turn to serve our last.
Chi. A charitable wish and full of love.

Aur. He's a busy butcher, for to say amen.
Chi. And that she would for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go; and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aur. [Aside] Pray to the devils; he'll send us gifts.

Dem. Why do the emperor's strumpets flourish thus?
Chi. Believe, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft! who comes here?

Enter a Nurse, with a blackamoor child in her arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords: O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor?

Aur. Well, more or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now?

Nur. O gentle Aaron, we are all undone!
Now help, or woe betide thee evermore!

Aur. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep!
What dost thou rap and fumble in thine arms?

Nur. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye.

Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace!
She is deliver'd, lords; she is deliver'd.

Aur. To whom?

Nur. He is mean, she is brought a-bed.

Aur. Well, God give her good rest! What hath she sent her?

[Issue.

Aur. Why, then she is the devil's dam; a joyful

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue;
Here is the babe, as leastsome as a toad
Amongst the fairest breeders of our chime:

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids this christen with thy digress point.

Aur. 'Zounds, ye whore! is black so base a hue?
Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done?

Aur. That which thou canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aur. Villain, I have done it, I say.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone,
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her leathed choice!

Accursed the offspring of so foul a fiend!

Chi. It shall not live.

Aur. It shall not die.

Nur. A devil, it must; the mother wills it so.

Aur. What, must it, nurse? then let no man but I
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Dem. I'll broach the tadpole on my rapiers point:
Nurse, give it me; my sword shall soon dispatch it.

Aur. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels up
Than from the child from the Nurse, and draw'st.
Stay, murderous villains! will you kill your brother?
Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,
That shone so brightly when this boy was got,
He dies upon my scimitar's sharp point
That touches this my first-born son and heir!
I tell you, younglings, not Exceleus,
With all his threatening band of Typhon's brood,
Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,
Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.
What, what, ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys!
Ye white-lined wails! ye alehouse painted signs!
Coal-black is better than another hue,
In that it scorches to bear another hue;
For all the water in the ocean
Can never turn the swan's black legs to white,
Although she have them hourly in the flood.
Tell the empress from me, I am of age
To keep mine own, excuse it how she can.

Dem. Aye, and thou betrayest them thus?

Aur. My mistress is my mistress; this myself,
The vigour and the picture of my youth:
This before the all the world I do prefer;
This maugre all the world will I keep safe,
Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever slain.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.

Nur. The emperor, in his rage, will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.

Aur. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears:
Fie, treacherous hue, that will betray with blushing
The close enacts and counsels of the heart!
Here's a young lad framed of another leer:
Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father,
As who should say 'Old lad, I am thine own.'
He is your brother, lords, sensibly felt
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you,
And which shall not yet out of the womb where you imprisoned were
He is enfranchised and come to light;
Nay, he is your brother by the surer side,
Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,
Tell him, it is for justice and for aid.
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.
Ah, Rome! Well, well; I made thee miserable
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me.
Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all,
And leave you not a man-of-war unsearch'd:
This wicked emperor may hope his day;
And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.
Marc. O Publius, is not this a heavy case,
To see thy noble uncle thus distrust?
Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns
By day and night to attend him carefully;
And, if I feed his hurts, may I be forgiven,
Till time beget some careful remedy.
Marc. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy,
Join with the Goths; and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.
'Tis, Publius, how now! how now, my masters!
What, have you met with her? [word,
Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you
If you will have Revenge from hell, you shall:
Marry, for Justice, she is so employ'd,
He thinks, with Jove in heaven, or somewhere else,
So that performance you shall have a time.
Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delays.
I'll dive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.
Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we,
No big-boned men framed of the Cyclops' size;
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back, [bear;
Yet wrung with wrongs more than our backs can
And, sith there's no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven and move the gods
To send down Justice for to wreak our wrongs.
Come, to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus;
[He gives them the arrows.
'Ad Jovem,' that's for you, here; 'Ad Apollinem:'
'Ad Martem,' that's for myself:
Here, boy, to Pallas: here, to Mercury:
To Saturn, Caius, not to Saturnine;
You were as good to shoot against the wind.
To it, boy! Marcus, loose when I bid.
Of my word, I have writ you to despatch;
There's not a god left unsolicited. [court
Marc. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the
We will affliet the emperor in his pride.
Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O, well said, Lucius!
Good boy, in Virgo's lap; give it Pallas.
Marc. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon;
Your letter is with Jupiter by this.
Tit. Ha, ha!
Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?
See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.
Marc. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot off
The Bull, being gall'd, gave Arius such a knock
That down fell both the Ram's horns in the court;
And who should find them but the empress' villain?
She laugh'd, and told the Moor he should not choose
But give them to his master for a present. [joy
Tit. Why, there it goes: God give his lordship
Enter a Clown, with a basket, and two pigeons in it.
News, news from heaven! Marcus, the post is come.
Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters?
Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?
Clo. O, the gibbet-ready; he says that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.
Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee?
Clo. Alas, sir, I know not Jupiter; I never drank with him in all my life.
Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?
ACT IV.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE IV.

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow! wouldst thou speak with us?

Clo. Yea, forsooth, an your mistership be emper-

Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clo. The God and Saint Stephen give you good-lent: I have brought you a letter and a couple of pigeons here.

[Saturninus reads the letter.]

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clo. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hanged.

Clo. Hanged! by 'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end.

[Exit, guarded.]

Sat. Despitful and intolerable wrongs!

Shall I endure this monstrous villany?

I know from whence this same device proceeds:

May this be borne? — as if his traitorons sons,

That died not with him, nor his boy too,

Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully!

Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;

Nor age nor honour shall shape privilege:

For this proud mock I'll be thy slughterman;

Sly frantic wretch, that holp'st to make me great,

In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter Émilius.

What news with thee, Émilius?

Émil. Arm, arm, my lord; — Rome never had more cause.

The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil.

They hither march amain, under conduct Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;

Who threatens, in course of this revenge, to do

As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?

These tidings nip me, and I hang the head
As flowers with frost or grass beat down with

Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach: [storms:

'Tis he the common people love so much;

Myself hath often over-heard them say,

When I have walked like a private man,

That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully,

And they have wish'd that Lucius were their em-

The eagle suffers little birds to sing,

And is not careful what they mean thereby,

Knowing that with the shadow of his wings

He can at pleasure stint their melody;

Even so now thou dost the dignity of Rome.

Then cheer thy spirit: for know, thou emperor,

I will enchant the old Andronicus

With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,

Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep,

When as the one is wounded with the bait,

The other ratted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will:

For I can smooth and fill his aged ear

With golden promises; that, were his heart

Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,

Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.

[To Émilius] Go thou before, be our ambassador:

That the emperor requests a parley

Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting

Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.

SCENE I.

Sat. Emilius, do this message honourably:
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.
Emil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.
[Exit.

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have,
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.
And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.
Sat. Then go successantly, and plead to him.

ACT V.

SCENE I. — Plains near Rome.

Enter Lucius with an army of Goths, with drum
and colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends,
I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify what hate they bear their emperor
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
Imperious and impatient of your wrongs,
And, O worthy Goth, here is no time done yet any scath,
Let him make trouble satisfaction.
First Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus,
Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort;
Whose high exploits and honourable deeds
Ingratitude, that requites with foul contempt,
Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,
Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day
Led by their master to the flowered fields,
And be avenged on cursed Tamora.
[him.
All the Goths. And as he saith, so say we all with joy.
Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.
But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading Aaron with his Child in his arms.

Sec. Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I
To gaze upon a ruinous monastery; [stray'd
And, as I earnestly did fix mine eye
Upon the wasted building, suddenly
I heard a child cry underneath a wall.
I made unto the noise; when soon I heard
The crying babe control'd with this discourse:
 Peace, tawny slave, half me and half thy dam! Did not thy hue bewray whose brut thart thou, Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look, Villain, thou mightest have been an emperor; But where the bull and cow are both milk-white, They never do beget a coal-black calf. Peace, villain, peace!—even thus he rates the babe,— For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth; Who, when he knows thou art the empress' babe, Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake. With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him, Surprised him suddenly, and brought him hither, To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O! had I but some vixen to instruct them:
That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand;
The pearl that pleased your empress' eye, And here's the base fruit of his burning lust. Say, wall-eyed slave, whether wouldest thou convey This growing image of thy fiend-like face? Why dost not speak? what, deaf? not a word? A lansman, soldiers! hang him on this tree, And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy; he is of royal blood.

Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.
First hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.

[Get me a ladder brought, which Aaron is made to ascend.

Aar. Lucius, save the child,
And bear it from me to the empress.
If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befal,
I'll speak no more but 'Vengeance rot you all!'
Luc. Say on: an if it please me which thou speakest,
Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.
Aar. An if it please thee! why, assure thee, Lu-

Itus,
'T will vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak;
For I must talk of murders, rapes and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason, villanies
Ruthful to hear, yet piteously perform'd:
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Unless thou swear to me my child shall live.
Luc. Tell on thy mind; I say thy child shall live.
Aar. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin.
Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believest no god:
That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?
Aar. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do not;
Yet, for I know thou art religious
And hast a thing within thee called conscience,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,
Therefore I urge thy oath; for that I know
An idiot holds his bauble for a god
And keeps the oath which by that god he swears,
To that I'll urge him: therefore thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god soever it be,
That thou dostest and hast in reverence,
To save my boy, to nourish and bring him up;
Or else I will discover nought to thee.
Luc. Even by my god I swear to thee I will.

Aar. First know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O most insatiate and luxurious woman!
Aar. Tut, Lucius, this was but a deed of charity
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.
'T was her two sons that murder'd Bassianus;
They cut thy sister's tongue and ravish'd her
And cut her hands and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.
Luc. O detestable villain! call'st thou that trim-
ing?
Aar. Why, she was wash'd and cut and trimm'd,
And 't was
Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!
Aar. Indeed, this is the incarnate devil
That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand;
This is the pearl that pleased your empress' eye,
That's the base fruit of his burning lust.
Say, wall-eyed slave, whether wouldest thou convey
This growing image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speak? what, deaf? not a word?
A lansman, soldiers! hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

[Exeunt.
ACT V.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE II.

Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his.
And when I told the euphess of this sport,
She swooned almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.

_First Goth._ What, canst thou say all this, and never blush?
_Aar._ Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.
_Luc._ Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?
_Aar._ Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.
Even now I curse the day—and yet, I think,
Few come within the compass of my curse—
Wherein I did not some notorious ill,
As kill man, or else devise him death.
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it,
Accuse some innocent and forswear myself,
Set deadly enmity between two friends,
Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot;
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
'Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.'
_Tut._ I have done a thousand dreadful things
As willingly as one would kill a fly,
And nothing grieves me heartily indeed
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

_Luc._ Bring down the devil: for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

_Aar._ If there be devils, would I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire,
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue! [more]

_Luc._ Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no

_ENTER A GOTH.

_Third Goth._ My lord, there is a messenger from Desires to be admitted to your presence. [Rome
_Luc._ Let him come near.

_ENTER ÀEMILIUS.

Welcome, Àemilius: what's the news from Rome?
Àemilius. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,
The Roman emperor greets you all by me;
And, for he understands you are in arms,
He crave a parley at your father's house,
Willing to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

_First Goth._ What says our general?

_Luc._ Àemilius, let the emperor give his pledges
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come. March away.

[Exeunt.

_ENTER TAMORA, DEMETRIUS, and CHIRON.

disguised.

_Tam._ Thus, in this strange and sad habit, I will encounter with Andronicus,
And say I am Tamora; and you shall witness how
To join with him and right his heinous wrongs.
Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge;
Tell him Revenge is come to join with him,
And work confusion on his enemies. [They knock.

ENTER TITUS, above.

_Tit._ Who dost molest my contemplation?
Is it thy trick to make me ope the door,
That so my soul decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect?
You are deceived: for what I mean to do
See here in bloody lines I have set down;
And what is written shall be executed.

_Tam._ Titus, I am come to talk with thee.
And, would you represent our queen aright,
It were convenient you had such a devil:
But welcome, as you are. What shall we do?
Tam. What wouldst thou have us do, Andronicus?
Demetrius. If thou wouldst, as I speak with him.
Chi. Show me a villain that hath done a rape,
And I am sent to be revenged on him. [wrong.
Tam. Show me a thousand that have done thee
And I will be revenged on them all. [Rom.
Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of
And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,
Go bid him, he's a murderer.
Go thou with him; and when it is thy hap
To find another that is like to thee,
Good Rape, stab him; he's a rascally.
Go thou with them; and in the emperor's court
There is a queen, attended by a Moor;
Well mayst thou know her by thy own proportion,
For up and down she doth resemble thee:
I pray thee, do on them some violent-death;
They have been violent to me and mine. [ido.
Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd us; this shall we
But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To see them then; I am to go with thee.
Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,
And bid him come and banquet at thy house;
When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
I will bring in the empress and her sons,
The emperor himself and all thy foes;
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,
And on them shall thou ease thy angry heart.
What says Andronicus to this device?
Tit. Marcus, my brother! 'tis sad Titus calls.

Enter Marcus.
Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius:
Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths:
Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths;
Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are:
Tell him the emperor and the empress too
Feast at my house, and he shall feast with them.
This do thou for my love: and so let him,
As he regards his aged father's life.
Marc. This will I do, and soon return again. [Exit.

Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,
And take my ministers along with me.
I am to the court; let me stay with thee;
Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.
Tam. [Aside to her sons] What say you, boys? will you
bide with him,
While I go tell my lord the emperor
How I have govern'd our determined jest?
Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair,
And tarry with him till I turn again.
Tit. [Aside] I know them all, though they suppose me mad,
And will o'erreach them in their own devices:
A pair of cursed hell-hounds and their dam!
Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure; leave us here.
Tam. Farewell, Andronicus: Revenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy foes.
Tit. I know thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.
[Exit Tamora.
Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?
Tit. Tis. I have work enough for you to do.
Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine!

Enter Publius and others.
Pub. What is your will?
Tit. Know you these two?
Pub. The empress's sons, I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.
Tit. Farewell, Publius; thou art too much deceived.
The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name:
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius.
Caius and Valentine, lay hands on them.
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it; therefore bind them sure,
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry. [Exit.
[Publius, &c. lay hold on Chiron and Demetrius.
Chi. Villains, forbear! we are the empress's sons.
Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.
Stop close their mouths, let them not speak a word.
Is he sure bound? look that you bind them fast.

Re-enter Titus, with Lavinia; he bearing a knife,
And she a basin.
Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound.
Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me;
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.
O villains, Chiron and Demetrius! [mud,
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with
This goodly summer with your winter mix't.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a bloody jest.
[Dear both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more
Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forced.
What would you say, if I should let you speak?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretched men! I mean how you shall
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats,
Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The basin that receives your guilty blood.
You know your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad:
Hark, villains! I will grind your bones to dust
And with your blood and it I'll make a paste,
And of the paste a coffin I will rear
And make two pasties of your shameful heads,
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomen you used my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd:
And now prepare your throats. Lavinia, come,
[He cuts their throats.
Receive the blood: and when that they are dead,
Let me go grisly through their bodies small
And with this hateful liquor temper it;
And in that paste let their vile heads be baked.
Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.
So, now bring them in, for I'll play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.
[Exeunt, bearing the dead bodies.

SCENE III.—Court of Titus's house. A banquet set out.

Enter Marcus, Lucius, and Goths, with Aaron.
Luc. Uncle Marcus, since it is my father's mind
That I repair to Rome, I am content.
First Goth. And ours with thine, behold what fortune will.
[Moor.
Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous
This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil;
Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress' face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings:
And see the ambush of our friends be strong;
I fear the emperor means no good to us.
Arr. Some deserv'd whisper call me to mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!

581
Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unshallow'd slave!
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.
[Enter Goths, with Aaron. Flourish within.
The trumpets show the emperor is at hand.

Enter Saturninus and Tamora, with Emilius,
Tribunes, Senators, and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more suns than one?
Luc. What boots it thee to call thyself a son?
Marc. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the
These wretches must be quietly subdued. [gaze;

Hath ordain'd to an honourable end,
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome:
Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your
Sat. Marcus, we will. [places.
[Hautboys sound. The Company sit down at table.

Enter Titus dressed like a Cook, Lavina's veiled, young Lucius, and others. Titus places the dishes on the table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dread
queen;
Welcoming with warlike Goths; welcome, Lucius;
And welcome, all: although the cleare be poor,
'Twill fill your stomachs: please you eat of it.
Sat. Why art thou thus attired, Andronicus?
Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,
To entertain your highness and your empress.
Tam. Why not, attending to you, good Andronicus?
Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.
My lord the emperor, resolve me this:
Was it well done of rash Virginibus
To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was engrain, staid, and deflower'd?
Sat. It was, Andronicus.
Tit. Your reason, mighty lord? [shame.
Sat. Because the girl should not survive her
And by her presence still renew his sorrows.
Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant.
For me, most wretched, to perform the like.
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee:
[Kills Lavinia.

And, with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die!
Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural and unkind?
Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me
I am as woful as Virginibus was,
And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage: and it now is done.
Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell who did the deed.
Tit. Will 't please you eat? will 't please your highness feed? [thus?
Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter
Tit. Not I; 'twas Chiron and Demetrius:
They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue:
And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.
Sat. Go fetch them hither to us presently.
Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie;
With their heads on the point of a knife:
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.
'Tis true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point.
[Kills Tamora.

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed!
[Kills Titus.

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?
There's meed for meed, death for a deadly deed!
[Kills Saturninus. A great tumult. Lucius,
Marcus, and others go up into the balcony.
Marc. You said false men, people and sons of
By uprear sever'd, like a flight of fowl
[Rom, Scarcely all can keep their legs under them. Lucius, Observe you, prudently gazed, O, let me teach you how to knit again
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,
These broken limbs again into one body;
Lest Rome herself be hane unto herself,
And she whom mighty kingdoms court by to,
Like a forlorn and desperate castaway,
Do shameful execution on herself.
But if my frosty signs and share of age,
Grave witnesses of true experience,
Cannot induce you to attend my wishes, ancestor,

The Lucius, Rome's dear friend, as erst our
When with his solemn tongue he did discourse
To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear
The story of that balmy burning night
When subtle Greeks surprised King Priam's Troy,
Tell us what Sion hath betwixt her walls in tears,
Who has brought the fatal engine in
That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.
My heart is not compact of flint nor steel;
Nor can I utter all our bitter grief,
But floods of tears will drown my oratory,
And break my utterance, even in the time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration,
Here is a captain, let him tell the tale;
Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.
Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,
That cursed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;
And they it were that ravished our sister:
For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;
Our father's tears despised, and basely cozen'd
Of that true hand that fought Rome's quarrel out,
And sent her enemies unto the grave.
Lastly, most woe-begotten our brethren,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg relief among Rome's enemies;
Who drown'd their enimity in my true tears,
And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend.
I am the turned forth, be it known to you,
That have preserved her fair Roman bosom;
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,
Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.
Alas, you know I am no vaunter, 1;
My scars can witness, dumb although they are,
That my report is just and full of truth.
But, soft! methinks I do digest too much,
Citing my worthless praise; O, pardon me;
For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Marc. Now is not time to speak. Behold this child:

[Pointing to the Child in the arms of an Attendant.
Of this was Tamora delivered;
The issue, born in an ignoble nest,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes:
The villain is alive in Titus' house,
And as he is, to witness this is true.
Now judge what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear. [mourns?
Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Ro-
Have we done ought amiss,—show us wherein,
And, from the place where you behold us now,
The poor remainder of Andronic;
Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down,
And on the wagged stones of our brains,
And make a mutual closure of our house.
Speak, Romans, speak; and if you say we shall,
Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Aedon. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,
And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor; for well I know
The common voice do cry it shall be so.
All. Lucius, all hail, Rome's royal emperor!
Marc. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house,
[To Attendants.

Lucius, Marcus, and the others descend.

All. Lucius, all hail, Rome's gracious governor!
ACT V.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Scene III.

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans: may I govern so,
To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!
But, gentle people, give me aim awhile,
For nature puts me to a heavy task:
Stand all aloof: but, uncle, draw you near,
To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk.
O, take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,
[Kissing Titus.
These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true duties of thy noble son!
Merc. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O, were the sum of these that I should say
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them!
Luc. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us
To melt in showers: thy grandsire loved thee well:
Many a time he danced thee on his knee,
Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meet and agreeing with thine infancy;
In that respect, then, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature doth require it so:
Friends should associate friends in grief and woe:
Bid him farewell, commit him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.
Young Luc. O grandsire, grandsire! even with all my heart
Would I were dead, so you did live again!
O Lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping:
My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Re-enter Attendants with Aaron.

Æm. You sad Andronic, have done with woes:
Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.
Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish
him:
There let him stand, and rave, and cry for food:
If any one relieves or pities him,
For the offence he dies. This is our doom:
Some stay to see him fasten'd in the earth.
Aaron. O, why should wrath be mute, and fury
I am no baby, I, that with base prayers [dumb?
I should repent the evils I have done:
Ten thousand worse than ever yet I did
Would I perform, if I might have my will:
If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul. [hence,
Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor
And give him burial in his father's grave:
My father and Lavinia shall forthwith
Be closed in our household's monument.
As for that heinous tiger, Tamora,
No funeral rite, nor man in mourning weeds,
No mournful bell shall ring her burial;
But throw her forth to beasts and birds of prey:
Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;
And, being so, shall have like want of pity.
See justice done on Aaron, that damn'd Moor,
By whom our heavy hapes had their beginning:
Then, afterwards, to order well the state,
That like events may ne'er it ruminate. [Exeunt.

Titus.—When will this fearful slumber have an end?
Marcus.—Now, farewell, flattery: die, Andronius;
Thon dost not slumber: see, thy two sons' heads,
Thy warlike hand, thy mangled daughter here;
Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight
Struck pale and bloodless: and thy brother, I,
Eres like a stony Image, cold and numb.
Ah, now no more will I control thy griefs:
Rend off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes:
Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?
Titus.—Ha, ha, ha!
Marcus.—Why dost thou laugh? It fits not with this hour.

SCENE—Verona: Mantua.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page i.]

PROLOGUE.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventured piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife.

The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, nought could remove,
Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Verona. A public place.

Enter Sampson and Gregory, of the house of Capulet, armed with swords and bucklers.

Sam. Gregory, o' my word, we'll not carry coals.
Gre. No, for then we should be colliers.
Sam. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.
Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out o' the collar.
Sam. I strike quickly, being moved.
Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.
Sam. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.
Gre. To move is to stir; and to be valiant is to stand: therefore, if thou art moved, thou run'st away.
Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand:
I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.
Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.
Sam. True; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.
Gre. The quarrel is between our masters and us their men.
Sam. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant:

when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids, and cut off their heads.
Gre. The heads of the maids?
Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads; take it in what sense thou wilt.
Gre. They must take it in sense that feel it.
Sam. Me they shall feel while I am able to stand: and 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.
Gre. 'Tis well thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John. Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.
Sam. My naked weapon is out: quarrel, I will back thee.
Gre. How! turn thy back and run?
Sam. Fear me not.
Gre. No, marry; I fear thee!
Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.
Gre. I will frown as I pass by, and let them take it as they list.
Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.

Enter Abraham and Balthasar.

Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sam. I do bite my thumb, sir.
Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
ACT I.
ROME O AND JULIET.
SCENE I.

Sam. [Aside to Gre.] Is the law of our side, if I say ay?
Gre. No.
Sam. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir, but I bite my thumb, sir.
Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?
Ahr. Quarrel, sir! no, sir.
Sam. If you do, sir, I am for you: I serve as good a man as you.
Ahr. No better.
Sam. Well, sir.
Gre. Say 'better:' here comes one of my master's kinsmen.
Sam. Yes, better, sir.
Ahr. You lie.
Sam. Draw, if you be men. Gregory, remember thy swashing blow.

[They fight.

Enter Benvolio.

Ben. Part, fools!
Put up your swords; you know not what you do.
[Beats down their swords.

Enter Tybalt.

Tyb. What, art thou drawn among these heatless islands? Turn not so, Benvolio, look upon thy death.
Ben. I do but keep the peace: put up thy sword, or manage it to part these men with me.
Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace! I hate the word,
As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee:
Have at thee, coward!
[They fight.

Enter several of both houses, who join the fray; then enter Citizens, with clubs.

First Cit. Clubs, bills, and partisans! strike! beat them down!
[Beat Benvolio.

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues.

Enter Capulet in his gown, and Lady Capulet.

Cap. What noise is this? Give me my long sword, ho!
La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch! why call you for a
Cap. My sword, I say! Old Montague is come,
And flourishes his blade in spite of me.

Enter Montague and Lady Montague.

Mon. Thou villain Capulet,—Hold me not, let me go.
La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir a foot to seek a foe.

Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Prophasers of this neighbour-stained steel,—[beasts,
Will they not hear? What, ho! you men, you
That quench the fire of your pernicious rage
With purple fountains issuing from your veins,
On pain of torture, from those bloody hands
Throw your mistemper'd weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your moved prince.
Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word,
By thee, old Capulet, and Montague,
Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets,
And made Verona's ancient citizens
Cast by their grave beseeming ornaments,
To wield old partisans, in hands as old,
Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd hate:
If ever you disturb our streets again,
Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time, all the rest depart away:
You, Capulet, shall go along with me:
And, Montague, come you this afternoon,
To know our further pleasure in this case,
To old Free-town, our common judgment-place.
Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.
[Exit all but Montague, Lady Montague, and Benvolio.

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroad?
Speak, nephew, were you by when it began?
Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary,
And yours, close fighting ere I did approach:
I drew to part them: in the instant came
The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepared,
Which, as he breathed defiance to my ears,
He swung about his head and cut the winds,
Who nothing hurt withal hisse'd him in scorn:
While we were interchanging thrusts and blows,
Came more and more and fought on part and part,
Till the prince came, who parted either part.

La. Mon. O, where is Romeo? saw you him to-day?
Right glad I am he was not at this fray.
[Day?]
Ben. Madam, an hour before the worship'st sun
Peer'd forth the golden window of the east,
A troubled mind drave me to walk abroad;
Where, underneath the grove of sycamore
That westward rooteth from the city's side,
So early walking did I see your son:
Towards him I made, but he was ware of me
And stole into the covert of the wood:
I, measuring his affections by my own,
That most are busied when they're most alone,
Pursued my humour not pursuing his,
And gladly did I hear he did me no harm from me.

Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen,
With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew,
Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs;
But all so soon as the all-cheering sun
Should in the furthest east begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed,
Away from light steals home my heavy son,
And private in his chamber pens himself,
Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out
And makes himself an artificial night:
Black and portentous must this humour prove,
Unless good counsel may the cause remove.
Ben. My noble uncle, do you know the cause?
Mon. I neither know it nor can learn of him.
Ben. Have you importuned him by any means?
Mon. Both by myself and many other friends:
But he, his own affection's counsellor,
Is to himself—I will not say how true—
But to himself so secret and so close,
So far from sounding and discovery,
As is the bud bit with an envious worm,
Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,
Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.
Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow,
We would as willingly give cure as know.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. See, where he comes: so please you, stepaside;
I'll know his grievance, or be much denied.
Mon. I would thou wert so happy by thy stay,
To hear true shif't. Come, madam, let's away.

[Exit Montague and Lady.

Ben. Good morrow, cousin.
Rom. Is the day so young?
Ben. But new struck nine.
Rom. Ay me! sad hours seem long.
Was that my father that went hence so fast?
Ben. It was. What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours?
[They short.
Rom. Not having that, which, having, makes
Well, as we say, me no more.
Ben. In love?
Rom. Out.
Ben. Of love?
Rom. Out of her favour, where I am in love.
Ben. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view,
Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof!
Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will!
Where shall we dine? O me! What fray was here?
Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all.
Here's much to do with hate, but more with love.
WHY, then, O brawling love! O loving hate!
O anything, of nothing first create!
O heavy lightness! serious vanity!
Mis-shapen chaos of well-seeming forms!
Grief of my stars, lie heavy in my breast,
With whom wilt propagate, to have it rest.
With more of thine: this love that thou hast shown
Doth add more grief to too much of mine own.
Love is a snake raised with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;
Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears:
What is it else? a madness most discreet,
A choking gall and a preserving sweet.
Farewell, my coz.

Ben. Soft! I will go along;
An if you leave me so, do you me wrong.

Rom. But, I have lost myself; I am not here;
This is not Romeo, he's some other where.

Ben. Tell me in sadness, who is that you love.

Rom. What, shall I groan and tell thee?

Ben. Groan! why, no;
But sadly tell me who.

Rom. Did I in sadness make his will:
Ah, word ill urged to one that is so ill!
In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

Ben. I aim'd so near, when I supposed you loved.

Rom. A right good mark-man! And she's fair I love.

Ben. A right fair mark, fair coz, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well, in that hit you miss; she'll not be hit
With Cupid's arrow; she hath Dian's wit;
And, in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,
From love's weak childish bow she lives unarm'd.
She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor bide the encounter of assailing eyes,
Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:
O, she is rich in beauty, only poor,
That when she dies with beauty dies her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworn that she will still live chaste? [waste?

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge
For her severe, and her severity
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
She is too fair, too wise, wisely too fair,
To merit bliss by making me despair:
She hath forsworn to love, and in that vow
Do I live dead that live to tell it now.

Ben. I am agreed, I forget to think of her.

Rom. O, teach me how I should forget to think.

Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes;
Examine other beauties.

Rom. 'Tis the way
to callers exquisite, in question more:
These happy masks that kiss fair ladies' brows
Being black put us in mind they hide the fair;
He that is strucken blind cannot forget.
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost:
Show me a mistress that is passing fair,
What doth her beauty serve, but as a note
Where I may read who pass'd me in my passing fair?

Ben. Farewell: thou canst not teach me to forget.

Rom. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.

SCENE II. — A street.

[Enter Capulet, Paris, and Servant.

Cap. But Montague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike; and 'tis not hard, I think,
For men so old as we to keep the peace.

Rom. Of honourable reckoning are you both;
And pity 'tis you lived at odds so long.

Cap. But saying o'er what I have said before:
My child is yet a stranger in the world;
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;
Let two more summer wither in their pride,
Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.

Rom. Younger than she are happy mothers made.

Cap. And too soon marr'd are those so early made.
The earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she;
She is the hopeful lady of my earth;
But woe her own: for, in my heart,
My will to her consent is but a part;
An she agree, within her scope of choice
Lies my consent and fair according voice.
This night I hold an old accustomed feast,
Whereof I have invited many a guest;
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more, most welcome, makes my number more.
At my poor house look to behold this night
Earth-treading stars that make dark heaven light;
Such comfort as do lusty young men feel
When well-apparel'd April on the heel
Of limpid May, in cupped beams of such delight
Among fresh female buds shall you this night
Inherit at my house; hear all, all see,
And like her most whose merit most shall be:
Which on more view, of many mine being one
May stand in number, though in reckoning none.
Come, go with me. [To Serv., giving a paper.] Go, sirrah, trudge about:
Through fair Verona; find those persons out
Whose names are written there, and to them say,
My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.

[Exeunt Capulet and Paris.

Serc. Find them out whose names are written here!
It is written, that the shoemaker should meddle
With his yard, and the tailor with his last,
The fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his nets;
but I am sent to find those persons whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned.—In good time.

Enter Benvolio and Romeo.

Ben. Tut, man, one fire burns out another's burning,
One pain is lessen'd by another's anguish;
Turn giddy, and be holp by backward turning;
One desperate grief cured with another's languish:
Take thou some new infection to thy eye,
And the rank poison of the old will die.

Rom. Your plaintain-leaf is excellent for that.

Ben. For what, I pray thee?

Rom. For your broken shin.

Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?

[To.] Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a mad-man
Shut up in prison, kept without my food,
Whipp'd and torment'd and—God-don, good fellow,
Serc. God gi'! god-don. I pray, sir, can you read?
Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.
Serc. Perhaps you have learned it without look:
but, I pray, can you read any thing you see?
Rom. Ay, if I know the letters and the language.
Serc. Ye say honestly; rest you merry!

Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read.

[Rends. Signior Martino and his wife and daughters; County And sum'd his hotwives' sisters; the lady widow of Vitruvio; Signior Placeentio and his lovely nieces; Mercutio and his brother Valentine; mine uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters; my fair niece Rosuline; Livia; Signior Valentio and his cousin Tyball; Lucia and the lively Helena.' A fair assembly: whither should they come?

Rom. Whither?

Serc. To supper; to our house.
Act I. Romeo and Juliet. Scene III.

Rom. Whose house?

Serv. My master's.

Rom. Indeed, I should have ask'd you that before.

Serv. Now I'll tell you without asking: my master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray, come and crush a cup of wine. Rest you merry!

[Exit. Rom. At this same ancient feast of Capulet's
Sup's the fair Rosaline whom thou so lovest,
With all the admired beauties of Verona:
Go thither; and, with unattainted eye,
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.
Rom. When the devout religion of mine eyes
Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fires;
And these, who often drown'd could never die,
Transparent heretics, be burnt for liars!
One fairer than my love! the all-seeing sun
Ne'er saw her match since first the world began.
Rom. But, thou, thou fairest, none else by being,
Herself poised with herself in either eye:
But in that crystal scales let there be weigh'd
Your lady's love against some other maid
That I will show you shining at this feast,
And she shall scarce show well that now shows best.
Rom. I'll go along, no such sight to be shown,
But to rejoice in splendour of mine own. [Exit.]

Scene III.—A room in Capulet's house.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now, by my maidenhead, at twelve year
I bade her come. What, lamb! what, lady-bird!
God forbid! Where's this girl? What, Juliet?

Enter Juliet.

Jul. How now! who calls?

Nurse. Your mother. Madam, I am here.

Jul. What is your will?

La. Cap. This is the matter: — nurse, give leave awhile.
We must talk in secret: — nurse, come back again; I have remember'd me, thou's hear our counsel.
Thou know'st my daughter's of a pretty age.
Nurse. Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.
La. Cap. She's not fourteen.

Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,—
And yet, to my teen be it spoken, I have but four,—
She is not fourteen. How long is it now
To Lammas-tide?

La. Cap. A fortnight and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen.
Susan and she; God rest all Christian souls! —
Were of an age: well, Susan is with God;
She was too good for me: but, as I said,
On Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen;
That shall she, marry; I remember it well.
'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years;
And she was wean'd,— I never shall forget it,—
Of all the days of the year, upon that day:
For I had then laid woe to God and my like;
Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall;
My lord and you were then at Mantua: —
Nay, I do bear a brain: — but, as I said,
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple
Of my dumb and felt it bitter, pretty fool,
To see it tetchy and fall out with the dug!
Shake quoth the dove-house: 'tis no need, I trow,
To bid me trudge;
And since that time it is eleven years;
For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,
She could have run and waddled all about:
For even the day before, she broke her brow:

And then my husband — God be with his soul!
A' was a merry man — took up the child:
'Yea,' quoth he, 'dost thou fall upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward when thou hast more wit;
Wilt thou not, Jule? and, by my hollidame,
The pretty wretch left crying and said 'Ay,'
To see, now, how a jest shall come about!
I warrant, an I should live a thousand years,
I never should forget it: 'Wilt thou not, Jule?'
quoth he;
And, pretty fool, it stinched and said 'Ay.'

La. Cap. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam: yet I cannot choose but laugh,
To think it should leave crying and say 'Ay.'
And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow
A bump as big as a young cockerel's stone;
A parious knock; and it cried bitterly:
'Yea,' quoth my husband, 'fall'st upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward when thou comest to age;
Wilt thou not, Jule?' it stinched and said 'Ay.'

Jul. And aint stinched too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace!
Thuow wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nursed:
An I might have to see thee married once,
I have my wish.

La. Cap. Marry, that ' marry ' is the very theme
I came to talk of. Tell me, daughter Juliet,
How stands your disposition to be married?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse,
I would say thou hadst stuck such wisdom from thy test.

La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger than you,
Here in Verona, ladies of esteem,
Are made already mothers: by my count,
That you are now a maid. Thus then in brief:
The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man
As all the world — why, he's a man of wax.

La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.

La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gentleman?

This night you shall behold him at our feast;
Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face
And find delightful worth there with beauty's pen;
Examine every married lineament
And see how one another lends content,
And what obscured in this fair volume lies
Find written in the margin of his eyes.
This precious book of love, this unbound lover,
To beautify him, only lacks a cover:
The fish lives in the sea, and 'tis much pride
For fair without the fair within to hide:
That book in many's eyes doth share the glory,
That in gold clasps locks in the golden story;
So shall you share all that he doth possess,
By having him, making yourself no less.

Nurse. No less! nay, bigger; women grow by men.

La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?

Jul. I'll but looke into it the more moving:
But no more deep will I endart mine eye
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up,
You call my young lady and asked for, the nurse cursed in the pantry, and every thing in extremity.

I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.

La. Cap. We follow thee. [Exit Servant.] Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE IV.—A street.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with five or six Maskers, Torch-bearers, and others.

Romeo. What, shall this speech be spoke for our escape; Or shall we on without apology? [case?]

Benvolio. There is out of such prolixity,

We'll have no Cupid hoodwink'd with a scarf,

Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath,

Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper;

Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoken

After the prompter, for our entrance;

But let them measure us by what they will;

We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Romeo. Give me a torch: I am not for this ambling;

Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Mercutio. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Romeo. Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes

With nimble soles: I have a soul of lead

So stakes me to the ground I cannot move.

Mercutio. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings,

And soar with them above a common bound.

Romeo. I am too sore enpierced with his shaft

To soar with his light feathers, and so bound,

I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe;

Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Mercutio. And, to sink in it, should you burden love;

Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Romeo. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,

Too rude, too boisterous, and it pricks like thorn.

Mercutio. If love be rough with you, be rough with love;

Prick love for prickling, and you beat love down.

Give me a case to put my visage in:

A visor for a visor! what care I

What curious eye doth quote deformities?

Here are the beetle brows shall blush for me.

Benvolio. Come, knights, knaves, and frozen hordes, no sooner in,

But every man betake him to his legs.

Romeo. A torch for me: let wanton light of heart

Tickle the senseless rushes with their heels,

For I am proverb'd with a grandsire phrase;

I'll be a candle-holder, and look on.

The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done.

Mercutio. Tut, dun's the mouse, the constable's own word:

If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the mire

Of this sir-reverence love, wherein thou stick'st

Up to the ears. Come, we burn daylight, ho!

Romeo. Nay, that's not so.

Mercutio. I mean, sir, in delay

We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by day.

Take our good meaning, for our judgment sits

Five times in that ere once in our live wits.

Romeo. And we mean well in going to this mask;

But 'tis no wit to go.

Mercutio. Why, may one ask?

Romeo. I dream'd a dream to-night.

Mercutio. Well, what was yours?

Romeo. That dreamers often lie.

Mercutio. In bed asleep, while they do dream things true.

Romeo. O, then, I see Queen Mab hath been with

She is the fairies' midwife, and she comes

In shape no bigger than an agate-stone

On the fore-linger of an alderman,

Drawn with a team of little atoms

Athwart whose noses they hasten sleep;

Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs,

The cover of the wings of grasshoppers,

The traces of the smallest spider's web,

The collars of the moonshine's watery beams,

Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of limb,

Her leg a slender grey-coats' foot, so light,

Not half so big as a round little worm

Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid;

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut

Made by the joiner squirrel or old grub,

Time out o' mind the fairies' coachmakers.

And in this state she gallops night by night

Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of

love;

O'er courtiers' knees, that dream on court's sities

O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees,

O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream.

Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,

Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are;

Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,

And then dreams he of smelling out a suit;

And sometime comes she with a little-pig's tail

Tickling a parson's nose as a' lies asleep,

Then dreams he of another beneficie;

Sometime she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,

And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats,

Of breaches, ambuscades, Spanish blades,

Of healths five-fathom deep; and then anon

Drums in his ear, at which he starts and wakes,

And being thus frightened swears a prayer or two

And sleeps again. This is that very Mab

That plats the manes of horses in the night,

And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,

Which once untangled much misfortune bodies;

This is the lag, when maids lie on their backs,

That presses them and learns them first to bear,

Making them women of good carriage:

This is she—

Romeo. Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace!

Then talk'st of nothing.

Mercutio. True, I talk of dreams,

Which are the children of an idle brain,

Begot of nothing but vain fantasy,

Which is as thin of substance as the air

And more inconstant than the wind, who woees

Is as the last effect of some untimely

As the child of a dream: this is the very

That plats the manes of horses in the night,

And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,

Which once untangled much misfortune bodies;

This is the lag, when maids lie on their backs,

That presses them and learns them first to bear,

Making them women of good carriage.

This is she—

Romeo. This wind, you talk of, blows us from ourselves;

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Romeo. I fear, too early: for my mind misgives

Some consequence yet hanging in the stars

Shall bitterly begin his fearful date

With this night's revels and expire the term

Of a despised life closed in my breast

By some vile forfeit of untimely death.

But He, that hath the stewardry of my course,

Direct my sail!—On, lusty gentlemen.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A hall in Capulet's house.

Musicians waiting. Enter Servicingmen, with napkins.

First Serv. Where's Potban, that he helps not to take away? He shift a trencheder! he scrape a trencheder!

Sec. Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands and they unwashed too, 'tis a foulish thing.

First Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate. Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane; and, as thou lovest me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone and Nell Antony, and Potban!

Sec. Serv. Ay, boy, ready.

First Serv. You are looked for and called for, asked for and sought for, in the great chamber.

Sec. Serv. We cannot be here and there too. Cheerly, boys; be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all.

Enter Capulet, with Juliet and others of his house, meeting the Guests and Maskers.

Cap. Welcome, gentlemen! ladies that have their tocs
ROMEO AND JULIET.—Act I., Scene v.
Unplugged with corns will have a bout with you. Ah ha, my mistress! which of you all will do defy to dance? she that makes dainty, she, I'll swear, hath corns; am I come near ye now? Welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day that I have worn a visor and could tell a whispering tale in a fair lady's ear, such as would please: 'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone: You are welcome, gentlemen! Come, musicians, play. A hall, a hall! give room! and foot it, girls.

More light, you knaves; and turn the tables up, and quench the fire, the room is grown too hot. Ah, sirrah, this unlook'd for sport comes well. Nay, sit, nay, sit, good cousin Capulet; for you and I are past our dancing days: How long is 't now since last yourself and I were in a mask?

Sec. Cap. By 'r lady, thirty years. Cap. What, man! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so much: 'T is since the nuptial of Lucentio, Come pentecost as quickly as it will, some five and twenty years; and then we mask'd. Sec. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is elder, sir. His son is thirty.

Will you tell me that? His son was but a ward two years ago. Rom. [To a Servingman] What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand of yonder knight? Sec. I know not, sir. Rom. O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night like a rich jewel in an Ethiope's ear; beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove troping with crows, as yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, and, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague. P七十. I know not, sir. Rom. Unless this be the slave Come hither, cover'd with an antic face, To fleer and scorn at our solemnity? Now, by the stock and honour of my kin, To strike him dead I hold it not a sin. Cap. Why, how now, kinsman! wherefore storm so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe, A villain that is hither come in spite, To scorn at our solemnity this night. Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Rom. O dear account! my life is my foe's debt. Ben. Away, be gone; the sport is at the best. Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone; We have a trilling foolish banquet towards. Is it e'en so? why, then, I thank you all; I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night. More torches here! Come on then, let's to bed. Ah, sirrah, by my fay, it waxes late: I'll to my rest.

[Exeunt all but Juliet and Nurse.]

Jul. Come hither, nurse. What is yond gentleman? Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio. Jul. What 's he that now is going out of door? Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petrucho. Jul. What 's he that follows there, that would not dance? Nurse. I know not. Jul. Go, ask his name: if he be married, My grave is like to be my wedding bed. Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague; The only son of your great enemy. Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate! Too early seen unknown, and known too late! Prodigious birth of love it is to me, That I must love a loath'd enemy. Nurse. What 's this? what 's this? Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now Of one I danced withal. [One calls within 'Juliet.' Nurse. Anon, anon! Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone. [Exeunt.]
PROLOGUE.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heir;
That fair for which love groan'd for and would die,
With tender Juliet match'd, is now not fair.
Now Romeo is beloved and loves again,
Like bewitched by the charm of looks,
But to his foe supposed he must complain,
And she stedfastly yet faint from fearful looks:
Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear;
And as much in love, her means much less.
To meet her new-beloved any where:
But passion lends them power, time means, to meet,
Tempering 'extremities with extreme sweet. [Exit.

SCENE I.—A lane by the wall of Capulet's orchard.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Can I go forward when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.
[He climbs the wall, and leaps down within it.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo!
Mer. He is wise;
And, on my life, hath stol'n him home to bed.
Ben. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall:
Call, good Mercutio.
Mer. Nay, I'll conjure too.
Romeo! you humours! madman! passion! lover! appeareth in the likeness of a sigh:
Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied;
Cry but 'Ay me!' pronounce but 'love' and 'dove';
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nick-name for her purblind son and heir,
Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim,
When King Copia tua loved the beggar-maid!
He hearth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not;
The ape is dead, and I must conjure him.
I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,
By her high forehead and her scarlet lip,
By her fine foot, straight leg and quivering thigh,
And the denises that there adjacent lie,
That in thy likeness thou appear to us!
Ben. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.
Mer. This cannot anger him: 't would anger him.
To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle
Of some strange nature, letting it there stand,
Till she had laid it and conjured it down;
That were some spite: my invocation
Is fair and honest, and in his mistress' name
I conjure only but to raise up him.
Ben. Come, he hath hid himself among these trees,
To be consorted with the humorous night:
Blind is his love and best befits the dark.
Mer. It love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.
Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit
As maims call medlars, when they laugh alone.
O, Romeo, that she were, O, that she were
An open et cetera, then a poperin pear!
Romeo, good night: I'll to my truckle-bed;
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep:
Come, shall we go?
Ben. Go, then; for 't is in vain
To seek him here that means not to be found.
[Exeunt.
ACT II.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE III.

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'erperch these
For stony limits cannot hold love out,  [walls;
And what love can do that dares love attempt;
Therefore thy kinsmen are no let to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Alack, there lies more peril in thine eye
Than twenty of their swords: look thou but sweet.
And I am proof against their enmity.

Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their
[It is dark;]

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By love, who first did prompt me to inquire;
He lent me counsel and I lent him eyes.
I am no pilot; yet, wert thou as far
As that vast shore wash'd with the farthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandize.  [face,

Jul. Thou know'st the mask of night is on my Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.
For I am all forsworn, and fond of sin, [fain, for
What have I spoken but false and welfare compliment?

Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say 'Ay,'
And I will take thy word: yet, if thou swear'st,
Thou mayst prove false; at lovers' perjuries,
They say, Jove laughs. O gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse and say thee nay,
So wilt wilt; but else, not for the world.

In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond,
And therefore thou mayst think my 'haviour light:
But trust me, gentlemen, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.
I should have been more strange, I must confess,
But that thou overheard'st, ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore pardon me,
And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops—
Jul. O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant
That monthly changes in her circled orb,  [moon,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jul. Do not swear at all;
Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—
Jul. Well, do not swear: although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night:
It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say 'It lightens.' Sweet, good night!
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to thy heart as that with which I met.

Rom. O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?
Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?
Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine: [it:

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request
And yet I would it were to give again.
Rom. Wouldst thou withdraw it? for what purpose, love?

Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again.
And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee,
The more I have, for both are infinite.

[Nurse calls within.

I hear some noise within; dear love, adieu!

Anon, good nurse! Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay but a little, I will come again.  [Exit, above.

Rom. O blessed, blessed night! I am afeard,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter Juliet, above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night in-
If that thy bent of love be honourable,  [deed.
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt perform the rite;
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay
And follow thee my lord throughout the world.

Nurse. [Within] Madam!

Jul. I come, anon.—But if thou mean'st not well,
I do beseech thee—

Nurse. [Within] Madam!

Jul. By and by, I come:—
To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:
To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul—

Jul. A thousand times good night!  [Exit, above.
Rom. A thousand times the worse, to want thy light.

Nurse. Love goes toward love, as schoolboys from their
But love from love, toward school with heavy looks.

[Re-enter Juliet, above.

Jul. Hist! Romeo, hist! O, for a falconer's
To hire this tassel-gentle back again!  [voice,
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cave where Echo lies,
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine,
With repetition of my Romeo's name.

Rom. It is my soul that calls upon my name:
How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,
Like softest music to attending ears!

Jul. Romeo!  [voice.
Rom. My dear?
Jul. At what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee?

Rom. To the hour of nine.

Jul. I will not fail: 'tis twenty years till then.
I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.
Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,
Remembering how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning; I would have thee
And yet no further than a wanton's bird; [gone:
Who lets it hop a little from her hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again,
So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I;
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good night, good night! parting is such sweet sor-
That I shall say good night till it be morrow.  [row,

Rom. Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!
Would I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!
Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell,
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell.  [Exit.

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's cell.

Enter Friar Laurence, with a basket.

Fri. L. The gray-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,
Chequering the eastern clouds with streaks of light,
And flecked darkness like a drunkard reeds
From forth day's path and Titan’s fiery wheels:
ACT II.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE IV.

Now, ere the sun advance his burning eye,
The day to cheer and night's dank dew to dry,
I must up-fill this osier cage of ours
With baleful weeds and precious-juiced flowers.
The earth that's nature's mother is her tomb;
What is her burying, and her urn their food,
And from her womb children of divers kind
We suck on her natural bosom found,
Many for many virtues excellent,
None but for some and yet all different.
O, mickle is the powerful grace that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities:
For no such vile that on the earth doth live
But to the earth some special good doth give,
Nor ought so good but strain'd from that fair use
Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse:
Virtue itself turns vice, being misappalled,
And vice sometimes by action dignified.
Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence and medicine power: [part;
For this, being smelt, with that part cheers each
Being tasted, slays all senses with the heart.
Two such opposed kings encamp them still
In man, as well as herbs, grace and vice will;
And where the worse is predominant,
Full soon the canker death eats up that plant.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father.

Fri. L. Benedicite!

What early tongue so sweet saluteth me?
Young son, it argued a distemper'd head
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed;
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie:
But where unbruised youth with unstiff'd brain
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign:
Therefore thy earliness doth me assure
Thou art up-roused by some distemper;
Or if not so, then here I hit it right,
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true; the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. L. God pardon sin! wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father; no?
I have forgot that name, and that name's woe.

Fri. L. That's my good son: but where hast thou been?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.
I have been feasting with mine enemy,
Where on a sudden one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I bear no hatred, blessed man, for, lo,
My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. L. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shift.

Rom. Then plainly know my heart's dear love is
On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:
Set as she is set on her father's bed;
And all combined, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage: when and where and how
We met, we woo'd and made exchange of vow,
I'll tell thee as we pass; but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us to-day.

Fri. L. Holy Saint Francis, what a change is
Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear, [here!
So soon forsaken? young men's love then lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.
Jesu Maria, what a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow checks for Rosaline!
How much salt water thrown away in waste,
To season love, that of it doth not taste.
The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;
Lo, here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet:

If e'er thou wast thyself and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline: [then,
And art thou changed? pronounce this sentence
Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou child'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

Fri. L. But nothing for loving, pupill mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury love.

Fri. L. Not in a grave,
To lay one in, another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she whom I love now
Doth grace for grace and love for love allow;
Then other did not so.

Fri. L. O, she knew well.
Thy love did read by rote and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come, go with me,
In one respect I'll thy assistant be;
For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your households' rancour to pure love.

Rom. O, let us hence: I stand on sudden haste.

Fri. L. Wisely and slow; they stumble that run fast.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A street.

Enter Benvolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be?
Came he not home to-night?

Ben. Not to his father's; I spoke with him man.

Mer. Ah, that same pale hard-hearted wench, that Rosaline,
Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman of old Capulet,
Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man that can write may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter's master, how
He dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo! he is already dead; stabbed with a white wenche's black eye; shot through the ear with a love-song: the very pin of his heart eclipsed with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft: and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than prince of cats, I can tell you. O, he is the courageous captain of complements. He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his minims rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom; the very butcher of a milky button, a duellist, a duellist; a gentleman of the very first house, of the first and second cause:
ah, the immortal passado! the punto reverso! the
Ben. The what?

Mer. The box of such antic, lisping, affecting fantasticoes; these new tuners of accents! 'By Jesu a very good blade! a very tall man! a very good whore!' Why, is not this a lamentable thing, grandure, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashion-mongers, these perdona-mi's, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench? O, their bones, their bones!

Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his roe, like a dried herring: O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified! Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in: Laura to his lady was but a kitchen-wench; marry, she had a better love to be rhymed her: Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gypsy; Helen and Hero hirdlings and harlots; Thisbe a gray eye or so, but not to the purp.

Sig. Romeo! Romeo! Romeo! there's a French salutation to your French slup. You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The slip, sir, the slip; can you not conceive?
Enter Nurse and Peter.

Nurse. A sail, a sail!
Ben. Two, two; a shirt and a smock.

Nurse. Peter! Peter. Anon!
Peter. My fan, Peter.

Nurse. Good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer face.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.
Nurse. God ye good-den, fair gentlewoman.

Mer. "Tis no less, I tell you, for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you!

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made for himself to war.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said; 'for himself to war, quoth a?' Gentleman, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him than he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. Indeed, I say well.

Mer. Yea, is the worst well? very well took, I faith; wisely, wisely.
that would fain lay knife abroad; but she, good soul, had as lief see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I answer'd her, and tell her that Paris is the proper man; but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clout in the versal world.

Both not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. Ay, nurse; what of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah, mock'er! that's the dog's name; R is for the—No; I know it begins with some other letter:—and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

Rom. Recommend me to thy lady.

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times. [Exit Romeo.] Peter!

Pet. Aion!

Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before, and apace. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Capelet's orchard.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clock struck nine when I did send the
In half an hour she promised to return. [nurse; Perchance she cannot meet him: that's not so.
O, she is lame! love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams,
Driving back shadows over louring hills:
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid whigs.
Now is the sun upon the highmost hill
Of this day's journey, and from nine till twelve
Is three long hours, yet she is not come.
Had she affections and warm youthful blood,
She would be as swift in motion as a ball:
My words would bandy her to my sweet love,
And his to me:
But old folks, many feign as they were dead;
Unequal, slow, heavy and pale as lead.
O God, she comes!

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Nurse. Honey nurse, what news?

Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.

Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit Peter.

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse.—O Lord, why look'st thou sad?
Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily;
If good, thou shamest the music of sweet news
My playing to the tune of so sad a face.
I am a weary, give me leave awhile:
Pie, how my bones ache! what a jaunt have I had!
Jul. I would thou hadst my bones, and I thy news.
Nay, come, I pray thee, speak; good, good nurse, speak.

Nurse. Jesus, what haste? can you not stay awhile?
Do you not see that I am out of breath?
Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast
To say to me that thou art out of breath? [breath
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay
Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that;
Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad?

Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, not he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body, though they be not to be talked on, yet they art past compar: he is not the flower of courtesy, but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.
Go thy ways, wench; serve God. What, have you dined at home?

Jul. No, no, but all this did I know before.

What says he of our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a head have I!

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces.
My back o'! other side.—O, my back, my back! Beshrew your heart for sending me about,
To catch my death with jaunting up and down!
Jul. I' faith, I am sorry that thou art not well.
Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?

Nurse. Your love says, like an honest gentleman, and a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, and,
I warrant, a virtuous.—Where is your mother?
Jul. Where is my mother? why, she is within;
Where should she be? How oddly thou repliest!
Your love says, like an honest gentleman,
Where is your mother?'

Nurse. O God's lady dear! Are you so hot? marry, come up, I trow;
Is this the politice for my aching bones?
Henceforward do your messages yourself.
Jul. Here's such a coil! come, what says Romeo?

Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shrift to-day?
Jul. I have. [cell; Nurse.
Thee hence to Friar Laurence' There stays a husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks, They'll be in scarlet straight at any news. Hee you to Court? We'll make you a lady.
To fetch a ladder, by the which your love Must climb a bird's nest soon when it is dark: I am the drudge and toll in your delight, But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Go; I'll to dinner; be you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune! Honest nurse, farewell. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Friar Laurence's cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Romeo.

Fri. L. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,
That after hours with sorrow chide us not!
Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervail the exchange of joy
That one short minute gives me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then love-devouring death doth what he dare;
It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. L. These violent delights have violent ends
And in their triumph die, like fire and powder,
Which as they kiss consume: the sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite:
Therefore love moderately; the love doth so;
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.

Enter Juliet.

Here comes the lady: O, so light a foot Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:
A lover may bestride the gossamer That idles in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor. [both.

Fri. L. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us
Jul. As much to him, else is his thanks too much.
Rom. Ah, Juliet, if the measure of thy joy
Be heap'd like mine and that thy skill be more
To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath
This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue
Unfold the imagined happiness that both
Receive in either by this dear encounter.
Jul. Confound love, more in matter than in words,
Brags of his substance, not of ornament:
They are but beggars that can count their worth;
But my true love is grown to such excess
I cannot sum up sum of half my wealth.

Fri. L. Come, come with me, and we will make Short work:
For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone
Till holy church incorporate two in one. [Exit.
ACT III.

SCENE I. — A public place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Page, and Servants.

en. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let’s retire: The day is hot, the Capulet abroad, And, look, my lord, we shall not scape a brawl; For now, these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of those fellows that when he enters the confines of a tavern claps me his sword upon the table and says ‘God send me no need of thee!’ and by the operation of the second cup draws it on them, and there’s an end of it. But if I am like such a fellow?

Ben. I am like such a fellow.

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack in thy mood as any in Italy, and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have made much of it. For, by the faith, this would kill the other. Thou! why, thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast: thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes; what eye but such an eye would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels as an egg if full of meat, and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg for quarrelling: thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun: didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old riband? and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling!

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple! O simple! Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Enter Tybalt and others.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them. Gentlemen, good den: a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us? couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You shall find me apt enough to that, sir, an you will give me occasion. [giving?

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consort’st with Romeo?

Mer. Consort! what, dost thou make us minstrels? an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here’s my fiddlestick; here’s that shall make you dance. ’Zounds, consorts!

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men: Either withdraw unto some private place, And reason coolly of your grievances. Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us. [gaze;

Mer. Men’s eyes were made to look, and let them I will not budge for no man’s pleasure, I.

Enter Romeo.

Romeo. I do protest, I never injured thee, But love thee better than thou canst devise, Till thou shalt know the reason of my love; And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender As dearly as my own,—be satisfied.

Mer. O, most calm, discomf ortable, vile submission! Alla stoccatara carries it away. [Draws. Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Tyb. What wouldst thou have with me?

Mer. Good king of cats, nothing but one of your nine lives; that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pilcher by the ears? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you. [Drawing.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up, Merc. Come, sir, your passado. [They fight. Rom. Draw, Benvolo; beat down their weapons. Gentlemen, for shame, forbear this outrage! Tybalt, Mercutio, the prince expressly hath Forbidden bandying in Verona streets; Hold, Tybalt! good Mercutio! [Tybalt under Romeo’s arm state Mercutio, and flies with his followers.

Mer. I am hurt. A plague o’ both your houses! I am sped. Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben. What, art thou hurt?

Mer. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, ’tis enough.

Where is my page? Go, villain, fetch a surgeon. [Exit Page.

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No, ’tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door; but ’tis enough, ’twill serve: ask for me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am peppered, I warrant, for this world. A plague o’ both your houses! ’Zounds, a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a brag- gart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic! Why the devil came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house, Benvolio, Or I shall faint. A plague o’ both your houses! They have made worms’ meat of me: I have it, And soundly too: your houses!

[Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.

Rom. This gentleman, the prince’s near ally, My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt In my behalf: my reputation stain’d With Tybalt’s slander.—Tybalt, that an hour Hath been my kinsman! O sweet Juliet, Thy beauty hath made me emmanciate And in my temper soften’d valour’s steel!

Re-enter Benvolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio’s dead! That gallant spirit hath aspired the clouds, Which too unfilmy here did scorn the earth.

Rom. This day’s black fate on more days doth de- term prince but best is the worst, others must end [pend;

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive, in triumph! and Mercutio slain! Away to heaven, respective lenity, And fire-eyed fury be my conduct now!

Re-enter Tybalt.

Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again, That late thou gavest me; for Mercutio’s soul Is but a little way above our heads,

Stay for thine to keep him company: Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

955
Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him
Shaft with him hence. [here,]
Rom. This shall determine that. [They fight; Tybalt falls.

Ben. Romeo, away, be gone!
The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain.
Stand not amazed; the prince will doom thee dead,
If thou art taken: hence, be gone, away!
Rom. O, I am fortune's fool!

Ben. Why dost thou stay?

Enter Citizens, &c. [Exit Romeo.

First Cit. Which way ran he that kill'd Mercutio?
Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?
Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

First Cit. Up, sir, go with me;
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; Montague, Capulet, their Wives, and others.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?
Ben. O noble prince, I can discover all
The thinkable manner of this bloody bea
There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.
Lu. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin! O my brother's child!
O prince! O cousin! husband! O, the blood is spilt
Of my dear kinsman! Prince, as thou art true,
For his kind assistance, shed blood of Montague.
O cousin! cousin!

Pri'nt Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?
Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did say:
Romeo, that spoke him fair, bade him bethink
How nice the quarrel was, and urged withal
Your high displeasure: all this uttered
With gentle breathing, calm look, knees humbly bow'd,
Could not take truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt deafe to peace, but that he tills
With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast,
Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point,
And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beates
Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity
Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud: [tongue,
'Hold, friends! friends, part!'—and swifter than his
His agile arm beats down their fatal points,
And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose arm
An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled;
But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertain'd revenge,
And to 't they go like lightning, for, ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slain,
And, as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly.

This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

Lu. Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague;
Affection makes him false; he speaks not true:
Some twenty of them fought in this black strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life.
I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must give;
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Pri'nt. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio;
Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?
Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's friend;
His fault concludes but what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Pri'nt. And for that offence
Immediately we do exile him hence.
I have an interest in our late proceeding,
My blood for your rude brows doth lie a-bleeding;
But I 'll amerce you with so strong a fine
That you shall all repent the loss of mine:
I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase our abuses:
Therefore use none: let Romeo hence in haste,

Else, when he's found, that hour is his last.
Bear hence this body and attend our will:
Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Capulet's orchard.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. Gallip aveace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phebus' lodging: such a waggion
As Phaethon would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediately.
Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night,
That runaway's eyes may wink, and Romeo
Leap to these arms, untalk'd of and unseen.
Lovers can see to do their amorous rites
By their own beauties; or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night. Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Play'd for a pair of stintless maidenheads:
Hood my unmann'd blood, bating in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle; till my yellow side,
Thy true love acted simple modesty.
Come, night: come, Romeo; come, thou day in night;
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow on a raven's back. [night,
Come, gentle night, come, loving, black-brow'd
Give me my Romeo; and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars.
And he will make the face of heaven so fine
That all the world will be in love with night
And pay no worship to the garland sun.
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it, and, though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd: so tedious is this day
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not wear them. O, here comes my nurse,
And she brings news; and every tongue that speaks
But Romeo's name speaks heavenly eloquence.

Enter Nurse, with cords.

Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there?
Thy hand was there:
That Romeo bid thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the cords. [Throws them down.

Nurse. Ah, well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's
We are undone, lady, we are undone!
Alack the day! he's gone, he's kill'd, he's dead!

Romeo can, Though heaven cannot: O Romeo, Romeo!
Who ever would have thought it? Romeo! Romeo!
Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me
This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell. [thus Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but 'I?',
And that bare word ' I ' shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice;
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut, that make thee answer 'I'.
If he be slain, say 'I'; or if not, no:
Brief sounds determine of my weal or woe. [eyes,—
Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine
God save the mark!—here on his manly breast:
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood,
All in gore-blood; I swooned at the sight.
Jul. O, break, my heart! poor bankrupt, break at
To prison, eyes, ne'er look on liberty! [ince
Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion here;
And thou and Romeo press one heavy bier!
Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had!
O courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!

596
ACT III.  ROMEO AND JULIET.  SCENE III.

Jul. What storm is this that blows so contrary? Is Romeo slaughter'd, and is Tybalt dead? My dear-loved cousin, and my dearest lord? Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom! For who is living, if those two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd; Romeo that kill'd him, he is banish'd. [blood?

Jul. O God! did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day, it did!

Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flowering face! Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?

Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical! Dove-feather'd raven! wolfish-ravening lamb! Despis'd beast shaming divinity divine! Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st, A damned saint, an honourable villain! O nature, what hadst thou to do in hell, When thou didst bow the spirit of a fiend In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh? Was ever book containing such vile matter So fairly bound? O, that deciet should dwell In such a gorgeous palace!

Nurse. There's no trust, No faith, no honesty in men; all perjured, All forsworn, all nautig, all dissembler.

Ah, where's my man? give me some aqua vitae: These good remembrances of these good, these sorrowful makes me old.

Smee come to Romeo!

Nurse. Blister'd be thy tongue

For such a wish! he was not born to shaine

Upon his brow shame is ashamed to sit; For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd Sole monarch of the universal earth.

O, what a beast was I to chide at him!

Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your cousin?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband? Ah, poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth thy name,

When I, thy three-hours wife, have mangled it? But, wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin? That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband; Back, foolish tears, back to thy native spring; Your tributary drops belong to woe, Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.

My bastard lives, that Tybalt would have slain; And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain my husband:

All this is comfort: wherefore weep I then?

Some word there was, worser than Tybalt's death, That murder'd me: I would forget it soon; But, O, my noble master, my noble master! Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds:

'Thy Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banish'd;' That 'banish'd,' that one word 'banish'd,' Hath slain ten thousand Tybalt's. Tybalt's death Was woe enough, if it had ended there: Or, if some woe delights in fellowship And yearly will be rank'd with other griefs, Why follow'd not, when she said 'Tybalt's dead,' Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both, Which modern lamentation might have mov'd? But with a rear-ward following Tybalt's death, Romeo is banish'd, to speak that word, Is father, mother, and my master, Juliet. All slain, all dead. 'Romeo is banish'd!' There is no end, no limit, measure, bound, In that word's death; no words can that woe sound. Where is my father, and my mother, nurse?

Nurse. Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's corse: Will she, then? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wasi they his wounds with tears: mine shall be spent, When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment. Take up those cords: poor ropes, you are beguil'd, Both you and I; for Romeo is exiled: He made you for a highway to my bed;

But I, a maid, die maiden-widow'd. Come, cords, come, come, nurse: I'll to my wedding-bed; And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead! Nurse. He to your chamber: I'll find Romeo To comfort you; I wot well where he is. Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night: I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence' cell.

Jul. O, thy heart! give this ring to my true knight, And bid him come to take his last farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Friar Laurence's cell.

Friar L. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful man: Affliction is euamour'd of thy parts, And thou art wedded to calamity.

Enter Friar Laurence.

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's doom? What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand, That I yet know not?

Friar L. To familiar.

Is my dear son with such some company: I bring the tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than dooms-day is the prince's doom?

Friar L. A gentler judgment vanish'd from his Not body's death, but body's banishment.

Rom. Ha, banishment! be merciful, say 'death;' For exile hath more terror in his look, Much more than death: do not say 'banishment.' Friar L. Hence from Verona art thou banish'd: Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walls, But purgatory, torture, hell itself.

Hence-banish'd is banish'd from the world, And world's exile is death: then banish'd, Is death mis-term'd: calling death banishment, Thou cut'tst my head off with a golden axe, And smil'st upon the stroke that murders me.

Friar L. O deadly sin! O rude unthankfulness! Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince, Taking the part, had pity on his son. And turn'd that black word death to banishment: This is dear mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis torture, and not mercy: heaven is here, Where Juliet lives; and every cat and dog And little mouse, every unworthy thing, That lives here, to heaven and may look on her; But Romeo may not: more validity. More honourable state, more courtship lives In carrion-flies than Rome: they may seize On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand And steal immortal blessing from her lips, Who, even in pure and vestal modesty, May till blush, as thinking their own kisses sin; But Romeo may not; he is banish'd: Flies may do this, but I from this must fly: They are free men, but I am banish'd. And say'st thou yet that exile is not death? Hadst thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-ground knife, No sudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean, But 'banish'd' to kill me?—banish'd? O friar, the damned use that word in hell; Howlings attend it: how hast thou the heart, Being a divine, a ghostly confessor, A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd, To mang the use with that word 'banish'd?' Friar L. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word. Rom. O, thou wilt speak again of banishment. Friar L. I'll give thee armour to keep off that Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy. [word; To comfort thee, though thou art banish'd,
ACT III.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE IV.

Rom. Yet banished?—Hang up philosophy! Unless philosophy can make a Juliet, Displant a town, reverse a prince’s doom, It helps not, it prevails not: talk no more.

Fri. L. O, then I see that madmen have no ears.

Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. L. They will not dispute with thee of thy estate.

Rom. Thou canst not speak of that thou dost not Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love, [feel:
An hour but married, Tybalt murdered, Doting like me and like me banished, [thy hair,
Then mightest thou speak, then mightest thou tear
And fall upon the ground, as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

[knocking within.]

Fri. L. Arise; one knocks; good Romeo, hide thyself.

Rom. Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans, Mist-like, infold me from the search of eyes.

[knocking.]

Fri. L. Hark, how they knock! Who’s there?

Rom. Arise; Thou wilt be taken. Stay awhile! Stand up; [knocking.

Run to my study. By and by! God’s will,
What simpleness is this! I come, I come!

[knocking.]

Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what’s your will?

Nurse. [Within] Let me come in, and you shall know my errand;
I come from Lady Juliet.

Fri. L. Welcome, then.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar, What is my lady’s lord when Romeo?
Fri. L. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O, he is even in my mistress’ case, Just in her case! O woful sympathy! Piteous predilection! Even so lies she, Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubbering. Stand up, stand up; stand, an you be a man: For Juliet’s sake, for her sake, rise and stand;
Why should you fall into so deep an O?
Rom. Nurse! [of all.

Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir! Well, death’s the end
Spakest thou of Juliet? how is it with her? Doth she not think me an old murderer, Now I have stain’d the childhood of our joy With blood removed but little from her own? Where is she? and how doth she? and what says My conceit’d lady to our conceit’d love? [weep.
Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and And now falls on her bed; and then starts up, And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries, And then down falls again.

Rom. As if that name, Shot from the deadly level of a gun, Did murder her; as that same cursed hand Murder’d her kinsman. O, tell me, friar, tell me, In what vile part of this anatomy Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack The hateful mansion. [drawing his sword.

Fri. L. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy form cries out thou art: Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote The unreasonable fury of a beast; Unseemly woman in a seeming man! Or ill-beseeching beast in seeming both! Thou hast amazed me: by my holy order, I thought thy disposition better temper’d. Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself? And slay thy lady too that lives in thee, By doing daamest hate upon thyself?

Why rai’st thou on thy birth, the heaven, and earth? Since birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet In thee at once: which thou at once wouldst lose. Fie, fie, thou shanest thy shape, thy love, thy wit; Which, like a usurer, abound’st in all, And usest none in that true use indeed Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit: Thy noble shape is but a thing that is a sport, Digressing from the value of a man; Thy dear love sworn but hollow perjury, Killing that love which thou hast vow’d to cherish; Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love, Mis-shaping in the conduct of them both, Like powder in a skillless soldier’s prank; Is set a-fire by thine own ignorance, And thou dismember’d with thine own defence. What, rouse thee, man! thy Juliet is alive, For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead; There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee, But thou slew’st Tybalt; there art thou happy too: The law that threaten’d death becomes thy friend And turns it to exile: there art thou happy: A pack of blessings lights upon thy back; Happiness courts thee in her best array; But, like a misbehaved and sullen wench, Thou point’st upon thy fortune and thy love: Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable. Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed, Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her: But look thou stay not till the watch be set, For then thou canst not pass to Mantua; Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends, Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back With twenty hundred thousand times more joy Than thou went’st forth in lamentation. Go before, nurse; commend me to thy lady;
And bid her haste to all the house to bed. Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto: Romeo is coming.

Nurse. O Lord, I could have stay’d here all the night To hear good counsel: O, what learning is! My lord, I’ll tell my lady you will come.
Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.
Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir:
Hie you, make haste, it grows very late. [Exit.

Rom. How well my comfort is revived by this!
Fri. L. Go hence; good night; and here stands all your state:
Either be gone before the watch be set, Or by the break of day disguise yourself; Sojourn in Mantua; I’ll find out your man, And he shall signify from time to time Every good hap to you that chances here:
Give me thy hand; ’tis late: farewell; good night.
Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me, It wore a grief, so brief to part with thee:
Farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A room in Capulet’s house.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and Paris.

Cap. Things have fall’n out, sir, so unluckily, That we have had no time to move our daughter: Look you, she loved her kinsman Tybalt dearly, And so did I:—Well, we were born to die. ’Tis very late, she’ll not come down to-night: I promise you, but for your company, I would have been a-bed an hour ago.
Par. These times of woe afford no time to woo, Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter. [morrow.

Lan. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow: To-night she is wew’d up to her heaviness.
Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a design Of my child’s love: I think she will be ruled In all respects by me; nay, more, I doubt it not.
Family, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love;
And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—
But, soft! what day is this?
Par. Monday, my lord.
Cap. Monday! ha, ha! Well, Wednesday is too
O' Thursday let it be: o' Thursday, tell her, [soon,
She shall be married to this noble earl.
Will you be ready? do you like this haste?
We'll keep no great ado,—a friend or two;
For, hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we reveal much:
Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,
And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?
Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-

Cap. Well, get you gone: o' Thursday be it, then.
Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.
Forgive, my lord. Light to my chamber, ho!
Afore me! it is so very late,
That we may call it early by and by.
Good night. [Exeunt.

Scene V.—Capulet's orchard.

Enter Romeo and Juliet above, at the window.
Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierced the fearful hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate-tree:
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.
Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
Nightly my lady treads the round of heaven,
And yon due south stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops.
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.
Jul. You light is not day-light, I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet; thou need'st not to be gone.
Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I'll say you grey is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulted ear so high above the clouds:
I have more care to stay than will to go:
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.
How's t'it, my soul? let's talk; it is not day.
Jul. It is, it is, his hecne, be gone, away!
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps.
Some say the lark makes sweet division;
This doth not so, for she divideth us:
Some say the lark and loathed toad change eyes;
O, now I would they had changed voices too!
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,
Hunting thee hence with hunt's-up to the day.
O, how now gone: more light and light it grows.
Rom. More light and light; more dark and dark our woes!

Enter Nurse, to the chamber.
Nurse. Madam!
Nurse. Your lady mother is coming to your cham-
The day is broke; be wary, look about. [Exit.
Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.
Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll de-seed. [Hark! he goeth down.
Jul. Art thou gone so? love, lord, ay, husband, friend!
I must hear from thee every day in the hour,
For in a minute there are many days:
O, by this count I shall be much in years
Ere I again behold my Romeo!
Rom. Farewell!
I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.
Jul. O, think'st thou we shall ever meet again?
Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall
For sweet discourses in our time to come. [serve
Jul. O God, I have an ill-divining soul!
Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.
Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you:
Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu, adieu! [Exit.
Jul. O fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle:
If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him?
That is renowned for faith? Be fickle, fortune;
For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long;
But send him back.
La. Cap. [Within] Ho, daughter! are you up?
Jul. Who is 't that calls? is it my lady mother?
Is she not down so late, or up so early?
What unaccustom'd cause procures her hither?

Enter Lady Capulet.
La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?
Jul. Madam, I am not well.
La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's death?
What, wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears?
An if thou couldst, thou couldst not make him live;
Therefore, have done: some grief shows much of
love;
But much of grief shows still some want of wit.
Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.
La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the
Which ye weep for. [Friend
Jul. Feeling so the loss,
I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.
La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death,
As that the villain lives which slaughter'd him.
Jul. What villain, madam?
Jul. [Aside] Villain and he be many miles asun-
God pardon him! I do, with all my heart; [der.—
And yet no man like he doth grieve my heart.
La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer lives.
Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my
Would none but I might venge my cousin's death!
La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not:
Then weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua,
Where that same banish'd runagate doth live,
Shall give him such an unaccustomed dram,
That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:
And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.
Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—
Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd!
Madam, if you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it;
That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet. O, how my heart aches
To hear him named, and cannot come to him,
To wreak the love I bore my cousin
Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him! [a man.
La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such
But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl.
Jul. And joy comes well in such a needy time:
What are they, I beseech your ladyship?
La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father,
One who, to put thee from thy heaviness, [child;
Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy.
That thou expect'st not nor I look'd not for.

Act III.
Romeo and Juliet.
Scene V.
ACT III.

ROMEO AND JULIET.  SCENE V.

Jul. Madam, in happy time, what day is that?
La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday morne,
The gallant, young and noble gentleman,
The County Paris, at Saint Peter's Church,
Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.
Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's Church and Peter too,
He shall not make me there a joyful bride.
I wonder at this haste; that I must wed
Ere he, that should be my husband, come to woo.
I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and, when I do, I swear,
It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate,
Rather than Paris. These are news indeed!
La. Cap. Here comes your father; tell him so yourself.
And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew;
But for the sunset of my brother's son
It rain doth light.
How now! a conduit, girl? what, still in tears?
Evermore showering? In one little body
Thou counterfeis't a bark, a sea, a wind;
For still they eyes, which I may call the sea,
Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,
Sailed in the salt flood; the winds, thy sighs;
Who, raging with thy tears, and they with them,
Without a sudden calm, will overset
Thy tempest-tossed body. How now, wife!
Have you deliver'd to her our decree?
La. Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you this thanks.
I would the fool were married to her grave!
Cap. Soft! take me with you, take me with you,
wife.
How! will she none? doth she not give us thanks?
Is she not proud? doth she not count her best,
Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought
So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?
Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have,
Proud can I never be of what I hate;
But thankful even for that, that is meant love.
Cap. How now, how now, shop-logic! What is this?
'Proud,' and 'I thank you,' and 'I thank you not,'
And yet 'not proud,' mistress minion, you,
Thank no thanks, nor proud me no prouds,
But fettle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
To go with Paris to Saint Peter's Church,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.
Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you baggage!
You tallow-face!
La. Cap. Fie, fie! what, are you mad?
Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.
Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!
I tell thee what: get thee to church o' Thursday,
Or never after look me in the face:
Speak not, reply not, do not answer me:
My fingers itch. Wife, we scarce thought you blest
That God had lent us but this only child;
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we have a curse in having her:
Out on her, hilding!
Nurse. God in heaven bless her!
Jul. To blame, my lord, to rate her so.
Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue,
Good prudence; smatter with your gossip's, go.
Nurse. I speak no treason.
Nurse. May not one speak?
Cap. Peace, you mumbling fool!

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl;
For here we need it not.
La. Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad:
Day, night, hour, tide, time, work, play,
Alone, in company, still my care hath been
To have her match'd: and having now provided
A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly train'd,
Stiff'd, as they say, with honourable parts,
Proportion'd as one's thought would wish a man;
And then to have a wretched piling fool,
A whining hamnet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer 'I'll not wed; I cannot love,
I am too young: I pray you, pardon me.'
But, an ye hath, I will not wed ye:
Grize where you will, you shall not house with me:
Look to 't, think on 't, I do not use to jest.
Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise:
An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not, lang, beg, starve, die in the streets,
For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good:
Trust to 't, bethink you: I'll not be forsworn.
Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,
That sees into the bottom of my grief?
O, sweet sweet Juliet, cast me not away!
Delay this marriage for a month, a week;
Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed
In that dim monument were Tybalt lies.
La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word:
Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee.  [Exit.
Jul. O God!—Onurse, how shall this be prevented?
My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth,
Unless that husband send it me from heaven
By leaving earth? comfort me, counsel me.
Alack, alack, that heaven should practise stratagens!
Upon so soft a subject as myself!
What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, nurse.
Nurse. Faith, here it is. Romeo is banish'd; and all the world to nothing,
That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you;
Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then, since the case so stands as now it doth,
I think it best you married with the county,
O, he's a lovely gentleman!
Romeo's a disheul't to him: an eagle, madam,
Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye
As Paris. Beshrew thy heart, Nurse.
I think you are happy in this second match,
For it excels your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead; or 't were as good be were,
As living here and you no use of him.
Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?
Nurse. And from my soul too;
Or else beshrew them both.
Jul. Amen! What?
Nurse. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much.
Go in, and tell my lady I am gone,
Having displeased my father, to Laurence cell,
To make confession and to be absolved.
Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done.  [Exit.
Jul. Ancient devastation! O most wicked hell!
Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworn,
Or to dispraise my lord with that same tongue
Which she hath praised him with above compare
So many thousand times? Go, counsellor;
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.
I'll to the friar, to know his remedy;
If all else fail, myself have power to die.  [Exit.
ACT IV.

ROMEO AND JULIET. SCENE II.

SCENE I.—Friar Laurence's cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris.

Fri. L. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short.
Par. My father Capulet will have it so; and I am nothing slow to slack his haste.

Fri. L. You say you do not know the lady's uneaveness is the cause, I like it not. [Aside.]
Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death, and therefore have I little talk'd of love; for Venus smiles not in a house of tears.

Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous that she doth give her sorrow so much sway, and in his wisdom hastes our marriage, to stop the inundation of her tears; which, too much minded by herself alone, may be put from her by society.

Now do you know the reason of this haste.

Fri. L. [Aside] I would I knew not why it should be so.

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my lady and my wife!—
Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.
Par. Be that may be must be, let it be, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. L. That's a certain text.
Par. Come you to make confession to this father?
Jul. To answer that, I should confess to you.
Par. Do not deny to him that you love me.
Jul. I will confess to you that I love him.
Par. So will ye, I am sure, that you love me.
Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price, being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abused with tears.

Jul. The tears have got small victory by that; for it was bad enough before their spite. [report.]
Par. Thou wrong'st it, more than tears, with that.
Jul. That is no slander, sir, which is a truth;
And what I spake, I spake it to my face. [It.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd
Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now; or shall I come too soon and make too much mass? [now.

Fri. L. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter,
My lord, we must entreat thee to leave the time alone.

Par. God shield I should disturb devotion! Juliet, on Thursday early will I request ye:
Till then, adieu; and keep this holy kiss. [Exit Jul. O, shut the door! and when thou hast done so,
Come weep with me; past hope, past cure, past help!

Fri. L. Ah, Juliet, I already know thy grief;
It strains me past the compass of my wits:
I hear thou must, and nothing may prograze it,
On Thursday next be married to this county.

Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hast't of this,
Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it:—
If, in thy wisdom, thou canst give no help,
Do thou but call my resolution wise,
And with this knife I'll help it presently.

God join'd my heart and Romeos, thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeal seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed.
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both:
Therefore, out of thy long-experienced time,
Give me some present counsel, or, behold,
Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife
Shall the unkindled fire to his own fingers,
Which the commission of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring,
Be not so long to speak; I long to die,
If what thou speak'st speak not of remedy.

Fri. L. Hold, daughter: I do spy a kind of hope, Which craves as desperate an execution
As that is desperate which we would prevent.
If, rather than to marry County Paris,
Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself,
Then is it likely thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame,
That copest with death himself to scape from it;
And, if thou darest, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O, bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,
From off the battlements of yonder tower;
Or walk in this vile ways; or bid me lurk
Where serpents are; chain me with rearing bears;
Or shut me nightly in a charnel-house
O'er-cover'd with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks and yellow charnel-skulls; Or bid me go into a new-made grave
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud;
Things that, to hear them told, have made me tremble:
And I will do it without fear or doubt.

[Fri. L. It.
Jul. To live an unstaught wife to my sweet love.

Fri. L. Hold, then; go home, be merry, give content to marry Paris; Wednesday is to-morrow:—
Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber:
Take thou this ring, and let it be a sign
That this is mine, and thine, and not to thee.

And this distilled liquor drink thou off;
When presently through all thy veins shall run
A cold and drowsy humour, for no pulse
Shall keep his native progress, but surcease:
No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou livest;
The roses in thy lips and checks shall fade
To palsy, thy eyes' windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part, deprived of supple government,
Shall, still and stark and cold, appear like death:
And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death
Thou shalt continue two and forty hours,
And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.

Now, when the bridgroom in the morning comes
To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then, as the manner of our country is,
In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.
In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift,
And hither shall he come: and he and I
Will watch thy waking, and that very night
Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame;
If no inconstant toy, nor womanish fear,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.
Jul. Give me, give me! O, tell not me of fear!

Fri. L. Hold; get you gone, be strong and pros.
In this resolve: I'll send a friar with speed [serous
To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.
Jul. Love give me strength! and strength shall help afford.

Farewell, dear father!—

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Hail in Capulet's house.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, Nurse, and two Servingmen.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ.

[Exit First Servant.

Sire, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.

Sec. Serv. You shall have none ill, sir; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers. Cap. How canst thou try them so?

Sec. Serv. Marry, sir;'tis an iill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with me.
ACT IV.
ROME AND JULIET.
SCENE IV.

Cap. Go, be gone.
[Exit Sec. Servant.
We shall be much unfurnish'd for this time.
What, is my daughter gone to Friar Laurence?
Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her:
A peevish self-will'd harrity it is.
Nurse. See where she comes from shrift with merry look.

Enter Juliet.
Cap. How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?
Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition
To you and your belaists, and am enjoin'd
By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here,
And beg your pardon: pardon, I beseech you!
Henceforward I am ever ruled by you.

Cap. Send for the county; go tell him of this:
I'll have this knot knit up-to-morrow morning.
Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence' cell;
And gave him what became love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on 't; this is well: stand up:
This is as 't should be. Let me see the county;
Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.
Now, afore God! this reverend holy friar,
All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,
To help me sort such needful ornaments
As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?
La. Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her: we'll to church.
[Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision:
'Tis now near night.

Cap. Tush, I will stir about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife:
Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her;
I'll not to bed to-night; let me alone;
I'll play the housewife for this once. What, ho!
They are all forth. Well, I will walk myself
To County Paris, to prepare him up
Against to-morrow: my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Juliet's chamber.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attires are best: but, gentle nurse,
I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night;
For I have need of many orisons
To move the heavens to smile upon my state,
Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What, are you busy, ho? need you my help?
Jul. No, madam; we have cull'd such necessaries
As are befoelous for our state to-morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the nurse this night sit up with you:
For, I am sure, you have your hands full all,
In this so sudden business.

La. Cap. Good night:
Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.
[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Jul. Farewell! God knows when we shall meet again.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life:
I'll call them back again to comfort me:
Nurse! What should she do here?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone.
Come, vial.
What if this mixture do not work at all?
Shall I be married then to-morrow morning?
No, no: this shall forbid it: lie thou there.
[lying down her dagger.

What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subtly hath minister'd to have me dead,
Lest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
For he married me before to Romeo?
I fear it is: and yet, methinks, it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man.
How if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo dead,
Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point!
Shall I not, then, be stit in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthcare air breathes in,
And there die strangeled ere my Romeo comes?
Or, if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,—
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd in:
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Is buried; he's not yet two years since
Furnished those bones with flowers.
Come, let's think on these things:
If I die, then I shall live to wake and tell
Environed with all these hideous fears?
And madly play with my forefathers' joints?
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?
And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?
O, look! methinks I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body
Upon a rapier's point: stay, Tybalt, stay!
Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee.
[She falls upon her bed, within the curtains.

SCENE IV. — Hall in Capulet's house.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.
Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd.
The curfew-bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock:
Look to the bated meats, good Angelica:
Spare not for cost.
Nurse. Go, you cot-quean, go,
Get you to bed; faith, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.
Cap. No, not a whit: what! I have watch'd ere now
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.
La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your time;
But I will watch you from such watching now.
[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood!
Enter three or four Servingmen, with spits, logs, and baskets.

Now, fellow,
What's there?
First Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what.

Cap. Make haste, make haste.
[Exit First Serv.
Sirrah, fetch drier logs:
Call Peter, he will show thee where they are.
Sec. Serv. I have a head, sir, that will find out logs,
And never trouble Peter for the matter.
[Exit.
Cap. Mass, and well said; a merry whoreson, ha!
Thou shalt be logger-head. Good faith, 'tis day:
The county will be here with music straight,
For so he said he would: I hear him near.

[Music within.

Nurse. Wife! What, ho! What, nurse, I say!

Re-enter Nurse.

Go waken Juliet, go and trim her up;
I'll go and chat with Paris: he, make haste,
Make haste; the bridegroom is come already:
Make haste, I say. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Juliet's chamber.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress! what, mistress! Juliet! fast, I

Want her, she:
Why, lamb! why, lady! fe, you snug-a-bed!
Why, love, I say! madam! sweetheart! why, bride!
What, not a word? you take your pennyworths now;
Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,
The County Paris hath set up his rest,
That you shall rest but little. God forgive me,
Marry, and aven, how sound is she asleep!
I must needs wake her. Madam, madam, madam!
Ay, let the county take you in your bed;
He 'll fright you up, I faith. Will it not be?
[Undraws the curtains.

What, dress'd! and in your clothes! and down again!
I must needs wake you: Lady! lady! lady!
Alas, alas! Help, help! my lady's dead!
O, well-a-day, that ever I was born!
Some aqua vitae, ho! My lord! my lady!

Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What noise is here?
Nurse. O lamentable day!
La. Cap. What is the matter?
Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day!
La. Cap. O me, O me! My child, my only life,
Revive, look up, or I will die with thee!
Help, help! Call help.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. For shame, bring Juliet forth; her lord is come.
[The day!
Nurse. She's dead, deceased, she's dead; alack
La. Cap. Alack the day, she's dead, she's dead,
She's dead, she's dead;
Cap. Ha! let me see her: out, alas! she's cold;
Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff;
Life and these lips have long been separated:
Death lies on her like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.
Nurse. O lamentable day!
La. Cap. O woful time!
Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris, with Musicians.

Fri. L. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?
Cap. Ready to go, but never to return.
O son! the night before thy wedding-day
Hath Death lain with thy wife. There she lies,
Flower as she was, deflowered by him,
Death is my son-in-law, Death is my heir;
My daughter he hath wedded: I will die,
And leave him all: life, living, all is Death's.
Par. Have I thought long to see this morning's
And doth it give me such a sight as this?
[face.
La. Cap. Accursed, unhappy, wretched, hateful
Most miserable hour that e'er time saw
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage!
But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight!
Nurse. O woe! O woful, woful, woful day!
ACT V.

SCENE I. — Mantua. A street.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering truth of sleep, My dreams preseage some joyful news at hand: My bosom’s lord sits lightly in his throne; And all this day an unaccustomed spirit Lifts me above the ground with cheerful thoughts. I dreamt my lady came and found me dead Strange dream, that gives a dead man leave to think! — And breathed such a life with kisses in my lips, That I revived, and was an emperor. Ah me! how sweet is love itself possess’d, When but love’s shadows are so rich in joy!

Enter Balthasar, booted.

News from Verona! — How now, Balthasar! Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar? How doth my lady? Is my father well? How fares my Juliet? that I ask again; For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Bal. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill: Her body sleeps in Capel’s monument, And her immortal part with angels lives. I saw her laid low in her kindred’s vault, And presently took post to tell it you: O, pardon me for bringing these ill news, Since you did leave it for my office, sir.

Rom. Is it even so? then I defy you, stars! Thou know’st my lodging: get me ink and paper, And hire post-horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. I do beseech you, sir, have patience: Your looks are pale and wild, and do import Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush, thou art deceived: Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do. Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.

Rom. No matter: get thee gone, And hire those horses; I’ll be with thee straight.

[Exeunt Balthasar.

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee tonight.

Let’s see for means: O mischief, thou art swift To enter in the thoughts of desperate men! I do remember an apothecary,— And hereabout he dwells,— which late I noted In tatter’d weeds, with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples; meagre were his looks, Sharp misery had worn him to the bone; And in his needy shop a torture hung, An alligator stuff’d, and other skins Of ill-shaped fishes; and about his shelves A beggarly account of empty boxes, Green earthen pots, bladders andusty seeds, Remnants of packthread and old cakes of roses, Were thinly scatter’d, to make up a show. Noting this penury, to myself I said ‘An if a man did need a poison now, Whose sale is present death in Mantua, Here lives a caitiff wretch would sell it him,’ O, this same thought did but forerun my need; And this same needy man must sell it me. As I remember, this should be the house, Being holiday, the beggar’s shop is shut. What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man. I see that thou art poor: Hold, there is forty ducats: let me have A dram of poison, such soon-speeding gear As will disperse itself through all the veins That the life-weary taker may fall dead And that the trunk may be discharged of breath As violently as lasting powder fired Doth hurry from the fatal cannon’s womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua’s law Is death to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare and full of wretchedness, And fear’st to die? famine is in thy cheeks, Need and oppression starveth in thine eyes, Contempt and beggary hangs upon thy back; The world is not thy friend nor the world’s law; The world affords no law to make thee rich; Then be not poor, but break it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will. Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will, And drink it off; and, if you had the strength Of twenty men, it would dispart you straight.

Rom. There is thy gold, worse poison to men’s souls, Doing more murders in this loathsome world Than these poor compounds that thou mayst not sell. I sell thee poison; thou hast sold me none. Farewell: buy food, and get thyself in flesh. Come, cordial and not poison, go with me To Juliet’s grave; for there must I use thee.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Friar Laurence’s cell.

Enter Friar John.

Fri. J. Holy Franciscan friar! brother, ho!

Enter Friar Laurence.

Fri. L. This same should be the voice of Friar Welcome from Mantua: what says Romeo? [John. Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

Fri. J. I. Going to find a base-footed brother out, One of our order, to associate me, Here in this city visiting the sick, And finding him, the searchers of the town, Suspecting that we both were in a house Where the infectious pestilence did reign, Seal’d up the doors, and would not let us forth; So that my speed to Mantua there was stay’d.

Fri. L. Who bare my letter, then, to Romeo? [Fri. J. I could not send it,—here it is again,—
ACT V.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

SCENE III.

Gorged with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,
And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

[Opens the tomb.]

Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin, with which grief,
It is supposed, the fair creature died:
Therefore and here is come to do some villanous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.

[Comes forward.]

Stop thy unhallow'd toil, vile Montague!
Can vengeance be pursued further than death?
Condemned villain, I do apprehend thee;
O, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I must indeed; and therefore came I hither,
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man;
Fly hence, and leave me; think upon these gone;
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee, youth,
Put not another sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury: O, be gone!
By heaven, I love thee better than myself;
For I come hither arm'd against myself:
Stay not, be gone; live, and hereafter say,
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy thy conjurings,
And apprehend thee for a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me? then have at thee;
boy!

[They fight.]

Page. O Lord, they fight! I will go call the watch.

[Exeunt.]

Par. O, I am slain! [Falls.] If thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet.

[Dies.]

Rom. In faith, I will, Let me peruse this face.
Mercutio's kinsman, noble County Paris!
What said my man, when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think
He told me Paris should have married Juliet:
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so? O, give me thy hand,
One writ with me in some misfortune's book!
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave;
A grave? O, no! a lantern, slaughter'd youth,
For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a desolator inter'd.

[Leaving Paris in the tomb.]

How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry! which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O, how may I
Call this a lightning? O my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.
Tybalt, hast thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O, what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain
To sudder his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin! Ah, dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous,
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour?
For fear of that, I still will stay with thee:
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again: here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chamber-maids; O, here
Will I set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars [last!
From this world- wearied heart: Eyes, look your Arms, take your last embrace! and, lips, O you
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death!
Come, bitter conduct, come, unsavoury guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark!
Here's to my love! [Drinks.] O true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick. Thus with a kiss I die. [Dies.]

Enter, at the other end of the churchyard, Friar Laurence, with a lantern, crow, and spade.

Fri. L. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft tonight
Have my old feet stumbled at graves! Who 's there?
Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well. [Friend, Fri. L. Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my What torch is yond, that vainly lends his light To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern, It burneth in the Capels' monument. [iter.
Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my mas-
One that you love.

Fri. L. Who is it?
Bal. Romeo.
Fri. L. How long hath he been there?
Bal. Full half an hour.
Fri. L. Go with me to the vault.
Bal. I dare not, sir: My master knows not but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death, If I did stay to look on his intents. [upon me:
Fri. L. Stay, then; I'll go alone. Fear comes O, much I fear some ill unlucky thing.
Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here, I dreamt my master and another fought, And that my master slew him.

Fri. L. Romeo! [Advances.
Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains The stony entrance of this sepulchre?
What mean these masterless and gory swords To lie discoulour'd by this place of peace?
[Enter the tomb.

Romeo! O, pale! Who else? what, Paris too?
And steep'd in blood? Ah, what an unkind hour Is guilty of this lamentable chance!
The lady stirs. [Juliet wakes.
Jul. O comfortable friar! where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am. Where is my Romeo?
[Noise within.

Fri. L. I hear some noise. Lady, come from that Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep;
[lest A greater power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents. Come, come away.
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too. Come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns:
Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;
Come, go, good Juliet [Noise again], I dare no longer stay.
Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away.
[Exit Fri. L.

What's here? a cup, closed in my true love's hand?
Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end:
O churl! drunk all, and left no friendly drop
To help me after? I will kiss thy lips:
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative. [Kisses him.
Thy lips are warm.

Fri. L. [Within] Lead, boy: which way?
Jul. Stay, noise? then I'll be brief. O happy dagger!
[Snatching Romeo's dagger.
This is thy sheath [Stabs herself]; there rust, and let me die.
[ Falls on Romeo's body, and dies.

Enter Watch, with the Page of Paris.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn.
First Watch. The ground is bloody; search about the churchyard:
Go, some of you, whoe'er you find attach.

[Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. L. I will be brief, for my short date of
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.
Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet:
And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife:

---End of Act V.
I married them; and their stol'n marriage-day
Was Tybalt's dooms-day, whose untimely death
Banish'd the new-made bridgemoon from this city,
For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pined.
You, to remove that siege of grief from her,
Betroth'd and would have married her perforce
To County Paris: then comes she to me,
And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means
To rid her from this second marriage,
Or in my cell there would she kill herself.
Then gave I her, so tutor'd by my art,
A sleeping potion; which so took effect
As I intended, for it wrought on her
The form of death: meantime I writ to Romeo,
That he should hither come as this dire night,
To help to take her from her borrow'd grave,
Being the time the potion's force should cease.
But he which bore my letter, Friar John,
Was stay'd by accident, and yesternight
Return'd my letter back. Then all alone
At the prefixed hour of her waking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault;
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,
Till I conveniently could send to Romeo:
But when I came, some minute ere the time
Of her awaking, here untimely lay
The noble Paris and true Romeo dead.
She wakes; and I entreated her come forth,
And bear this work of heaven with patience:
But then a noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me,
But, as it seems, did violence on herself.
All this I know; and to the marriage
Her nurse is privy: and, if aught in this Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrificed, some hour before his time,
Unto the rigour of severest law.
Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.
Where's Romeo's man? what can he say in this?
Bal. I brought my master news of Juliet's death;

And then in post he came from Mantua
To this same place, to this same monument.
This letter he early bid me give his father,
And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault,
If I departed not and left him there.
Prince. Give me the letter; I will look on it.
Where is the county's page, that raised the watch?
Sirrah, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's
And bid me stand aloof, and so I did: [grave;
Anon comes one with light to ope the tomb;
And by and by my master drew on him;
And then I ran away to call the watch. [words,
Prince. This letter doth make good the friar's
Their course of love, the tidings of her death:
And here he writes that he did buy a poison
Of a poor 'pothecary, and therewithal
Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.
Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!
See, what a scourage is laid upon your hate;
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love.
And I for winking at your discords too
Have lost a brace of kinsmen: all are punish'd.
Cap. O brother Montague, give me thy hand:
This is my daughter's jointure, for no more
Can I demand.
Mon. But I can give thee more:
For I will raise her statue in pure gold;
That while Verona by that name is known,
There shall no figure at such rate be set
As that of true and faithful Juliet.
Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie;
Poor sacrifices of our enmity!
Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it brings;
The sun, for sorrow, will not show his head:
Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;
Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished:
For never was a story of more woe
Than this of Juliet and her Romeo. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Poet. Good day, sir.

Paint. I am glad you're well.

Poet. I have not seen you long: how goes the world?

Poet. [Recollecting himself.] 'Tis a worthy lord.

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breathed, as it were, He passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here—

Mer. O, pray, let's see 't: for the Lord Timon, sir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate: but, for that—

Poet. [Recollecting himself.] 'When we for recom pense have praised the vile,

It stains the glory in that happy verse

Which aptly sings the good;'

Mer. 'Tis a good form. (Looking at the jewel.

Jew. And rich: here is a water, look ye.

Paint. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication to the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me. Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes From whence 'tis nourish'd: the fire 'tis the flame Shows not till it be struck; our gentle flame Provekes itself and like the current flies Each bound it chases. What have you there?

Paint. A picture, sir. When comes your book forth?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.

Let's see your piece.

Paint. 'Tis a good piece.

Poet. So 'tis: this comes off well and excellent.

Paint. Indifferent.

ACT I.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE I.

Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd;
One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame,
Whom Fortune with her ivory hand waifs to her;
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain.

'Tis conceived to scope.
This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowd his head against the steepy mount.
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.

*Nay, sir, but hear me on.
All those which were his fellows but of late,
Some better than his value, on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.

Pain.

Ay, marry, what of these?

Pox. When Fortune in her shift and change of mood
Spurns down her late beloved, all his dependants
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:
A thousand moral paintings I can show [tune's
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of For-
More pregnantly than words; Yet you do well
To show Lord Timon that mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter Lord Timon, addressing himself courteously to every vistor; a Messenger from Ven-tidius talking with him; Lucilius and other servants following.

Tim.

Imprison'd is he, say you?

Mess. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt,
His means most short, his creditors most strait;
Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up; which failing,
Periods his comfort.

Tim.

Noble Ventidius! Well;
I am not of that feather to shake off
My friend when he must need me. I do know him
A gentleman that well deserves a help:
Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free him.
Mess. Your lordship ever binds him... [om.]

Tim. Commend me to him: I will send his ran-
And being enfranchised, bid him come to me.

'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after. Fare you well.

Mess. All happiness to your honour! [Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant named Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: what of him? [thee.

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before

Tim. Ambrose he here, or no? Lucilius!

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service. [creature

Old Ath. This fellow here, Lord Timon, this thy
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclined to thirst;
And my estate deserves an heir more raised
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I picture noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort:
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim.

The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself;
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young and apt;
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity is in youth.

Tim. [To Lucilius.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be miss-
I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Jug, Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim.

How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband? [ail.

Old Ath. Three talents on the present; in future,
This gentleman of mine hath served me long:
To build his fortune I will strain a little.
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter;
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawn me to this your honour, she is his. [promise

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: never may
That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you!

*Execut Lucilius and Old Athenian.

Pox. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:
Go not away. What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome. The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work;
And you shall find I like it: wait attendance
Till you hear further from me.

Pain. The gods preserve ye!

Tim. Well fare you, gentleman; give me your hand;
We must needs dine together. Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord! dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.
If I should pay you for 't as it is extoll'd,
It would undo me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated
As those which sell would give: but you well know,
Things of like value differing in the owners
Are prized by their masters: believe 't, dear lord,
You mend the jewel by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd. [tongue.

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common
Which all men speak with him.

Tim. Look, who comes here: will you be chid?

Enter Apemantus.

Jew. We'll bear, with your lordship.

*M. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good

Tim. Why dost thou call them knives? thou know'st not them.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus? [name.

Apem. Thou know'st I do: I call'd thee by thy

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus. [Timon.

Apem. Of nothing so much as that I am not like
Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Apm. Right, if doing nothing be death by the
Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apmantus?
Apm. The best, for the innocence.
Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it?
Apm. He wrought better that made the painter; and yet he 's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You 're a dog.
Apm. Thy mother 's of my generation: what 's she, if I'm a dog?
Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apmantus?
Apm. No; I eat not lords.
Tim. An thou shouldst, thou 'ldst anger ladies.
Apm. O, they eat lords; so they come by great Tim. That 's a lascivious apprehension. [belles.
Apm. So thou apprehended it: take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apmantus?
Apm. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doift.

Tim. What dost thou think 't is worth?
Apm. Not worth my thinking. How now, poet?
Poet. How now, philosopher?
Apm. Thouliest.
Poet. Art not one?
Apm. Yes.
Poet. Then I lie not.
Apm. Art not a poet?
Poet. Yes.
Apm. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feigned him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That 's not reigned: he is so.
Apm. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour; he that loves to be flattered is worthy of the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What wouldst do then, Apmantus?
Apm. E'en as Apmantus does now; hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?
Apm. Ay.
Tim. Wherefore?
Apm. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.

Art not thou a merchant?
Mer. Ay, Apmantus.
Apm. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!
Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it. [thee
Apm. Traffic 's thy god; and thy god confound

Trumpet sounds. Enter a Messenger.

Tim. What trumpet 's that?
Mess. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse,
All of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us. [Execute some Attendants.

You must needs dine with me: go not you hence Till I have thank'd you: when dinner 's done, Show me this piece. I am joyful of your sights.

Enter Alcibiades, with the rest.

Most welcome, sir!
Apm. So, so, there!

Aches contract and starve your supple joints! That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knives, And all this courtesy! the strain of man 's bred out Into baboon and monkey. Alcib. Sir, you have saved my longing, and I feed Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir! Ere we depart, we 'll share a bounteous time In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in. [Execute all except Apmantus.

Enter two Lords.

First Lord. That time o' day is 't, Apmantus? Apm. Time to be honest.
First Lord. That time serves still.

Apm. The more accrued thou, that still omit'st it.
Sec. Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast? Apm. Ay, to see meat fill knives and wine heat
Sec. Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well. [fools.
Apm. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.
Sec. Lord. Why, Apmantus?
Apm. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.
First Lord. Hang thyself!
Apm. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding: make thy requests to thy friend.

Sec. Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I 'll spurn thee hence!
Apm. I 'll fly, like a dog, the heels o' the ass.

First Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in.

And taste Lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes The very heart of kindness. [gold.
Sec. Lord. He pours it out: Plutus, the god of Is but his steward: no meed, but he repays Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him. But breeds the giver a return exceeding All use of quittance.

First Lord. The noblest mind he carries That ever govern'd man. [we in?
Sec. Lord. Long may he live in fortunes. Shall First Lord. I 'll keep you company.

SCENE II.—A banquetting-room in Timon's house.

Hearth boys playing loud music. A great banquet served in: Flavias and others attending; then enter Lord Timon, Alcibiades, Lords, Senators, and Ventidius. Then comes, dropping after all, Apmantus, discontentedly, like himself.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon,
It hath pleased the gods to remember my father's And call him to long peace. [age,
He is gone happy, and has left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound To your free heart, I do return those talents, Doubled with thanks and service, from whose help I derived liberty.
Tim. O, by no means.
Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love:
I gave it freely ever; and there's none Can truly say he gives, if he receives:
If our better plays at that game, we must not dare To imitate them; faults that are rich are fair.
Ven. A noble spirit! Nay, my lords,
[They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.
Ceremony was but devised at first To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes, Recanting goodness, sorry ere 't is shown; [none.
But where there is true friendship, there needs Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes Than my fortunes to me.
[They sit.
First Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it. Apm. No, ho, confess'd it! hang'd it, have you 'Tis, O, Apmantus, you are welcome. [not?
Apm. You shall not make me welcome; I come to have thee thrust me out of doors. [there Tim. Fei, thou 'rt a churl; ye 've got a humour Does not become a man; 't is much to blame. They say, my lords, 'ira furor brevis est; but yond man is ever angry. Go, let him have a table by himself, for he does neither affect company, nor is he fit for it, in red.
Apm. Let me stay at thine apperil, Timon: I come to observe; I give thee warning on 't.

First Lord. I take no heed of thee; thou 'rt an Athenian, therefore welcome: I myself would have no power; prithee, let my meat make thee silent.

And at that instant like a bale sprung up. [lord.

Apen. Io, ho! I laugh to think that babe a base-Third Lord. I promise you, my lord, you moved me much.

Apen. Much! [Tucket, within.

Tim. What means that trump?

Enter a Servant.

How now?

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies! what are their wills?

Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon, and to all
That of his bounties taste! The five best senses
Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely
To gratulate thy plentiful bosom: th' ear,
Taste, touch and smell, pleased from thy table rise;
They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They 're welcome all; let 'em have kind admittance:

Music, make their welcome! [Exit Cupid.

First Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you 're beloved.

Music. Re-enter Cupid, with a mask of Ladies as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Apen. Hoy-day, what a sweep of vanity comes
They dance! they are mad women. [this way
Like madness is the glory of this life,
As this pomp shows to a little oil and root.
We make ourselves fools, to disport ourselves;
And spend our flatteries, to drink those men
Upon whose age we void it up again,
With poisonous spite and envy.

Who lives that 's not deprived or depraves?
Who dies, that bears not one spurn to their graves
Of their friends' gift?

I should fear those that dance before me now
Would one day stamp upon me: 't has been done;
Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of Timon;
and to show their love, they sing out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and consort.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,
Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not half so beautiful and kind;
You have added worth unto 't and lustre,
And entertain'd me with mine own device;
I am to thank you for 't.

First Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best.

Apen. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends you:
Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Ladies. Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exeunt Cupid and Ladies.

Tim. Flavius.

Flav. My lord?

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

There is no crossing him in 's humour;
Else I should tell him,—well, i' faith, I should,
When all 's spent, he 'd be cross'd then, an he could.
'Tis pity bounty had not eyes behind,
That man might never be wretched for his mind.

[Exit.

First Lord. Where be our men?
ACT II.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE I.—A Senator's house.

Enter Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand: to Varro and to Sidius.

He owes nine thousand: besides my former sum,
Which makes it five and twenty. Still in motion
Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not.
If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold.
If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more
Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,
Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight,
And able horses. No porter at his gate,
But rather one that smiles and still invites
All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason
Can found his state in safety. Caphis, ho! Caphis, I say!

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Here, sir; what is your pleasure? Ceph. Get on your cloak, and haste you to Lord Timon:
Importune him for my moneys; be not ceased
With slight denial, nor then silenced when—
'Commend me to your master'—and the cap
Plays in the right hand, thus; but tell him,
My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn
Out of mine own; his days and times are past
And my relieves on his from disinclined.
Have smit my credit: I love and honour him,
But must not break my back to heal his finger;
Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Get you gone:
Put on a most unimportant aspect,
A visage of demand; for, I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sci. 'I go, sir!'— Take the bonds along with you,
And have the dates in compt.

Caph. I will, sir. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. A hall in Timon's house.

Enter Flavius, with many bills in his hand.

Flavius. No care, no stop! so senseless of expense,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flow of riot: takes no account
How things go from him, nor resumes no care
Of what is to continue: never mind
Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.
What shall be done? he will not hear, till feel:
I must be round with him, now he comes from hunt-
Fic, he, fe, fie!

Enter Caphis, and the Servants of Isidoro and Varro.

Caph. Good even, Varro: what,
You come for money?

Var. Serv. Is't not your business too?

Caph. It is: and yours too, Isidoro?

Isid. Serv. It is so.

Caph. Would we were all discharged!

Var. Serv. I fear it.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter Timon, Alcibiades, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,
My Alcibiades. With me? what is your will?

Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.

Tim. Dues! Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off
To the succession of new days this month:
My master is awakened by great occasion
To call upon his own, and humbly prays you
That with your other noble parts you suit
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,
I prithee, but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, good my lord.—

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.

Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my lord,—

Isid. Serv. From Isidoro;

He humbly prays your speedy payment. [wants—

Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's

Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeit, my lord, six
And past. [weeks

Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord;

And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath.

I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;
I'll wait upon you instantly.

[Exeunt Alcibiades and Lords.

Flav. Pray, draw near.

Enter Apemantus and Fool.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apem-antus: let's la'z some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!

Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apen. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apen. No, 'tis to thyself. [To the Fool] Come away.

Isid. Serv. There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apen. No, thou stand'st single, thou 'rt not on Caph. Where's the fool now? [him yet.

Apen. He last asked the question. Poor rogues,

Var. Serv. And usurers! men! bawds between gold and want!

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

Apen. Asses.

All Serv. Why?

Apen. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves. Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Gramercies, good fool: how does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Apen. Good! gramercy. [Corninth!

[Enter Page.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.

Page. [To the Fool] Why, how now, captain! what do you in this wise company? How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apen. I would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Prithew, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters: I know not which is which.

Apen. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apen. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to Lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou 'tis die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog, and thou shalt famish a dog's death. Answer not; I am gone.

Apen. E'en so thou outrunnest grace. Fool, I will go with you to Lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apen. If Timon stay at home. You three serve three usurers?

All Serv. Ay: would they served us!

Apen. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think no usurer but has a fool to his servant: my mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sally, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: the reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apen. Do it then, that we may account thee a whore-master and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whore-master, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime 't appears like a lord; sometime like a lawyer; sometime like a philosopher, with two stones more than's artificial one: he is very often like a knight; and, generally, in all shapes that man goes up and down in from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.
ACT II.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE II.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes Lord Timon.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother and woman; sometimes the philosopher.

[Execut Apemantus and Fool.

Flav. Pray you, walk near: I'll speak with you anon.

Tim. You make me marvel: wherefore ere this time

Had you not fully laid my state before me,

That I might so have rated my expense,

As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me,

At many leisures I proposed.

Tim. Go to.

Perchance some single vantages you took,

When my indisposition put you lack;

And that unmaptness made your minister,

Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord,

At many times I brought in my accounts,

Laid them before you: you would throw them off,

And say, you found them in mine honesty.

When, for some trilling present, you have bid me

Return so much, I have shook my head and wept;

Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, praid you

To hold your hand more close: I did endure

Not seldom, nor so slight checks, when I have Prompted you in the club of your estate

And your great flow of debts. My loved lord,

Though you hear now, too late — yet now 's a time

The greatest of your having lacks a half

To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engaged, some forfeited and gone;

And what remains will hardly stop the mouth

Of present dues: the future comes apace:

What shall defend the interim? and at length

How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacedemon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a word:

Were it all yours to give it in a breath,

How quickly were it gone!

Tim. You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry or falsehood,

Call me before the exactest auditors

And me on the proof. So the gods bless me,

When all our offices have been oppress'd

With riotous feeders, when our vaults have wept

With drunken splint of wine, when every room

Hath blazed with lights and bray'd with minstrelsy,

I have retired me to a wasteful cock,

And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prithee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord!

How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants

This night enlighted! Who is not Timon's?

What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is Lord Timon's?

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon!

Ah, when the means are gone that buy this praise,

The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:

Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers,

These flies are couch'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further:

No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart;

Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given.

Why dost thou weep? Caust thou the conscience lack,

To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart;

If I would broach the vessels of my love,

And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,

Men and men's fortunes could I frankly use

As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are

crown'd,

That I account them blessings; for by these

Shall I try friends: you shall perceive how you

Mistake my fortunes: I am wealthy in my friends.

Within there! Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter Flamininus, Servilius, and other Servants.

Servants. My lord? my lord?

Tim. I will dispatch you severally: you to Lord Lucius; to Lord Lucius you: I hunted with his honour to-day: you, to Scipionibus: commend me to their loves, and, I am proud, say, that my occasions have found time to use 'em toward a supply of money: let the request be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. [Aside] Lord Lucius and Lucullus? hum! Tim. Go you, sir, to the senators —

Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have

Deserved this hearing — bid 'em send o' the instant

A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold —

For that I knew it the most general way —

To them to use your signet and your name;

But they do shake their heads, and I am here

No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can't be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot

Do what they would; are sorry — you are honourable;

But yet they could have wish'd — they know not —

Something hath been amiss — a noble nature

May catch a wrench — would all were well — 'tis pity:

And so, intending other serious matters,

After distasteful looks and these hard fractions,

With certain half-caps and cold-moving nobs

They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them! Prithee, man, look cheerly. These old fellows have their ingratitude in them hereditary:

Their blood is eaked, 'tis cold, it seldom flows;

'Tis lack of kindly warmth they are not kind;

And nature, as it grows again toward earth,

Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.

[To a Serv.] Go to Ventidius. [To Flav.] Prithee, be not sad,

Thou art true and honest: ingeniously I speak,

No blame belongs to thee. [To Serv.] Ventidius lately

Buried his father; by whose death he's stepp'd

Into a great estate: when he was poor,

Imprison'd and in scarcity of friends,

I clear'd him with five talents: greet him from me;

Bid him suppose some good necessity

Touche his friend, which craves to be remembered

With those five talents [Exit Serv.]: [To Flav.] That had, give 't these fellows

To whom 't is instant due. Ne'er speak, or think,

That Timon's fortunesmong his friends can sink.

Flav. I would I could not think it: that thought is bounty's foe.

Being free itself, it thinks all others so. [Execut.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A room in Lucullus' house.

Flaminius waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Luc. [Aside] One of Lord Timon's men? a gift, I doubt. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ever to-night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively welcome, sir. Fill me some wine. [Exit Serv.]

And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master Flaminius? His health is well, sir.

Luc. I am right glad that his health is well, sir; and what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. 'Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir; which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion of his honour, has no small want in his lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Luc. La, la, la, la! 'nothing doubting,' says he? Alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I ha' dined with him, and told him on't, and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less, and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his: I ha' told him on 't, but I could ne'er get him from 't.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine. Lucullus. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Luc. I have observed thee always for a tow'derly prompt spirit—give thee thy due—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and cannot use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee. [To Serv.] Get you gone, sirrah [Exit Serv.]. Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money, especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidares for thee: good boy, wink at me, and say thou warest me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ?

And we alive that lived? Fly, damned baseless, To him that worships thee! [Throwing the money back.

Luc. Ha! now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit.]

Flam. May these add to the number that may call thee!

Luc. Let molten coin be thy damnation, Thou disease of a friend, and not himself! Has friendship such a faint and milky heart, It turns in less than two nights? O you gods, I feel my master's passion! this slave, Unto me his money, his lord's meat in him: Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment, When he is turn'd to poison? O, may diseases only work upon't! And, when he's sick to death, let not that part of Which my lord paid for, be of any power To expel sickness, but prolong his hour!

SCENE II.—A public place.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the Lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

First Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours: now Lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fie, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

Sec. Stran. But believe you this, my lord; that, not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus to borrow so many talents, nay, urged extremely for 't, and showed what necessity belonged to 't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How!

Sec. Stran. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on 't. Denied that honourable man! there was very little honour showed in 't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small failings from him, as money, plate, jewels and such-like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter Servilius.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord: I have sweet to see his honour. [My honoured lord,—

To Lucius.

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well: commend me to thy honourable virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he's ever sending: how shall I thank him, thickest thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. Has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Luc. I know his lordship is but merry with me; He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord. If his occasion were not virtuous, I should not urge it so earnestly.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I to disfurnish myself against such a good time, when I might ha' shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour! Servilius, now, before the gods, I am not able to do,— the more beast, I say:—I was sending to use Lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship, and let he enjoy his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind: and tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I'll look you out a good turn, Servilius.

[Exit Servilius.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk indeed; And he that's once denied will hardly speed. [Exit.

First Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

Sec. Stran. Ay, too well.

615
ACT III.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE IV.—The same. A hall in Timon's house.

Enter two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting Titus, Hortensius, and other Servants of Timon's creditors, waiting his coming out.

First Var. Serv. Well met; good morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro. Lucius! What, do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and I think One business does command us all; for mine Is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luc. Serv. And Sir Philotus too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother. What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Not yet. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. No. I wonder on 't; he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are wax'd shorter with you must consider that a prodigal course.

Phi. Is like the sun's; but not, like, his recoverable. I fear 'tis deepest winter in Lord Timon's purse; That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet Find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.

Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift, For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows, Timon in this should pay more than he owes: And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels, And send for money 'em.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A room in Sempronius' house.

Enter Sempronius, and a Servant of Timon's.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in 't,—hum!—

How love all others?

He might have tired Lord Lucius or Lucullus;

And now Ventidius is wealthy too,

Whom he redeem'd from prison: all these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord, They have all been touch'd and found base metal, for They have all denied him.

Sem. How! have they denied him? Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him? And does he send to me? Three 's hum! It shows but little love or judgment in him:

Must be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians

Thrive, give him over: must I take the cure upon Has much disgraced me in 't; I'm angry at him, That might have known my place: I see no sense for't,

But his occasions might have woo'd me first; For, in my conscience, I was the first man That ever received gift from him; and Does he think so backwardly of me now, That I'll require it last? No;

So it may prove an argument of laughter To the rest, and amongst all I hope a fool. I'll rather than the worth of thrice the sum, Had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake: I'd such a courage to do him good. But now return, And with their faint reply this answer join; Who bates mine honour shall not know my coin.

[Exeunt.

Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic; he crossed himself by 't: and I cannot think but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked, like those that under hot ardent zeal would set whole realms on fire; Of such a wall is his public love. This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled, Save only the gods: now his friends are dead, Doors, that were n'er acquainted with their wards Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd Now to guard sure their master;

And this is all a liberal course allows; Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.
Enter Servilius.

Tit. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should derive much from 't; for, take 't of my soul, my lord, I stand wondrously to discontent: his comfortable temper has forsook him; he's much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers are not.

And, if it be so far beyond his health, [sick] Methinks he should the sooner pay his debts, and make a clear way to the gods.

Serv. — Good gods!

Tit. We cannot take this for answer, sir. [lord]

Plam. [Within] Servilius, help! My lord! my

Enter Timon, in a rage; Flaminious following.

Tim. What, are my doors opposed against my passage? Have I been ever free, and must my house [sage]? Be my retentive enemy, my gaol?

The place which I have feasted, does it now, Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. And mine, my lord.

Both Var. Serv. And ours, our lords.

Phil. All our bills.

Tim. Knock me down with 'em: cleave me to the

Luc. Serv. Alas, my lord,—

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that. What yours?

— and yours?

First Var. Serv. My lord,—

Sec. Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you!

Hor. ' Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money: these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius. [Exit.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the Creditors? devils!

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so. My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So tidy? Go, bid all my friends again, Lucius, Lucretius, and Semprouius:

All, sirrah, all.

I'll once more feast the rascals. O my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul;

There is not so much left, to furnish out

A moderate table.

Tim. Be 't not in thy care; go,

I charge thee, invite them all: let in the tide

Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide.'

* [Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. The senate-house.

The Senate sitting.

First Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it; the Bloody; 'tis necessary he should die:

[faul't Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

Sec. Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Enter Alcibiades, with Attendants.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the First Sen. now, captain of the [senate]

Alcib. I am a humbler suitor to your virtues;

For pity is the virtue of the law,

And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy

Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,

Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth

To those that, without head, do plunge into 't.

He is a man, setting his fate aside,

Of comedy virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice—

An honour in him which buys out his fault —

But with a noble fury and fair spirit,

Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave his anger, ere 't was spent,

As if he had but proved an argument.

First Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,

Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:

Your words have took such pains as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form and set quarrelling

Upon the head of valour; which indeed

Is valour misbegot and came into the world

When sects and factions were newly born:

He's truly valiant that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs

[lessly,

His outsides, to wear them like his raiment, care—

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,

To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils and enforce us kill,

What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill!

Alcib. My lord,—

[look clear:

First Sen. You cannot make gross sins

To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me,

If I speak like a captain.

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,

And not endure all threats? sleep upon 't,

And let the foes quietly cut their throats,

Without repugnancy? If there be

Such valour in the bearing, what make we

Abroad? why then, women are more valiant

That stay at home, if bearing carry it,

And the ass more captain than the lion, the felon

Loaden with irons wiser than the judge,

If wisdom be in suffering, O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good:

Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;

But, in defence, by mercy, 't is most just.

To be in anger is impudence;

But who is man that is not angry?

Weigh but the crime with this.

Sec. Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain! his service done

At Laceslemon and Byzantium

Were a sufficient brider for his life.

First Sen. What's that?

Alcib. I say, my lords, he has done fair service,

And slain in fight many of your enemies:

How full of valour did he bear himself

In the last conflict, and made plentiful wounds!

Sec. Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em;

He's a sworn roister: he has a sin that often

Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner:
ACT III.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE VI.

If there were no fees, that were enough
To overcome him: in that beastly fury
He has, in many a man, found the means
And cherish factions: 'tis infern'd to us,
His days are foul and his drink dangerous.

First Sen. He dies.

Acleb. Hard fate! he might have died in war.

My lords, if not for any parts in him—
Though his right arm might purchase his own time
And be in debt to none—yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join 'em both:
And, for I know your reverend ages love
Security, I'll pawn my victories, all
My honours to you, upon his good returns.
If by this mean he owes the life of his
Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more. [more,

First Sen. We are for law: he dies; urge it no
On height of our displeasure: friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.

Acleb. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

Sec. Sen. How!

Acleb. Call me to your remembrances.

Third Sen. What!

Acleb. I cannot think but your age has forgot me;
It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue, and be denied such common grace:
My wounds ache at you.

First Sen. Do you dare our anger?
'T is in few words, but spacious in effect;
We banish thee for ever.

Acleb. Banish me! that may live
Only in bone, that none may look on you!
I'm worse than mad: I have kept back their fees,
While they have told their money and let out
Their coin upon large interest, I myself
Rich only in large hurts. All those for this?
Is this the balsam that the usuring senate
Pours into captains' wounds? Banishment!
It comes not ill: I hate not to be banish'd:
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My dishonour'd troops, and lay for hearts.
'Tis honour with most laud's to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same. A banqueting-room in Timon's house.

Music. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter divers
Lords, Senators and others, at several doors.

First Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.
Sec. Lord. I also wish it to you. I think this honourable lord did but try us this other day.
First Lord. Upon that were my thoughts firing when we encountered: I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

Sec. Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.
First Lord. I should think so: he hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

Sec. Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse, I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provocation was out.

First Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

Sec. Lord. Every man has here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?

First Lord. A thousand pieces.
Sec. Lord. A thousand pieces!
First Lord. What of you?
Sec. Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both; and how fare you?

First Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

Sec. Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside] Nor more willingly leaves winter: such summer-birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay: feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly o' the trumpet's sound; we shall to 't presently.

First Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship that I returned you an empty messes—Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you. [senger.

Sec. Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah, my good friend, what cheer?

Sec. Lord. My most noble lord, I am even sick of shame, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on 't, sir.

Sec. Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,—

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance.

[The banquet brought in.] Come, bring in all together.

Sec. Lord. All covered dishes!

First Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

Third Lord. Doubt not that, if money and the season can yield it.

First Lord. How do you? What's the news?

Third Lord. Alecibades is banish'd: hear you of First and Sec. Lord. Alecibades banish'd: [it? Third Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

First Lord. How! how!—Sec. Lord. I pray you, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?

Third Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.

Sec. Lord. This is the old man still.

Third Lord. Will 't hold? will 't hold?

Sec. Lord. It does: but time will—and so—
Third Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves praised: but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despaired. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another: for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are. The rest of your fees, O gods—the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people—what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends, as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Uncover, dogs, and lap.

[The dishes are uncovered and seen to be full of warm water.

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?
SCENE I.—Without the walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee. O thou wall, That girdlest in those wolves, dive in the earth, And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent! Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled senator from the bench, And minister in their steads! to general filth Convert o’ the instant, green virginity, Do ‘t in your parents’ eyes! bankrupts, hold fast; Rather than render back, out with your knives, And out your trusters’ throats! bound servants, steal Large-handed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law. Maid, to thy master’s bed; Thy mistress is o’ the brothel! Son of sixteen, Pluck the laced crutch from thy old limping sire, With it beat out his brains! Piety, and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood, Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contrivances, And let confusion live! Plagues, incident to men, Your potent and infectious fevers heap On Athens, ripe for stroke! Thou cold sciotic, Crip[le] our senators, that their limbs may halt As lamely as their manners! Lust and liberty Creep in the minds and marrow of your youth, That ‘gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot! itchés, blains, Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop Be general leprous! Breath infect breath, That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I’ll bear from thee, But nakedness, thou detestable town! Take thou that too, with multiplying bams! Timon will to the woods; where he shall find The unkindest beast most kinlier than mankind. The gods confound—hear me, you good gods all— The Athenians both within and out that wall! And grant, as Timon grows, his late may grow To the whole race of mankind, high and low! Amen. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. A room in Timon’s house.

Enter Flavius, with two or three Servants.

First Serv. Hear you, master steward, where’s our master? Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?

Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to Let me be recorded by the righteous gods, [you?] I am as poor as you.

First Serv. Such a house broke! So noble a master fall’n! All gone! and not One friend to take his fortune by the arm, And go along with him!

Sec. Serv. As we do turn our backs From our companion thrown into his grave, So his familiars to his buried fortunes Slink all away, leave their false vows with him, Like empty purses pick’d; and his poor self, A dedicated beggar to the air, With his disease of all-hum’d poverty, Walks, like contempt, alone. More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin’d house. Third Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon’s liv’ry; That see I by our faces; we are fellows still, Serving alike in sorrow: leak’d is our bark, And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck, Hearing the surges threat: we must all part Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all, The latest of my wealth I’ll share amongst you. Wherever we shall meet, for Timon’s sake, Let’s yet be fellows; let’s shake our heads, and say, ‘As ‘t were a knell unto our master’s fortunes, ‘We have seen better days.’ Let each take some; Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more: Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

Servants embrace, and part several ways.

Flav. O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us! Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt, Since riches point to misery and contempt? Who would be so mock’d with glory? or to live But in a dream of friendship? To have his pomp and all what state compounds But only painted, like his varnish’d friends? Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart, Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood, When man’s worst sin is, he does too much good! Who, then, dares to be half so kind again? For bounty, that makes gods, doth still mar men. My dearest lord, bless’d, to be most accused, Rich, only to be wretched, thy great fortunes Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord! He’s flung in rage from this ingratitude suit Of monstrous friends, nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it,
I'll follow gods! I'll live by mine own:
I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Woods and cave, near the sea-shore.

Enter Timon, from the cave.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb
Infest the air! Twin'd brothers of one womb,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarce is dividant; touch them with several fortunes;
Their voices mingle: let not nature
To whom all sores lay siege, bear great fortune,
But by contempt of nature.
Raise me this beggar, and deny 't that lord;
The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
The beggar native honour.
It is the pasture lands the rother's sides,
The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who
In purity of manhood stand upright, [dares,
And say 'This man's a flatterer'? if one be,
So are they all; for every grise of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate
Ducks to the golden foot: all is oblique;
There's not a foot in all our cursed nations,
But direct villany. Therefore be abhor'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disclaims:
Destruction fang mankind! Earth, yield me roots!

Who seeks for better of thee, saucy his palate
With thy most operant poison! What is here?
Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods,
I am no idle votarist: roots, you clear heavens!
Thus much of this will make black white, foul fair,
Wrong right, base noble, old young, coward valiant.
Ha, you gods, why this? what this, you gods?
Why, this
Will lug your priests and servants from your sides,
Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:
This yellow slave
Will knit and break religions, bless the accursed,
Make the hoar leprous ordered, place thieves
And give them title, minute and approbation
With senators on the bench: this is it
That makes the wappen'd widow wed again;
She, whom the spinal-house and ulcerous sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
To the again! Come, damned earth.
Thou common whore of mankind, that put'st odds
Among the rout of nations, I will make thee
Do thy right nature. [March after off.] Ha! a drum!
Thou'tr quick,
But yet I'll bury thee: thou 'lt go, strong thief,
When goy's keepers of thee cannot stand.
Sav, stay thou out for earnest. [Keeping some gold.

Enter Alcibides, with drum and fife, in warlike manner: Phrynia and Timandra.

Alcib. What art thou there? speak.
Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy
For showing me again the eyes of man! [heart, Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to
That art thyself a man? [thee,
Tim. I am Misanthropis, and hate mankind.
For thy part, I do wish thou were a dog,
That I might love thee something.
Alcib. I know thee well;
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.
Tim. I know thee too; and more than that
I know thee,
I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules:
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Tim. Thy lips rot off!
Alcib. If came the noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:
But then renew I could not, like the moon;
There were no suns to borrow of.
Alcib. Noble Timon,
What friendship may I do thee? [None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?
Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none:
If thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, for thou art a man!
Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.
Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.
Alcib. I see them now: then was a blessed time.
Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots.
Timon. Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world
Voiced so regardfully? [Timon.
Art thou Timandra?
Timon. Yes. [Enter thee;
Alcib. Be a whore still: they love thee not that Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-check'd youth
To the tub-fast and the diet.

Tim. Hang thee, monster!
Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.
I have but little gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band: I have heard, and grieved,
How cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, thy neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.
Tim. I priethee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone.
Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.
Tim. How dost thou pity him whom thou dest
I had rather be alone. [trouble?
Alcib. Why, fare thee well:
Here is some gold for thee.
Tim. Keep it, I cannot eat it.
Alcib. When have I laid proud Athens on a heap,
Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens?
Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause.
Tim. The gods confound them all in thy conquest;
And thee after, when thou hast conquer'd?
Alcib. Why me, Timon?
Tim. That, by killing of villains,
Thou wast born to conquer my country.
Put up thy gold: go on,—here's gold,—go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when I live.
Will o'er some high-viced city hang his poison
In the sick air: let not thy sword skip one:
Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;
He is an usurer: strike me the counterfeit matron;
It is her habit only that is honest,
Herself 's a bawd! let not the virgins cheek
Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those nilk-paps,
That through the window-bars bore at men's eyes,
Are not within the leaf of pity writ,
But set them down horrible traitors: spare not the Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their
Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
[merry; Hath said truly pronounced: my throat shall cut;
And mine it sans remorse: swear against objects;
Put armour on thine ears and on thine eyes:
Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,
Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a jot. There 's gold to pay thy soldiers:
Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent,
Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.
ACT IV.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

SCENE III.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou givest me, Not all thy counsel. [upon thee! Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse Phe. and Timon. Give us some gold, good Timon: hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade, And to make whores, a bawd. Hold up, you sluts, Your aprons mountant: you are not oathable. Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear Into strong slanders and to heavenly agues The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths, I'll trust to your conditions: be whores still; And he whose plous breath seeks to convert you, Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up; Let your close fire predominate his smoke, And be no turncoats: yet may your pains, six months, Be quite contrary: and thatch your poor thin roofs With burthens of the dead;—some that were hang'd,

No matter: wear them, betray with them: whose paint till a horse may mire upon your face: A pox of wrinkles! Phe. and Timon. Well, more gold: what then? Believe 't, that we'll do any thing for gold. Tim. Consumptions sow In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp shins, And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice, That he may not utter false title plead. Nor sound his quillets shrilly: hoar the flamèn, That scolds against the quality of flesh, And not believes himself: down with the nose, Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away Of him that, his particular to foresee, Smells from the general weal: make curl'd-pate ruffians bald:

And let the unsucc'rd braggarts of the war Derive some pain from you: plague all: That your activity may defeat and quell The source of all erection. There's more gold: Do you damn others, and let this damn you, And ditches grave you all! Phe. and Timon. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon. Tim. More where, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness, Should yet be hungry! Common mother, thou, Digging, Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast, Teens, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd, Engenders the black toad andadder bine, The gilded next and eyeless venom'd worm, With breaths and whisperings false title plead, Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Ensue thy fertile and conceiptous womb, Let it no more bring out ingratitude man! Go grin with blear'd bristles, and cropt head Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Ensue thy fertile and conceiptous womb, Let it no more bring out ingratitude man! Go grin with blear'd bristles, and cropt head Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Ensue thy fertile and conceiptous womb, Let it no more bring out ingratitude man! Go grin with blear'd bristles, and cropt head Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine; Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Whereof ingratitude man, with liquorish draughts And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind, That from it all consideration slips!

Enter Aperantius.

More man? plague, plague! Aper. I was directed hither: men report Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them. Tim. 'Tis, then, because thou dost not keep a dog; Whom I would imitate: consumption catch thee! Aper. This is in thee a nature but infected; A poor unmaimed melancholy sprang From change of fortune. Why this space? this place? This slave-like habit? and these looks of care? Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft; Tong their diseased perfumes, and have forgot That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods, By putting on the cunning of a carper. Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee, And let his very breath, whom thou 'rt observe, Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strait, And call it excellent: thou wast told thus: Thou gavest thine ears like tapesers that bid welcome To knives and all approaches: 'tis most just That thou turn rascal; hadst thou wealth again, Rascals should have 't. Do not assume my likeness. Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself. Aper. Then hast cast away thyself, being like thyself; A madman so long, now a fool. What, think'st That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain, Will put thy shirt on warm? will these moss'd trees, That have outlived the eagle, page thy heels, And skip where thou point'st out? will the cold brook, Candied with ice, candle thy morning taste, To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Call the creatures Whose naked naturrs live in all the sprite Of wreakful heaven, whose bare unhoused trunks, To the conflicting elements exposed, Answer more nature; bid them flatter thee; O, thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee: depart. Aper. I love thee better now than e'er I did. Tim. I hate thee worse. Aper. Why? Tim. Thou flattest misery. Aper. I flatter not: but say thou art a courtier. Tim. Why dost thou seek me out? Aper. Always a villain's office or a fool's. Dost please thyself in 't? Aper. Tim. What a knave too! Aper. If thou didst put this sour-cold habit on To castigate thy pride, 't were well: but thou Dost it enforcedly; thou 'dst courtier be again, Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery Outlives uncertain parr, is crown'd before: The one is filling still, never ceaseth more: The other, at high wish: best state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst, content. Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable. Tim. Not by his breath that is more miserable. Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm With favour never clasp'd; but bred a dog. Hadst thou, like us from our first swath, proceeded The sweet degrees that this brief world affords To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command, thou would'st have plunged thyself In general riot; melted down thy youth In different beds of lust; and never learn'd The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd The sugar'd game before thee. But myself, Who had the world as my confectionary,
The mouths, the tongues, the eyes and hearts of men
At duty, more than I could frame employment,
That numberless upon me stuck as leaves
Dung on the oak, have with one writer's brush
Fell from their boughs and left me open, bare
For every storm that blows: I, to bear this,
That never knew but better, is some burden:
Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why shouldst thou hate
Drunken men?
They never flatter'd thee: what hast thou given?
If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject, who in spite put stuff
To some she beggar and compound thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence, be gone!
If thou hast not been the worst of men,
Then hast been a knife and flatterer.

Apem. Art thou proud yet?
Tim. Ay, that I am not thee. I, that I was No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now:
Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee,
I'd give thee leave to hang. Get thee gone.
That the whole life of Athens were in this!
Thus would I eat it. [Eating a root.

Apem. Here; I will mend thy feast.

Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself.
Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack Of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botch'd;
If not, I would it were.

Apem. What wouldst thou have to Athens?
Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,
Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best and truest;
For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where liest o' nights, Timon?
Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather,
where I eat it. [end im.

Tim. Would poison be oreident and knew my Apem. Where wouldst thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: when thou wast in thy gilt and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a meed for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate I feel not.

Apem. Dost hate a meedlar?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou hast hated meddlers sooner, thou shouldst have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift that was beloved after his means?

Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world. Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. What thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee 'at attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox wouldeguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when peradventure thou wert accus'd by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy duneness would torment thee, and still thou livedst but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee and make thine own self the conqueror of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be shamed by the horse: wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be scolded by the leopard: wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion and the spots of thy kindred were juries on thy life: all thy safety were remotion and thy defence absence. What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation!

Apem. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou mightest have hit upon it here: the commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apem. Yonder comes a poet and a painter: the plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it and give way: when I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shall be to me away. I had rather be a beggar's dog than Apemantus.

Apem. Thou art the cap of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon!

Apem. A plague on thee! I thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains that do stand by thee are pure.

Apem. There is no leprosy but what thou speakest.

Tim. If I name thee,
I'll beat thee, but I should infect my hands.

Apem. I would my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!

Choler does kill me that thou art alive;

I swound to see thee.

Thou wouldst burst!

Away,

Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry I shall lose
A stone by thee.

[Throw'st a stone at him.

Apem. Beast!

Tim. Slave!

Tim. Toad!

Rogue, rogue, rogue!

I am sick of this false world, and will love nothing
But even the mere necessities upon't.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lye where the light foam of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in me at others' lives may laugh. [vorce
[To the gold.] O thou sweet king-killer, and dear di-
'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright deliver
Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young, fresh, loved and delicate woor,
Whose bush doth thaw the consecrated snow
That lies on Dian's lap! thou visble god,
That solder'st close impossibilities,
Tongue, and makest them kiss! that speak'st with every
To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts!
Think, thy slave man rebels, and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire!

Apem. Would 't were so!

But not till I am dead. I'll say thou'st gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.

Tim. Throng'd to!

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Thy back, I prithee.

Apem. Live, and love thy misery.

Tim. Long live so, and so die. [Exit Apemantus.

I am quit.

Moe things like men! Eat, Timon, and abhor them.
Enter Banditti.

First Ban. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender or of his remainder: the mere want of gold, and the falling-from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy. Sec. Ban. Where? He hath a mass of treasure.

Third Ban. Let us make the assault upon him: if he care not for ’t, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall’s get it?

Tim. Now, thieves?

Banditti. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women’s sons.

Banditti. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots: Within this mile break forth a hundred springs; The moon, like a bright harlet, lights: The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her fullness before you. Want! why want?

First Ban. We cannot live on grass, on berries, As beasts and birds and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con That you are thieves profess’d, that you work not In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft In limited professions. Rascal thieves, Here’s gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o’ the grape, Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth, And so scrape hanging: trust not the physician: His antidotes are poison, and he slays More than you rob: take wealth and lives together: Do villainy, do, since you protest to do ’t, Like workmen. I’ll example you with thievery: The sun’s a thief, and with his great attraction Rolls the vast sea; the moon’s an arrant thief, And her pale fire she snatches from the sun: The sea’s a thief, whose liquid surge resolves The moon into salt tears: the earth’s a thief, That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen From general excrement: each thing’s a thief: The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power Have uncheck’d thee; they themselves, away, Rob one another. There’s more gold. Cut throats: All that you meet are thieves: to Athens go, Break open shops; nothing can you steal, But thieves do lose it: steal no less for this I give you; and gold confound you howseer! Amen.

Third Ban. Has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it.

First Ban. ’Tis in the malice of mankind that he thus advises us: not to have us thrive in our mystery.

Sec. Ban. I’ll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

First Ban. Let us first see peace in Athens: there is no time so miserable but a man may be true.

Enter Flavius. [Exeunt Banditti.

Flavius. O you gods!

Is yond despised and ruinous man my lord? Full of decay and falling? O monument And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow’d! What an alteration of honour! Has desperate want made! What viler thing upon the earth than friends Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends! How rarely does it meet with this time’s guise, When man was wish’d to love his enemies! Grant I may ever love, and rather woo Those that would mischief me than those that do! Has caught me in his eye: I will present My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord, Still serve him with my life. My dearest master! Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flavius. Have you forgotten me, sir? Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all men; Then, if thou grant’st thou’rt a man, I have forgot Flavius. An honest poor servant of yours. [Thee. Tim. Then I know thee not:

I never had honest man about me, I; all I kept were vipers, to devour men to Villains.

Flavius. The gods are witness. Ne’er did poor steward wear a truer grief For his undone lord than mine eyes for you. Tim. What, dost thouweep? Come nearer. Then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim’st Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give But thorough lust and laughter. Pity’s sleeping: Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flavius. I beg of you to know me, good my lord, To accept my grief and whilst this poor wealth lasts To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward So true, so just, and now so comfortable? It almost turns my dangerous nature mild. Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man Was born of woman. Forgive my general and exceptless rashness, You perpetual-soler gods! I do proclaim One honest man—mistake me not—but one; No more, I pray,—and he’s a steward, How fain would I have hated all mankind! And thou redeem’st thyself: but all, save thee, I fell with curses. Methinks thou art more honest now than wise; For, by oppressing and betraying me, Thou mightst have sooner got another service: For many so arrive at second masters, Upon their first lord’s neck. But tell me true— For I must ever doubt, though ne’er so sure— Is not thy kindness sudden, covetous, If not a usuring kindness, and, as rich men deal gifts, Expecting in return twenty for one?

Flavius. No, my most worthy master; in whose breast Doubt and suspect, alas, are placed too late: You should have feared false times when you did suspect still. In the society of men, That which I show, heaven knows, is merely love, Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind, Care of your food and living; and, believe it, My most honour’d lord, For any benefit that points to me, Either in hope or present, I’d exchange For this one wish, that you had power and wealth To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, ’tis so! Thou singly honest man, Here, take: the gods out of my misery Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich and happy; But thus condition’d: thou shalt build from men; Hate all, curse all, show charity to none. But let the famish’d flesh slide from the bone, Ere thou relieve the beggar; give to dogs What thou deny’st to men; let prisons swallow ’em, Debts wither ’em to nothing; be men like blasted woods, And may diseases lick up their false bloods! And so farewell and thrive.

Flavius. O, let me stay, And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hastest curses, Stay not; fly, whilst thou art blest and free: Ne’er see thou man, and let me ne’er see thee.

[Exit Flavius. Timon retires to his cave. 623]
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The woods. Before Timon’s cave.

Enter Poet and Painter; Timon watching them from his cave.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Pain. What’s to be thought of him? does the rumour hold for true, that he’s so full of gold?

Pain. Certain: Alecibades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra tell gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: ’tis said he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Pain. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore’t is not amiss we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travail for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Pain. Whom wilt thou now present unto him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation: only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Pain. I must serve him so too, tell him of an intent that’s coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o’ the time: it opens the eyes of expectation; performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainest and simplest kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable; performance is a kind of will or testament which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Timon comes from his cave, behind.

Tim. [Aside] Excellent workman! thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him: it must be a personating of himself; a satire against the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulence.

Poet. Nay, let’s seek him.

True; though he haunts against his own estate, When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Tim. True;

When the day serves, before black-corner’d night, Find what thou want’st by free and offer’d light. Come.

Tim. [Aside] I’ll meet you at the turn. What a god’s gold, That he is worshipp’d in a baser temple

Than where swine feed! [foam, ’tis thou that rigg’st the bark and plough’st the settling admired reverence in a slave:

To thee I worship! and thy saints for aye

Be crown’d with plagues that thee alone obey! Fit I meet them. [Coming forward.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Tim. Have I once lived to see two honest men?

Poet. Sir.

Haven’st thou of your open bounty tasted,

Hearing you were retired, your friends fall’n off,

Whose thankless natures — O abhorred spirits! Not all the whips of heaven are large enough:

What! to you,

Whose sole true nobleness gave life and influence

To their whole being! I am rapt and cannot cover

The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude

With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see ‘t the better:

You that are honest, by being what you are,

Make them best seen and known.

Pain. He and myself

Have travail’d in the great shower of your gifts,

And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Aye, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I reward you?

Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What can we do, we’ll do, to do you service.

Tim. Ye’re honest men: ye’ve heard that I have

I am sure you have: speak truth; ye’re honest men.

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord; but therefore

Came not by my friend nor I. [terfeit

Tim. Good honest men! Thou draw’st a count.

Best in all Athens: thou’rt, indeed, the best;

Thou counterfeit’st most lively.

Pain. Tim. E’en so, sir, as I say. And, for thy fiction,

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth

That thou art even natural in thine art.

But, for all this, my honest-natured friends,

I must needs say you have a little fault:

Marry, ‘tis not monstrous in you, neither wish I

You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour

To make it known to us.

Tim. You’ll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There’s never a one of you but trusts a
That mightily deceives you. [knave,

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him dissemble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,

Keep in your bosom: yet remain assured

That he’s a made-up villain.

Pain. I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I’ll give you gold.

Rid me these villains from your companies:

Hang them or stab them, drown them in a draught,

Confound them by some course, and come to me,

I’ll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let’s know them.

Tim. You that way and you this, but two in comp.

Each man apart, all single and alone. [pany;

Yet an arch-villain keeps him company.

If where thou art two villains shall not be,

Come not near him. If thou wouldst not reside

But where one villain is, then him abandon.

Hence, pack! there’s gold; you came for gold, ye slavers:

[To Painter] You have work’d for me; there’s payment for you: hence! [To Poet] You are an alchemist; make gold of that.

Out, rascal dogs! [Beats them out, and then returns to his cave.

Enter Flavius and two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with

For he is set so only to himself [Timon; That nothing but himself which looks like man Is friendly with him.

First Sen. Bring us to his cave:

It is our part and promise to the Athenians

To speak with Timon.

Sec. Sen. At all times alike

Men are not still the same: ‘twas time and griefs.
Act V.

Timon of Athens.

Scene II.

That framed him thus: time, with his fairer hand,
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him. Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Flour. Here is his cave.

Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends: the Athenians,
By two of their most revered senate, greet thee:
Speak to them, noble Timon.

Timon comes from his cave.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn! Speak, and be hang'd:
For each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as a canterizing to the root o' the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

First Sen. Worthy Timon,—

Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

First Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon.

Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.

First Sen. 0, forget

What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators with one consent of love
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

Sec. Sen. They confess
Toward thee forgetfulness too general, gross:
Which now the public body, which doth seldom
Play the recantor, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And send forth us, to make their sorrow'd render,
Together with a recompense more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Even to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;
Suprise me to the very brink of tears:
Lend me a fool's heart and a woman's eyes,
And I'll beweep these comforts, worthy senators.

First Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with
And of our Athens, thine and ours, to take [us
The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
Allow'd with absolute power and thy good name
Live with authority: so soon we shall drive back
Of Alecibiades the approaches wild,
Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
His country's peace.

Sec. Sen. And makes his threatening sword
Against the walls of Athens.

First Sen. Therefore, Timon,—

Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir; thus:
If Alecibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alecibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war,
Then let him know, and tell him Timon speaks it,
In pity of our aged and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him, that I care not,
And let him take 't at worst; for their knives care not.

While you have threats to answer: for myself,
There's not a whistle in the unruly camp
But I do prize it at my love before
The reverend'st threat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As thieves to keepers.

Flour. Stay not, all's in vain.

Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph;

It will be seen to-morrow: my long sickness
Of health and living now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still;
Be Alecibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

First Sen. We speak in vain.

Tim. But yet I love my country, and am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit doth put it.

First Sen. That's well spoken.

Tim. Command me to my loving countrymen.

First Sen. These words become your lips as they pass thorough them.

Sec. Sen. And enter in our ears like great triumph
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Command me to them,
And tell them that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them:
I'll teach them to prevent wild Alecibiades' wrath.

Tim. How, like this well; he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it: tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree
From high to low throughout, that whose please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself. I pray you, do my greeting.

Flour. Trouble him no further; thus you still shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood:
Who once a day with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover: thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.
Lips, let sour words go by and language end:
What is amiss plague and infection mend!
Graves only be men's works and death their gain!
Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign.

[Retires to his cave.

First Sen. His discontents are unremoveably
Coupled to nature.

Sec. Sen. Our hope in him is dead; let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.

First Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—Before the walls of Athens.

Enter two Senators and a Messenger.

First Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his
As full as thy report? [files Mess.
I have spoke the least:
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

Timon. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend;
Whom, though in general part we were opposed,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends: this man was riding
From Alecibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship! the cause against your city,
In part for his sake moved.

First Sen. Here come our brothers.

[Enter the Senators from Timon.

Third Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.
The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring
Doth choke the air with dust: in, and prepare:
Ours is the full, I fear; our foes the snare. [Exeunt.

625
SCENE III.—The woods. Timon's cave, and a rude tomb seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place. Who's here? speak, ho! No answer! What is this? Timon is dead, who hath outstretched'd his span; some beast rear'd this; there does not live a man. Dead, sure; and this his grave. What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax: our captain hath in every figure skill, an aged interpreter, though young in days: Before proud Athens he's set down by this, whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Before the walls of Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter Alcibiades with his powers.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town our terrible approach. [A parlay sounded.

Enter Senators on the wall.

Till now you have gone on and fill'd the time With all licentious measure, making your wills The scope of justice; till now myself and such As slept within the shadow of your power Have wander'd with our traversed arms and breathed Our sufferance vainly: now the time is flush, When crouching narrow in the bearer strong, Cries of itself 'No more!' now breathless wrong Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease, And purdy insolence shall break his wind With fear and horrid flight.

First Sen. Noble and young, when thy first griefs were but a mere conceit, Ere thou hadst power or we had cause of fear, We sent to thee, to give thy rages balm, To wipe out our ingratitude with loves Above their quantity.

Sec. Sen. So did we woo Transformed Timon to our city's love By humble message and by promised means: We were not all unkind, nor all deserve The common stroke of war.

First Sen. These walls of ours Were not erect'd by their hands from whom You have received your griefs; nor are they such That these great towers, trophies and schools should For private faults in them. [Fall.

Sec. Sen. Nor are they living Who were the motives that you first went out; Shame that they wanted cunning, in excess Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord, Into our city with thy banners spread: By decimation, and a tithed death— If thy revenges hunger for that food Which nature loathes—take thou the destined tenth, And by the hazard of the spotted die Let die the spotted.

First Sen. All have not offended; For those that were, it is not square to take On those that are, revenges: crimes, like hands, Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman, Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage: Spare thy Athenian cradle and those kin Which in the clusters of thy wrath must fall With those that have offended: like a shepherd, Approach the fold and call the infected forth, But kill not all together.

Sec. Sen. What thou wilt, thou rather shall enforce it with thy smile Than hew to 't with thy sword.

First Sen. Set but thy foot Against our raptured gates, and they shall ope; So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before, To say thou wilt enter friendly.

Sec. Sen. Throw thy glove, Or any token of thine honour else, That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress And not as our confusion, all thy powers Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcib. Then there's my glove; Descend, and open your uncharged ports: Those enemies of Timon's and mine own Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof Fall and no more: and, to atone your fears With my more noble meaning, not a man Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream Of regular justice in your city's bounds, But shall be render'd to your public laws At heaviest answer.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alcib. Descend, and keep your words. [The Senators descend, and open the gates.

Enter Soldier.

Sold. My noble general, Timon is dead; Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea; And on his grave-stone this inscription, which With wax I brought away, whose soft impression Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Reads the epitaph] Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft; Seek not my name: a plague consume you wicked callifiers left! [Hat. Here lie I, Timon; who, alive, all living men did Pass by and curse thy fill, but pass and stay not here thy gait.]

These well express in thee thy latter spirits: Though thou abhorrest in us our human griefs. Scorn list our brain's flow and those our droplets Which from niggard nature full, yet rich conceit Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead Is noble Timon; of whose memory Hereafter more. Bring me into your city, And I will use the olive with my sword, Make war bred peace, make peace stint war, make Prescribe to other as each other's leech. [Ear. Let our drums strike. [Exit.

ACT I.

Enter Flavius, Marullus, and certain Commons.

Flav. Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you Is this a holiday? what! know you not, [home: Being mechanical, you ought not walk Upon a labouring day without the sign Of your profession? Speak, what trade art thou? First Com. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron and thy rule? What dost thou with thy best apparel on? You, sir, what trade are you?

Sec. Com. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou? answer me directly. Sec. Com. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave, what trade?

Sec. Com. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me: yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? mend me, thou sancy fellow!

Sec. Com. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

Sec. Com. Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with awl. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather have gone upon my handiwork.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

Sec. Com. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Caesar and to rejoice in his triumph...

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings What tributaries follow him to Rome, To grace in captive bonds his elariot-wheels? You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things! O you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft Have you climbed up to walls and battlements, To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops, Your infants in your arms, and there have sat The live-long day, with patient expectation, To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome: And when you saw his chariot but appear, Have you not made an universal shout, That Tiber trembled underneath her banks, To hear the repetition of your sounds Made in her concave shores? And do you now put on your best attire? And do you now call out a holiday? And do you now strew flowers in his way That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood? Be gone! Run to your houses, fall upon your knees, Pray to the gods to intermit the plague That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this fault, Assemble all the poor men of your sort; Draw them to Tiber banks, and weep your tears Into the channel, till the lowest stream Do kiss the most excalated shores of all.

[Exeunt all the Commons.

See, whether their basest metal be not moved; They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness. Go you down that way towards the Capitol; This way will I: disrobe the images, If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.

627
ACT I.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE II.—A public place.

Flourish. Enter Caesar; Antony, for the course; Calpurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, and Casca; a great crowd following, among them a Soothsayer.

Cas. Calpurnia! Peace, ho! Caesar speaks.

Cic. Calpurnia!

Cal. Here, my lord.

Cas. Stand you directly in Antonius' way, When you have heard his course. Antonius! Ant. Caesar, my lord?

Cas. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius, To touch Calpurnia; for our elders say, The barren, touched in this holy chase, Shall off their sterile curse.

Ant. I shall remember:

When Caesar says 'do this,' it is performed. Caesar. Set on; and leave no ceremony out. [Flourish.

Cas. What man is that? Brutus. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

Cas. Set him before me; let me see his face. Caesar. Fellow, come from the throng; look upon me. [again.

Cas. What say'st thou to me now? speak once more.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cas. He is a dreamer; let us leave him: pass. [Scene. Exeunt all except Brutus and Cassius.

Cas. Will you go see the order of the course?

Brutus. Not I.

Cas. I pray you, do.

Brut. I am not garrulous; I do lack some part Of that quick spirit that is in Antony. Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires; I'll leave you.

Cas. Brutus, I do observe you now of late: I have not from your eyes that gentleness And show of love as I was wont to have: You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand Over your friend that loves you.

Brutus. Cassius, Be not deceived: if I have veil'd my look, I turn the trouble of my countenance Merely upon myself. Vexed am I Of late with passions of some difference, Conceptions only proper to myself, Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviours: But let not therefore my good friends be grieved— Among which number, Cassius, be you one— Nor construe any further my neglect, Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war, Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cas. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion; By means whereof this breast of mine hath buried Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations. Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face? Brutus. No, Cassius; for the eye sees not itself, But by reflection, by some other things. Cassius. 'Tis just:

And it is very much lamented, Brutus, That you have no such mirrors as will turn Your hidden worthiness into your eye, That you might see your shadow. I have heard, Where many of the best respect in none. Except imperial Caesar, speaking of Brutus And groaning underneath this age's yoke, Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Brutus. Into what dangers would you lead me, Cassius? That you would have me seek into myself [suis, For that which is not in me?

Cas. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepared to hear: And since you know you cannot see yourself So well as by reflection, I, your glass, Will modestly discover to yourself That of yourself which you yet know not of. And be not jealous on me, gentle Brutus: Were I a common laugher on his nose To stale with ordinary oaths my love To every new Miser: if you know That I do fawn on men and hug them hard And after scandal them, or if you know That I profess myself in banqueting To the all, then hold me not dangerous.

Brutus. What means this shouting? I do fear, the Choose Caesar for their king. [people

Cas. Ay, do you fear it?

This must I think you would not have it so. Brutus. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well, But wherefore do you hold me here so long? What is it that you would impart to me? If it be aught towards the general good, Set honour in one eye and death in the other, And I will look on both indifferently, For let the gods so speed me as I love The name of honour more than I fear death. Cassius. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus, As well as I do know your outward favour. Well, honour is the subject of my story. I cannot tell you what you and other men Think of this life; but for myself, single self, I had as lief be a leisurely dog in In awe of such a thing as myself.

I was born free as Caesar; so were you; We both have fed as well, and we can both Endure the winter's cold as well as he: For once, upon a raw and gusty day, The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores, Caesar said to me 'Darest thou, Cassius, now Leap in with me into this angry flood, And swim to yonder point?' Upon the word, Accourted as I was, I plunged in And bade him follow; so indeed I did. The torrent roared, and we did buffet it With lusty sinews, throwing it aside And stemming it with hearts of controversy; But ere we could arrive the point proposed, Caesar cried 'Help me, Cassius, or I sink!' I, as Æneas, our great ancestor, Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Tiber Did I the tired Caesar. And this man Is now become a god, and Cassius is A wretched creature and must bend his body, If Caesar carelessly but nod on him. He had a fever when he was in Fiesco, And when the fit was on him, I did mark How he did shake; 'tis true, this god did shake: His coward lips did comment from their colour fly, And that same eye whose bend doth awe the world Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:
Ay, and that tongue of his that bade the Romans
Mark him and write his speeches in their books,
Alas, it cried! Give me some drink, Titinius,
As a sick gout in ye gods, it doth unmaze me
A man such a few hours tender should
So get the start of the majestic world
And bear the palm alone.

[Shout. Flourish.]

Brut. Another general shout!

I do believe that these apellations are
For some new honours that are heaped on Caesar.
Cas. As I live, he doth strive the narrow world
Like a Colosseus, and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs and peep about
To find ourselves disobligeable graves.

Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Brutus and Caesar: what should be in that 'Caesar'?
Why should that name be sounded more than yours?
Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with 'em,
Brutus will deal in spirit as soon as Caesar.
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat dost this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great?

Ah, thou art shamed!

Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was famed with more than with one man;
When could they say that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walls encompass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed and room enough,
When there is in it but one man only.
O, you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once that would have brook'd
The death of a man to keep his state in Rome
As easily as a king.

Brut. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work me to, I have some aim:
How I have thought of this and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter; for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further moved. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say
I will with patience hear, and find a time
Both meet to hear and answer such high things.
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this:
Brutus had rather be a villager
Than to reign with a son of Rome.
Under these hard conditions at this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad that my weak words
Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.

Brut. The games are done and Caesar is returning.
Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve:
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day.

Re-enter Caesar and his Train.

Brut. I will do so.

But, look you, Cassius,
The angry spirit doth grace Caesar's brow,
And all the rest look like a child's train:
Calpurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

Cas. Cassius will tell us what the matter is.

Ant. Cassus?

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat:
Sleek-headed men and such as sleep o' nights:
Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.
And, were it done already, it is done:
He is a noble Roman and well given.

Cas. Would he were fatter! But I fear him not:
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
ACT I.  JULIUS CAESAR.  SCENE III.

JULIUS who therefor wherein our but I yet, Casca, [life but,]

Either have of the bird of night did sit

However the market-place, Hooting and shrieking. When these prodigies

Do so conjointly meet, let not men say 'These are their reasons; they are natural;'

For, I believe, they are portentous things Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cas. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time: But men may construe things after their fashion, Clean from the purpose of the things themselves.

Cas. To Caesar to-morrow?—

Cass. He doth; for he did bid Antonius Send word to you he would be there to-morrow.  Cic. Good-night then, Cassia: this disturbed sky Is not to walk in.

Cass. Who's there?

Cass. A Roman.

Cass. Cassia, by your voice.  Cass. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is Cass. A very pleasing night to honest men.  [this!  Cass. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?  Cass. Those that have known the earth so full of For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,  faults. Submitting me unto the perilous night, And, thus unbraced, Cassia, as you see, Have bared my bosom to the thunder-stone; And when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open The breast of heaven, I did present myself Even in the aim and very flash of it.  [heavens?  Cass. But wherefore did you so much tempt the It is the part of men to fear and tremble, When the most mighty gods by tokens send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.  [life

Cass. You are dull, Cassia, and those sparks of That should be in a Roman you do want, Or else you use not. You look pale and gaze And put on fear and cast yourself in wonder, To see the strange impatience of the heavens: But if you would consider the true cause Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts, Why browsing and beauteous productions And, why old men fool and children calculate, Why all these things change from their ordinance Their natures and preformed faculties To monstrous quality,—why, you shall find That heaven hath infused them with these spirits, To make them instruments of fear and warning Unto some monstrous state.  Now could I, Cassia, name to thee a man Most like this dreadful night, That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars As doth the lion in the Capitol, A man no mightier than thyself or me In personal action, yet peculiarly grown And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.  Cass. 'Tis Caesar that you mean; is it not, Cassius?  Cass. Let it be who it is: for Romans now Have thews and limbs like to their ancestors; But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead, And we are govern'd by others' spirits; Our yoke and sufferance show us womanish.  Cass. Indeed, they say the senators to-morrow Mean to establish Caesar as a king; And he shall wear his crown by sea and land, In every place, save here in Italy.  Cass. I know where I will wear this dagger then;

or four wenches, where I stood, cried 'Alas, good soul!' and forgave him with all their hearts: but there is no head to be taken of them; if Caesar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

Brutus And after that, he came, thus sad, away?

Casca. Ay.

Cic. Did Cicero say anything?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you in the face again: but those that understood him smiled at one another and shook their heads: but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavins, for pulling scarfs off Caesar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Cassia?

Cass. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive and your mind hold and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good: I will expect you.

Casca. Do so. Farewell, both.  [Exit.

Brutus. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be!

It was quick mettle when he went to school.

Cic. Sees he now in execution of any bold or noble enterprise, However he puts on this tardy form. This rudeness is a sance to his good wit, Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite.

Brut. And so it is. For this time I will leave you: To-morrow, if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or, if you will, Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so: till then, think of the world.  [Exit Brutus.

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see, Thy honourable metal may be wrought From that it is disposed: therefore it is meet That noble minds keep ever with their likes; For who so firm that cannot be seduced? Caesar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus: If I live now and he live Cassius, He should not honour me. I will this night, In several hands, in at his windows throw, As if they came from several citizens, Writings all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely Caesar's ambition shall be glance'd at: And after this let Caesar seat him sure: For we will shake him, or worse days endure.  [Exit.

SCENE III.  The same.  A street.

Thunder and lightning.  Enter, from opposite sides, Casca, with his sword drawn, and Cicero.

Cic. Good even, Cassia; brought you Caesar home?

Cass. Are not you moved, when all the sway of Shakes like a thing uniform?  O Cicero, earth I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds Have rived the knotty oaks, and I have seen The ambitious ocean swell and rage and foam, To be exalted with the threatening clouds: But never till to-night, never till now, Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Either there is a civil strife in heaven, Or else the world, too strong with the gods, Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?

Casca. A common slave—you know him well by sight.—

Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand,
In favour's like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, lpery, and most terrible.

[Enter Cinna.

Cinna. Where hast thou so?

Casca. No, it is Casca; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna?

Cinna. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this!
There 's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Casca. Am I not stay'd for? tell me.

Cinna. Yes, you are.

O Cassius, if you could
But win the noble Brutus to our party—

Casca. Be you content; good Cinna, take this paper,
And look you lay it in the praetor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it: and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.

Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

Cinna. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Casca. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre.

[Exit Cinna.

Come, Casca, you and I will yet ere day
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already, and the man entire
Upon the next encounter yields him ours.

Casca. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts:
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alcohol,
Will change to virtue and to worthiness.

Casca. Him and his worth and our great need of
You have right well conected. Let us go, [him
For it is after midnight; and ere day
We will awake him and be sure of him. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Brutus.

Brutus. What, Lucius, ho!
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day. Lucius, I say!
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.
When, Lucius, when? awake, I say! what, Lucius!

Enter Lucius.

Lucius. Call'd you, my lord?

Brutus. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Lucius. I will, my lord. [Exit.

Brutus. It must be by his death; and for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the question.

It is the bright day that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking. Crown him—
And then, I grant, we put a sting in him, [that—
That as his will he may do danger with.

The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins
Remorse from power: and, to speak truth of Cesar,
I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But it is a common proof,
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereeto the climber-upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upmost round,
ACT II.  JULIUS CAESAR.  SCENE I.

'Shall Rome, &c.' Thus must I piece it out:
Shall Rome stand under one man's awe?
What, Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.
'Speak, strike, redress!' Am I entreated
To speak and strike?  O Rome, I make thee prom.-
If the redress will follow, thou receivest [ise:
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.
[Knocking within.
Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate: somebody knocks.
[Exit Lucius.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar,
I have not slept.
Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The Genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.
Bru. Is he alone?
Luc. No, sir, there are men with him.
Bru. Do you know them?
Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their heads,
And half their faces buried in their cloaks; [ears,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour.
Bru. Let 'em enter.  [Exit Lucius.
They are the faction. O conspiracy,
Shamest thou to show thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free?  O, then by day
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage?  Seek none, con-
Hide it in smiles and affability: [spiracy;
For if thou path, thy native semblance on,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention.

Enter the conspirators, Cassius, Casca, Decius,
Cinna, Metellus Cimber, and Trebonius.
Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest;
Good morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you?
Bru. I have been up this hour, awake all night.
Know I these men that come along with you?
Cas. Yes, every man of them, and no man here
But honours you; and every one doth wish
You had but that opinion of yourself
Which every noble Roman bear of you.
This is Trebonius.
Bru. He is welcome hither.
Cas. This, Decius Brutus.
Bru.
Cas. This, this, Cinna; and this, Metellus
They are all welcome.  [Cimmer.
What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night?
Cas. Shall I entreat a word?
[Brutus and Cassius whisper.
Dec. Here lies the east: doth not the day break
Casca. No.
Cin. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and you gray lines
That fret the clouds are messengers of day.
Casca. You shall confess that you are both de-
Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises. [ceived
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence up higher toward the north
He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.
Cas. And let us swear our resolution.
Bru. No, not an oath: if not the face of men,
The suffering of our souls, the time's abuse,—
If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
And every man hence to his idle bed;
So let high-sighted tyrants puddle out their blood
Till each man drop by lottery.  But if these,
As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
To kindle cowards and to steel with valour
The melting spirits of women, then, countrymen,
What need we any spur but our own cause,
To prick us to the stillness of our hearts?
Thus secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter, and what other oath
Than honesty, and honesty engaged,
That this shall be; or we will fall for it?
Swear priests and cowards and men cautious,
Old tawdry carriages and such suffering souls:
That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear
Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain
The very nature of our enterprise,
Nor the insupportable mettle of our spirits,
To think that or our cause or our performance
Did need any oath; when every drop of blood
That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
Is guilty of a several bastardy,
If he do break the smallest particle
Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.
Cas. But what of Cicero? shall we sound him?
I think he will stand very strong with us.
Casca. Let us not leave him out.

Cas. No, by no means.
Met. O, let us have him, for his silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:
It shall be Cicero, his judgment called our hands;
Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear;
But all be buried in his gravity.
Bru. O, name him not: let us not break with him;
For he will never follow anything
That other men begin.

Cas. Then leave him out.
Casca. Indeed he is not fit.
Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Caesar?
Cas. Decius, well urged: I think it is not meet,
Mark Antony, so well beloved of Caesar,
Should outlive Caesar: we shall find of him
A shrewd contriver; and, you know, his means,
If he impair them, may in a while so far
As to annoy us all: which to prevent,
Let Antony and Caesar fall together.
[Ins,
Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius Cas-
To cut the head off and then hack the limbs,
Like wrath in death and envy afterwards;
For Antony is but a limb of Caesar;
Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
We all stand up against the spirit of Caesar;
And in the spirit of men there is no blood:
O, that we then could come by Caesar's spirit,
And not dismember Caesar!  But, alas,
Cæsar must bleed for it!  And gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wantonly;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds:
And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after training to chide in this, shall make
Our purpose necessary and not envious:
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
And for Mark Antony, think not of him;
For he can do no more than Caesar's arm
When Caesar's head is off.
Cas. Yet I fear him;
For in the ingrained love he bears to Caesar —
Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him:
ACT II.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE I.

If he love Caesar, all that he can do
Is to himself, take thought and die for Caesar:
And that were much he should; for he is given
To sports, to wildness and much company.
Tre. There is no fear in him; let him not die;
For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

[Clock strikes.

Bru. Peace! count the clock.

Cos. The clock hath stricken three.

Tre. 'Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet,
Whether Caesar will come forth to-day, or no;
For he is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main o’er-ruled once.
Of fantasy, of dreams and ceremonies:
It may be, these apparent prodigies,
The unaccus’d terror of this night,
And the persuasion of his augurers,
May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eighth hour: is that the uttermost?

Cas. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey:
I wonder none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him:
He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I’ll fashion him.

Cos. The morning comes upon’s: we’ll leave you,
Brutus,
And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember
What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily;
Let not our looks put on our purposes,
But keep us our Roman manners do,
With untired spirits and formal constancy:
And so good morrow to you every one.

[Exeunt all but Brutus.

Boy! Lucius! Fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber:
Though hares have no form, nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men;
Therefore thou sleep’st so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord! Portia, what mean you? wherefore rise you
It is not for your health thus to consult? [now] your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. You’ve ungently,
Brutus,
Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper,
You suddenly arose, and walk’d about;
Musing and sighing, with your arms across,
And when I ask’d you what the matter was,
You stared upon me with ungentle looks;
I urged you further; then you scratch’d your head,
And too impatiently stamp’d with your foot;
Yet I insisted, yet you answer’d not.
But, with an angry w劉ure of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did;
Fearing to strength that impatience
Which seem’d too much enkindled, and withal
Hoping it was but an effect of humour,
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep,
And could it work so much upon your shap:o
As it hath much prevail’d on your condition,
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and, were he not in health,
He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do. Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick? and is it physical
To walk unbraced and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? What, is Brutus sick,
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and purged air
To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus;
You have some sick offence within your mind,
Which, by the right and virtue of my place,
I ought to know of: and, upon my knees,
I charm you, by my once-commended beauty,
By all your vows of love and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one;
That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,
Why you are heavy, and what men to-night
Have had resort to you: for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted I should know no secrets
That appertain to you? Am I yourself
But, as it were, in sort or limitation,
To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs
Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus’ harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife,
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart. [secret.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this
I grant I am a woman; but withal
A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant I am a woman; but withal
A woman well-esteemed, Cato’s daughter.
Think you I do not sorer that my sex,
Being so father’d and so husband’d?
Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose them:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound.
Here, in the thigh: can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband’s secrets?

Bru. O ye gods,
Render me worthy of this noble wife!
[Knocking within.

Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in awhile;
And by and by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart.

All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the claractory of my sad brows;
Leave me with haste. [Exit Portia.] Lucius, who’s that knocks?

Re-enter Lucius with Ligarius.

Luc. Here is a sick man that would speak with you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.

Boy, stand aside. Caius Ligarius! how?

Lig. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Bru. O, what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,
To visit your chief! Would you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before,
I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome!

[633]
Brave son, derived from honourable loins!
Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjured up
My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,
And I will strive with things impossible;
Yet, get the better of them. What's to do?
Brute. A piece of work that will make sick men whole.
Julius. But are not some whole that we must make Brute. That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going
To whom it must be done.

Julius. Set on your foot,
And with a heart new-fired I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth
That Brutus leads me on.
Brute. Follow me, then, [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Caesar's house.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Caesar, in his night-gown.
Caesar. Nor heaven nor earth have been at peace these three days! Calpurnia in her sleep cried out,
'Help, ho! they murder Caesar!'—Who's within?

Enter a Servant.
Serv. My lord?
Caesar. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice
And bring me their opinions of success.
Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Calpurnia.

Cal. What mean you, Caesar? think you to walk
You shall not stir out of your house to-day. [Exit
Caesar. Caesar shall forth: the things that threaten Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see
The face of Caesar, they are vanished.
Caesar. I never stood on ceremonies,
Yet now they fret me. There is one within:
Besides the things that we have heard and seen,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.
A horrid mass hath whelpt in the streets;
And graves have yawn'd, and yielded up their dead:
Fierce fiery warriors fought upon the clouds,
In ranks and squadrons and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurled in the air,
Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan,
And ghosts did shriek and squeal about the streets.
O Caesar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cal. What can be avoided
Whose end is purposed by the mighty gods?
Yet Caesar shall go forth; for these predictions
Are to the world in general as to Caesar.
Cal. When beggars die, there are no comets seen:
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.
Caesar. Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.

Re-enter Servant.

What say the augurers?
Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to Plucking the entrails of an offering forth, [day.
They could not find a heart within the beast.
Caesar. The gods do this in shame of cowardice:
Caesar shall have a heart without a heart.
If he should stay at home to-day for fear
No, Caesar shall not: danger knows full well
That Caesar is more dangerous than he:

We are two lions lither in one day,
And I the elder and more terible:
And Caesar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consumed in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day: call it my fear
That keeps you in the house: but it is not your own.
We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house:
And he shall say you are not well to-day:
Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

Cæsar. Mark Antony shall say I am not well;
And, for thy honour, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.
Decius. Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth?
Decius, go tell them Caesar will not come.
Decius. Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause,
Lest I be laugh'd at when I tell them so.
Caesar. The cause is in my will: I will not come;
That is enough to satisfy the senate.
But for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know:
Calpurnia here, my wife, stays me at home:
She dreamt to-night she saw my statue;
Which, like a fountain with an hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood; and made many Romans
Come smiling, and did bathe their hands in it:
And these do she apply for warning, and portents,
And evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd that I will stay at home to-day.
Decius. This dream is all amiss interpreted;
It was a vision fair and fortunate:
Your statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bathed,
Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck
Reviving blood, and that great men shall press
For tinctures, stains, relics and cognizance.
This by Calpurnia's dream is signified.
Caesar. And this way have I well expounded it.
Decius. I have, when you have heard what I can say:
And know it now: the senate have concluded
To give this day a crown to mighty Caesar.
If you shall send them word you will not come,
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say
'Break up the senate till another time,
When Caesar's wife shall meet with better dreams.'
If Caesar hide himself, shall they not whisper
'Lo, Caesar is afraid!'
Pardon me, Caesar; for my dear dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
And reason to my love is liable.

Caesar. How foolish do your fears seem now, Cal!
I am ashamed I did yield to them. [Punish Give me my robe, for I will go.

Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus,
Casca, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.
Publius. Good morrow, Caesar.
Caesar. Welcome, Publius.

What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?
Good morrow, Cæsar. And, Cæsar, now Brutus,
Cæsar was never so much your enemy
As that same age which hath made you lean.
What is 't o'clock?
ACT III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE I.

BRU. Caesar, ‘tis strucken eight.

Ces. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

See! Antony, that reveals long o’ nights,
Is notwithstanding up. Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Caesar.

Ces. Bid them prepare within:

I am to blame to be thus waited for.
Now, Cinna: now, Metellus: what, Trebonius!
I have an hour’s talk in store for you;
Remember that you call on me to-day:
Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Caesar, I will: [Aside] and so near will I be,
That your best friends shall wish I had been further.

Ces. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine with me;
And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

BRU. [Aside] That every like is not the same, O Caesar,
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon! [Exit.

SCENE III. — A street near the Capitol.

Enter Artemidorus, reading a paper.

Art. ‘Caesar, beware of Brutus: take heed of Cassius; come not near Cassia; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not: thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Caesar. If thou beest not immortal, look about you: security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover,

ARTEMIDORUS: I will stand till Caesar pass along,
And as a suitor will I give him this.
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.
If thou read this, O Caesar, thou mayst live;
If not, the Fates with traitors do contrive. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — Another part of the same street, before the house of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prithee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam.

Por. I would have had thee there, and here again,

Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.
O constancy, be strong upon my side,
Set a huge mountain ’tween my heart and tongue! I have a man’s mind, but a woman’s might.

How hard it is for women to keep counsel! Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Por. Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?
And so return to you, and nothing else? [well,
Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look
For he went sickly forth: and take good note
What Caesar doth, what suitors press to him.
Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por. Prity, listen well;
I heard a bustling rumour, like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter the Soothsayer.

Por. Come hither, fellow: which way hast thou
Sooth. At mine own house, good lady. [been?
Por. What is ‘t o’clock?
Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.
Por. Is Caesar yet gone to the Capitol?
Sooth. Madam, not yet: I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Caesar, hast thou not?
Sooth. That I have, lady: if it will please Caesar
To be so good to Caesar as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

Por. Why, know’st thou any harm’s intended Towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow:
The throng that follows Caesar at the heels,
Of senators, of pretors, common suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:
I’ll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Caesar as he comes along.

Por. I must go in. Ay me, how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus,
The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise! Sure, the boy heard me: Brutus hath a suit
That Caesar will not grant. O, I grow faint.
Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;
Say I am merry: come to me again,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

[Exit severally.

ACT III.

SCENE I. — Rome. Before the Capitol; the Senate sitting above.

Ces. [To the Soothsayer] The Ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Caesar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Caesar! read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o’er-read,
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O Caesar, read mine first: for mine’s a suit
That touches Caesar nearer: read it, great Caesar.

Ces. What touches us ourself shall be last served.

Art. Delay not, Caesar; read it instantly.

Ces. What, is the fellow mad?

Por. Sirrah, give place.

Ces. What, urge you your petitions in the street?

Come to the Capitol.

CEasar goes up to the Senate-House, the rest following.

Pop. I wish your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cas. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well. [Advances to Caesar.

BRU. What said Popilius Lena?

Cas. He wish’d to-day our enterprise might thrive.

I fear our purpose is discovered.

BRU. Look, how he makes to Caesar: mark him.

Cas. Cassa, be sudden, for we fear prevention.

Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known,
Cassius or Caesar never shall turn back,
For I will stay myself.

BRU. Cassius, be constant:

Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;

For, look, he smiles, and Caesar doth not change.

Cas. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you,

Brutus,
He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exeunt Antony and Trebonius.

635
ACT III. JULIUS CAESAR.

DEC. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go, And presently prefer his suit to Caesar.

BRU. He is address'd: press near and second him.

Ces. [Aside] O Caesar, are you the first that yet bears your hand.

DEC. Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat An humble heart,— [Kneeling.

Ces. I must prevent thee, Cimber. These couchings and these lowly courtesies Might fire the blood of ordinary men, And turn pre-ordinance and first decree Into the law of children. Be not fond, To think that Caesar bears such rebel blood That will be th'evil from the true quality With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words, Low-crooked court'sies and base spaniel-fawning. Thy brother by descency is banished:
If thou dost bend and pray and fawn for him, I swear thee like a cur out of thy way:
Know, Caesar doth not wrong, without cause Will he be satisfied.

MET. Is there no voice more worthy than my own, To sound more sweetly in great Caesar's ear For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Ces. If thy hand, and not in flattering, Caesar; Desiring thee that Publius Cimber may Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

DEC. What, Brutus! Ces. Pardon, Caesar; Caesar, pardon:
As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall, To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber. Ces. I could be well moved, if I were as you; If I could pray to move, prayers would move me: But I am constant as the northern star, Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality There is no fellow in the firmament. The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks, They are all fire and every one doth shine, But there's but one in all doth hold his place: So in the world; 'tis furnish'd well with men, And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive; Yet in the number I do know but one That unassailable holds on his rank, Unspotted in the motion; that I am he, Let me a little show it, even in this; That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd, And constant do remain to keep him so.

CIA. O Caesar,—

Ces. Hence! wilt thou lift up Olympus? Ces. Great Caesar,—

Ces. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

CASCA. Speak, hands, for me!

CASCA. first, then the other Conspirators and Marcus Brutus stab Caesar.

Ces. Et tu, Brute? Then fall, Caesar! [Dies. Ces. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead! Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets. Ces. Some to the common pulits, and cry out 'Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!' Bruc. People and senators, be not affrighted; Fly not; stand still: ambition's debt is paid. Casca. Go to the pulbin, Brutus.

DEC. And Cassius too.

BRU. Where's Publius?

CAS. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny. Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Should change. [Cesar's great body of standing. Publius, good cheer; There is no harm intended to your person. Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius. Ces. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people, Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

BRU. Do so: and let no man abide this deed, But we the doers.

---

Re-enter Trebonius.

CAS. Where is Antony?

TRE. Fleed to his house amazed:
Men, wives and children stare, cry out and run As it were doomsday.

BRU. Fates, we will know your pleasures:
That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

CAS. Why, be that Caesar's boast no twenty years of life Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

BRU. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:
So are we Caesar's friends, that have abridged
His time of fearing death. Stoop, Romans, stoop,
And let us bathe our hands in Caesar's blood Up to the elbows, and besmeare our swords Then walk we forth, even to the market-place, And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads, Let 's all cry 'Peace, freedom and liberty!'

CAS. Stoop, then, and wash. How many ages Shall this our lofty scene be acted over [hence Inuates unnumber'd heroes, and unknown!

BRU. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport, That now on Pompey's basis lies along
No worthier than the dust?

CAS. So oft as that shall be, So often shall the knot of us be call'd
The men that gave their country liberty.

DEC. What, shall we forth?

CAS. Ay, every man away:
Brutus shall lead: and we will grace his heels With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

SERV. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel; Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down; And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say: Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest; Caesar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving; Say I love Brutus, and I honour him; Say I fear'd Caesar, honour'd him and loved him. If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony May safely come to him, and be resolved How Caesar hath deserved to lie in death, Mark Antony shall not love Caesar dead So well as Brutus living: but will follow The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus Thorough the hazards of this untrod state With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

BRU. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman; I never thought him worse; Tell him, so please him, come unto this place, He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour, Depart untouch'd.

SERV. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit. BRU. I know that we shall have him well to friend. CAS. I wish we may: but yet have I a mind That fears him much: and my misgiving still Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

BRU. But here comes Antony.

Re-enter Antony.

ANT. Welcome, Mark Antony.

ANT. O mighty Caesar! dost thou lie so low? Are all thy conquests, glory, triumphs, spoils, Shrunk to this little measure? Fare thee well. I know not, gentlemen, what you intend, Who else must be let blood, who else is rank: If I myself, there is no hour so fit For the Caesar's death hour: the instrument Of half that worth as those your swords, made rich With the most noble blood of all this world. I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard, Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke, Fulfill your pleasure. Live a thousand years, I shall not find myself so apt to die:

---

636
No place will please me so, no mean of death, As here by Caesar, and by you cut off.
The choice and master spirits of this age.
Bru. O Antony, beg not your death of us.
Thou know our blood is as cruel as thine,
As, by our hands and this our present act,
You see we do, yet see you but our hands
And this the bleeding business they have done:
Our hearts you see not; they are pitiful;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome—
As fire drives our blood, so doth our pity—
Hath done this deed on Caesar. For your part,
To you our swords have had keen points, Mark Antony;
Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts
Of brothers' temper, do receive you in
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.
Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's
In the disposing of new dignities.
Bru. Only be patient till we have appeased
The multitude, beside themselves with fear,
And then we will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Caesar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.
Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom,
Let each man render me his bloody hand:
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you;
Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand:
Now, Decius Brutus, yours; now yours, Metellus;
Yours, Cinna; and, my valiant Cassca, yours;
Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.
Gentlemen all,—alas, what shall I say?
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad ways you must conceit me,
Either a coward or a flatterer.
That I did love thee, Caesar, O, 'tis true:
If then thy spirit look upon us now,
Shall it not grieve thee dearer than thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,
Most noble! in the presence of thy corpse?
Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
It would become me better than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies. [hart,
Pardon me, Julius! Here wast thou bay'd, brave
Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand,
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethre.
O world, thou wast the forest to this hart;
And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.
How like a deer, strucken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie!
Cas. Mark Antony.—
Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:
The enemies of Caesar shall say this;
Then, in all our grief, it is cold modesty.
Cas. I blame you not for praising Caesar so;
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?
Ant. Therefore I took your hands, but was, indeed,
Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Caesar.
Friends I am with you; why should you love all,
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons
Why and wherein Caesar was dangerous.
Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle:
Our reasons are so full of good regard
That were you, Antony, the son of Caesar,
You should be satisfied.
Ant. That's all I seek:
And am moreover suitor that I may
Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.
Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.
Cas. [Aside to Bru.] You know not what you do; do not
That Antony speak in his funeral: [consent
Know you how much the people may be moved
By that which he will utter?
Bru. By your pardon;
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Caesar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest.
He speaks by leave and by permission.
And that we are contented Caesar shall
Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more than do us wrong.
Cas. I know not what may fall; I like it not.
Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Caesar's body.
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Caesar,
And say you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: and you shall speak
In the same pulpit wheroeto I am going;
After my speech is ended.
Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.
Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us.
[Exeunt all but Antony.
Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestic fury and fierce civil strife
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use
And dreadful objects so familiar
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war:
All pity choked with custom of fell deeds:
And Caesar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Atreus by his side come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
Cry 'Havoc,' and let slip the dogs of war;
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.
You serve Octavius Caesar, do you not?
Serc. I do, Mark Antony.
Ant. Caesar did write for him to come to Rome.
Serc. He did receive his letters, and is coming:
And bid me say to you by word of mouth—
O Caesar!—
[Seeing the body.
Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.
Passion, I see, is catching: for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?
Serc. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.
[chanced.
Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath
Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome so safe for Octavius yet:
He hepe, and tell him so. Yet, stay awhile;
Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men:
According to the which, this discours
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand.

SCENE II. — The Forum.

Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.
Citizens. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.
Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
Cassius, go you into the other street,
[friends.

637
And part the numbers.
Those that will have me speak, let them stay here;
Those that will follow Caesar, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Caesar's death.

First Cit. I will hear Brutus speak. [reasons,
Sec. Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their
When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit Cassius, with some of the Seniors. Brutus

Third Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: silence!
Brut. Be patient till the last.
Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for thy honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom,
and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his. If then that friend demand why Brutus rose against Caesar, this is my answer:— Not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were living and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all free men? As Caesar loved me, I weep for him; as he was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was ambituous in his time, There was more in store. His love for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition. Who is here so base that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended.
Who is here so vile that will not love his country?
If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

All. None, Brutus, none.

Brut. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Caesar than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is处方ed in the Capitol: his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy, nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter Antony and others, with Caesar's body.
Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony:
whosho, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart,—that, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

All. Live, Brutus! live the tribune! Rome's

First Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his Sec. Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

Third Cit. Let him be Cæsar.

Fourth Cit. Cæsar's better parts
Shall be crown'd in Brutus.

Fifth Cit. We'll bring him to his house
With shouts and clamours.

Brut. My countrymen,—
Sec. Cit. Peace, silence! Brutus speaks.
First Cit. Peace, ho!

Brut. Good countrymen, let me depart alone,
And, for my sake, stay here with Antony:
Do grace to Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech
Tending to Cæsar's glories; which Mark Antony,
By our permission, is allow'd to make.
I do entreat you, not a man depart,
Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.

First Cit. Let us hear Mark Antony.

Third Cit. Let him go up into the public chair;
We'll hear him. Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholding to you.

[Goest into the pulpit.

Fourth Cit. What does he say of Brutus?
Third Cit. He says, for Brutus' sake,
He finds himself beholding to us all.
Bequeathing it as a rich legacy
Unto their issue. [Antony.
Fourth Cit. We'll hear the will: read it, Mark
All. The will, the will! we will hear Caesar's will.
Ant. Had patience, gentle friends, I must not read it:
It is not meet you know how Caesar loved you.
You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;
And, being men, hearing the will of Caesar,
It will inflame you, it will make you mad:
'Tis good you know not that you lose his heirs;
For, if you should, it will be too late to come of it!
Fourth Cit. Read the will; we'll hear it, Antony;
You shall read us the will, Caesar's will.
Ant. Will you be patient? will you stay awhile, Antony?
I have o'ershot myself to tell you of it:
I fear I wrong the honourable men
Whose daggers have stab'd Caesar; I do fear it.
Fourth Cit. They were traitors: honourable men!
All. The will! the testament!
Sec. Cit. They were villains, murderers: the will!
read the will.
Ant. You will compell me, then, to read the will?
Then make a rush about the corpse of Caesar,
And let me show you him that made the will.
Shall I descend? and will you give me leave?
Several Cit. Come down.
Sec. Cit. Descend.
Third Cit. You shall have leave.
[Antony comes down.
Fourth Cit. A ring; stand round, [body.
First Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the Sec. Cit. Room for Antony, most noble Antony.
Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.
Several Cit. Stand back; room; bear back.
Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.
You all do know this mantle: I remember
The first time ever Caesar put it on:
'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent,
That day he overcame the Nervii:
Look, in this place ran Cassius' dagger through:
See what a rent the envious Cassie made:
Through this the well-beloved Brutus stab'd;
And as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,
Mark how the blood of Caesar follow'd it,
As rushing out of doors, to be resolved
If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no;
For Brutus, as you know, was Caesar's angel:
Judge, O you gods, how dearly Caesar loved him!
This was the most unkindest cut of all;
For when the noble Caesar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;
And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
Which all the while ran blood, great Caesar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.
Kind souls, what, when you see what you behold
Our Caesar's vest, or weep you, when you behold
Our Caesar's vest? Look you here, Look you here,
Here is himself, marr'd, as you see, with traitors.
First Cit. O pitious spectacle!
Sec. Cit. O noble Caesar!
Third Cit. O woful day!
Fourth Cit. O traitors, villains!
First Cit. O most bloody sight!
Sec. Cit. We will be revenged.
All. Revenge! About! Seek! Burn! Fire! Kill! Slay! Let not a traitor live!
Ant. Stay, countrymen.
First Cit. Peace there! hear the noble Antony.
Sec. Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.
Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir
To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They that have done this deed are honourable:
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not.
That made them do it: they are wise and honourable,
And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts:
I am no orator, as Brutus is:
But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend; and that they know full well
That gave me public leave to speak of him:
For I have more, I think, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;
I tell you that which you yourselves do know:
Show you sweet Caesar's wounds, poor poor dumb mouths,
And bid them speak for me: but were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits and put a tongue
In every wound of Caesar that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.
All. We'll mutiny.
First Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.
Third Cit. Away, then! come, seek the conspirators.
Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.
All. Peace, ho! Hear Antony. Most noble Antony!
Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what?
Wherein hath Caesar thus deserved your loves?
Alas, you know not: I must tell you, then:
You have forgot the will I told you of: [the will.
All. Most true. The will! Let's stay and hear
Ant. Here is the will, and under Caesar's seal.
To every Roman citizen he gives,
To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.
Sec. Cit. Most noble Caesar! We'll revenge his Third Cit. O royal Caesar! [death.
Ant. Hear me with patience.
All. Peace, ho!
Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbours and new-plantled orchards,
On this side Tiber: he hath left them you,
And to your heirs for ever, common pleasures,
To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.
Here was a Caesar! when comes such another?
First Cit. Never, never. Come, away, away!
We'll burn his body in the holy place,
And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
Take up the body.
Sec. Cit. Go fetch fire.
Third Cit. Pluck down benches.
Fourth Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, anything. [Exeunt Citizens with the body.
Ant. Now let it work. Mischief, thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt!

Enter a Servant.

How now, fellow?
Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is he?
Serv. He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house.
Ant. And shall I then straight to visit him:
He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us anything.
Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.
Ant. Belike they had some notice of the people,
How I had moved them. Bring me to Octavius.

SCENE III. — A street.

Enter Cinna the poet.

Cin. I dreamt to-night that I did feast with Caesar,
And things unlucky charge my fancy:
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

639
ACT IV.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Enter Citizens.

First Cit. What is your name?  Sec. Cit. Whither are you going?  Third Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.

First Cit. As a friend or an enemy?  Cin. As a friend.

Third Cit. Your name, sir, truly.  Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

First Cit. Tear him to pieces; he’s a conspirator.  Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.  Fourth Cit. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.  Cin. I am not Cinna the conspirator.

Fourth Cit. It is no matter, his name’s Cinna; pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.  Third Cit. Tear him, tear him! Come, brands, ho! fire-brands; to Brutus’, to Cassius’; burn all: some to Decius’ house, and some to Casca’s; some to Ligarius’: away, go!  [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A house in Rome.

Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus, seated at a table.

Ant. These many, then, shall die; their names are prick’d.  [Piddus?  Oct. Your brother too must die; consent you, Lep. I do consent.—  Oct. Prick him down, Antony.  Lep. Upon condition Piddus shall not live.

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man, Meet to be sent on errands: is it fit, The three-fold world divided, he should stand One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him; And took his voice who should be prick’d to die, In our blank sentence and prescription.  Ant. Antony, I have seen more days than you: And though we lay these honours on this man, To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads, He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold, To groan and sweat under the business, Either led or driven, as we point the way; And having brought our treasure where we will, Then take we down his load, and turn him off, Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears, And graze in commons.

Oct. You may do your will; But he’s a tried and valiant soldier.  Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and for that I do appoint him store of provender: It is a creature that I teach to fight, To wind, to stop, to run directly on, His corporal motion govern’d by my spirit. And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so; He must be taught and train’d and bid go forth; A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds On abstracts, arts and imitations, Which, out of use and stalled by other men, Begin his fashion: do not talk of him, But as a property. And now, Octavius, Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius Areleying powers: we must straight make head: Therefore let our alliance be combined, Our best friends made, our means stretch’d; And let us presently go sit in council,

How covert matters may be best disclosed, And open perils surest answered.

Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake, And bate no breath with many enemies; And some that smile have in their hearts, I fear, Millions of mischiefs.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Camp near Sardis. Before Brutus’s tent.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, Lucius, and Soldiers; Titinius and Pindarus meeting them.

Bru. Stand, ho!  Lucil. Give the word, ho! and stand.  Bru. What now, Lucilius! is Cassius near?  Lucil. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come To do you salutation from his master.  Bru. He greets me well. Your master, Pindarus, In his own change, or by ill officers, Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand, I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt But that my noble master will appear Such as he is, full of regard and honour.  Bru. He is not doubted. A word, Lucilius; How he received you, let me be resolved.  Lucil. With courtesy and with respect enough; But not with such familiar instances, Nor with such free and friendly conference, As he hath used of old.  Bru. Thou hast described A hot friend cooling: ever note, Lucilius, When love begins to sicken and decay, It useth an enforced ceremony. There are no tricks in plain and simple faith; But hollow men, like horses hot at hand, Make gallant show and promise of their mettle: But when they should endure the bloody spur, They fall their crests, and, like deceitful fades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?  [Ter’d; Lucil. They mean this night in Sardis to be quar- The greater part, the horse in general, Are come with Cassius.  Bru. Hark! he is arrived.  [Low march within. March gently on to meet him.

Enter Cassius and his powers.

Cos. Stand, ho!  Bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.  First Sol. Stand!
ACT IV.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Sec. Sol. Stand!
Third Sol. Stand!
Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.
Bru. Judge me, you gods! wrong I mine enemies?
And, if not so, how could I wrong a brother?
Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs;
And when you do them —
Bru. Cassius, be content;
Speak your griefs softly: I do know you well.
Before the eyes of both our armies here,
With which should perceive nothing but love from us,
Let us not wrangle: bid them move away;
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.
Cas. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground.
Bru. Lucilius, do you the like; and let no man
Come to our tent till we have done our conference.
Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Brutus's tent.

Enter Brutus and Cassius.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in
You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella [this:
For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
Wherein my letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man, were slighted off.
Bru. You wrong'd yourself to write in such a case.
Cas. In such a time as this it is not meet
That every nice offence should bear his comment.
Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm;
To sell and mar your offices for gold
To undeservers.
Cas. I am
An itching palm! You know that you are Brutus that speak this,
Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.
Bru. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,
And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.
Cas. Chastisement!
Bru. Remember March, the ides of March remember:
Did not great Julius bleed for justice's sake?
What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for justice? What, shall one of us,
That struck the foremost man of all this world
But for small wrongs, shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes,
And sell the mighty space of our large honours
For so much trash as may be grasped thus?
I had rather be a dog, and lay the moon,
Than such a Roman.
Cas. Brutus, bay not me;
I'll endure it: you forget yourself,
To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, ableber than yourself
To make conditions.
Bru. Go to; you are not, Cassius.
Cas. I am.
Bru. I say you are not.
Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself;
Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.
Bru. Away, slight man!
Cas. Is't possible?
Bru. I hear me, for I will speak.
Must I give way and room to your rash choler?
Shall I be frighted when a madman stares?
Cas. O ye gods, ye gods! must I endure all this?
Bru. All this! ay; more: fret till your proud heart break;
Go show your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge?
Must I observe you? must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humour? By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you; for, from this day forth,
I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.
Cas. Is it come to this?
Bru. You say you are a better soldier:
Let it appear so: make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well: for mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men.
Cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong me,
I said, an elder soldier, not a better: [Bruutus;
Did I say 'better'? If you did, I care not.
Cas. When Cæsar lived, he durst not thus have moved me. [him.
Bru. Peace, peace! you durst not so have tempted
Cas. I durst not!
Bru. No.
Cas. What, durst not tempt him!
Bru. For your life you durst not.
Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love;
I may do that I shall be sorry for.
Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for.
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats,
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me:
For I can raise no money by vile means:
By heaven, I had rather coil my heart,
And drop my blood for glaumas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection: I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions,
Which you denied me: was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answer'd Cæsars Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To look such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts;
Dash him to pieces!
Cas. I denied you not.
Bru. You did.
Cas. I did not: he was but a fool that brought
My answer back. Brutus hath rived my heart:
A friend should bear his friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.
Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.
Cas. You love me not.
Bru. I do not like your faults.
Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults.
Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they do
As huge as high Olympus. [appear
Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is aware of the world;
Hated by one he loves; brace by his brother;
Check'd like a bondman; all his faults observed,
Set in a note-book, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes! There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast; within, a heart
Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold:
If thou best a Roman, take it forth;
I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike, as thou didst at Cæsar; for, I know,
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lovedst him
Than ever thou lovedst Cassius. [better
Bru. So sheathe thy dagger: Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonour shall be humour.
O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb
That carries anger as the flint bears fire;
Who, much enforced, shows a hastily spark,
And straight is cold again.
Cas. Hath Cassius lived
To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him?
Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too.

641
Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your
Bru. And my heart too. [hand.
Cas. O Brutus! [hand.
Bru. What's the matter?
Cas. Have not you love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour which my mother gave me
Makes me forgetful?
Bru. Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth,
When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.

Poet. [Within] Let me go in to see the generals;
There is some grudge between 'em, 'tis not meet
They be alone.

Lucil. [Within] You shall not come to them.

Poet. [Within] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet, followed by Lucilius, Titinius, and Lucius.

Cas. How now! What's the matter? [mean?
Poet. For shame, you generals! what do you
Love, and be friends, as two such men should be;
For I have seen more years, I'm sure, than ye.
Cas. Ha, ha! how vilely doth this cynic rhyme!
Bru. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence!
Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.
Bru. I'll know his humour, when he knows his time:
What should the wars do with these juggling fools?
Companion, hence!
Cas. Away, away, be gone! [Exit Poet.
Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders
Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.
Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala
Immediately to us. [Exit.

[Exeunt Lucilius and Titinius.

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine! [Exit Lucius.
Cas. I did not think you could have been so angry.
Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.
Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use,
If you give place to accidental evils.
Bru. No man bears sorrow better. Portia is dead.
Cas. Ha! Portia!
Bru. She is dead.
Cas. How escaped I killing when I cross'd you so?
O insupportable and touching loss!
Upon what sickness?
Bru. Impatient of my absence,
And grief that young Octavius with Mark Antony
Have made themselves so strong—for with her
That tiding came;—with this she fell distract,
And, her attendants absent, swallowed fire.
Cas. And died so?
Bru. Even so.
Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Re-enter Lucius with wine and toper.

Bru. Speak no more of her. Give me a bowl of
In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [wine.
Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.
Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erwells the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.
Bru. Come in, Titinius! [Exit Lucius.

Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.

Welcome, good Messala.

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities.
Cas. Portia, art thou gone?
Bru. No more, I pray you.
Messala, I have here received letters,
That young Octavius and Mark Antony
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition toward Philippus.
Cas. Myself have letters of the same tenor.
Bru. With what addition?
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered:

You said the enemy would not come down,
But keep the hills and upper regions;
It proves not so: their battles are at hand;
They mean to warn us at Philippi here;
Answering before we do demand of them.
Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know
Wherefore they do it: they could be content
To visit other places; and come down
With fearful bravery, thinking by this face
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare, you, generals:
The enemy comes on in gallant show;
Their bloody sign of battle is hung out,
And something to be done immediately.
Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on,
Upon the left hand of the even field.
Oct. Upon the right hand I; keep thou the left.
Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?
Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

[March.

Let me see, let me see; is not the leaf turn’d down
Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

How ill this taper burns! Ha! who comes here?
I think it is the weakness of nine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
It comes upon me. Art thou any thing?
Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That maketh my blood cold and my hair to stare?
Speak to me what thou art.
Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.
Bru. Why comest thou?
Ghost. To tell thee that shall see me at Philippi.
Bru. Well; then I shall see thee again?
Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.
Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi, then.

[Exit Ghost.

Now I have taken heart thou vanishest!
Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.
Boy, Lucius! Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake! Claus.
The strings of my lute, are false. [thys!
Bru. He thinks he still is at his instrument.
Lucius, awake!

Luc. My lord?
Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so criedst out?
Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.
Bru. Yes, that thou didst: didst thou see any thing?
Luc. Nothing, my lord.
Bru. Sleep again, Lucius. Sirrah Claudius! [To Var.] Fellow thou, awake!
Var. My lord?
Clau. My lord?
Bru. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?
Var. Claud. Did we, my lord?
Bru. Ay: saw you any thing?
Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.
Clau. Nor I, my lord.
Bru. Go and commend me to my brother Cassius;
Bid him set on his powers betimes before,
And we will follow.
Var. Claud. It shall be done, my lord.

[Exeunt.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army;
Lucilius, Titinius, Messala, and others.

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.
Cas. Stand fast, Titinius: we must out and talk.
Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?
Ant. No, Caesar, we will answer on their charge.
Make forth; the generals would have some words.
Oct. Stir not until the signal.
Bru. Words before blows: is it so, countrymen?
Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.
Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes,
Octavius.
[words:
Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good
Witness the hole you made in Caesar’s heart,
Crying ‘Long live! hail, Caesar!’
Cas. Antony,
The posture of your blows are yet unknown;
But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless.
Ant. Not stingless too.
Bru. O, yes, and soundless too;
For you have stol’n their buzzing, Antony,
And very wisely threat before you sting.
[gers
Ant. Villains, you did not so, when your vile dag-
Hack’d one another in the sides of Caesar:
You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds,
And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Caesar's feet;
Whilst damn'd Casca, like a cur, behind
Struck Caesar on the neck. O you flattlers!

Cas. Flatterers! Now, Brutus, thank yourself:
This tongue that had not one so to-day,
If Cassius might have ruled.

Oct. Come, come, the cause: if arguing make us sweat,
The proof of it will turn to redress drops.
Look;
I draw a sword against conspirators;
When think you that the sword goes up again?
Never, till Caesar's three and thirty wounds
Be well avenged; or till another Caesar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

Brut. Caesar, thou canst not die by traitors' hands,
Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

Oct. So I hope;
I was not born to die on Brutus's sword.

Brut. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable.

Cas. A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honor:
Join'd with a masquer and a reveller
[our, Old Cassius still!]

Oct. Come, Antony, away!
Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth:
If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;
If not, when you have stomachs.
[Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and their army.

Cas. Why, now, blow wind, swell billow and swim bark!
The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Brut. Ho, Lucullus! hark, a word with you.
Lucil. [Standing forth] My lord?

Brutus and Lucullus converse apart.

Cas. [Standing forth] What says my general?
Mes. [Standing forth] What says my general?

Cas. Messala, this is my birth-day; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala:
Be thou my witness that against my will,
As Pompey was, am I compelled to set
Upon one battle all our liberties.
You know that I held Epicurus strong
And his opinion: now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do pressage.
 Coming from Sardis, on our former ensign
Two slyly conspired, who they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;
Who to Philippi here consort'd us:
This morning are they fled away and gone;
And in their steads do ravens, crows and kites,
Fly o'er our heads and downward look on us,
As we were sickly prey: their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;
For I am fresh of spirit and resolved
To meet all perils very constantly.

Brut. Even so, Lucullus.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods to-day stand friendly, that we may,
Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age!
But since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befal.
If we do this battle, then is this
The very last time we shall speak together:
What are you then determined to do?

Brut. Even by the rule of that philosophy
By which I did blame Cato for the death
Which he did give himself, I know not how,
But I do find it cowardly and vile.
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life: arming myself with patience
To stay the providence of some high powers
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Thorough the streets of Rome?

Brut. No, Cassius, no: think not, thou noble Ro-
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work the idea of March begin;
And whether we shall meet again I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do not meet again, why then,
If not, 'tis true this parting was well made.

Brut. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true this parting was well made.

Cas. Why, then, lead on. O, that a man might
The end of this day's business ere it come! [know
But it suffice'th that the day will end,
And then the end is known. Come, ho! away!
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. The field of battle.

Alarum. Enter Brutus and Messalla.

Brut. Ride, ride, Messalla, ride, and give these bills
Unto the legions on the other side. [Loud alarum.
Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.

Ride, ride, Messalla: let them all come down.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Another part of the field.

Alarumns. Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy:
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.
Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early;
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclosed.

Enter Pindarus.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord:
Fly, there's no more nobility in grief:

Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou love me, Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he be brought thee up to yonder troopes,
And here again; that I may rest assured
Whether yond troopes are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill;
My sight was ever thick: regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou notes't about the field.

[Exit Pindarus.

Pindarus ascends the hill.

This day I breathed first: time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass. Sirrah, what news?

Pin. [Above] O my lord!

Cas. What news now?

Pin. [Above] Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;
Yet he spurs on. Now they are almost on him.
Now, Titinius! Now some light. O, he lights too.
He's ta'en. [Shout.] And, hark! they shout for joy.

Cas. Come down, behold no more;
0, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!
Pindarus descends.

Come hither, sirrah: In Parthia did I take thee prisoner; And then I swore thee, saving of thy life, That whatsoever I did bid thee do, [oath; Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine Now be a freeman: and with this good sword, That ran through Caesar's bowels, search this bosom. Stand not to answer: here, take thou the hills; And, when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now, Guide thou the sword. [Pindarus stabs him.] Caesar, thou art revenged, Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

[Enter Titinius with Messala.]

Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power, As Cassius' legions are by Antony. Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius. Mes. Where did you leave him? Tit. With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. Mes. Is not that he that lies upon the ground? Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart! Mes. Is not that he? Tit. No, this was he, Messala, But Cassius is no more. O setting sun, As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night, So in his red blood Cassius' day is set; The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone; Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done! Mistrust of my success hath done this deed. Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed. O hateful error, melancholy's child, Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men The things that are not? O error, soon conceived, Thou never comest unto a happy birth, But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee! Tit. What, Pindarus! where art thou, Pindarus? Mes. Seek him, Titinius, whilst I go to meet The noble Brutus, thrusting this report Into his ears; I may say, thrusting it; For piercing steel and darts envenomed Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hee you, Messala, And I will seek for Pindarus the while. [Exit Messala.]

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius? Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory, [shouts And bid me give it thee? Didst thou not hear their Alas, thou hast misconstrued everything! But, hold thee, take this garland on thy brow; 'Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I Will do his bidding. Brutus, come apace, • And see how I regarded Cassius. By your leave, gods:—this is a Roman's part: Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart. [Kills himself.]

[Enter Titinius, with Brutus, young Cato, Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.]

Cato. He is slain.

Bru. O Julius Caesar, thou art mighty yet! Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords In our own proper entrails. [Low alarums.]

Cato. Brave Titinius! Look, whether he have not crown'd dead Cassius! Brutus. Are yet two Romans living such as these? The last of all the Romans, fare thee well! It is impossible that ever Rome Should breed thy fellow. Friends, I owe more tears To this dead man than you shall see me pay. I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time. Come, therefore, and to Thisos send his body: His funerals shall not be in our camp, Let it discomfort us. Lucilius, come; And come, young Cato; let us to the field. Labeo and Flavius, set our battles on: 'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

[Enter Titinius, with Messala, Brutus, Cassius, Antony, Lucilius, and others.]

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your heads! Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go with me? I will proclaim my name about the field: I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho! A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend; I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho! Brutus. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I; Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus! Lucilius. O young and noble Cato, art thou down? Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius; And mayst be honour'd, being Cato's son. First Sold. Yield, or thou diest. Lucilius. Only I yield to die: There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight; [Offering money.] Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death. First Sold. We must not. A noble prisoner! Sec. Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en. [Exeunt.]

First Sold. I'll tell the news. Here comes the Enter Antony.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord. Ant. Where is he? Lucilius. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough: I dare assure thee that no enemy Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus: The gods defend him! and he turns great a shame! When you do find him, or alive or dead, He will be found like Brutus, like himself. Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you, A prize no less in worth: keep this man safe; Give him all kindness: I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on, And see whether Brutus be alive or dead; And bring us word unto Octavius' tent How everything is changed. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the field.

[Enter Brutus, Dardanius, CItius, Strato, and Volumnius.] Brutus. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock. CIt. Statilius show'd the torch-light, but, my lord, He came not back: he is or ta'en or slain. Brutus. Sit thee down, CItius: saying is the word; It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, CItius. [Whispers.]

ACT V.

JULIUS CAESAR.

SCENE V.

Dur. To kill him, Citius. Look, he meditates.

Cit. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.

Bru. Come hither, good Volumnius; list a word.

Vol. What says my lord?

Bru. Why, this, Volumnius: The ghost of Caesar hath appear'd to me
Two several times by night; at Sardis once,
And, this last night, here in Philipp fields:
I know my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:

[Love alarums.

It is more worthy to leap in ourselves,
Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'st that we two went to school together:
Even for that our love of old, I prithee,
Hold thou my sword-hills, whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.

Cit. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.

Bru. Farewell to you; and you; and you, Volumnius,
Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;
Farewell to thee too, Strato. Countrymen,
My heart doth joy that yet in all my life
I found no man but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this losing day
More than Octavius and Mark Antony
By this vile conquest shall attain unto.
So fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue
Hath almost ended his life's history:
Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,
That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Ory withe, 'Fly, fly, fly!'

Cit. Fly, my lord, fly.

Hence! I will follow.

[Exeunt Citius, Dardanius, and Volumnius.

I prithee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:
Thou art a fellow of a good respect;

Thy life hath had some snatch of honour in it:
Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,
While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Stru. Give me your hand first. Fare you well, my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato. [Runs on his sword.]

Cæsar, now be still:
I kill'd not thee with half so good a will. [Dies.

Oct. What man is that? [master?]

Mes. My master's man. Strato, where is thy Stru. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala:
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
For Brutus only overcame himself,
And no man else hath honour by his death.

Lucil. So Brutus should be found. I thank thee,

Brutus,
That thou hast proved Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that served Brutus, I will entertain them.
Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Stru. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Mes. How did my master, Strato?

Stru. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all:
All the conspirators save only he
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;
He only, in a general honest thought
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle, and the elements
So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, 'This was a man!'

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.
So call the field to rest; and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.]

SCENE I.—A desert place.

Thunder and lightning. Enter three Witches.

First Witch. When shall we three meet again
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?
Sec. Witch. When the herbury's done,
When the battle's lost and won.
Third Witch. That will be ere the set of sun.
First Witch. Where the place?
Sec. Witch. Upon the heath.
Third Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.
First Witch. I come, Graymalkin!
Sec. Witch. Paddock calls.
Third Witch. Anon.
All. Fair is foul, and foul is fair:
Hover through the fog and filthy air. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A camp near Forres.

Alarum within. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lennox, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Sergeant.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.
Mal. This is the sergeant
Who like a good and hearty soldier fought
'Gainst my captivity. Hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou didst leave it.
Ser. Doubtful it stood:
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together
And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald—
Worthy to be a rebel, for to that
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him—from the western isles
Of kerns and gallowglasses is supplied:
And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore: but all 's too weak:
For brave Macbeth—well he deserves that name—
Disclaiming fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smoked with bloody execution,
Like valour's minion carved out his passage
Till he faced the slave;
Which ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements.
Dun. O valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!
Ser. As whence the sun 'gins his reflection Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break,
So from that spring whence comfort seem'd to come
Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark:
No sooner justice had with valour arm'd
Compell'd these skipping kerns to trust their heels,
But the Norweyan lord surveying vantage,
With furnish'd arms and new supplies of men
Began a fresh assault.
Dun. Dismay'd not this
Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?
Ser. Yes;
As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion.
If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharged with double cracks, so they Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell.
But I am faint, my gashes cry for help. [wounds;
Dun. So well thy words become thee as thy
They smack of honour both. Go get him surgeons.
[Exit Sergeant, attended.

Who comes here?

Enter Ross.

Ser. The worthy thane of Ross.
Len. What a haste looks through his eyes! So should he look
That seems to speak things strange.
Ross. God save the king!
Dun. Whence camest thou, worthy thane?
Ross. From Fife, great king;
Where the Norweyan banners flout the sky
And fan our people cold. Norway himself,

ACT I.

MACBETH.

Scene III. — A heath near Forres.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

First Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?

Third Witch. Sister, where thou? [Lap.

First Witch. A sailor’s wife had chestnuts in her bosom, and munch’d, and munch’d, and munch’d. — Give me that out:

‘Aroint thee, witch!’ the rump-fed ronyon cries.
Her husband’s to Aleppo gone, master o’ the Tiger:
But in a sieve I’ll thither sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I’ll do, I’ll do, and I’ll do.

Second Witch. Thou’rt kind.

Third Witch. And I another.

First Witch. I myself have all the other,
And the very ports they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I’ the shipman’s card.
I will drain him dry as hay;
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his pent-house lid;
He shall live a man forbid;
Wear ye se’nnights nine times nine
Shall be dwindle, peak and pincp:
Though his bark cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be tempest-tost.
Look what I have.

Second Witch. Show me, show me.

First Witch. Here I have a plot’s thumb,
Wreck’d as homeward he did come. [Drum within.

Third Witch. A drum, a drum!

Macbeth doth come.

All. The weird sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about:
Thrice to thine and thrice to mine
And thrice again, to make up nine.
Peace! the charm’s wound up.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macbeth. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.

Banquo. How far is ’t call’d to Forres? What are
So wither’d and so wild in their attire,
That look not like the inhabitants o’ the earth,
And yet are on ’t? Live you? or are you aught
That man may question? You seem to understand
By each at once her choppy finger laying [sca
Upon her skinny lips: you should be women,
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Macbeth. Speak, if you can: what are you?

First Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane
Of Glamis!

Second Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane
Of Cawdor!

Third Witch. All hail, Macbeth, thou shalt be King hereafter.

Banquo. Good sir, why do you start: and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair? ’Tis the name of truth,
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner
You greet with present grace and great prediction
Of noble having and of royal hope,
That he seems rapt withal: to me you speak not.
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate.

First Witch. Hail!

Second Witch. Hail!

Third Witch. Hail!

First Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.

Second Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

Third Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou
So all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!

Macbeth. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:
By Sinel’s death I know I am thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and to be king
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than in theRISE of empty self-comparisons,
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetic greeting? Speak, I charge
you.

Witches vanish.

Banquo. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has;
And these are of them. Whither are they vanish’d?

Macbeth. Into the air; and what seem’d corporal
Melted
As breath into the wind. Would they had stay’d!

Banquo. Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten on the insane root
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macbeth. Your children shall be kings.

Banquo. I shall be king.

Macbeth. And thane of Cawdor too: went it not so?

Banquo. To the selfsame tune and words. Who’s

Enter Ross and Angus.

Ross. The king hath happily received, Macbeth,
The news of thy success; and when he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebels’ fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his: silenced with that,
In viewing o’er the rest o’ the selfsame day,
He finds thee in the stout Norwegian ranks,
Nothing afraid of what thyself didst make Strange images of death. As thick as hail
Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom’s great defence,
And pour’d them down before him.

Angus. We are sent to give thee from our royal master thanks;
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee.

Ross. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!
For it is thine.

Banquo. What, can the devil speak true?

Macbeth. The thane of Cawdor lives: why do you
In borrow’d robes? [dress me

Angus. Who was the thane lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was combined
With those of Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour’d in his country’s wreck, I know not;
ACT I.

MACBETH.

SCENE V.

Enter Lady Macbeth, reading a letter.

Lady M. They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them further, they made themselves air, into which they vanished. While I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who all-hail’d me “Thane of Cawdor;” by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with “Hail, king that shalt be!” This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness, that thou mightst not lose the due of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.” Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be What thou art promised: yet do I fear thy nature; It is too full o’ the milk of human kindness To catch the nearest way: thou wouldst be great: Art not without ambition, but without [highly. The fitness of the time, and the manner of us: what thou wouldst That wouldst thou holily? wouldst not play false, And yet wouldst wrongfully win: thou hadst have, great Glamis, That which cries “Thus thou must do, if thou have And that which rather thou dost fear to do”
Than wishest should be undone? Hie thee hither, That I may pour my spirits in thine ear; And chastise with the valour of my tongue All that impedes thee from the golden round, Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem To have thee crown’d withal.

Enter a Messenger.

What is your tidings?

Mess. The king comes here to-night. Lady M. Then 'tis mad to say it: Is he thy master with him? who, were 't so, Would have inform’d for preparation. [coming; Mess. So please you, it is true: our thane Is One of my fellows had the speed of him, Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more Than would make up his message. Lady M. Give him tending; He brings great news. [Exit Messenger. The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan Under my battlements. Come, you spirits That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here, And from this hour take off this skimmed head Of direc cruelty! make thick my blood; Stop up the access and passage to remorse, That no compunctious visitings of nature Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between The effect and it! Come to my woman’s breasts, And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers, Wherever in your sightless substances You wait on nature’s mischief! Come, thick night, And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell, That my keen knife see not the wound it makes, Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark, To cry’ Hold, hold!

Enter Macbeth.

Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor! Greater than both, by all, the half-hall hereafter! Thy letters have transported me beyond This ignorant present, and I feel now The future in the instant. Macb. My dearest love, Duncan comes here to-night. Lady M. And when goes hence? Macb. To-morrow, as he purposes. Lady M. O, never Shall sun that morrow see! Your face, my thane, is as a book where men May read strange matters. To begnile the time, Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye, Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower, But be the serpent under 't. He that 's coming Must be provided for: and you shall put This night’s great business into my dispatch; Which shall to all our days and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Macb. We will speak further. Lady M. Only look up clear; To alter favour ever is to fear: Leave all the rest to me. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Before Macbeth’s castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Banquo, Lennox, Macduff, Ross, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air Nimblly and sweetly recommends itself Unto our gentle senses. Ban. This guest of summer, The temple-haunting martlet, does approve, By his loved mansionry, that the heaven’s breath Smells woosingly here: no jotty, frieze, Buttrest, nor coign of vantage, but this bird Hath made his pendent bed and pro文案结束
ACT II.

MACBETH.

SCENE I.—Court of Macbeth's castle.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance bearing a torch before him.

Ban. How goes the night, boy? Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take 't, 't is later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword. There's husbandry in heaven;

Their candles are all out. Take thee that too.

A heavy situation lies like lead upon me,

And yet I would not sleep: merciful powers,

Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature

Gives way to in repose!

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a torch.

Give me my sword.

Who's there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king's a-bed:

Hath been in unusual pleasure, and

Sent forth great largess to your offices.

This diamond he gives your wife withal,

By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up
In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepared,

Our will became the servant to defect;

Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All's well.

I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:

To you they have show'd some truth.

Macb. I think not of them:

Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve,

We would spend it in some words upon that business.

If you would grant the time.

Macb. At your kind'st leisure.

If you shall cleave to my consent, when 'tis,

It shall make honour for you.

So I lose none

In seeking to augment it, but still keep

Lady M. But screw your courage to the sticking-place,

And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep—

Where' er the rather shall his day's hard journey

Soundly invite him—his two chamberlains

Will I with wine and wassail so convince

That memory, the warden of the brain,

Shall be a furnace, and the receipt of reason

A limbeck only: when in swinish sleep

Their drear'd natures lie as in a death,

What cannot you and I perform upon

The unguarded Duncan? what not put upon

His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt

Of our great quell?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only;

For thy undaunted mallet should compose

Nothing but males. Will it not be received,

When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two

Of his own chamber and used their very daggers,

That they have done 't?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,

As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar

Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up

Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.

Away, and mock the time with fairest show:

False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt.]

My bosom franchised and allegiance clear,

I shall be counsel'd.

Macb. Good repose the while!

Ban. Thanks, sir: the like to you!

Macb. Go bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,

She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,

The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight? or art thou but

A dagger of the mind, a false creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going;

And such an instrument I was to use.

Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still,

And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood,

Which was not so before. There's no such thing:

It is the bloody business which infurns

Thus to mine eyes. Now 'er the one half-world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain's sleep; witchcraft celebrates

Pule Hecate's offerings, and wither'd murder,

Alarum'd by his sentinel, the wolf,

Whose howl! 's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,

With Tarquin's ravishing stiles, towards his design

Moves like a ghost. Thou sure and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear

Thy very stones prate of my whereabout,

And take the present horror from the time,

Which now suits with it. Whiles I threat, he lives:

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

[ bell rings.

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan: for it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell.

[Exit.
SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk hath made me bold; What hath quench'd them hath given me fire. Hark! Peace! It was the very shaft shriek'd, the fatal bellman, Which gives the stern'st good-night. He is about The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms [it:] Do mock their charge with snores: I have drugg'd Their possets, That death and nature do contend about them, Whether they live or die. Macb. [Within] Who's there? what, ho! Lady M. Alack, I am afraid they have awaked, And 'tis not done. The attempt and not the deed Confounds us. Hark! I laid their daggersready; He could not miss'em. Had he not resembled My father as he slept, I had done't.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. I have done the deed. Didst thou not hear a noise? [ets cry. Lady M. I heard the owl scream and the crick; Did not you speak? Macb. When? Lady M. Macb. Lady M. Ay. Macb. Hark! Who lies in the second chamber? Lady M. Donalbain. Macb. This is a sorry sight. [Looking on his hands. Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight. Macb. There's one did laugh in's sleep, and one cried 'Murder!' [then: That they did wake each other: I stood and heard But they did say their prayers, and address'd them Again to sleep. Lady M. There are two lodged together. Macb. One cried 'God bless us!' and 'Amen' the other; As they had seen me with these hangman's hands. Listening their fear, I could not say 'Amen;' When they did say 'God bless us!' Lady M. Consider it not so deeply. Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce I had most need of blessing, and 'Amen' ['Amen'] Stuck in my throat. Lady M. These deeds must not be thought After these ways; so, it will make us mad. Macb. Methought I heard a voice cry 'Sleep no more!' Macbeth doth murder sleep,' the innocent sleep, Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleave of care, The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath, Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course, Chief nourisher in life's feast,—

Lady M. What do you mean? Macb. Still it cried 'Sleep no more!' to all the Ghosts. 'Glumis hath murder'd sleep, and therefore Cawdor Shall sleep no more; Macbeth shall sleep no more.' Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane, You do unbend your noble strength, to think So brain-sickly of things. Go get some water, And wash this filthy witness from your hand. Why did you bring these daggers from the place? They must lie there: go carry them; and smear The sleepy grooms with blood. Macb. I'll go no more: I am afraid to think what I have done; Look not upon me: I am no more. Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macb. Is thy master stirring?

Enter Macbeth.

Our knocking has awakened him; here he comes.

Len. Good morrow, noble sir.

Macb. Good morrow, both.

Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet. He did command me to call timely on him:
I have almost slipp’d the hour.

Macb. I’ll bring you to him.

Macd. I know this is a joyful trouble to you;
But yet ’tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in physics pain.
This is the door.

Macd. ’Twas a rough night.
Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Re-enter Macduff.

Macb. O horror, horror, horror! Tongue nor Cannot conceive nor name thee! [heart
Macd. ]

What’s the matter?

Macd. Confusion now hath made his master-
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope [piece!
The Lord’s anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o’ the building!

Macd. What is’t you say? the life?
Len. Mean you his majesty? [sight
Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your
With a new Gorgon: do not bid me speak;
See, and then speak yourselves.

[Exit Macbeth and Lennox.

Enter Lady Macbeth. [bell rings.

Lady M. What’s the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? speak, speak!

Macb. O gentle lady,
’Tis not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman’s ear,
Would murder as it fell.

Enter Banquo.

O Banquo, Banquo,
Our royal master’s murder’d!

Lady M. What, in our house?

Ban. Too cruel any where.
Dear Duff, I prithee, contradict thyself,
And say it is not so.

Re-enter Macbeth and Lennox, with Ross.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had lived a blessed time; for, from this instant,
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Forres. The palace.

Enter Banquo.

Ban. Thou hast it now: king, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weird women promised, and, I fear,
Thou play'st most foully for 't: yet it was said
It should not stand in thy posterity,
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them—
As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine—
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But hush! no more.

Senet sounded. Enter Macbeth, as king, Lady Macbeth, as queen, Lennox, Ross, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all-thing unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness
Command upon me; to which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie.
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desired your good advice,
Which still hath been both grave and prosperous,
In this day's council; but we 'll take to-morrow.
Is 't far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night
For a dark hour or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd
In England and in Ireland, not confessing
Their cruel paricide, filling their hearers...
ACT III.
MACBETH.
SCENE II.

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now go to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.]

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

First Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now have you consider'd of my speeches? Know that it was he in the times past which held you so under fortune, which you thought had been our innocent self: this I made good to you in our last conference, pass'd in probability with you, how you were borne in hand, how cross'd, the instruments, might who fought with them, and all things else that to half a soul and to a motion crazed.

Say, 'Tis thus did Banquo.'

First Mur. You made it known to us.

Macb. I did so, and went further, which is now our point of second meeting. Do you find your patience so predominant in your nature that you can let this go?—Are you so gospel'd to pray for this good man and for his issue, whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave and beggar'd yours for ever?

First Mur. We are men, my liege.

Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men; as boar-hounds, greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs, Shoughs, water-rugs and demi-wolves, are cleft all by the name of dogs: the valued file distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle, the housekeeper, the hunter, every one according to the gift which bounteous nature hath in him clois'd; whereby he does receive particular addition, from the bill that writes them all alike: and so of men.

Now, if you have a station in the file, not 'tis the worst rank of mankind, say 'tis; and I will put that business in your bosoms, whose execution takes your enemy off, grapples you to the heart and love of us, who wear our health but sickly in his life, which in his death were perfect.

Sec. Mur. I am one, my liege, whom the vile blows and buffets of the world have so incensed that I am reckless what I do to injure the world.

First Mur. And I another so weary with disasters, tug'd with fortune, that I would set my life on any chance, to mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you know Banquo was your enemy.

Both Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance, that every minute of his being thrusts against my near'st life: and though I could with bare free hand, and blow my will avouch it, yet I must not.

For certain friends that are born into mine, whose loves I may not drop, but will fall'st his, who I myself struck down; and thence it is, that I to your assistance do make love, masking the business from the common eye for sundry weighty reasons.

Sec. Mur. We shall, my lord, perform what you command us.

First Mur. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour at most, I will advise you where to plant yourselves; and you shall see and frame your perfect joy of the time, the moment on 't; for 't must be done to-night, and something from the palace; always thought that I require a clearness; and with him—To leave no rubs nor botches in the work—Pleace his son, that keeps him company, whose absence is no less material to me than is his father's; must embrace the fate of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart: I'll come to you anon.

Both Mur. We are resolved, my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight: abide within.

[Exit Murderers.]

It is concluded. Banquo, thy soul's flight, if it find heaven, must find it out to-night.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The palace.

Enter Lady Macbeth and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his for a few words.

[leisure.]

Serv. Madam, I will.

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent, where our desire is got without content: 'tis safer to be that which we destroy than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter Macbeth.

How now, my lord! why do you keep alone, of sorriest fancies your companions making, using those thoughts which should indeed have died with them? they think on? things without all remedy should be without regard: what's done is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it: she'll close and be herself, whilst our poor malice remains in danger of her former tooth. But let the frame of things disjoint, both the words suffer, ere we will eat our meal in fear and sleep in the affliction of these terrible dreams that shake us nightly: better be with the dead, whom we, to gain our peace, have sent to peace, than on the torture of the mind to lie in restless ecstasy: Duncan is in his grave; after life's fitful fever he sleeps well: treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison, malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing, can touch him further.

Lady M. Come on; gentle my lord, seek o'er your reins'd looks; be bright and jovial among your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I love; and so, I pray, be you: let your remembrance apply to Banquo; present him eminence, both with eye and tongue: unsafe the while, that we must love our honours in these flattering streams, and make our faces vizars to our hearts, disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife! thou know'st that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives. Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eternally.

Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable; then be thou jocund: ere the bat hath flown his cloister'd flight, ere to black Hecate's summons the sherd-born beetle with his drowsy hunns hath rung night's yarning peal, there shall be done a deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck, till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling night, shall the tender of pitiful day; and with thy blooeful invisible hand cancel and tear to pieces that great bond which keeps thy soul alive. Light thickens; and the crow Good things of day begin to droop and drowse: whiles night's black agents to their prey's do rouse. Thou marvell'st at my words: but hold thee still:
Things had begun make strong themselves by ill.
So, prithee, go with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — A park near the palace.
Enter three Murderers.

First M. But who did bid thee join with us?
Third M. Macbeth.
Sec. M. He needs not our mistrust, since he
Our offices and what we have to do [delivers
To the direction just.

First M. Then stand with us.
The west ye glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the latest traveller space
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

Third M. [Hark! I hear horses.
Ban. [Within] Give us a light there, ho!
Sec. M. Then 'tis he: the rest
That are within the note of expectation
Already are i' the court.

First M. His horses go about.
Third M. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Sec. M. A light, a light!

Enter Banquo, and Fleance with a torch.

Third M. 'Tis he.
First M. Stand to 't.
Ban. It will be rain to-night.

First M. Let it come down.

[They set upon Banquo.

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly,
Thou musty revenge. O slave! [fly!

[Dies. Fleance escapes.

Third M. Who did strike out the light?
First M. Was 't not the way?
Third M. There 's but one down; the son is fled.

Sec. M. We have lost
Best half of our affair.

First M. Well, let 's away, and say how much is done. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — The same. Hall in the palace.

A banquet prepared. Enter Macbeth, Lady Macbeth, Ross, Lennox, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees; sit down;
And last with the hearty welcome that first Lords.

Lady M. Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.
Our hostess keeps her state, but in best time
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our
For my heart speaks they are welcome. [friends;

First Murderer appears at the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks.

Both sides are even: here I'll sit i' the midst:
Be large in mirth; anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. [Approaching the door.] There's blood upon your face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without than he within.

Is he disparat'd?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the 1st of the cut-throats: yet
That did the like for FLEANCE: if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Fleance is 'seaped.

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been Whole as the marble, founded as the rock,

As broad and general as the casing air;
But now I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confined, bound in
To suanot doubts and fears. But Banquo's safe?
Mur. Ay, my good lord: safe in a ditch he hides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that:
There the grown serpent lies: the worm that 's fled
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present. Get thee gone: to-morrow
We'll hear, ourselves, again. [Exit Murderer.

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 't is a making,
'T is given with welcome: to feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet rememberance!
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

Len. May 't please your highness sit.

[The Ghost of Banquo enters, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour ruin'd
Were the grace of our Banquo present;
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness
Than pity for mischance!

Ross. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please 't your highness.
To grace us with your royal company.

Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here is a place reserved, sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my good lord. What 's that which moves your highness?

Lords. Which of you have done this?

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends; my lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth: pray you, keep seat;
The fit is momentary: upon a thought
He will again be well: if much you note him,
You shall offend him and extend his passion:
Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff!
This is the very painting of your fear:
This is the air-drawn dagger which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authorized by her grandam. Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? When all's done,
You look but on a stool. [say you?

Macb. Prithee, see there! behold! look! lo! how Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.
If charnel-houses and our graves must send
Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the naws of kites. [Ghost vanishes.

Lady M. What, quite unnam'd in folly?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fie, for shame!

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the olden eon human statute purged the gentle weal; [time,
A's, and since too, murders have been performed:
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been.
That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
And there an end; but now they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools: this is more strange
Than such a murder is.

Your noble friends do lack you.

ACT III.

MACBETH.

SCENE VI.

Macb. Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends; I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing [all; To those that know me. Come, love and health to Then I'll sit down. Give me some wine; fill full. I drink to the general pot of the whole table, And to our dear guest Banquo, whom we miss; Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst, And all to all. Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Re-enter Ghost.

Macb. Ay, and I think good sir, let men only, but I Our So Did And The Thy And I With All More The Augurs Which Strange Returning And There M. III. Which. Any of this, good peers, But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other; Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare: Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear, The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger; Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble; or I'll break a dismal song; And dare me to the desert with thy sword; If trembling I inhabit then, protest me The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow! Unreal mockery, hence! [Ghost vanishes.

Why, so! being gone, I am a man again. Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displaced the mirth, broke the good meeting, With most admired disorder.

Macb. Can such things be, And overcome us like a summer's cloud, Without our special wonder? You make me strange Even to the disposition that I owe, When now I think you can behold such sights, And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks, When mine is blanch'd with fear.

Ross. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse; Question enranges him. At once, good night: Stand not upon the order of your going, But go at once. Len. Good night; and better health Attend his majesty!

Lady M. [Exit all but Macbeth and Lady M.

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood; Stones have been known to move and trees to speak; Augurs and understood relations have By magot-pies and choughs and rocks brought forth The secret'st man of blood. What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which [person]

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir? Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send: There's not a one of them but in his house I keep a servant tee'd. I will to-morrow, And betimes I will, to the weird sisters: More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know, By the worst means, the worst. For mine own good, All this may sojourn: I am in blood Stepp'd in so far that, should I wade no more, Returning were as tedious as go o'er: Strange things I have in head, that will to hand; Which must be acted ere they may be scann'd.

Lady M. You lack the season of all nations, sleep. Macb. Come, we'll to sleep. My strange and self- Is the initiate fear that wants hard use: We are yet but young in deed. [Exit.]
MACBETH.

SCENE I.—A cavern. In the middle, a boiling cauldron.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

First Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
Sec. Witch. Thrice and once the hedge-pig whined.
Third Witch. Harpie cries 'Tis time, 'tis time.

First Witch. Round about the cauldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw.
Toad, that under cold stone
Days and nights has thirty-one
Swelter'd vncom sleeping got,
Bull thou first! the charmed pot.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

Sec. Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake;
Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg and owlet's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

Third Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches' mummy, maw and gulf
Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark,
Root of hemlock drug'd i' the dark,
Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of goat, and spite of yew
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse,
Nose of Turk and Tartar's lips,
Finger of birth-strangled babe
Ditch-digger'd by a draught,
Make the gruel thick and slab:
Add thereto a tiger's chandron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

Sec. Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter Hecate to the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains:
And now about the cauldron sing,
Live dives and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

[Music and a song: 'Black spirits,' &c.

Sec. Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes.
Open,locks, Whatever knocks!

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight
What is 't you do?

[Exit.

Act IV.

Takes from his high respect: thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, upon his aid
To awake Northumberland and warlike Seward:
That, by the help of these—with Hie above
To ratify the work—we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithful homage and receive free honours:
All which we pine for now: and this report
Hath so exasperate the king that he Prepares for some attempt of war.
Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute 'Sir, not I,'
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hangs, as who should say ' You'll me the time
That clogs me with this answer.'
Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England and unfold
His message ere he come, that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accurst!
Lord. I'll send my prayers with him.
[Exeunt.

Lord. A deed without a name.
Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,
Hew'er you come to know it, answer me:
Though you untie the winds and let them fight
Against the churches, though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodged and trees blown
Though castles topple on their warders' heads;
Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treas-
Of nature's germens tumble all together,
[ure
Even till destruction sicken; answer me
To what I ask you.
First Witch. Speak.
Sec. Witch. Demand.
Third Witch. We'll answer.
First Witch. Say, if thou 'ldst rather hear it from our mouths,
Or from our masters?
Macb. Call 'em; let me see 'em.
First Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath
Her nine farrow; grease that's sweat
From the murderer's gibbet throw
Into the flame.
All. Come, high or low;
Thyself and office defiant show!

Thunder. First Apparition: an armed Head.
Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—
First Witch. He knows thy thought:
Hear his speech, but say thou nought.
First App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macduff;
Beware the thane of Fife. Dismiss me. Enough.
[Descends.

Macb. Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks;
[more,—
Thou hast harp'd my fear aright: but one word
First Witch. He will not be commanded: here's More potent than the first.
[another,

Sec. App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!
Macb. Had I three ears, I'dd ear thee. [scorn
Sec. App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to
The power of man, for none of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth.
[Descends.
Macb. Then live, Macduff: what need I fear
But yet I'll make assurance double sure, [thee? and
And take a bond of fate; then shall not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.

Thunder. Third Apparition: a Child crowned, with a tree in his hand.

What is this
That rises like the issue of a king,
And wears upon his baby-brow the round
And top of sovereignty?
ACT IV.
MACBETH.
SCENE II.

All. Listen, but speak not to 't.
Third App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care
Who offends, who frets, or where conspirators are:
Macbeth shall never vanquish but be.
Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him.
[Descends.
Macb. That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, beth the tree [good!
Unfix his earth-bound root? Sweet bodements!
Rebellion's head, rise never till the wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high-placed Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Yet my heart
Throbs to know one thing: tell me, if your art
Can tell so much: shall Banquo's issue ever
Reign in this kingdom?
Seek to know no more.
[All.
Macb. I will be satisfied: deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me know.
Why sinks that caddron? and what noise is this?
[Hautboys.
First Witch. Show!
Sec. Witch. Show!
Third Witch. Show!
All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart!
A show of Eight Kings, the last with a glass in his hand:
Banquo's Ghost following.
Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo; down!
Thy crown does seem mine eye-balls. And thy hair,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first.
A third is like the former. Filthy bags!
Why do you show me this? A fourth! Start, eyes!
What, will the line stretch out to the crack of doom!
Another yet! A seventh! I'll see no more:
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass
Which shows me many more; and some I see
That two-fold balls and treble sceptres carry:
Horrible sight! Now, I see, 't is true;
For the blood-boiler'd Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for his. [Apparitions vanish.
What, is this so?
First Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so: but why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
Come, sisters, choice up his spirits,
And show the best of our delights:
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antic round;
That this great king may kindly say,
Our duties did his welcome pay.
[Music. The Witches dance, and then vanish, with Hecate.
Macb. Where are they? Gone? Let this pernicious hour
Stand ayre accused in the calendar!
Come in, without there!
[Enter Lennox.
Len. What's your grace's will?
Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?
Len. No, my lord.
Macb. Came they not by you?
Len. No, indeed, my lord.
Macb. Infected be the air wherein they ride:
And damn'd all those that trust them! I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was 't came by?
Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you
Macduff is fled to England. [word
Macb. Fled to England!
Len. Ay, my good lord.
Macb. Time, thou anticipatest my dread exploits!
The flighty purpose never is o'took
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment
The very firstlings of my hand shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And even now,
To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and
The castle of Macduff I will surprise: [done.
Seize upon Perth; give to the edge o' the sword
His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls
That trace him in his line. No boasting like a fool;
But no more sights!—Where are these gentlemen?
Come, bring me where they are. [Exit.
Son. Then the liars and swearsers are fools, for there are liars and swearsers now to bow the honest men and hang up them.

L. Macd. Now, God help thee, poor monkey! But how will thou do for a father? Son. If he were dead, you 'd weep for him: if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macd. Poor pratter, how thou talk'st!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known, Though in your state of honour I am perfect. I doubt some danger does approach you nearly: If you will take a homely man's advice, Be not found here; hence, with your little ones. To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage; To do worse to you were fell cruelty, Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you! I dare abide no longer.

L. Macd. Whither should I fly? I have done no harm. But I remember now I am in this earthly world; where to do harm Is often laudable, to do good sometime. Accounted dangerous folly: why then, alas, Do I put up that womanly defence, To say I have done no harm?

Enter Murderers.

What are these faces?

First Mar. Where is your husband?

L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsacred Where such as thou mayst find him.

First Mar. Thou liest, thou shag-haired villain!

Son. What, you egg! [Stabbing him.]

Young fry of treachery!

Son. He has kill'd me, mother: Run away, I pray you! [Dies.]

[Exit Lady Macduff, crying 'Murder!' Exeunt Murderers, following her.]

SCENE III.—England. Before the King's palace.

Enter Malcolm and Macduff.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd. Let us rather Hold fast the mortal sword, and like good men Bestride our down-fall'n birthdom: each new morn New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds As if it felt with Scotland and yell'd out Like syllable of colour.

Mal. What I believe I'll wait, What know believe, and what I can repress, As I shall find the time to friend, I will. What you have spoke, it may be so perchance. This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues, Whom once thought honest: you have loved him well; He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young; but something You may desire of him through me, and wisdom To offer up a weak poor innocent lamb To appease an angry god.

Mal. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is,

A good and virtuous nature may recoil [don; In an imperial charge. But I shall crave your par- That which you are my thoughts cannot transpose: Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell; Though all things foul would wear the brows of Yet grace must still look so. [grace, Macd. I have lost my hopes. Mal. Perchance even there where I did find my doubts.

Why in that rawness left you wife and child, Those precious motives, those strong knots of love, Without leave-taking? I pray you, Let not my jealousies be your dishonours, But mine own safeties. You may be rightly just, Whatever I shall think.

Macd. Bleed, bleed, poor country! Great tyranny! I lay thou thy basis sure, [wrongs: For goodness dare not check thee; wear thou thy The title is afoor'd! Fare thee well, lord; I would not see the villain that thou think'st For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp, And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended: I speak not as in absolute fear of you. I think our country sinks beneath the yoke; If it weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash Is added to her wounds: I think withal There would be hands uplifted in my right; And here from gracious England have I offer Of godly thousands: but, for all this, When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head, Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country Shall have more vices than it had before, More suffer and more sundry ways than ever, By him that shall succeed.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know All the particulars of vice so grafted That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth Shall seem as pure as snow, and the poor state Esteem him as a lamb, being compared With my confineless harms.

Macd. Not in the regions Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd In evils to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody, Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful, Sudden, malicious, smashing of every sin That has a name: but there's no bottom, none, In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters, Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up The eistern of my lust, and my desire All continent impediments would o'erbear That did oppose my will: better Macbeth Than such an one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance In nature is a tyranny; it hath been The untimely emptying of the happy throne And fall of many kings. But fear not yet To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty, And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink. We have willing dames enough; there cannot be That vulture in you, to devour so many As will to greatness dedicate themselves, Finding it so inclined.

Mal. With this there grows In my most ill-composed affection such A stanchless avarice that, were I king, I should curse off all the nobles of the land, Desire his jewels and this other's house: And my more-having would be as a sauce To make me hunger more; that I should forge Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal, Destroying them for wealth.

Mal. This avarice Sticks deeper, grows with more pernicious root Than summer-seeming lust, and it hath been The sword of our slain kings: yet do not fear; Scotland hath folsons to fill up your will, Of your mere own: all these are portable, With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: the king-becoming graces, As justice, verity, temperance, stableness, Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
ACT IV.

MACBETH.

SCENE III.

I have no relish of them, but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Up roar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Mac. O Scotland, Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Mac. Fit to govern!

No, not to live. O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant blood-scepter'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again,
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accursed,
And does blaspheme his breed? Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she lived. Fare thee well!
These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself
Have banish'd me from Scotland. O my breast,
Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wiped the black scruples, reconciled my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power, and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste: but God above
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction, here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman, never was forsworn,
Scarce have coveted what was mine own,
At no time broke my faith, would not betray
The devil to his fellow and delight
No less in truth than life: my first false speaking
Was this upon myself: what I am truly,
Is thine and my poor country's to command:
Whither indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
Already at a point, was setting forth.
Now we 'll together; and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent?

Mac. Such welcome and unwelcome things at
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth,
I pray you?

Doc. Ay, sir; there are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but at his touch —
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand —
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. [Exit Doctor.

Mac. What's the disease he means?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the evil:
A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people,
All sown and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put out with holy prayers: and it is spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy,
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter Ross.

Mal. See, who comes here?

Mac. My countryman: but I yet I know him not.

Mac. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now. Good God, betimes re-
The means that makes us strangers! [move
Ross. Sir, amen.

Mac. Stands Scotland where it did?

Ross. Alas, poor country!

Almost afraid to know itself. It cannot
Be call'd our mother, but our grave; where nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs and groans and shrieks that rend the air
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy: the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for who; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken.

Mac. O, relation
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What's the newest grief?

Ross. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one.

Mal. And all my children?

Ross. Well too.

Mac. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Ross. No; they were well at peace when I did leave 'em.

Mac. Be not a niggard of your speech: how Ross. When I came hither to transport the tidings,
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot:
Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women light,
To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Be't their comfort
We are coming thither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Siward and ten thousand men;
An older and a better soldier none
That Christendom gives out.

Ross. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Mac. What concern they?

The general cause? or is it a fee-grief
Due to some single breast?

Ross. No mind that's honest
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Mac. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Ross. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Mal. Hum! I guess at it.

Ross. Your castle is surprised; your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!
What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows;
Give sorrow words: the grief that does not speak
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.

Mac. My children too?

Ross. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Mal. And I must be from thence!

My wife kill'd too?

Mal. Be comforted:
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Ross. He has no children. All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? Oh hell-kite! All?

Ross. It's gone!
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so;
But I must also feel it as a man;
I cannot but remember such things were, [on.
That were most precious to me. Did heaven look
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine, [now!
Fell slaughter on their souls. Heaven rest them.

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief
Convert to anger; [blunt not the heart, enrage it.

ACT V.

Enter a Doctor of Physic and a Waiting-Gentlewoman.

Doc. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon’t, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doc. A great perturbation in nature, to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching?
In this shambler agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doc. You may to me: and ’tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you nor any one; having no wit-tness to confirm my speech.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her; stand close.

Doc. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her; she has light by her continually; ’tis her command.

Doc. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.

Doc. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubbs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here’s a spot.

Doc. Mark! she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—One:
two: why, then ’tis time to do ’t.—Hell is murky!
—Fie, my lord! fie! a soldier, and afeard? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him.

Doc. We were not mariners of that.

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife: where is she now?—What, will these hands ne’er be clean?
—No more o’ that, my lord, no more o’ that: you mar all with this starting.

Doc. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Lady M. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here’s the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh, oh, oh!

Doc. What a sight is there! The heart is sorely

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom for the dignity of the whole body.

Doc. Well, well, well.

Gent. Pray God it be, sir.

Doc. This disease is beyond my practice: yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep who have died holily in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your nightgown: look not so pale.—I tell you yet again, Banquo’s buried; he cannot come out on’s grave.

Doc. Even so?

Lady M. To bed, to bed! there’s knocking at the gate: come, come, come, come, give me your hand.
What’s done cannot be undone.—To bed, to bed, to bed!

Doc. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doc. Foul whisperings are abroad: unnatural
Do breed unnatural troubles: infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets:
More needs she the divine than the physician.
God, God forgive us all! Look after her;
Remove from her the means of all annoyance,
And still keep eyes upon her. So, good night:
My mind she has mated, and amaz’d my sight.
I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good night, good doctor.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The country near Dunsinane.

Dress and colours. Enter Menteith, Caithness,
Angus, Lennox, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malphis uncle Siward and the good Macduff: [colm,
Revenge them in them; for their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood
Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming.

Caith. Who knows if Donalsain be with his brother?

Len. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file
Of all the gentry: there is Siward’s son,
And many unrough youths that even now
Pretest their first manner, for you mark that?

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Caith. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:
Some say he’s mad; others that lesser hate him
Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper’d cause
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands:
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breath;
ACT V.

MACBETH.

SCENE V.

MACBETH.

Those he commands move only in command,
Nothing in love: now does he feel his title
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Meat. Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there?

Coth. Well, march we on,
To give obedience where 't is truly owed;
Meet we the medicine of the sickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,
To dew the sovereign flower and drown the weeds.
Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.

SCENE III.—Dunsinane. A room in the castle.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all:
Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane,
I cannot taint with fear.
What's the boy Malcolm?
Was he not born of woman?
The spirits that know
All mortal consequences have pronounced me thus:
Fear not, Macbeth; no man that's born of woman
Shall e'er have power upon thee. Then fly, fast
And mingle with the English tribes—[thanes,
The mind I sway by and the heart I bear
Shall never sag with doubt nor shake with fear.

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon!
Where got'st thou that goose look?

Serc. There is ten thousand—

Geese, villain?—

Serc. Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go pr'ythe face, and over-red thy fear,
Thou silly-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch?
Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face?

Serc. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. [Exit Servant.

Seyton! I am sick at heart,
When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push
Will cheer me ever; or dissent me now.
I have lived long enough: my way of life
Is fall'n into the sear, the yellow leaf;
And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud but deep, mouth-honour, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare Seyton!

Enter Seyton.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What news more?

Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported.

Macb. I'll fight till from my bones my flesh be Give me my armour.

Sey. 'Tis not needed yet.

Send out more horses; skirt the country round:
Hang those that talk of fear. Give me mine armour,
How does your patient, docto'?

Doc. Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies,
That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that.
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain
And with some sweet oblivion antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart?

Doc. Therein the patient
Must minister to himself.

Macb. Thow physic to the dogs: I'll none of it.
Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff.
Seyton, send out. Doctor, the thanes fly from me.
Come, sir, dispatch. If thou couldst, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That should applaud aloud again.—'Tis 't off, I say.—
What rhubarb, cyme, or what purgative drug
Would scour these English hence? Hear'st thou of them?

Doc. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation
Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.
I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane.

Doc. [Aside] Were I from Dunsinane away
And Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Country near Birnam wood.

Drum and colours. Enter Malcolm, old Siward and his Son, Macduff, Menteith, Caithness, Angus, Lennox, Ross, and Soldiers, marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand
That chambers will be safe.

Menteith. We doubt it nothing.

Sic. What wood is this before us?

Menteith. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough
And bear't before him: thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Soldiers. It shall be done.

Sic. We learn no other but the confident tyrant
Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before 't.

Mal. 'Tis his main hope:
For where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given him the revolt,
And none serve with him but constrained things
Whose hearts are absent too.

Menteith. Let our just censures
Attend the time event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Sic. The time approaches
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have and what we owe.
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate,
But certain issue strokes must arbitrate:
Towards which advance the war.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Dunsinane. Within the castle.

Enter Macbeth, Seyton, and Soldiers, with drum
and colours.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls;
The cry is still 'They come:' our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie
Till famine and theague eat them up;

Mal. Were they not forced with those that should be
We might have met them careful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home.

Sey. What is that noise?

Sic. It is the cry of women, my good lord. [Exit.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my full of hair
Would at a diamet treatise rouse and stir
As life were in 't; I have supp'd full with horrors;
Direnness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.
Act V.  MACBETH.  SCENE VIII.

Re-enter Seyton.

Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter;
There would have been a time for such a word.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day
To the last syllable of recorded time,
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

Enter a Messenger.

Thou comest to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord, I should report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar and slave!

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if 't be not so:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speakest false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.
I pull in resolution, and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend:
That lies like truth: 'Fear not, till Birnam wood
Do come to Dunsinane: and now a wood
Comes toward Dunsinane. Arm, arm, and out!
If this which he avouches does appear,
There is no flying hence nor tarrying here.
I gin to be awary of the sun.
And wish the estate o' the world were now undone,
Ring the alarum-bell! Blow, wind! come, wrack!
At least we'll die with harness on our back. [Exeunt.

Scene VI. — Dunsinane. Before the castle.

Drum and colours. Enter Malcolm, old Siward, Macduff, and their Army, with bugles.

Mal. Now near enough: your leafy screens throw
To down,
And show like those you are. You, worthy uncle,
Shall, with my cousin, your right-noble son,
Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff and we Shall take upon 's what else remains to do,
According to our order.

Sic. Fare you well,
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight. [all breath,
Macb. Make all our trumpets speak: give them
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.
[Exeunt.

Scene VII. — Another part of the field.

Alarums. Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
But, bear-lier, I must fight the course. What 's he
That was not born of woman? Such a one
Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young Siward.

Yo. Sic. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou 'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Sic. No: thou call'st thyself a hotter
Than any is in hell. [name

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Sic. The devil himself could not pronounce
More hateful to mine ear.

[Macb. A title

Yo. Sic. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant: with my
I 'll prove the lie thou speak'st. [sword

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.

[They fight and young Siward is slain.

Yo. Sic. But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn, Brandish'd by man that 's of a woman born. [Exit.

Alarums. Enter Macduff.

Macb. That way the noise is. Tyrant, show thy face!
If thou be'st slain and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hired to bear their staves: either thou, Macbeth,
Or else my sword with an unblarterd edge
I sheathe again unpeed. There thou shouldst be;
By this great clatter, one of greatest note
Seems bruited. Let me find him, fortune!
And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarums.

Enter Malcolm and old Siward.

Sic. This way, my lord; the castle's gently render'd.

The tyrant's people on both sides do fight;
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Sic. Enter, sir, the castle. [Exeunt. Alarums.

Scene VIII. — Another part of the field.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On mine own sword? whilst I see lives, the gashes
Do better upon them.

Enter Macduff.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn!

Mal. Of all men else I have avoided thee:
But get thee back; my soul is too much charged
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words:
My voice is in my sword: thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out! [They fight.

Macd. Thou losest labour:
As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm:
And let the angel whom thou still hast served
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd.

Macd. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cow'd my better part of man!
And be these juggling fiends no more believed,
That palter with us in a double sense:
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break, it to our hope. I 'll not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze o' the time:
We 'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole, and underwrit,
Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I will not yield,
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,
And thou opposed, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last. Before my body
I throw my warlike shield. Lay on, Macduff,
And damn’d be him that first éries 'Hold, enough!'

[Exeunt, fighting. Alarms.

Retreat. Flourish. Enter, with drum and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Ross, the other Thanes, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would the friends we miss were safe arrived.

Siw. Some must go off: and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Ross. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier’s debt:
He only lived but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm’d
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Siw. Then he is dead?

Ross. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measured by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Siw. Had he his hurts before?

Ross. Ay, on the front.

Siw. Why then, God’s soldier be he!

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so, his knell is knoll’d.

Mal. He’s worth more sorrow,
And that I’ll spend for him.

Siw. He’s worth no more:
They say he parted well, and paid his score:
And so, God be with him! Here comes newer comfort.

Re-enter Macduff, with Macbeth’s head.

Mac. Hail, king! for so thou art: behold, where stands
The usurper’s cursed head: the time is free:
I see thee compass’d with thy kingdom’s pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine:
Hail, King of Scotland!—Act V., Scene viii.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Elsinore. A platform before the castle.

Francisco at his post. Enter to him Bernardo.

Fran. Nay, answer me; stand, and unfold your ears.

Ber. Long live the king!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.

Ber. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.

Fran. For this relief much thanks: 'tis bitter And I am sick at heart.

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

Ber. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.

Fran. I think I hear them. Stand, ho! Who's there?

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier: Who8mth relieved you?

Fran. Bernardo has my place.

Give you good night. [Exit. Mar.]

Ber. Say, What is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio: welcome, good Marcellus.

Mar. What, has this thing appear'd again to—

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says 'tis but our fantasy, And will not let belief take hold of him Touching this dreadful sight, twice seen of us: Therefore I have entreated him along

With us to watch the minutes of this night; That if again this apparition come, He may approve our eyes and speak to it.

Hor. Tush, tush, 'tis will not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile; And let us once again assail your ears, That are so fortified against our story What we have two nights seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down, And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all, When yond same star that's westward from the pole Had made his course to illumine that part of heaven Where now it burns, Marcellus and myself, The bell then beating one.—

Enter Ghost.

Mar. Peace, break thee off; look, where it comes again!

Ber. In the same figure, like the king that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar; speak to it, Horatio.

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio. [wonder.

Hor. Most like: it harrows me with fear and delights me with the thought. [wonder.

Mar. It would be spoke to.

Ber. Question it, Horatio. Hor. What art thou that usurp'st this time of Together with that fair and warlike form [night, In which the majesty of buried Denmark Did sometimes march? by heaven I charge thee. [night, Mar. It is offended. [I speak! Ber. See, it stalks away! Hor. Stay! speak, speak! I charge thee, speak! [Exit Ghost.

Mar. It is gone, and will not answer. [paie: Ber. How now, Horatio! you tremble and look Is not this something more than fantasy? What think you on 't?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe Without the sensible and true avouch Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the king?
Hor. As thou art to thyself; such was the very armour he had on When last I saw him in his combat; so crown’d he once, when, in an angry parlé, He smote the sledge Polacks on the ice.

'Tis strange, [hour, Mar. Thus twice before, and jump at this dead With martill’d staff halfe he gone by our watch. Hor. In truth it is a musicall and warlike work I know But in the ground and scope of my opinion, not; This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows, Why this same strict and most observant watch So nightly toils the subject of the land, And why such daily cast of brazen cannon, And foreign mart for implements of war; Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task Does not divide the Sunday from the week; What might be toward, that this sweaty haste Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day: Who is he that can inform me?

Hor. At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king, Whose image even but now appear’d to us, Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway, Theroeto prick’d on by a most emulatible, Dared to the combat; in which our valiant Hamlet— For so we know him who that estim’d him— Did slay this Fortinbras; who, by a seal’d compact, Well ratify’d by law and heraldry, Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands Which he stood seiz’d of, to the conqueror: Against the which, a moity competent Was gaged by our king; which had return’d To the inheritance of Fortinbras,

Had he been vanquisher; as, by the same covenant, And carriage of the article design’d, His fall to Hamlet. Now, sir, young Fortinbras, Of unimproved mettle hot and full, Hath in the skirts of Norway here and there Shark’d up a list of lawless resolutes, For food and diet, to some enterprise That hath a stomach in ’t; which is no other— As it doth well appear unto our state— But to recover of, by strong hand And terms compulsory, those foresaid lands So by his father lost: and this, and these take it, Is the main motive of our preparations, The source of this our watch and the chief head Of this post-haste and romage in the land.

Ber. I think it be no other but e’en so:

Well may it sort that this portentous figure Comes armed through our watch; so like the king That was and is the question of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is to trouble the mind’s eye. In the most high and pahny state of Rome, A little ere the mightiest Julius fell, The graved stevens tenantless and the sheeted dead Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets: As still the workmen of the storms of blood, Disasters in the sun; and the moist star Upon whose influence Neptune’s empire stands Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse: And even the like precise of fierce events, As harbinger preceding still the fates

And partial to the services of blood, Have heaven and earth together demonstrated Unto our climates and countrysmen.— But soft, behold! lo, where it comes again!

Re-enter Ghost. I’ll cross it, though it blast me. Stay, illusion! If thou hast any sound, or use of voice, Speak to me: If there be any good thing to be done, That may to thee do ease and grace to me, Speak to me:

[cock crowes.]

If thou art privy to thy country’s fate, Which, as I say, foreknowing may avoid, O, speak! Or if thou hast upheador’d in thy life Extorted treasure in the womb of earth, For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death, Speak of it: stay, and speak! Stop it, Marcellus.

Hor. Shall I strike at it with my partisan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand. [Ber.]

Hor. ’Tis here!

Mar. ’Tis gone! [Exit Ghost.]

We do it wrong, being so majestical, To offer the show of violence; for it is, as the air, invulnerable, And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crew.

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing Upon a fearful summons. I have heard, The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn, Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat Awake the god of day; and, at his warning, Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air, The extravgant and erring spirit hies To his confine: and of the truth herein This present object made probation.

Mar. So it is ended on the crowing of the cock. Some say that ever ‘gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour’s birth is celebrated, The bird of Dawning singeth all night long: And then, they say, no spirit dares stir abroad; The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike, No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm, So hallow’d and so gracious is the time.

Hor. So have I heard and do in part believe it. But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad, Walks o’er the dew of yon high eastward hill:

Break we our watch up; and by my advice, Let us impart what we have seen to-night Unto young Hamlet; for, upon my life, This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him. Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it, As needful in our loves, sitting our duty? Mar. Let’s do it, I pray; and this I morning know Where we shall find him most conveniently. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A room of state in the castle.

Enter the King, Queen, Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, Voltimand, Cornelius, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother’s The memory be green, and that it us befitted [death To bear our hearts in grief and our whole kingdom To be contracted in one brow of woe. Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature That we with wisest sorrow think on him, Together with remembrance of ourselves. Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen, The imperial jointress to this all, alike state, Have we in the house of our great joy, With a defeated joy,— With an auspicious and a dropping eye, With mirth in funeral and with dirge in marriage, In equal scale weighing delight and dole,— Taken to wife: nor have we herein barr’d Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone With the fair air of his first grace and thanks. Now follows, that you know, young Fortinbras, Holding a weak suposal of our worth, Or thinking by our late dear brother’s death Our state to be disjoint and out of frame, Colleagued with the dream of his advantage, He hath not fail’d to present his message, Importing the surrender of those lands Lost by his father, with all bonds of law, To our most valiant brother. So much for him. Now for ourself and for this time of meeting:

667
Thus much the business is: we have here writ To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,— Who, impotent and bed-rid, scarcely hears Of this his nephew’s purpose,—to suppress His father’s blood-red heir; in that the levies, The lists and full proportions, are all made Out of his subject: and we here dispatch You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand, For bearers of this greeting to old Norway; Giving to you no further personal power To business with the king, more than the scope Of these declared articles allow. Farewell, and let your haste commend your duty. Cor. In that and all things we will show our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing: heartily farewell. Pol. [Leave Voltimand and Cornelius. And now, Laertes, what’s the news with you? You told us of some suit; what is’t, Laertes? You cannot speak of reason to the Dane, And lose your voice: what wouldst thou beg, Laertes, That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? The head is not more native to the heart, The hand more instrumental to the mouth, Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father. What wouldst thou have, Laertes? Laer. My dread lord, Your leave and favour to return to France; From whence though willingly I came to Denmark, To shun my duty’s element. Yet now, I must confess, that duty done, My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France And bow them to thy gracious leave and pardon. King. Have you your father’s leave? What says Polonius? Pol. He hath, my lord, wrung from me my slow By laboursome petition, and at last Upon his will I seal’d my hard consent: I do beseech you, give him leave to go. King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine, And thy best graces spend it at thy will! But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,— Ham. [Aside] A little more than kin, and less than kind. King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you? Ham. Not so, my lord; I am too much i’ the sun. Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nightly cloud oft, And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark. Do not for ever with thy vailed lids Seek for thy noble father in the dust: Thou know’st ’tis common; all that lives must die, Passing through nature to eternity. Ham. Ay, madam, it is common. Queen. If it be. Why seems it so particular with thee? ’t seems.’ Ham. Seem? madam! my, it is; I know not ’tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother, Nor customary suits of solemn black, Nor winding sorrow of the night’s course, No, nor the fruitful river in the eye, Nor custom near the courses of our age, Together with all forms, moods, shapes of grief, That can denote me truly: these indeed seem, For they are actions that a man might play: But I have that within which passeth show; These but the trappings and the suits of woe. King. ’Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet, and to give these mourning duties to your father: But, you must know, your father lost a father; That father lost, his, and the survivor bound In filial obligation for some term To do obsequious sorrow: but to persevere In obsequious behaviour, is a course Of impious stubbornness; ’tis unmanly grief; It shows a will most incorrect to heaven, A heart unfortified, a mind impatient,
ACT I.

HAMLET.

SCENE III.

Mar. My good lord—

Ham. I am very glad to see you. Good even, sir.

But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear your enemy say so,

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,

To make it truster of your own report

Against yourself: I know you are no truant.

But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student;

I think it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral baked meats

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven

Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio!

My father!—methinks I see my father.

Hor. Where, my lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once; he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him all in all,

I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw? who?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. 'The king my father

Hor. Season your admiration for a while

With an attent ear, till I may deliver,

Upon the witness of these gentlemen,

This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,

Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,

In the dead vast and middle of the night,

Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your father,

Arm'd at point exactly, cap-a-pe,

Appears before them, and with solemn march

Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd

By their oppress'd and fear-surpriz'd eyes,

Within his truncheon's length; whilst they, dis-

Almost to jelly with the act of fear, [filled

Stand dumb and speak not to him. This to me

In dreadful secrecy impart they did;

And I with them the third night kept the watch:

Where: as they had deliver'd, both in time,

Form of the thing, each word made true and good,

The apparition comes: I knew your father;

These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My lord, upon the platform where we

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

[watch'd.

Hor. My lord, I did;

But answer made it none: yet once methought

It lift up its head and did address

Itself to motion, like as it would speak;

But even then the morning cock crew loud,

And at the sound it shrink'd in haste away,

And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true;

And we did think it writ down in our duty

To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles me.

Hold you the watch to-night?

Mar.] We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

Mar.] Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

Mar.] My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then saw you not his face?

Hor. O yes, my lord; he wore his beaver up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. It would have much amazed you.

Ham. Very like, very like. Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar.] Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw 't.

Ham. His beard was grizzled,—no?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life,

A sable silver'd.

Ham. I will watch to-night;

Perchance 't will walk again.

Hor. I warrant it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,

I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape

And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,

If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,

Let it be tenable in your silence still;

And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,

Give it an understanding, but no tongue;

I will require your loves. So, fare you well:

Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,

I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: farewell.

[Exeunt all but Hamlet.

Erected till but Hamlet.

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;

I doubt some foul play: would the night were come!

Till then sit still, my soul: foul deeds will rise,

Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.

SCENE III.—A room in Polonius' house.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessaries are embark'd: farewell!

And, sister, as the winds give benefit

And convey is assistant, do not sleep,

But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet and the trilling of his favour,

Hold it a fashion and a toy in blood,

A violet in the youth of primy nature,

Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,

The perfume and suppliance of a minute;

No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more:

For nature, crescent, does not grow alone

In thews and bulk, but, as this temple waxes,

The inward service of the mind and soul

Grows wide withall. Perhaps he loves you now,

And now no soyl nor cautel doth besmirch

The virtue of his will: but you must fear,

His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;

For he himself is subject to his birth:

He may not, as unvalued persons do,

Carve for himself; for on his choice depends

The safety and health of this poor state;

And therefore must his choice be circumscribed

Unto the voice and yielding of that body

Whereof he is the head. Then if he says he loves

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it

You, as he in his particular act and place

May give his saying deed; which is no further

Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,

If with too credent ear you list his songs,

Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open

To his unmaster'd importunity.

609
ACT I.

HAMLET.

Scene IV.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! Aboard, aboard, for shame! The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail, And you are stay'd for. There; my blessing with And these few precepts in thy memory. See thou character. Give thy thoughts no tongue, Nor any unproportion'd thought his act. Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel; But do not dull thy purse with entertainment. Of each new-hatch'd, unlicensed commodo. Beware Of entrance to a quarrel, but being in, Bear 't that the opposed may beware of thee. Give every man thy heart, but few thy voice; Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment. Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, But not expressed in fancy; rich, not gaudy; For the apparel oft proclaims the man, And they in France of the best rank and station Are of a most select and generous chief in that. Neither a borrower nor a lender be; For loan oft losses both itself and friend, And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry, This keeps out shrewdness; but dull the edge, And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man. Farewell; my blessing season this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take your leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go; your servants tend.

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia; and remember well What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lock'd, And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Scene IV. — The platform.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, and Marcellus.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. It is very early after midnight.

Ham. No, it is struck. It is the season of the year.

Hor. Indeed! I heard it not; then it draws near Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

[A flourish of trumpets, and ordnance shot off, within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

Rouse, Ham. The king doth wake to-night and takes his kettle-drum and the snare's impatient rattle; And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down, The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, 'tis.

But to my soul, though I am native here And to the manner born, it is a custom More honour'd in the breach than the observance. This heavy-headed revel east and west Makes us traduc'd and tax'd of other nations: They clepe us drunkards, and with swinish phrase Soil our aloofness; and for our absence From our achievements, though perform'd at height, The pith and marrow of our attribute. So, oft it chances in particular men, That for some vicious mole of nature in them, As in their birth — wherein they are not guilty, Since nature cannot choose his origin — By the o'er-growth of some particular fault, Often breaking down the pales and forts of reason, Or by some habit that too much o'er-leavens The form of plausible manners, that these men, Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect, Being nature's livery, or fortune's star — Their virtues else — be they as pure as grace, As infinite as man may undergo — Shall in the general censure take corruption From that particular fault: the dram of ale That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay, Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly; Or — not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Running it thus — you'll tender me a fool.

Oph. My lord, he hath importuned me with love In honorable fashion.

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to. Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord, With almost all the holy vows of heaven. [Know, Pol. Ay, springs to catch woodcocks. I do When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul Lends the tongue vows: these blazes, daughter, Giving more light than heat, extinct in both, Even in their promise, as it is a-making. You must not take for fire. From this time Be somewhat scatter of your maiden presence; Set your entertainments at a higher rate Than a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet, Believe so much in him, that he is young, And with a larger tether may he walk Than may be given you: in few, Ophelia, Do not believe his vows: they are brokers, Not of that dye which their investments show, But mere implorators of unholy suits, Breathing like sanctified and pious bawds, The better to beguile. This is for all: I will not, in plain terms, from this time forth, Have you so slander any moment leisure, To give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet. Look to't, I charge you: come your ways. Oph. I shall obey, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister, And keep you in the rear of your affection, Out of the shot and danger of desire. The chasest maid is prodigal enough, If she unmask her beauty to the moon: Virtue, like beauty, be not proud to speak; The cannier calls the infants of the spring, Too oft before their buttons be disclosed, And in the morn and liquid dew of youth Contagious blastments are most imminent. Be wary then; best safety lies in fear: Youth to itself is true, though self be true, Near. Oph. I shall affect the effect of this good lesson keep, As watchman to my heart. But, good my brother, Do not, as some ungracious pastors do, Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven; Whiles, like a puff'd and reckless libertine, Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads, And recks not his own rede.

Laer. O, fear me not. I stay too long: but here my father comes.
ACT I.

HAMLET.

SCENE V.—Another part of the platform.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Where wilt thou lead me? speak; I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me, I will.

Ham. When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames Must render up myself.

Ghost. Alas, poor ghost! To what shall I unfold?

Ham. Speak; I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What? [hear.

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit. Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night, And for the day confined, to fast in fires, Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature Are burnt and purged away. But that I am forbid To tell the secrets of my prison-house, I could a tale unfold whose lightest word Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood, Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their Thy knotted and combined locks to part [spheres, And each particular hair to stand an end, Like quills upon the fretful porpentine: But this eternal blazon must not be To ears of flesh and blood. List, list, O, list! If thou didst ever thy dear father love—

Ham. O God!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural Murder! [murder.

Ghost. Murder. Most foul, most foul, in the best it is; But this most foul, strange and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know 't, that I, with wings as swift May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt; And dullest shouldst thou be than the fat weed That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf, Wouldnst thou not sit in this. Now, Hamlet, hear: 'Tis given out that, sleeping in my orchard, A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark Is by a forged process of my death R ankly abused: but know, thou noble youth, The serpent that did sting thy father's life Now wears his crown.

Ham. O my prophetic soul! My uncle!

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast, With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,— O wicked wit and gifts, that have the power So to seduce that, won to his shameful lust The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen: O Hamlet, what a falling-off was there! From me, whose love was of that dignity That it went hand in hand even with the vow I made to her in marriage, and to decline Upon a wretch whose natural gifts were poor To those of mine! But virtue, as it never will be moved, Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven, So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd, Will sate itself in a celestial bed, And prey on garbage.

But, soft! methinks I scent the morning air; Brief let me be. Sleeping within my orchard, My custom always of the afternoon, Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole, With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial, And in the porches of my ears did pour The leperous distillment: whose effect Holds such an unthriftiness in the body That swift as quicksilver it courses through The natural gates and alleys of the body, And with a sudden vigour doth possess And curd, like eager droppings into milk, The thin and wholesome blood; so did it mine; And a most rank and carnal breath about, Most lazard-like, with viles and loathsome crust, All my smooth body, Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand Of life, of crown, of queen, at once dispatch'd: Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin, Unhouse'd, disappointed, unanel'd,
ACT II.

HAMLET.

SCENE I.

No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head:
O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!
If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and dammed incest.
But, howsoever thou pursueth this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
Against thy mother's sight: leave her to heaven
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!
The glow-worm shows the matin to be near;
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire:

Adieu, adieu! Hamlet, remember me. [Exeunt.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Hor. How'st, my noble lord?
Mar. O, wonderful! What news, my lord?
Hor. Good my lord, tell it.
Mar. No; you'll reveal it.
Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Hor. There's neither a villain dwelling in all Den.

But he's an arrant knave. [mark Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from
To tell us this. [the grave

Ham. Why, right; you are i' the right; And I, without more circumstantial all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands and part;
You, as your business and desire shall point you;
For every man has business and desire.
Such as it is: and for mine own poor part,
Look you, I'll go pray. [lord

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words, my

Ham. I am sorry they offend you, heartily;
Yes, 'faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.
Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is, Horatio,
And much offence too. Touching this vision here,
It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you:
For your desire to know what is between us,
O'ermaster 't as you may. And now, good friends,
As you are friends, scholars and soldiers,
Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is 't, my lord? we will. [night.

Ham. Never make known what you have seen to-
Hor. My lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear 't.
Hor. In faith,

My lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.
Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear, [trucepeny?

Ham. Ali, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there,
Came on — you hear this fellow in the cellarage —
Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen,
Swear by my sword.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

Ham. Hie et ubique? then we 'll shift our ground.
Come hither, gentlemen,
And lay your hands again upon my sword:
Never to speak of this that you have heard,
Swear by my sword.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear, [so fast?

Ham. Well said, old mole! canst work 't the earth
A worthy pioner! Once more remove, good friends.

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in thy philosophy.

But come;
Here, as before, never, so help you mercy,
How strange or odd see'er I bear myself,
As I perchance hereafter shall think meet
To put an antic disposition on,
That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,
With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,
Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,
As 'Well, well, we know,' or ' We could, an if we would,' [night,
Or ' If we list to speak,' or ' There be, an if they
Or such ambiguous giving out, to note
That you know aught of me: this not to do,
So grace and mercy at your most need help you,
Swear.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit! [They swear.

So, gentlemen.

With all my love I do commend me to you:
And what so poor a man as Hamlet is
May do, to express his love and friendly to you,
God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;
And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.
The time is out of joint: O cursed spite,
That ever I was born to set it right!
Nay, come, let's go together. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. — A room in Polonius' house.

Enter Polonius and Reynaldo.

Pol. Give him this money and these notes, Rey-
Rey. I will, my lord. [reynaldo.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Rey.
Before you visit him, to make inquire [valdo,
Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it. [sir,

Pol. Marry, well said; very well said. Look you,
Enter Ophelia.

How now, Ophelia! what's the matter?
Oph. O, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted.

Pol. With what, i' the name of God?
Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,
Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbraided;
No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd,
Ungarter'd, and down-gyved to his ankle;
Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;
And with a look so piteous in purport
As if he had been loosed out of hell
To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.
Pol. Mad for thy love?
Oph. My lord, I do not know;
But truly, I do fear it.
Pol. What said he?
Oph. He took me by the wrist and held me hard;
Then goes he to the length of all his arm;
And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such a puzzle of my face
As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so;
At last, a little shaking of mine arm
And threat'ning his head with his hand going down,
He raised a sigh so piteous and profound
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk
And end his being; that done, he lets me go:
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes;
For out o' doors he went without their help,
And, to the last, bend'd their light on me.
Pol. Come, go with me: I will go seek the king.
This is the very ecstasy of love,
Whose violent property fordoes itself
And leads the will to desperate undertakings
As oft as any passion under heaven
That does afflict our natures. I am sorry.
What, have you given him any hard words of late?
Oph. No, my good lord, but, as you did command,
I did repel his letters and denied
His access to me.
Pol. That hath made him mad. I am sorry that with better heed and judgment
I had not quoted him: I fear'd he did but trifle,
And meant to wreck thee; but, beshrew my jeal-
By heaven, it is as proper to our age [ouisy]
To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions
As it is common for the younger sort
To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king:
This must be known; which, being kept close,
might move
More grief to hide than hate to utter love. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A room in the castle.
Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, Guilden-stern, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz and Guilden-

Moreover that we much did long to see you, [stern! The need we have to use you did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlet's transformation, and so call it
Sith nor the exterior nor the inward man
Resembles that it was. What it should be,
More than his father's death, that thus hath put
So much from the understanding of himself, [him
I cannot dream of: I treat you both,
That, being of so young days brought up with him,
And sith so near neighbours to youth and lavour,
That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court
Some little time: so by your companies
To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather,
So much as from occasion you may glean,
Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus.
That, open'd, lies within our remedy. [you;

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of 673

And sure I am two men there are not living
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To show us so much gentry and good will
As to expend your time with us awhile,
For the supply and profit of our hope,
Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king’s remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Guil. But we both obey,
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent
To lay our service freely at your feet,
To be command.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz and gentle Guilden-

Guil. Thanks, Guildenstern and gentle Rosencrantz.
And I beseech you instantly to visit [granting:]
My too much changed son. Go, some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence and our practices
Pleasant and helpful to him!

Queen. Ay, amen!

Enter Polonius, with Voltimand and Cornelius.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? I assure my good liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
Both to my God and to my gracious king:
And I do think, or else this brain of mine
Hath put the trail of policy so sure
As it hath been used to do, that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet’s lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them in.

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son’s distemper.

Queen. I doubt it is no other but the main;
His father’s death, and our o’erhasty marriage.

King. Well, we shall sift him.

Re-enter Polonius, with Voltimand and Cornelius.

Welcome, my good friends!

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

Volt. Most fair return of greetings and desires. Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew’s levies; which to him appear’d
To be a preparation ’gainst the Polack;
But, better look’d into, he truly found
It was against your highness: whereat griefed,
That so his sickness, age and impotence
Was falsely borne in hand to his arrest.

On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys;
Receives rebuke from Norway, and in fine
Makes vow before his uncle never more
To give the assay of arms against your majesty.

Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee,
And his commission to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack:

With an entreaty, herein further shown,

That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise,
On such regards of safety and allowance
As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well;
And at our more consider’d time we’ll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.
ACT II.

HAMLET.

SCENE II.

King. Do you think 'tis time?
Queen. It may be, very likely. [That—]
Pol. Hath there been such a time—I'd fain know
That I have positively said 'Tis so,'
When it proved otherwise?
King. Not that I know.
Pol. [Pointing to his head and shoulder] Take this from this, if this be otherwise:
If circumstances lead me, I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the centre.
King. How may we try it further?
Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours
Here in the lobby. [together Queen. So he does indeed.
Pol. At such a time I'll lose my daughter to him:
Be you and I behind an arras then;
Mark the encounter: if he love her not
And be not from his reason full 'thenceon,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm and carters.
King. We will try it.
Queen. But, look, where so the poor wretch comes reading.
Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away:
I'll board him presently.
[Exeunt King, Queen, and Attendants.]

Enter Hamlet, reading.

O, give me leave:

How does my good Lord Hamlet?
Ham. Well, God-a-mercy.
Pol. Do you know me, my lord?
Ham. Excellent well: you are a fishmonger.
Pol. Not I, my lord.
Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.
Pol. Honest, my lord!
Ham. Ay, sir; to be honest, as this world goes,
is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.
Pol. That's very true, my lord.
Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god kising carrion,—Have you a daughter?
Pol. I have, my lord.
Ham. Let him not walk i' the sun: conception is a blessing: but not as your daughter may conceive.
Friend. Proclamation!
Pol. [Aside] How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter: yet he knew me not at first;
he said I was a fishmonger: he is far gone, far gone:
and truly in my youth I suffered much extremity for love; very near this. I'll speak to him again.
What do you read, my lord?
Ham. Words, words, words.
Pol. What is the matter, my lord?
Ham. Between who?
Pol. I mean, the matter that you read, my lord.
Ham. Shanders, sir: for the satirical rogue says here that old men have grey beards, that their faces are wrinkled, their eyes purging thick amber and plum-tree gum and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams: all which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe,
yet hold it not honesty to have it thus set down, for yourself, sir, should be old as I am, if like a crab
you could go backward.
Pol. [Aside] Though this be madness, yet there is method in 't. Will you walk out of the air, my
Ham. Into my grave. [lord]
Pol. Indeed, that is out o' the air. [Aside] How pregnant sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madness bitt'ns on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter.—My honourable lord, I will most humibly take my leave of you.
Ros. To what end, my lord?
Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you, by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me. Will you not show me the place?—no?
Ros. [Aside to Gent.] What say you?
Ham. [Aside] Nay, then, I have an eye of you.—
If you love me, hold not off.
Gent. My lord, we were sent for.
Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation please you. I know that, when I do come before the king and queen, no matter how I fold all common exercises; and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory, this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o'ering firmament, this majestic roof fretted with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving; how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me: no, nor woman neither, though by your smiling you seem to say so.
Ros. My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts.
Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said 'man delights not me'?
Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenden entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted them on the way; and either are the coming, to offer you service.
Ham. He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace; the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are ticked o' the scree; and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blunt verse shall halt for't. What players are they?
Ros. Even those you were wont to take delight in, the tragedians of the city.
Ham. How chances it they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.
Ros. I think their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.
Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? are they so followed?
Ros. No, indeed, are they not.
Ham. How comes it? do they grow rusty?
Ros. Nay, their keepers keep in the wonted pace: but there is, sir, an aery of children, little eyases, that cry out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically clapped for 't: these are now the fashion, and so betake themselves to the common stages —so they call them—that many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose-quills and dare scarce come thither.
Ham. What, are they children? who maintains 'em? how are they escoled? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can shug? will they not soon have some good grace given them by the common players—as it is most like, if their means are no better—their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?
Ros. 'Faith, there has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them to controversy: there was, for a while, no money had for ground, unless the poet and the players went to cuffs in the question.
Ham. Is't possible?

Guil. O, there has been much throwing about of Ham. Do the boys carry it away? [Aside.]
Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.
Ham. It is not very strange: for mine uncle is king of Denmark, and those that would make mows at him while he is but fifty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece for his picture in little. 'Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

FLOURISH of trumpets within.

Gent. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands, come then: the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply with you in this garb, lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are welcome: but my uncle-father and aunt-mother are deceived.

Gent. In what, my dear lord?
Ham. I am but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly I know a hawk from a handsaw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!
Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern; and you too: at each ear a hearer: that great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts.
Ros. Happily he 's the second time come to them; for they say an old man is twice a child.
Ham. I will prophesy he comes to tell me of the players; mark it. You say right, sir: o' Monday morning; 't was so indeed.
Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.
Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you. When Roscius was an actor in Rome—
Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.
Ham. Buz, buz!
Pol. Upon mine honour,—
Ham. Then came each actor on his ass.—
Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral, scene indivisible, or poem unlimited: Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light: for the law of wit and the liberty, these are the only men.
Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel, what a treasure hast thou?
Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?
Ham. Why,
One fair daughter, and no more,
The which he loved passing well.

Pol. [Aside] Still on my daughter.
Ham. Am I not i' the right, old Jephthah?
Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter that I love passing well.
Ham. Nay, that follows not.
Pol. What follows, then, my lord?
Ham. Why,
As by lot, God wot,
and then, you know,
'It came to pass, as most like it was,'— the first row of the pious chanson will show you more; for look, where my abridgment comes.

Enter four or five Players.

You are welcome, masters; welcome, all. I am glad to see thee well. Welcome, good friends. O, my old friend! thy face is valanced since I saw thee last: comest thou to beheard in Denmark? What, my young lady and mistress! By 'r lady, this lady is nearer to heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine. Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncertain gold, be not cracked within the ring. Masters, you are all wel-
Scene II.

Pol. That's good; 'mobled queen' is good.

First Play. 'Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames
With hens and rheum; a clout upon that head
Where late the diadem stood, and for a role,
About her lank and all o'er-teemed loins,
A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up;
Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,
'Gainst Fortune's state would treason have pronounced:
But if the gods themselves did see her then
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that she made,
Unless things mortal move them not at all,
Would have made milch the burning eyes of
And passion in the gods.'

Pol. Look, whether he has not turned his colour
And has tears in 's eyes. Pray you, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well; I'll have thee speak out the rest soon.
Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used; for they are the abstract and brief chronicles of the time:
after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. God's bodykins, man, much better: use every man after his desert, and who should 'scape with whipping还得切一些
whether it be now, herein this be your death or any other way, whether it be now, herein this be your death

Pol. Why, that is a sound reason:
Do it and they will say there's much truth in't.

Ham. 'Thine errand is more to my liking:
One bank at Elsinore.' [Exit Polonius with all the players but the first.]

First Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll ha'to-morrow night. You could,
for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down and insert in 't, could you not?

First Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well. Follow that lord; and look you mock him not. [Exit First Player.] My good friends, I'll leave you till night; you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord!

Ham. Ay, so, God be wi' ye: [Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.] Now I am alone.
O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!
Is it not monstrous that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit
That from her working all his visage wond'rd,
Tears in his eyes, distraction in 's aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit; and all for nothing!
For Hecuba!
What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the means? and what's he, and where
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears
And cleave the general ear with horrid speech,
Make mad the guilty and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed
The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet—
A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
Upon whose property and most dear life
A dumb'd defeat was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain? breaks my peace across?
Plucks off my beard, and doth pervade my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie? the throat,
As deep as to the lungs? who does me this?

Ha! 'Swounds, I should take it: for it cannot be

But I am pigeon-liver'd and lack gull

To make oppression bitter, or ere this

I should have fatted all the region kites

With this slave's offal: bloody, bawdy villain!

Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless vil-

O, vengeance! [l fear!

Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave,

That I, the son of a dear father murder'd.

Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,

Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,

And fall a-cursing, like a very drab,

A scullion!

Fie upon 't! foh! About, my brain! I have heard

That guilty creatures sitting at a play

Have by the very cunning of the scene

Been struck so to the soul that presently

They have proclaim'd their malfeasances:

For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak

With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father

Before mine uncle: I'll observe his looks;

I'll tent him to the quick: if he but blech,

I know my course: The spirit that I have seen

May be the devil: and the devil hath power

To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and perhaps

Out of my weakness and my melancholy,

As he is very potent with such spirits,

Abuses me to damn me: I'll have grounds

More relative than this: the play's the thing

Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. — A room in the castle.

Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosenrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. And can you, by no drift of circumstance,

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,

Creating cruelly all his days of quiet

With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess he feels himself distracted;

But from what cause he will by no means speak.

Gul. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded,

But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,

When we would bring him on to some confession

Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Gul. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands,

Most free in his reply.

Queen. Did you assay him

To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players

We o'er-ran'thought on the way: of these we told him;

And there did seem in him a kind of joy

To hear of it: they are about the court.

And, as I think, they have already order

This night to play before him.

Pol. 'tis most true:

And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties

To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me

To hear him so inclined.

Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,

And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Execut Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too;

For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither,

That he, as 'twere by accident, may here

Affront Ophelia:

Her father and myself, lawful espials,

Will so bestow ourselves that, seeing, unseen,

We may of their encounter frankly judge,

And gather by him, as he is behaved,

If 't be the affliction of his love or no

That thus he suffers for.

Queen. I shall obey you.

And for your part, Ophelia, I do wish

That your good beauties be the happy cause

Of Hamlet's wildness: so shall I hope your virtues

Will bring him to his wonted way again,

To both your honours.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may. [Exit Queen.

ACT III.

HAMLET.

SCENE II.

Re-enter King and Polonius.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend; Nor what he spake, though it lack'd a little, Was not like madness. There's something in his O'er which his melancholy sits on brood; [soul, And I must watch the hatch and the disclose Will be some danger: which for to prevent, I have in quick determination Thus set it down: he shall with speed to England, For the demand of our neglected tribute: Haspy the seas and countries different. With variable objects shall expel This something-settled matter in his heart, Whereon his brains still beating puts him thus From fashion of himself. What think you on 't? Pol. It shall do well: but yet do I believe The origin and commencement of his grief Sprung from neglected love. How now, Ophelia! You need not tell us what Lord Hamlet said; We heard it all. My lord, do as you please; But, if you hold it fit, after the play Let his queen mother all alone entreat him To show his grief: let her be round with him; And I'll be placed, so please you, in the ear Of all the paradox, henceforward; To England send him, or confine him where Your wisdom best shall think.

Ham. It shall be so: Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.'

Enter Hamlet and Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. You must not only speak the words, but the power of them; the energy of the words, as it were, their strength, their force, their sound. Get thee to a nunnery, go: farewell. Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool; for wise men know well enough what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go, and quickly too. Farewell.

Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens!

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry: be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, to be desired, as accessible to blame, Get thee to a nunnery, go: farewell. Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool; for wise men know well enough what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go, and quickly too. Farewell.

Oph. O heavenly powers, restore him!

Ham. I have heard of your paintings too, well enough; God has given you one face, and you make yourselves another: you jig, you amble, and you lisp, and nick-name God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance. Go to, I'll no more on 't; it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages: those that are married already, all their love shall from the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. [Exeunt.

Oph. O, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown! The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's, eye, tongue, The expectancy and rose of the fair state, [sword; The glass of fashion and the mould of form, The bane of base birth, the fever of low blood, The deader, when it rears itself, quite down! And I, of ladies most deject and wretched, That suck'd the honey of his music vows, Now see that noble and most sovereign reason, Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh; That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth Blasted with cestasty: O, woe is me, To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!
tators to laugh too; though, in the meantime, some necessary question of the play be then to be considered: that's villanous, and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.

[Exeunt Players.]

Enter Polonius, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

How now, my lord! will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Not the players make haste. [Exit Polonius.] Will you two help to hasten them?

Ros. Guild. We will, my lord.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Ham. What ho! Horatio!

Enter Horatio.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service. Ham. Horatio, thou art even as just a man As e'er my conversation coped withal.

Hor. O, my dear lord—Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter; For what advancement may I hope from thee That no revenue hast but thy good spirits, To feel and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candid tongue lick absorbant pulp, And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear? Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice And could of men distinguish, her election Hath seal'd thee for herself; for thou hast been As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing, A man that fortune's buffets and rewards Hath ta'en with equal thanks: blest are those Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled, That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger To sound what stop she please. Give me that man That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart, As I do thee.—Something too much of this.— There is a play to-night before the king; One scene of it comes near the circumstance Which I have told thee of my father's death: I prithee, when thou seest that act afoot, Even with the very comment of thy soul Observe mine uncle: if his occidental guilt Do not itself unkennel in one speech, It is a damned ghost that we have seen, And my imaginations are as foul As Vulcan's stithy. Give him heedful note; For I mine eyes will rivet to his face, And after we will both our judgments join In censure of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord: If he steal aught whilst this play is playing, And 'scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be Get you a place.

[fide:]

Danish march. A flourish. Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith; of the chameleon's dish: I eat the air, promise-crammed: you cannot feed capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet; these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine now. [To Polonius] My lord, you played once i' the university, you say?

Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a

Ham. What did you enact? [good actor.

Pol. I did enact Julius Caesar: I was killed i' the Capitol; Brutus killed me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him to kill so capital a calf there. Be the players ready?

Ros. Ay, my lord; they stay upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive.

Pol. [To the King] O, ho! do you mark that?—Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap? [Lying down on Ophelia's feet.

Oph. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think I meant country matters?

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maids' legs.

Ham. What is, my lord? [legs.

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O God, your only jig-maker. What should a man do but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two hours.

Oph. Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay then, let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables. O heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: but, by 'r lady, he must build churches then; or else he'll suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse, whose epitaph is 'For, O, for O, the hobby-horse is forgot.'

Hautboys play. The dumb-show enters.

Enter a King and a Queen very lovingly; the Queen embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck: lays him down upon a bank of flowers: she, seeing him asleep, feeds him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exit. The Queen returns; finds the King dead, and makes passionate action. The Poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, comes in at无意, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The Poisoner woos the Queen with gifts: she seems loath and unwilling awhile, but in the end accepts his love. [Exeunt.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is murther mallecho; it means mischief.

Oph. Belike this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him: be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Oph. You are naught, you are naught: I'll mark the play.

Pro. For us, and for our tragedy, Here stooping to your clemency, We beg your hearing patiently. [Exit.

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring? Oph. 'Tis brief, my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter two Players, King and Queen.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phoebus' cart gone round

Neptune's salt wash and Tellus' orbied ground, And thirty dozen moons with borrow'd sheen About the world have times twice thirties been Since love our hearts and Hymen did our hands Unite commensal in most sacred bands. [moon

ACT III.

HAMLET.

SCENE II.

Make us again count o'er ere love be done!
But, woe is me, you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust,
Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must:
For women's fear and love holds quantity;
In neither aught, or in extremity.
Now, what, my love? proof hath made you know;
And that love is sized, my fear is so:
Where love is great, the leastest doubts are fear;
Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.

P. King. 'Faith, I must leave thee, love, and
My operant powers their functions leave to do:
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, beloved, and happy one as I.
For husband shalt thou—
P. Queen. O, confound the rest!

Such love must needs be treason in my breast:
In second husband let me be accurst!
None wed the second but who kill'd the first.

P. Queen. The instances that second marriage
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love;
A second time I kill my husband dead,
When second husband kisses me in bed. [Speak;
P. King. I do believe you think what now you
But what then do determine off we brake;
Purpose is but the slave to memory,
Of violent birth, but poor validity:
Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree;
But full, unshaken, when they mellow be.
Most necessary 't is that we forget
To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:
What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures with themselves destroy:
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slander accident.
This world is not for aye, nor 't is not strange
That even our loves should with our fortunes change;
For 't is a question left us yet to prove,
Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.
The great man down, you mark his favourite flies;
The poor friend makes them with his enemies.
And hitherto doth love on fortune tend:
For who not needs shall never lack a friend,
And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his enemy.
But, orderly to end where I begun,
Our wills and fates do so contrary run
That our devices still are overthrown;
Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our
So think thou wilt no second husband wed;
But die thy thoughts when thy first lord is dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light.
That our devices still are overthrown; [own
Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our
So think thou wilt no second husband wed;
But die thy thoughts when thy first lord is dead.

P. King. 'T is deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here awhile;
My spirits grow dull, and faint I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain;
And never come mishance between us twain! [Exit

Ham. Madam, how like you this play?
Queen. The lady protests too much, methinks.
Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in't?
Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest; no offence in the world.
King. What do you call the play?
Ham. The Mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropically. This play is the image of a murder done in York: Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife, Baptista: you shall see it anon; 'tis a knavish piece of work: but what o' that? your majesty and we that have free souls, it touches us not: let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.

Enter Lucianus.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

Oph. You are as good a chorus, my lord.

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning to take off my edge.

Oph. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you must take your husbands. Begin, murderer; pox, leave thy damnable faces, and begin.

Come: 'The croaking raven doth bellow for revenge,'

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and Time agreeing;
Confederate season, else no creature seeing;
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,
With Iacete's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy natural magic and dire property,
On wholesome life usurp immediately.

[Pouring the poison into the sleeper's ears.

Ham. He poisons him! the garden for's estate.
His name's Gonzago: the story is extant, and written in choice Italian: you shall see anon how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Oph. The king rises.

Ham. What, frightened with false fire?

Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

King. Give me some light: away!

All. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exeunt all but Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play:
For once must watch, while some must sleep:
So runs the world out of joint;
Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers— if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me—with two Provincial roses on my razed shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry of players, sir?

Hor. Half a share.

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O Damon dear,
This realm dismantled was
Of Jove himself; and now reigns here
A very, very — pujock.

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning?

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah, ha! Come, some music! come, the recorders!

For if the king like not the comedy,
Why then, belike, he likes it not, perdy.

Come, some music!

Re-enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Gertr. Good my lord, vouche safe a word with

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Gertr. The king, sir.—

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?

Gertr. Is in his retirement marvellous distempered.

Ham. With drink, sir?
ACT III.

HAMLET.

SCENE III.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud that's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or like a whale?—

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. Then I will come to my mother by and by. They fool me to the top of my bent. I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so.

Ham. By and by is easily said.

[Exit Polonius.]

Enter King, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. I like him not, nor stands it safe with us To let his madness range. Therefore prepare you; I your commission will forthwith dispatch, And he to England shall along with you: The terms of our estate may not endure Hazard so dangerous as doth hourly grow Out of his lunacies.

We will ourselves provide: Most holy and religious fear it is To keep those many bodies safe That live and feed upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound, With all the strength and armour of the mind, To keep itself from nayance; but much more That spirit upon whose weal depend and rest The lives of many. The cease of majesty Dies not alone; but, like a gulf, doth draw What's near it with it: it is a massy wheel, Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount, To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things Are mortised and adjoint'd; which, when it falls, Each small annexment, petty consequence, Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage; For we will fetters put upon this fear, Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. [Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet: Behind the arras I'll convey myself, To hear the process: I'll warrant she'll tax him And, as you said, and wisely was it said, [home: 'Tis meet that some more audience than a mother, Since nature makes them partial, should o'erhear The speech of vantage. Fare you well, my liege: I'll call upon you ere you go to bed, And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord.

[Exit Polonius.

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven; It hath the primal eldest curse upon 't, A brother's murder. Pray for me, I pray. Though inclination be as sharp as will: My stronger guilt defeats my strong intreit;
ACT III.

HAMLET. SCENE IV.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now, mother, what's the matter?
Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much of-
Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.
Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet!

Ham. What's the matter now?
Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so:
You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife;
And — would it were not so! — you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then, I'll set those to you that can speak.

[not budge.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall

You go not till I set you up a glass

Where you may see the innmost part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do? wilt thou not murder

Help, help, ho! [me?

Ham. [Drawing] How now! a rat? Dead, for a ducat, dead! [Makes a pass through the arras.

Queen. O, mother, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay, I know not:

Is it the king?

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed! almost as bad, good mother,

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

Queen. As kill a king!

Ham. Ay, lady, 't was my word.

[Or. Lifts up the arras and discovers Polonius.

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!

I took thee for thy better: take thy fortune;

Thou find'st to be too busy is some danger.

Leave wringing of your hands: peace I sit you down,

And let me wring your heart; for so I shall,

If it be made of penetrable stuff.

If damned custom have not brass'd it so

That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou darest wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty,

Calls virtue hypocrite, takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love

And sets a bluster there, makes marriage-vows

As false as dier's oaths: O, such a deed

As from the body of contraction plucks

The very soul, and sweet religion makes

A rhapsody of words: heaven's face doth glow;

Yea, this solidity and compound mass,

With triflous visage, as against the doom,

Is thought-sick at the act.

Queen. Ay me, what act,

That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this,

The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.

See, what a grace was seated on this brow;

Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;

An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;

A station like the herald Mercury

New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;

A combination and a form indeed,

Where every god did seem to set his seal,

to give the world assurance of a man:

This was your husband. Look you now, what fol-

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,

Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,

And bat ten on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it love; for at your age

The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,

Enter Queen and Polonius.

Pol. He will come straight. Look you lay home to him:

Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with,

And that your grace hath screen'd and stood be-wild.

Much heat and him. I'll scence me even here.

Pray you, be round with him.

Ham. [Within] Mother, mother, mother!

Queen. I'll warrant you,

Fear me not: withdraw, I hear him coming.

[Polonius hides behind the arras.]

Enter Queen.

Ham. Now, mother, what's the matter?

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,

And bat ten on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

You cannot call it love; for at your age

The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment: and what judgment
Would step from this to this? Sense, sure, you have,
Else could you not have motion; but sure, that sense
Is apoplex’d; for madness would not err,
Nor sense to ecstasy was ne’er so thrall’d
But it reserved some quantity of choice,
To serve in such a difference. What devil was’t
That this hath cozen’d you so hoodman-blind?
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope.
O shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,
If thou must mutine in a matron’s bones,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,
And melted in her own fire: proclaim no shame
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge,
Since frost itself as actively doth burn
And reason panders will.
Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more:
Thou turn’st mine eyes into my very soul;
And there I see such black and grained spots
As will not leave their tint.
Ham. Nay, but to live
In the sweet seat of an ensmealed bed,
Stew’d in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the masty sty,—
O, speak to me no more;
These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears;
No more, sweet Hamlet!
Ham. A murderer and a villain;
A slave, that is not twentieth part the title
Of your preceding lord; a vice of kings;
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!
Queen. No more!
Ham. A king of shreds and patches,—

Enter Ghost.

Save me, and hover o’er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards! What would your gracious
Queen. Alas, he’s mad! [figure?
Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That used in time and passion, lets go by
The important acting of your dread command?
O, say!
Ghost. Do not forget: this visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look, amazement on thy mother sits;
O, step in when her fighting soul:
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works:
Speak to her, Hamlet.
Ham. How is it with you, lady?
Queen. Alas, how is’t with you.
That you do bend your eye on vacancy
And with the incorporeal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,
Starts up, and stands an end. O gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?
Ham. On him, on him! Look you, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin’d, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Do not look upon me;
Lest with this piteous action you convert
My stern effects: then what I have to do
Will not true colour: you must per chance for blood.
Queen. To whom do you speak this?
Ham. Do you see nothing there?
Queen. Nothing at all; yet all that I see.
Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?
Queen. No, nothing but ourselves.
Ham. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he lived!
Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!

[Exit Ghost.
Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.
Ham. Ecstasy!
My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as heathful music: it is not madness
That I have utter’d; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word; which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that flatteringunction to your soul,
That not your trespass, but your madness speaks.
It will but skin and film the ulcers place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infests unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Repent what’s past: avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue;
For in the fatness of these pursy times
Virtue itself of vice must jordan beg.
Yea, curb and woo for leave to do him good.
Queen. O Hamlet, thou hast left my heart in twain.
Ham. O, throw away the worse part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good night: but go not to mine uncle’s bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat,
Of habits devil, is angel yet in this,
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frowk or livery,
That aptly is put on. Refrain to-night,
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence: the next more easy;
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either by the devil or by me throw him out.
With wondrous potency. Once more, good night:
And when you are desirous to be bless’d,
I’ll blessing beg of you. For this same lord,
[Pointing to Polonius.
I do repent: but heaven hath pleased it so,
To punish me with this and this with me.
That I must be their scourge and instiller.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So, again, good night.
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins and worse remains behind.
One word more, good lady.
Queen. What shall I do?
Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do:
Let the boating tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you his mouse;
And let him, for a pair of reechy kisses,
Or paddling in your neck with his damn’d fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft. ’T were good you let him know;
For who, that’s but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a glib,
Such dear concernings hide? who would do so?
No, in despite of sense and secrecy,
Unpeg the basket on the house’s top,
Let the birds fly, and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions, in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down.

[Breath.
Queen. Be thou assured, if words be made of
And breath of life. I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.
Ham. I must to England; you know that?
Queen. I had forgot: ’tis so concluded.
Ham. There’s letters seal’d: and my two school-fellow,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang’d,
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,
ACT IV.

HAMLET.

SCENE I. — A room in the castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves:
You must translate: 'tis fit we understand them.
Where is your son?
Queen. Below this place on us a little while. [Exeunt Rosecncrantz and Guildenstern.]

Ah, my good lord, what have I seen to-night!
King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?
Queen. Mad as the sea and wind, when both combine,
Which is the mighty: in his lawless fit, [lend
Behind the armor bears no thing atris.
Whips out his rapier, cries, 'A rat, a rat!'
And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O heavy deed!
It had been so with us, had we been there:
His liberty is full of threats to all,
To you yourself, to us, to every one.
Alas, how shall this bloody deed be answered?
It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd and out of haunt,
This mad young man: but so much was our love,
We would not understand what was most fit;
But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?
Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd:
O'er whom his very madness, like some ore
Among a mineral of metals base,
Shows itself pure; he weeps for what is done.

King. O Gertrude, come away!
The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence: and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse. Ho, Guildenstern!

Re-enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid:
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd him:
Go seek him out: speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what 's untimely done . . . .
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports his point'd shot, may miss our name,
And hit the woundless air. O, come away!
My soul is full of discord and dismay. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — Another room in the castle.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Safely stowed.
Ros. [Within] Hamlet! Lord Hamlet!

ACT IV.

Enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body? [kin.
Ham. Compound it with dust, where't is Ros. Tell us where 'tis, that we may take it And bear it to the chapel. [thence
Ham. Do not believe it. Ros. Believe what? Ham. That I can keep your counsel and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge! what replication should be made by the son of a Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord? [kin? Ham. Ay, sir, that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the king best service in the end: he keeps them, like an ape, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed, to be last swallowed: when he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again.
Ros. I understand you not, my lord.
Ham. I am glad of it: a knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.
Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.
Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing —
Guil. A thing, my lord!
Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Another room in the castle.

Enter King, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.
How dangerous is it that this man goes loose!
Yet must not we put the strong law on him:
He's loved of the distracted multitude,
Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes:
And where 'tis so, the offender's scourge is weigh'd,
But never the offence. To bear all smooth and
This sudden sending him away must seem [even,
Deliberate pause; diseases desperate grown
By desperate appliance are relieved,
Or not at all.

Enter Rosencrantz.

How now! what hath befall'n?
Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord, We cannot get from him.
King. But where is he?
Ros. Without, my lord; guarded, to know your King. Bring him before us. [pleasure.
Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?
Ham. At supper.
King. At supper! where? Ham. No, sir, he eats, but where he is eaten: a certain convocation of politic worms are 'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet: we fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots: your fat king and your lean

The text is a section from Act IV of William Shakespeare's play Hamlet. It's the continuation of the story, leading into Act V. The scene involves the king, queen, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and Hamlet, discussing the aftermath of the murder of Polonius and the ensuing events leading to the king's questioning of Hamlet's actions. beggar is but variable service, two dishes, but to one table: that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king, and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing but that so far you may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see: if your messenger find him not there, seek him the other place yourself. But indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs to the lobby.

Ham. Go seek him there. [To some Attendants.

Ham. He will stay till ye come. [Exit Attendants.

King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial service. Which do we tender, as we dearly grieve it. For that which thou hast done,—must send thee hence With fiery quickness; therefore prepare thyself; The bark is ready, and the wind at help, The associates tend, and everything is bent For England.

Enter. For England! Ay, Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a cherub that sees them. But, come, for England! Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet.

Ham. My father: father and mother is man and wife; and wife is one flesh; and so, my mother.

Come, for England! [Exit.

King. Follow him at foot; tempt him with speed abroad.

Delay no more. I'll have him hence to-night:
Away! for everything is seal'd and done.

That else leans on the affair: pray you, make haste.

[Exit Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

And, England, if my love thou hol'st at aught—
As my great power thereof may give thee sense,
Since by thy clicitry looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thy free aw
Pays homage to us—thou may'st not coldly set
Our sovereign process; which imports at full,
By letters congru-ing to that effect,
The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England; For like the hectic in his blood be rages.

And thou must cure me: till I know 'tis done,
Hower'er my laps, my joys were never begun. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — A plain in Denmark.

Enter Fortinbras; a Captain, and Soldiers, marching.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king:
Tell him that, by his license, Fortinbras
Craves the conveyance of a promised march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous.
If that his majesty would augit with us,
We shall express our duty in his eye;
And let him know so.

Cap. I will do 't, my lord.

For. Go softly on. [Exit Fortinbras and Soldiers.

Enter Hamlet, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these?

Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham. How purposed, sir, I pray you?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who commands them, sir?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.
ACT IV.

HAMLET.

SCENE V.

Queen. Let her come in.
[Exit Horatio.]
To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss:
So full of artless jealousy it is,
It spills itself in fearing to be split.

Re-enter Horatio, with Ophelia.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?
Queen. How now, Ophelia!
Oph. [Sings] How should I your true love know
From another one?
By his cockle hat and staff,
And his sandal shoe:
Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?
[Sings] He is dead and gone, lady,
He is dead and gone;
At his head a grass-green turf,
At his heels a stone.
Queen. Nay, but, Ophelia,— Oph. Pray you, mark.
[Sings] White is his shroud as the mountain snow.—

Enter King.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.
Oph. [Sings] Larded with sweet flowers;
Which bewept to the grave did go
With true-love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady?
Oph. Well, God 'ild you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter. Lord, we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Conceit upon her father.
Oph. Pray you, let 's have no words of this; but when they ask you what it means, say you this:
[Sings] To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day,
All in the morning betime,
And I a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine.
Then up he rose, and donn'd his clothes,
And dupp'd the chamber-door;
Let in the maid, that out a maid
Never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia!
[End on 't:]

Oph. Indeed, la, without an oath, I'll make an [Sings] By Gis and by Saint Charity,
'Alack, and fie for shame!
Young men will do 't, if they come to 't;
By cock, they are to blame.
Quoth she, before you tumbling me,
You promised me to wed,
So would I but 'd done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?
Oph. I hope all will be well. We must be patient:
but I cannot choose but weep, to think they should lay him i' the cold ground. My brother shall know of it: and so I thank you for your good coun-

[Exit Horatio.]

O. this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death. O Gertrude, Gertrude,
When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions. First, her father slain:
Next, your son gone; and he most violent author
Of his own just remove: the people muddied,
Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whis-perings.

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but
In hugger-mugger to inter him: poor Ophelia
Divided from herself and her fair judgment.
Without the which were pictures, or mere beasts:
Last, and as much containing as all these,
Her brother is in secret come from France;

Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds,
And wants not buzzers to infect his ear
With pestilent speeches of his father's death;
Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our person to arrange
In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this,
Like to a murdering-piece, in many places
Gives me superfluous death.

[IA noise within.]

Queen. Alack, what noise is this?

King. Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door.

Enter another Gentleman.

What is the matter?

Gent. Save yourself, my lord:
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erears his officers. The rabble call him lord;
And, as the world were now but to begin,
Antiquity forgot, custom not known.
The ratifiers and props of every word,
They cry ' Choose we: Laertes shall be king: '
Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds:
'Laertes shall be king. Laertes king!'

How cheerfully on the false trait they cry!
O, this is counter, you false Danish dogs!

[Noise within.]

Enter Laertes, armed; Danes following.

Laer. Where is this king? Sirs, stand you all Danes. No, let's come in.
[without.]

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Danes. We will, we will.

[They retire without the door.]

Laer. I thank you: keep the door. O thou vile
Give me my father!

[King, Queen.

Laer. Calmly, good Laertes.

Queen. That drop of blood that's calm proclaims me bastard,
Cries cuckold to my father, brands the harlot
Even here, between the chaste unsmirched brow
Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,
That thy rebellion looks so wanton-like?

Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person:
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Acts little of his will. Tell me, Laertes,
Why thou art thus incensed. Let him go, Gertrude.

Speak, man.

Laer. Where is my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.
Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled
To hell, allegiance I vows, to the blackest devil!
Conscience and grace, to the profoundest pit!
I dare damnation. To this point I stand,
That both the worlds I give to negligence,
Let come what comes; only I'll be revenged
Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world.
And for my means, I'll husband them so well,
They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,
If you desire to know the certainty
Of your dear father's death, 'tis writ in your revenge,
That, swoopstake, you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser!

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll open my
And like the kind life-rendering pelican,
Repast them with my blood.

King. Why, now you speak

ACT IV.

HAMLET.  SCENE VII.

Like a good child and a true gentleman,
That I am guiltless of your father's death,
And am most sensible in grief for it,
It shall as level to your judgment pierce
As day does to your eye.

Danes.  [With them] Let her come in.

Lae.  How now! what noise is that?

Re-enter Ophelia.

O heat, dry up my brains! tears seven times salt,
Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid by weight,
Till our scale turn the beam. O rose of May!
Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!
O heavens! 'tis possible, a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life?
Nature is fine in love, and where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself
After the thing it loves.

Oph.  [Sings]
They bore him barefaced on the bier;
They non nouny, nony, none; and
And in his grave rain'd many a tear:

Fare you well, my dove! [revenge,
Lae.  Haste! then thy wits, and didst persuade
It could not move thus.

Oph.  [Sings] You must sing a-down a-down,
An you call him a-down-a.

O, how the wheel becomes it! It is the false steward,
That stole his master's daughter.

Lae.  This nothing's more than matter.
Oph.  There's rosemary, that's for remembrance:
pray, love, remember: and there is pansies, that's for thoughts.

Lae.  A document in madness, thoughts and remembrance fitted.

Oph.  There's fennel for you, and columbines:
there's rue for you: and here's some for me: we may call it herb-grace o' Sundays: O, you must wear your rue with a difference. There's a daisy:
I would give you some violets, but they withered
all when my father died: they say he made a good end.—

[Sings] For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy.

Lae.  Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself,
She turns to favour and to prettiness.

Oph.  [Sings] And will he not come again?
And will he not come again?
No, no, he is dead:
Go to thy death-bed:
He will never come again.

His beard was as white as snow,
All flaxen was his poll:
He is gone, he is gone,
And we cast away moan:
God ha' mercy on his soul!

And of all Christian souls, I pray God. God be wi' ye.  [Exit.

Lae.  Do you see this, O God?

King.  Laertes, I must commune with your grief,
Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me:
If by direct or by collateral hand
They and us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.

Lae.  Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure funeral —
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rite nor formal ostentation —

Cry to be heard, as 't were from heaven to earth,
That I must call 't in question.

King.  So you shall;
And where the offence is let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me.  [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. — Another room in the castle.

Enter Horatio and a Servant.

Hor.  What are they that would speak with me?
Serv.  Sirs: they say they have letters for you.

Hor.  Let them come in.  [Exit Servant.
I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

First Sail.  God bless you, sir.

Hor.  Let him bless thee too.
First Sail.  He shall, sir, an 't please him. There's a letter for you, sir: it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England: if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Hor.  [Reads] 'Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means to the king: they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase. Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour, and in the grapple I boarded them: on the instant they got clear of our ship: so I alone became their prisoner.
They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy: but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them. Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much speed as thou wouldest fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear will make thee blush; yet are they much too light for the bore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England: of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine, HAMLET. Come,
I will make way for these your letters;
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them.  [Exeunt.

SCENE VII. — Another room in the castle.

Enter King and Laertes.

King.  Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,
And you must put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he which hath your noble father slain
Pursued my life.

Lae.  It well appears; but tell me
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So criminal and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stir'd up.

King.  O, 'tis two special reasons;
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unsincr'd,
But yet to me they are strong. The queen his mother
Lives almost by his looks; and for myself —
My virtue or my plague, be it either which —
She's so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. All the other motive,
Why to a public count I might not go?
Is the great love the general gender bear him;
Who, dipp'd all his faults in their affection,
Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Convert his gyves to graces; so that my arrows,
Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,
Would have reverted to my heart again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Lae.  And so have I a noble father lost;
Enter a Messenger.

How now! what news?

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet:
This to your majesty; this to the queen.

King. From Hamlet! who brought them?

Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say; I saw them not:
They were given me by Claudio: he received them
Of him that brought them.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them.

Leave us. [Exit Messenger.]

What should this mean? Are all the rest come back?
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. 'Naked!' And in a postscript here, he says 'alone.' Can you advise me?

Laer. I'm lost in it, my lord. But let him come;
It warms the very sickness in my heart.
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
'Thus didest thou.'

King. If it be so, Laertes—

As how should it be so? how otherwise?—

Will you be ruled by me?

Laer. Ay, my lord; so you will not o'errule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,
As checking at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it, I will work him
To an attempt, now that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege.

Laer. My lord, I will be ruled;
The rather, if you could devise it so
That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.

You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Wherein, they say, you shine: your sum of parts
Did not together pinch such envy from him
As did that one, and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege.

Laer. What part is that, my lord?

King. A very riband in the cap of youth,
Yet needful too; for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears
Than settled age his sables and his weeds, [since,
Inpursuing health and graveness. Two months
Here was a gentleman of Normandy:—
I've seen myself, and served against, the French,
And they can well on horseback: but this gallant
Had witchcraft in 't: he grew unto his seat;
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
As he beguiled and demi-natured.
With the brave beast: so far he topp'd my thought,
That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks,
Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was 't?
A chalice for the nonce, whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stink,
Our purpose may hold there.

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen!
Queen. One woe doth tread upon another's heel,
So fast they follow: your sister's drown'd, Laertes.
Laer. Drown'd? O, where?
Queen. There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream;
There with fantastic garlands did she come
Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,
That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call them:
There the fair hoar leaues, being言行 in hanging,
An einious silver broke;
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide;
And, mermaid-like, awhile she bore her up:

Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes;
As one incapable of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indig'ned
Unto that element: but long it could not be Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas, then, she is drown'd?
Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my tears: but yet
It is our trick: nature her custom holds,
Let shame say what it will: when these are gone,
The woman will be out.
Adieu, my lord:
I have a speech of fire, that faint would blaze,
But that this folly douts it.
[Exit.
King. Let's follow, Gertrude:
How much I had to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I this will give it start again;
Therefore let's follow.
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A churchyard.

Enter two Clowns, with spades, &c.

First Clo. Is she to be buried in Christian burial that wifullly seeks her own salvation?
Sec. Clo. I tell thee she is; and therefore make her grave straight: the crowner hath sat on her,
and finds it Christian burial.

First Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence?
Sec. Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

First Clo. It must be 'se offendendo;' it cannot be else. For here lies the point: If I drown myself within this water, and drown myself, it is, will he, will he,
he goes,—mark you that; but if the water come to him and drown him, he drowns not himself:
argal, he that is not guilty of his own death shortens not his own life.

Sec. Clo. But is this law?

First Clo. Ay, marry, is 't; crown'er's quest law.

Sec. Clo. Why, if you told the truth on 't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been bury'd o' Christian burial.

First Clo. Why, there thou say'st: and the more pity that great folk should have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their ev'n Christian. Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but garderiners, ditchers, and graue-makers: they hold up Adam's profession.

Sec. Clo. Was he a gentleman?

First Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

Sec. Clo. Why, he had none.

First Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the Scripture? The Scripture says
'Adam digged? could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

Sec. Clo. Go to.

First Clo. Why, what is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?
Sec. Clo. The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

First Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith: the gallows does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that do ill; now, thou dost ill to say

The gallows is built stronger than the church: argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To 't again, come.

Sec. Clo. 'Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter?'

First Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.

Sec. Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

First Clo. To 't.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio, at a distance.

First Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it, for thy dull ass will not mend his pace with beating;
and, when you are asked this question next,
say 'a graven-maker: the houses that he makes last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Yauhannah; fetch me a stoup of liquor.
[Exit Sec. Clo.
[He digs, and sings.

In youth, when I did love, did love,
Methought it was very sweet,
To contract. O, the time, for, ah, my behave,
O, methought, there was nothing meet.
Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business, that he sings at grave-making?
[Business,
Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of Ham. 'Twis't en so: the hand of little employment habit the daintier sense.

First Clo. [Sings]
But are, with his stealing steps,
Hath claw'd me in his clutch,
And hath shipped me into the land,
As if I had never been such.
[Throws up a skull.

Ham. That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: how the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! It might be the pace of a politician, which this ass now o'er-reaches; one that would circumvent
God, might it not?
Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier; which could say 'Good morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord?'
This might be my lord such-a-one, that praised my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it;
might it not?

Hor. Ay, say lord.

Ham. Why, c'en so: and now my Lady Worm's; chapless, and knocked about the mazzard with a sexton's spade; here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see 't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with 'em?
mine aeh to think on 't.
First Clo. [Sings]

A pick-axe, and a spade, a spade,
For a shrouding sheet: O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.

[Throws up another skull.

Ham. There's another: why not that be the skull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddities now, his quillets, his cases, his tenures, and his titles? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the scorne with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Hum! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries: is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pale full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more, ha?

Hor. Not a more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calf-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep and calves which seek out assurance in that. I will speak to this fellow. Whose grave's this, sirrah?

First Clo. Mine, sir.

[Throws up another skull.

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed; for thou liest in 't.

First Clo. You lie out on 't, sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in 't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in 't, to be in 't and say it is thine: 'tis for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.

First Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 'twill away again, from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

First Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman, then?

First Clo. For none, neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in 't?

First Clo. One that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dug anew.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card, or equivoication will undo us. By the Lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken a note of it; the age is grown so picked that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his knee. How long hast thou been a grave-maker?

First Clo. Of all the days? the year, I came to 't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that since?

First Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: it was the very day that young Hamlet was born; he that is mad, and sent into England.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

First Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, it's no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

First Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

First Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

First Clo. Faith, even with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

First Clo. Why, here in Denmark: I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years. [Rof?

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth ere he

First Clo. I' faith, if he be not rotten before he die—as we have many pocky corses now-a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in—he will last you some eighty year or nine year: a Tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?

First Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while; and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a skull now: this skull has lain in the earth three and twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

First Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was: whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

First Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! a' poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the king's jester.

Ham. This?

First Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Let me see. [Takes the skull.] Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio: a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is! my goring rises at it. Here hung those lips that have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now, your gags? your sheet of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning? quite chapp-fallen? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour she must come; make her laugh at that. Prithee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think Alexander look'd o' this fashion? the earth?

Hor. 'E'en so.

Ham. And smelt so? pah!

[Puts down the skull.

Hor. 'E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. 'T were to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: as thus: Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth into dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam, whereeto he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel?

Imperious Cesar, dead and turn'd to clay, Might stop a hole to keep the wind away; O, that earth, which kept the world in awe, Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw! But soft! but soft! aside: here comes the king.

Enter Priests, &c. in procession; the Corpse of Ophelia, Laertes and Mourners following; King, Queen, their train, &c.

The queen, the courtiers: who in this they follow? And with such maimed rites? This doth betoken The corpse they follow did with desperate hand Fordo its own life: 't was of some estate. Couch we awhile, and mark.

[Retiring with Horatio.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

Very noble youth: mark.

Laer. What ceremony else? [larged

First Priest. Her obsequies have been as far en-

As we have warrantise: her death was doubtfull;

And, but that great command o'ersways the order,
ACT V.

HAMLET.

SCENE II.

She should in ground unsanctified have lodged
Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers,
Shards, flints and pebbles should be thrown on her:
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin crants,
Her maiden strivings and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

First Priest. No more be done: We should profane the service of the dead
To sing a requiem and such rest to her
As to pace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i' the earth:
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! I tell thee, churlish priest,
A ministering angel shall my sister be,
When thou liest howling.

Ham. What, the fair Ophelia!

Queen. Sweet to the sweet: farewell!

I thought thou should'st have been my Hamlet's wife;
I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,
And not have strew'd thy grave.

Ham. O, treble voe
Fall ten times treble on that cursed head,
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense
Deprived thee of! Hold off the earth awhile,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms:

Now pile your dust upon the quies and dead,
Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
To o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing] What is he whose grief
Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wandering stars, and makes them stand
Like wonder-working hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

Laer. The devil take thy soul!

[Grappling with him.

Ham. Thou pray'st not well.
I prithee, take thy fingers from my throat;
For, though I am not splenitve and rash,
Yet have I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear: hold off thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Hamlet, Hamlet!

Queen. Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the grave.

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this theme
Until my eyelids will no longer wag.
Queen. O my son, what theme?

Ham. I loved Ophelia: forty thousand brothers
Could not, with all their quantity of love,
Make up my sum. What wilt thou do for her?

Queen. O, he is mad, Laertes.

Ham. [Swounds, show me what thou 'lt do;
Woo't weep? woo't fight? woo't fast? woo't tear
Woo't drink up cost? eat a crocodile? thyself? I'll do't. Dost thou come here to whine?
To outface me with leaping in her grave?
Be buried quick with her, and so will I:

And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw
Millions of acres on us, till our ground,
Singeing his pate against the burning zone,
Make Ossia like a wart! Nay, an thou 'lt mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen. This is mere madness:
And thus awhile the fit will work on him;
Anon, as patient as the female dove,
When that her golden couplets are disclosed,
His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear ye, sir; What is the reason that you use me thus?
I loved you ever: but it is no matter;

Let Herecles himself do what he may,
The cat will mew and dog will have his day. [Exit. King. I pray you, good Horatio, wait upon him. [Exit Horatio.

[To Laertes] Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;
We'll put the matter to the present push.
Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.
This grave shall have a living monument:
An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — A hall in the castle.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the other;
You do remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord.

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep: methought I lay
Worse than the mutines in the bibles. Rashly,
And praised the pushers for the let us know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep plots do pall: and that should teach
There's a divinity that shapes our ends, [us
Rough-hew them how we will. —

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark
Groped I to find out them; had my desire,
Finger'd their packet, and in fine withdrew
To mine own room again; making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to misseal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,—
O royal knavery! — an exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reasons
Importing Denmark's health and England's too,
With, ho! such bugs and goblins in my life,
That, on the supervise, no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head shall be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission: read it at more leisure.
But will thou hear me how I did proceed?
Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus be-netted round with villanies,—
Ere I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play — I sat me down,
Devised a new commission, wrote it fair:
I once did hold it, as our statistis do,
A bassness to write fair and labour'd much
How to forget that learning, but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service: wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjunction from the king,
As England was his faithful tributary,
As love between them like the palm might flourish,
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear
And stand a comma 'tween their anities,
And many such-like ' As'es of great charge,
That, on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debateament further, more or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shivering-time allow'd. —

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordinat.
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal;
Folded the writ up in form of the other.

Subscribed it, gave 't the impression, placed it safely,
The changeling never known. Now, the next day
Was our sea-fight; and what to this was sequent
Thou knowst already.

Hor. So Guildeustern and Rosencrantz go to 't.
Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment.

They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Does by their own insinuation grow:
'Tis dangerous when the baser nature comes
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this!

Ham. Does it not, thinks thee, stand me now upon
He that hath kill'd my king and whored my mother,
Poppi'd in between the election and my hopes,
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenance—'tis not perfect conscience,
Toopp in him with this warm? and is 't not to bedam'd,
To let this cancer of our nature come
In further evil?

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from Eng-

What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short: the interim is mine;
And a man's life 's no more than to say 'One.'

But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself;
For, by the image of my cause, I see
The portraiture of his: 'twill court his favours:
But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.

Hor. Peace! who comes here?

Enter Osr.

Osr. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir. Dost know this water-fly?

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracius; for 'tis a vice to know him. He hath much land, and fertile:
Let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand
At the king's mess: 'tis a chough; but, as I say,
Spacious in the possession of dirt.

Osr. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure,
I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit. Put your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.

Osr. I thank your lordship, it is very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold; the wind is northerly.

Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet methinks it is very sultry and hot for my complexion.

Osr. Exceedingly, my lord: it is very sultry,—as 'twere,—I cannot tell how. But, my lord, his majesty bade me signify to you that he has laid a great wager on your head: sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember—

[Hamlet moves him to put on his hat.

Osr. Nay, good my lord; for mine ease, in good faith. Sir, I hear now come to court Laertes; believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences, of very soft society and great showing: indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, his definition suffers no perdition in you; though, I know, to divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetic of memory, and yet but yaw neither, in respect of his quick soul. But, in the verity of exultation, I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such dourth and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his sen-bible is his mirror; and who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more.

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rauver breath?

Osr. Sir?

Ham. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really.

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes?

Ham. His purse is empty already; all 's golden words are dust.

Ham. Of him, sir.

Osr. I know you are not ignorant —

Ham. I would you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me. Well, sir?

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is —

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself.

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his meed he's un-followed.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That 's two of his weapons: but, well.

Osr. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses; against the which he has imponed, as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangers, and so: three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Osr. I knew you must be edified by the margen ery you had done.

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more german to the matter, if we could carry cannon by our sides: I would it might be hangers till then. But, on; six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-conceited carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this imposed, 'as you call it?

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits: he hath laid on twelve for nine; and it would come to immediate trial, if your ladyship would voice the answer.

Ham. How if I answer 'no'?

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: if it please his majesty, 'tis the breathing time of day with me; let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose. I will win for him an I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame and the odd hits.

Osr. Shall I re-deliver you e'en so?

Ham. To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will.

Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship.

Ham. Yours, yours. [Exit Osr.] He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for 's turn.

Hor. This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply with his dog, before he snuck it. Thus has he—and many more of the same bevy that I know the drossy age dotes on—only got the tune of the time and outward habit of encounter; a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fond and winnowed opinions; and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Osr, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: he sends to know if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes; they follow the king's pleasure: if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now or whenever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king and queen and all are coming. Ham. In happy time. [flown. Lord. The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord. Ham. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so: since he went into Franco, [he has] been continual practice; I shall win at the odds. But thou wouldst not think how ill 's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Ham. Nay, good my lord,— Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving, as would perhaps trouble a woman. Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestall their repair hither, and say you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy angry: there's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all: since no man has thought of what he leaves, what 's it to leave betimes?

Enter King, Queen, Laertes, Lords, Osric, and Attendants with foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts Laertes' hand into Hamlet's.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir: I've done you But pardon't, as you are a gentleman. [wrong; This present knows, And you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd With some distraction. What I have done, That might your nature, honour and exception Roughly awake. I here proclaim was madness. Was 't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet: If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away, And when he's not himself does wrong Laertes, Then Hamlet does it not. Hamlet denies it. Who does it, then? His madness; if 't be so, Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd; His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

Sir, in this audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purposed evil Free me so far in your most generous thoughts, That I have shot mine arrow o'er the house, And hurt my brother.

Laer. I am satisfied in nature, Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most To my revenge: but in my terms of honour I stand aloof; and will no reconcilement, Till by some elder masters, of known honour, I have a voice and precedent of peace, To keep my name ungored. But till that time, I do receive your offer'd love like love, And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely; And will this brother's wager frankly play. Give us the foils. Come on.

Laer. Come, one for me.

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes: in mine ignorance Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night, Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer. You mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric. [Cousin Hamlet, you know the wager? Ham. Very well, my lord; Your grace hath laid the odds o' the weaker side. King. I do not fear it; I have seen you both: But since he is better'd, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well. These foils have all a length? [They prepare to play. Osr. Ay, my good lord.

Ham. Set down the stoups of wine upon that table. If Hamlet give the first or second hit, Or quit in answer of the third exchange, Let all the battlements their ordinance fire; The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath; And in the cup an union shall be throw, Richer than that which four successive kings To Denmark's crown have worn. Give me the cups; And let the kettle to the trumpet speak, The trumpet to the cannon without, The canons to the heavens, the heavens to earth, 'Now the king drinks to Hamlet.' Come, begin: And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Laer. Well; again. King. Stay; give me drink. Hamlet, this pearl Here's to thy health. [is thine; [Trumpets sound, and cannon shot off within. Give him the cup.

Ham. I'll play this bout first; set it by awhile. Come. [They play.] Another hit; what say you? Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess.

King. Our son shall win.

Laer. He's fat, and scant of breath.

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows: The queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam! King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord; I pray you, pardon me. King. [Aside] It is the poison'd cup: it is too late. Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by. Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think 't.

Laer. [Aside] And yet 't is almost 'gainst my conscience.

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes: you but dally; I pray you, pass with your best violence; I am afraid you make a wanton of me.

Laer. Say so now, come on. [They play.

Osr. Nothing, neither way.

Laer. Have at you now! [Laertes wounds Hamlet; then, in scuffling, they change rapiers, and Hamlet wounds Laertes.

King. Part them; they are incensed.

Ham. Nay, come, again. [The Queen falls.

Osr. Look to the queen there, ho! Hor. They bleed on both sides. How is it, my Osr. How is 't, Laertes? [lord? Osr. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe, I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery. [Osric; Ham. How does the queen? King. She swounds to see them bleed. Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear Hamlet,— The drink, the drink! I am poison'd. [Dies.

Ham. O villainy! Ho! let the door be lock'd! Treachery! Seek it out. Ham. It is here. Hamlet: Hamlet, thou art slain; No medicine in the world can doe thee good; In thee there is not half an hour of life; The treacherous instrument is in thy hand, Unbated and envenom'd: the foul practice Hath turn'd itself on me; lo, here I lie, Never to rise again: thy mother's poison'd: I can no more: the king, the king's pale young Hamlet's mother, queen.
Hamlet.—Alas, poor Yorick! [Takes the skull.] I knew him, Horatio:
a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy.—Act V., Scene I.

SCENE.—Britain.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—King Lear's palace.

Enter Kent, Gloucester, and Edmund.

Kent. I thought the king had more affected the Duke of Albany than Cornwall.

Glon. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glon. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glon. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: wherein she grew round-womb'd, and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

Glon. But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knife came something saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged. Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glon. My lord of Kent: remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glon. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again. The king is coming.

Scene. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Goneril, Regan, Cordelia, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloin. I shall, my liege. [Gloucester. [Exeunt Gloucester and Edmund.

Lear. Meantime we shall express our darker purpose.

Give me the map there. Know that we have divided in three our kingdom: and 'tis our fast intent To shake all cares and business from our age; Conferring them on younger strengths, while we Unburthen'd crawl toward death. Our son of Corn- And you, our no less loving son of Albany, [wall, We have this hour a constant will to publish Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy, Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love, Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn, And here are to be answer'd. Tell me, my daugh- Since now we will divest us, both of rule, [lers,— Interest of territory, cares of state,— Which of you shall we say doth love us most? That we our largest bounty may extend Where nature doth with merit challenge. Goneril, Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon. Sir, I love you more than words can wield the matter; Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty; Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare; No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour; As much as child e'er loved, or father found; A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable; Beyond all manner of so much I love you.

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to With shadowy forests and with champains rich'd, With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads, We make thee lady; to thine and Albany's issue Be this perpetual. What says our second daughter, Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall? Speak.

Reg. Sir, I am made Of the self-same metal that my sister is, And prize me at her worth. In my true heart I find she names my very deed of love; Only she comes too short: that I profess Myself an enemy to all other joys, Which the most precious square of sense possesses; And find I am alone felicitate In your dear highness' love.
KING LEAR.

ACT I. SCENE I.

Cor. [Aside] Then poor Cordelia!
And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's
More richer than my tongue can tell.
Lear. The diadem is heir-erbative ever
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that confer'd on Goneril. Now, my joy,
Although the last, not least: to whose young love
The vines of France and milk of Burgundy
Strive to be利息s'd: what can you say to draw
A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.
Cor. Nothing, my lord.
Lear. Nothing!
Cor. Nothing.
Lear. Nothing will come of nothing: speak again.
Cor. Unhappy is that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love my majesty
According to my bond; nor more nor less.
Lear. How, how, Cordelia! mend your speech a
Lest it may mar your fortunes. [little,
Cor. Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, loved me: I
Return those duties back as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and most honour you.
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say
They love you all? Haply, when I shall wed,
That lord whose hand must take my plighted heart
Half my love with him, half my care and duty:
Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.
Lear. But goes thy heart with this?
Cor. Ay, good my lord.
Lear. So young, and so untender?
Cor. So young, my lord, and true.
Lear. To thee and to my heart and me [Seythian,
Hold thee, from this, for ever. The barbarous
Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, pitted, and relieved,
As thou my sometime daughter.
Kent. Good my liege,—
Lear. Peace, Kent! Come not between the dragon and his wrath.
I loved her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Hence, and avoid my sight!
So be my grave my peace, as here I give [stirs?]
Her father's heart from her! Call France; who Call Burgundy. Cornwall and Albany,
With my two daughters' dowers digest this third:
Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects [course,
That troop with majesty. Ourselves, by monthly
With preservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain
The name, and all the additions to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of the rest,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This tornet part but twixt you. [Get the crown.
Kent. Royal Lear,
Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,
Loved as my father, as my master follow'd,
As my great patron thought on in my prayers—
Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the Lear. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad. What wilt thou do, old man?
Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flattery bows? To plainness hon-
our's bound,
When majesty falls to folly. Reverse thy doom;
And, in thy best consideration, check [ment,
This hideous rashness: answer my life my judg-
Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted whose low sound
Reverses no hollowness.
Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.
Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thine enemies; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive.
Lear. Out of my sight!
Kent. See better, Lear; and let me still remain
This true blank of thine eye.
Lear. Now, by Apollo,—
Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
Lear. [Laying his hand on his sword.]
Cmyn. Dear sir, forbear.
Kent. Do; Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon thy foul disease. Revoke thy doom; Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil.
Lear. On thine allegiance, hear me!
Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow,
Which we durst never yet, and with strain'd pride
To come between our sentence and our power,
Which nor our nature nor our place can bear,
Our potency made good, take thy reward.
Five days we do allot thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases of the world;
And on the sixth to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following,
Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death. Away! by Jupiter,
This shall not be revoked. [appear, Kent. Fare thee well, king; sith thus thou wilt Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.
[To Cordelia] The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid.
That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!
[To Regan and Goneril] And your large speeches may your deeds approve.
That good effects may spring from words of love.
Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu!
Ho! 'tis time his old course in a country new. [Exit.

Flourish. Re-enter Gloucester, with France, Burgundy, and Attendants.

Glou. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.
Lear. My lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter: what, in the least,
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?
Bur. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.
Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n. Sir, there she stands:
A thing within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pleased,
And nothing more, may fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.
Bur. Lear. Will you, with those infirmities she owes,
She's old, new-adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our
Take her, or leave her?
Bur. Pardon me, royal sir; Election makes not up on such conditions.
ACT I.

KING LEAR.

SCENE II.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom, and permit
The curiosity of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moons lines
Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact,
My mind as generous, and my shape as true,
As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? base? base?
Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality
Than doth, within a duit, state, tired bed,
Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops,
Got 'twixt asleep and wake? Well, then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land:
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund
As to the legitimate: fine word,—legitimate!
Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed,
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
Shall top the legitimate. I grow; I prosper:
Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter Gloucester.

Glu. Kent banish'd thus! and France in choler parted!
And the king gone to-night! I subscribed his power!
Confined to prohibition! All this done
Upon the gad! Edmund, how now! what news?
Edm. So please your lordship, none.

Glu. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that
Edm. I know no news, my lord.
KING LEAR.

ACT I.

Glou. What paper were you reading?
Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glou. No? What needed then, that terrible disaster (being in your pocket)? The quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read; and so for much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your hearing.

Glou. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to Glou.
Let's see, let's see. [blame.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay or taste of my virtue.

Glou. [Reads] 'This policy and reverence of age makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot reliish them. I begin to find an idle and fond bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, Edgar. If this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother.'

Edg. [animal. It was not brought me, my lord; there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

Glou. You know the character to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it was his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glou. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but I hope his heart is not in the contents.

Glou. Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: but I have heard him oft maintain it to be fit, that sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glou. O villain, villain! His very opinion in the case! This villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish! Go, sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him: abominable villain! Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath wrote this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no further pretexts of danger.

Glou. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and then without any further delay than this very instant I shall be in a due resolution.

Glou. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and then without any further delay than this very instant I shall be in a due resolution.

Glou. He can be such a monster — [levelling.

Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glou. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him. Heaven and earth! Edmund, seek him out: wind me into him, I pray you: frame the business after your own wisdom. I would impose myself to be in a due resolution.

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently: convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glou. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself confounded by the subsequent effects: love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked 'twixt son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; ' there's son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time: machinations, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves. Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing: do it carefully. And the noble and true-hearted Kent banished! his offence, honest Kent, is strange.

Edm. This is the excellent offspring of the world, that, when we are sick in fortune,—often the surfeit of our own behaviour,—we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and the stars: as if we were villains by necessity; fools by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and treachers, by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence; and all that we are evil in, by a divine trustning on: an admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail; and my nativity was under Ursa minor; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous. Tut, I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—

Enter Edgar.

Edg. How now, brother Edmund! what serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself about that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed unhappily; as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient families; divisions in state, menaces and meditations against king and nobles; needless diffidences, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come; when saw you my father last?

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Speak with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him by word or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Bethink yourself wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty forbear his presence till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely alay.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my fear. I pray you, have a continent forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly bring you to hear my lord speak: pray ye, go; there's my key: if you do stir abroad, go armed.

Edg. Armed, brother!

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best; go armed.
I am no honest man if there be any good meaning towards you: I have told you what I have seen and heard; but, if I be suspected, nothing like the image and horror of it: pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business. [Exit Edgar.

A credulous father! and a brother noble, whose nature is so far from doing harms, that he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty my practices ride easy! I see the business. Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit: All with me’s meet that I can fashion fit. [Exit.

SCENE III. — The Duke of Albany’s palace.

Enter Goneril, and Oswald, her steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Osw. Yes, madam.

Gon. By day and night he wrongs me; every hour he flashes into one gross crime or other, that sets us all at odds: I’ll not endure it: His knights grow riotons, and himself upbraids us on every trifle. When he returns from hunting, I will not speak with him; say I am sick: If you come slack of former services, you shall do well; the fault of it I’ll answer.

Osw. He’s coming, madam; I hear him. [Horns within.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please, You and your fellows; I’ld have it come to ques: If he dislike it, let him to our sister. [Hon: Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one, Not to be over-ruled. Idle old man, That still would manage those authorities That he hath given away! Now, by my life, Old fools are babes again; and must be used With checks as flatteries,—when they are seen Remember what I tell you. [Abused.

Osw. Well, madam; you.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so: I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall, That I may speak: ’I’ll write straight to my sister, To hold my very course. Prepare for dinner. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A hall in the same.

Enter Kent, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow, That can my speech defuse, my good intent May carry itself to that full issue For which I raze my likeness. Now, banish’d Kent, If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn’d, So may it come, thy master, whom thou lov’st, Shall find thee full of labours.

Horns within. Enter Lear, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner; go get it ready. [Exit an Attendant.] How now! what art Kent. A man, sir.

Lear. What dost thou profess? what wouldst thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who wouldst thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance which I would fain call master.

Lear. What’s that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a council in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for any thing: I have years in my back forty eight. Follow me; thou shalt serve me: if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner, ho, dinner! Where’s my knife? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither. [Exit an Attendant.

Enter Oswald.

You, you, sirrah, where’s my daughter?

Osw. So please you,—[Exit.

Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clotpoll back. [Exit a Knight.] Where’s my fool, ho? I think the world’s asleep.

Re-enter Knight.

How now! where’s that mongrel? [well.

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not Lear. Why came not the slave back to me when I called him?

Knight. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertained with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there’s a great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants as in the duke himself also and your daughter.

Lear. Hal I sayest thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent when I think your highness wronged.

Lear. Thou but rememberest me of mine own conception: I have received a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity than as a very pretense and purpose of unkindness; I will look further into’t. But who’s my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Knight. Since my young lady’s going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well. Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her. [Exit an Attendant.] Go you, call hither my fool. [Exit an Attendant.

Re-enter Oswald.

O, you sir, you, come you hither, sir: who am I, sir?

Osw. My lady’s father.

Lear. ’My lady’s father! ’my lord’s knave: you whoreson dog! you slave! you cur!

Osw. I am none of these, my lord; I beseech your pardon.

Lear. Do you handy looks with me, you rascal?

[Striking him.

Osw. I’ll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripped neither, you base foot-ball player. [Tripping up his heels.

Lear. I thank thee, fellow: thou servest me, and I’ll love thee.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away! I’ll teach you differences: away, away! If you will measure your lubber’s length again, tarry; but away! go to; have you wisdom? so.

[Pushes Oswald out.
ACT I.

LEAR.

KING.

LEAR.

SCENE IV.

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there’s earnest of thy service. [Giving Kent money.

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too: here’s my coxcomb.

[Offering Kent his cap.

Lear. How now, my pretty knave! How dost thou? Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

Kent. Why, fool? Fool. Why, for taking one’s part that’s out of favour: may an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou’lt catch cold shortly; there, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two on’s daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. How now, nuncle! Would I had two coxcombs and two daughters!

Lear. Why, my boy? Fool. If I gave them all my living, I’d keep my coxcombs myself. There’s mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

[To Kent] Printhee, tell him, so much the rest of his land comes to: he will not believe a fool.

Lear. A bitter fool!

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

Lear. No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord that counsell’d thee To give away thy land, Come place him here by me, Do thou for him stand: The sweet and bitter fool Will presently appear; The one in motley here, The other found out there.

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy? Fool. All thy other vices thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, faith, lords and great men will not let me: if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on ’t: and ladies too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they’ll be matching. Give me an egg, uncle, and I’ll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i’ the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou diest thy crown i’ the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou lostest thy ass on thy head o’er the dirt; thou hast but little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipped that first finds it so.

[Fool makes off.

[Singing] Fools have ne’er less wit in a year; For wise men are grown foppish, They know not how their wits to wear, Their manners are so asplish.

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mothers: for when thou gavest them the rod, and put’st down thine own breeches.

[Singing] Then they for sudden joy did weep, And I for sorrow sung, That such a king should play bo-peep, And go the fools among.

Printhee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie: I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. An you lie, sirrah, we’ll have you whipped.

Fool. I marvel what kin thou and thy daughters are: they’ll have me whipped for speaking true, thou’lt have me whipped for lying; and sometimes I am whipped for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o’ thing than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o’ both sides, and left nothing? i’ the middle: here comes one o’ the parings.

Enter Goneril.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet on? Methinks you are too much of late i’ the crown.

Fool. Thou wanst a pretty fellow when thou hadst no need to care for her crowning; now thou art an O without a figure: I am better than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art nothing. [To Gon.] Yes, forsooth, I will hold my tongue; so your face bids me, though you say nothing. Mund, mund, no that keeps nor crust nor crum, Weary of all, shall want some.

[Pointing to Lear] That’s a sheathed peascod.

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licensed fool, But other of your insolent retinue Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth In rank and not-to-be endured riots. Sir, I had thought, by making this well known unto you, To have found a safe redress; but now grow fearful, By what yourself too late have spoke and done, That you protect this course, and put it on By your allowance; which if you should, the fault Would not be scape’d censure, nor the redresses sleep, Which, in the tender of a wholesome weal, Might in their working do you that offence, Which else were shame, that then necessity Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool. For, you trow, nuncle, The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long, That it’s had it head bit off by it young. So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. Come, sir, I would you would make use of that good wisdom, Whereof I know you are fraught; and put away These dispositions, that of late transform you From what you rightly are.

Fool. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse? Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

Lear. Doth any here know me? This is not Lear: Doth Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his Either his horses and his discourses [eyes] Are lethargied—Ha! waking? ’t is not so. Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Fool. Lear’s shadow.

Lear. I would learn that; for, by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuad’d I had daughters.

Fool. Which they will make an obedient father.

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

Gon. This admiration, sir, is much o’ the favour 701 of other your new pranks. I do beseech you

To understand my purposes aright,
As you are old and reverend, you should be wise.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;
Men so disorder’d, so debosh’d and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn: epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel
Than a graced palace. The shame itself doth speak
For instant remedy: be thou desir’d.
By her, that else will take the thing she begs,
A little to disquantify your train;
And the remainder, that shall still depend,
To be such men as may besort your age,
And know themselves and you.
Lear. Darkness and devils!
Saddle my horses; call my train together.
Degenerate bastard! I’ll not trouble thee:
Yet have I left a daughter.
Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder’d
Make servants of their better. [rabble
Enter Albany.
Lear. Woe, that too late repents,—[To Alb.] O, sir, are you come?
Is it your will? Speak, sir. Prepare my horses.
Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous when thou show’st thee in a child
Than the sea-monster!
Alb. Pray, sir, be patient.
Lear. [To Gon.] Detested kite! thou liest;
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know,
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their name. O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
That, like an engine, wrench’d my frame of nature
From the fix’d place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beat at this gate, that let thy folly in,
[Striking his head.
And thy dear judgment out! Go, go, my people.
Alb. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant
Of what hath moved you.
Lear. It may be so, my lord.
Hear, husband, hear; dear godless, hear! Suspended thy purpose, if thou dost intend
To make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!
Dry up in her the organs of increase;
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur’d torment to her;
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother’s pains and benefits
To laughter and contempt; that she may feel How sharper than a serpent’s tooth it is to have a thankless child! Away, away! [Exit.
Alb. Now, gods that we adore, whereof comes this?
Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope
That dotage gives it.
Re-enter Lear.
Lear. What, fifty of my followers at a clap?
Within a fortnight!
Alb. I’ll tell thee: [To Gon.] Life and death! I am ashamed
That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus;
That these hot tears, which break from me perforce,
Should make thee worth them. Blasts and fogs upon
The untented woundings of a father’s curse
Pierce every sense about thee! Old fond eyes,
Beweep this cause again, I’ll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. You, is it come to this?
Let it be so: yet have I left a daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable:
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She’ll flay thy wolshif visage. Thou shalt find
That I’ll resume the shape which thou dost think
I have cast off for ever: thou shalt, I warrant thee.
[Exit Lear, Kent, and Attendants.
Gon. Do you mark that, my lord?
Alb. I cannot be so partial, Gonterl,
To the great love I bear you.
Gon. Pray, you, content. What, Oswald, ho!
[To the Fool.] You, sir, more knave than fool, after your master.
Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry and take the fool with thee.
A fox, when one has caught her,
And such a daughter,
Should sure to the slaughter,
If my cap would buy a halter:
So the fool follows after. [Exit.
Gon. This man hath had good counsel:— a hundred knights!
’Tis politic and safe to let him keep
A party a hundred knights: yes, that, on every
Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguar’d his dotage with their powers,
And hold our lives in mercy. Oswald, I say!
Alb. Well, you may fear too far.
Gon. Safer than trust too far:
Let me still take away the harms I fear,
Not fear still to be taken: I know his heart.
What he hath utter’d I have writ my sister:
If she sustain him and his hundred knights,
When I have show’d the unfitness,—
Re-enter Oswald.
Gon. How now, Oswald!
What, have you writ that letter to my sister?
Osw. Yes, madam.
Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse:
Inform her full of my particular fear;
And thereto add such reasons of your own
As may connect it more. Get you gone;
And hasten your return. [Exit Oswald.] No, no,
my lord,
This milky gentleness and course of yours
Though I condemn not, yet, under pardon,
You are much more attach’d for wish of wisdom
Than professed for lawful mildness.
Alb. How far your eyes may pierce I cannot tell:
Striving to better, oft we mar what’s well.
Gon. Nay, then—
Alb. Well, well; the event. [Exit.

SCENE V. — Court before the same.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.
Lear. Go you before to Gloucester with these letters. Acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know than comes from her demand out of the letter. If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.
Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter.
[Exit. Fool. If a man’s brains were in’s heels, were’t not in danger of kibes?
Lear. My boy.
Fool. Then, I prithee, be merry; thy wit shall never go slip-shod.
Lear. Ha, ha, ha!
Fool. Shalt see thy other daughter will use thee kindly; for though she’s as like this as a crab’s like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.
ACT II.

KING

LEAR.

SCENE I.

LEAR. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy?
FOOL. She will taste as like this as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell which one's nose stands if the middle on 's face?
LEAR. No.
FOOL. Why, to keep one's eyes of either side 's nose; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.
LEAR. I did her wrong—
FOOL. Canst how an oyster makes his shell?
LEAR. No.
FOOL. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a Lear. Why?
FOOL. Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.
LEAR. I will forget my nature. So kind a father! Be my horses ready?
FOOL. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven is a pretty Lear. Because they are not eight?

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Earl of Gloucester's castle.

ENTER EDMUND, and CURAN meets him.

EDM. Save thee, Curan.
CUR. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice that the Duke of Cornwall and Regan his duchess will be here with him this night.
EDM. How comes that?
CUR. Nay, I know not. You have heard of the news abroad: I mean the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments?
EDM. Not I: pray you, what are they?
CUR. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?
EDM. Not a word.
CUR. You may do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir.
[EXEUNT.
EDM. The duke be here to-night? The better! This weaves itself perfecio into my business. [best! My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy question, Which I must act: briefness and fortune, work! Brother, a word; descend: brother, I say!

ENTER EDGAR.

My father watches: O sir, fly this place; Intelligence is given where you are hid;
You have now the good advantage of the night; Have you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall? He's coming hither; now, i' the night, i' the haste, And Regan with him; have you nothing said
Upon his party 'gainst the Duke of Albany? Advise yourself.

EDG. I am sure on 't, not a word.
EDM. I hear my father coming: pardon me; In cunning I must draw my sword upon you; Draw; seem to defend yourself; now quit you well.
[EXEUNT EDMUND.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
[Wounds his arm.
Of my more fierce endeavour: I have seen drunkards Do more than this in sport. Father, father!
Stop, stop! No help?

ENTER GLOUCESTER, and SERVANTS with torches.

GLOU. Now, Edmund, where's the villain? [out.
EDM. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword Mumbing of wicked charms, conjuring the moon To stand auspicious mistress,—

But where is he?
Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend! since I came hither, Which I can tell but now, I have heard strange news.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short. Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord? Glou. O, madam, my old heart is crack’d, ’tis crack’d! Reg. What, did my father’s goodson seek your life? He whom my father named? your Edgar? Glou. O, lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous That tend upon my father? [knight's Glou. I know not, madam: ’tis too bad, too bad.

Edm. Yes, madam, he was of that consort.

Reg. No marvel, then, though he were ill affected: ’Tis they have put him on the old man’s death, To have the expense and waste of his revenues. I have this present evening from my sister Been well inform’d of them; and with such cautions, That if they come to snojourn at my house, I’ll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.

Edmund. I hear that you have shown your father A child-like office.

Edm. ’Twas my duty, sir.

Glou. He did bewray his practice; and received This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glou. Ay, my good lord.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more Be fear’d of doing harm: make your own purpose, How in my strength you please. For you, Edmund, Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant So much commend itself, you shall be ours: Natures of such deep trust we shall much need; You we first seize on.

I shall serve you, sir, truly, however else.

Glou. For him I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit you.—

Reg. Thus out of season, threading dark-eyed night,

Occasions, noble Gloucester, of some poise, Wherein we must have use of your advice: Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister, Of differences, which I best thought it fit To answer from our home; the several messengers From hence attend dispatch. Our good old friend, Lay comfort to your bosom; and bestow You a faithful counsel to our business, Which craves the instant use.

Glou. I serve you, madam: your graces are right welcome. [Exit.

SCENE II. — Before Gloucester’s castle.

Enter Kent and Oswald, severally.

Osw. Good evening to thee, friend: art of this house?

Kent. Ay.

Osw. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. ’Tis the more.

Osw. Pritchet, if thou lov’st me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Osw. Why, then, I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lusby pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Osw. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee Kent. Fellow, I know thee. [not.

Osw. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knave; a rascal; an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suit ed, hundred-pound, filthy, worsted-stocking knife; a lily-livered, action-taking knave, a whoreson, glass-gazing, superserviceable, licentious rogue: one trunk-inheriting slave; one that wouldst be a bawd, in way of good service, and do nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pandar, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch: one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deni est the least syllable of thy addition.

Osw. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one that is neither known of thee nor knows thee?

Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me! Is it two days ago since I tripped up thy heels, and beat thee before the king? Draw, you rogue; for, though it be night, yet the moon shines; I’ll make a sap o’ the moon shine of you, draw, you wheresoe’er cullionly barrier monger, draw. [Drawing his sword.

Osw. Away! I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal; you come with letters against the king; and take vanity the puppet’s part against the royalty of her father: draw, you rogue, or I’ll so carbuncle your shanks: draw, you rascal; come your ways.

Osw. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter Edmund, with his rapier drawn, Cornwall, Regan, Gloucester, and Servants.

Edm. How now! What’s the matter?

Kent. With you, goodman boy, an you please: come, I’ll flesh ye; come on, young master.

Glou. Weapons! arms! What’s the matter here?

Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives:

He dies that strikes again. What is the matter?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the Corn. What is your difference? speak. [king.

Osw. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Edm. What, sir, you marvel, you have so bestirred your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in thee: a tailor made thee. [a man?

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir: a stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill, though he had been but two hours at the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Kent. Thou whoreson zed! thou unnecessary letter! My lord, if you will give me leave, I will thrash that abated villain into mortal, and dash the wall of a jakes with him. Spare me grey beard.

Corn. Peace, sirrah! [You wagtail?

Kent. Being knave, know you no reverence?

Corn. Yes, sir; but anger hath a privilege.

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as Some rats, oft bite the holy cords a-twain [these, Which are too intrinsick t’ unloose; smooth every That in the natures of their lords rebel; [passion Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods; Reneges, affirms, and turn their halcyon beaks With every gale and vary of their masters, Knowing nought, like dogs, but following. A plague upon your epithetical visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Coose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,

I’ll drive ye caekling home to Camelot.

Corn. No marvel, you have so bestirred your fellow? Glou. How fell you out? say that.

Kent. No contrivances hold more antipathy Than I and such a knave. [his offence?

Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What’s Kent. His countenances like me not. [nor hers.

Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, nor his. Kent. Sir; ’tis my occupation to be plain: 704
KING LEAR.

ACT II.

I have seen better faces in my time
Than stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me at this instant.
Corn. This is some fellow,
Who, having been praised for blunt speech, doth affect
A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature; he cannot flatter, he,
An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth!
An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain. [ness
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plain-
Harbour more craft and more corrupter ends
Than twenty silly ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely.
Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under the allowance of your great aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
On flickering Phoebus' front.
Corn. What mean'st by this? Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discommend so much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer: he that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to 't.
Corn. What was the offence you gave him?
Kent. I never gave him any: It pleased the king his master very late
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction;
When he, conjunct, and flattering his displeasure,
Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him, got praises of the king.
For him attempting who was self-subdued;
And, in the fleshment of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here again.
Kent. None of these rogues and cowards
But Ajax is their fool.
Corn. Fetch forth the stocks! You stubborn ancient knave, you reverence braggage,
We'll teach you—
Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn:
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king;
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.
Corn. Fetch forth the stocks! As I have life and honour,
There shall he sit till noon. [too
Reg. Till noon! till night, my lord; and all night
Kent. Why, maidam, if I were your father's dog,
You should not use me so.
Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.
Corn. This is a fellow of the self-same colour
Our sister speaks of. Come, bring away the stocks! [Stocks brought out.
Glou. Let me beseech your grace not to do so:
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for 't: your purposed low correction
Is such as basest and contemned'st wretches
For pilferings and most common trespasses
Are punish'd with; the king must take it ill,
That he's so slightly valued in his messenger,
Should have him thus restrain'd.
Kent. My sister may receive it much more worse,
To have her gentleman abused, assaulted,
For following her affairs. Put in his legs.
[Kent is put in the stocks.
Glou. I am sorry for thee, friend; 't is the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd: I'll entertain for thee.
Kent. Pray, do not, sir: I have watched and travel'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

ACT IV.

SCENE IV.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:
Give you good morrow!

Glou. The duke's to blame in this: 't will be ill taken.
Kent. Good king, that must approve the common
Thou out of heaven's benediction comest
[exit.
To the warm sun!
Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable beams I may
Peruse this letter! Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery: I know 't is from Cordelia,
Who hath most fortunately been inform'd
Of my obscured course; and shall find time
From this enormous state, seeking to give Losses their remedies. All weary and o'erwatch'd,
Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging.
Fortune, good night: smile once more; turn thy wheel!
[Sleeps.

SCENE III.—A wood.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd; And by the happy hollow of a tree Escaped the hunt. No port is free; no place, That guard, and most unusual vigilance, Does not attend my taking. Whiles I may 'scape, I will preserve myself: and am bethought To take the basest and most poorest shape That ever penury, in contempt of man, Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with filth; Blanket my loins; elf all my hair in knots; And with presented nakedness out-face The winds and persecutions of the sky, The country gives me proof and precedent Of Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices, Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary; And with this horrible object, from low farms, Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes, and mills, Sometime with lunatic bans, sometime with prayers, Enforce their charity. Poor Furlong! poor Tom! That 's something yet; Edgar I nothing am. [exit.

SCENE IV.—Before Gloucester's castle. Kent in the stocks.

Enter Lear, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'T is strange that they should so depart from home.
And not send back my messenger.
Gent. As I learn'd,
The night before there was no purpose in them Of this remove.

Fool. Ha! Makest thou this shame thy pastime?
Lear. No, my lord.
Fool. Ha, ha! he wears cruel garters. Horses are tied by the heads, dogs and bears by the neck, monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs: when a man's over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.

Lear. What's he that hath so much thy place mis To set thee here?

Lear. It is both he and she; Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.
Kent. Yes.
Lear. No, I say.
Kent. I say, yea.
Lear. No, no, they would not.
Kent. Yes, they have.
Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.
Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.
Lear. They durst not do't;
They could not, would not do 't; 't is worse than murder, To do upon respect such violent outrage: Resolve we, with all modest haste, which way Thou might'st deserve, or they impose, this usage, Coming from us.

Kent. My lord, when at their home I did command your highness' letters to them, Ere I was risen from the place that show'd My duty kneeling, came there a recking post, Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting forth From Goneril his mistress salutations; Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission, Which presently they read: on whose contents, They summon'd up their meiny, straight took horse; Commanded me to follow, and attend The several of the answers, gave me cold looks: And meeting here the other messenger, Whose welcome, I perceived, had poison'd mine,— Being the very fellow that of late Display'd so saucily against your highness,— Having more man than wit about me, drew: The rage that rose with loud and coward cries, Your son and daughter found this trespass worth: The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild-goose fly that way.

Fathers that wear rags
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags
Shall see their children kind.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor.

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours
For thy daughters as thou canst tell in a year.

Lear. O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!
Hyberica passio, down, thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below! Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the Earl, Sir, I learn within.

Lear. Stay here. [Exit. Kent.]

Fool. Made you no more offence but what you speak of?

Kent. None.

How chance the king comes with so small a train?

Fool. An thou hast been set 't the stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserved it.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no labouring in the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty but can smell out that's stinking. Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool will not.

That sir which serves and seeks for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.

But I will tarry; the fool will stay,
And let the wise man fly:
The knave turns fool that runs away;
The fool no knave, perdy.

Kent. Where learned you this, fool?
Fool. Not 't the stocks, fool.

Re-enter Lear, with Gloucester.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? They are weary? They have travell'd all the night? Mere fetches; The images of revolt and flying off. Fetch me a better answer.
ACT II.

KING LEAR.

SCENE IV.

Do you but mark how this becomes the house:
'Dear daughter, I confess that I am old; [Kneeling].
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg
That you'll vouchsafe me remittance, bed, and food?
Reg. Good sir, no more; these are unsightly tricks:
Return you to my sister.
Lear. [Rising] Never, Regan:
She hath abated me of half my train;
Look'd black upon me; struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent-like, upon the very heart:
All the stored vengeances of the seven seas
On her ingratitude top! Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with wantonness!
Corn.
Fie, sir, fie!
Lear. You nimbler lightnings, dart your blinding
Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty, [shames
You ten-skud'c fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast her pride!
Reg. O the biest gods! so will you wish on me,
When the rash mood is on. [curse]
Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my Thy tender-hearted nature shall not give
Thee o'er to baseness: her eyes are fierce; but thine
Do comfort and not hurt. 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To handy hasty words, to scant my sizes,
And in conclusion to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in: thou better know'st
The offices of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, duties of gratitude;
Thy half o' the kingdom last thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.
Reg. Good sir, to the purpose.
Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks?
[Tucket within.]
Corn. What trumpet's that?
Reg. I know 't, my sister's: this approves her
That she would soon be here.
Letter.

Enter Oswald.

Lear. Is your lady come?
Corn. What means your grace?
Lear. Who stock'd my servant? Regan, I have good hope
Thou didst not know 't. Who comes here?
O General.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause; send down, and take my part!
[To Gon.] Art not ashamed to look upon this beard?
O Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?
Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I
All's not offence that indiscretion finds [offended]
And dotage terms so.
Lear. O sides, you are too tough;
Will you yet hold? How came my man i' the stocks?
Corn. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders
Deserved much less advancement.
Lear. You! did you?
Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so,
If, till the expirations of your expiration,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me;
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which it behoveth for your entertainment,
Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd?
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the enmity o' the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl.—
Necessity's sharp pinch! Return with her?
Why, the hot-blooded France, that downerless took
Our youngest born, I could as well be hrought
To kneel his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg
To keep base life afoot. Return with her?
Persuade me rather to be slave and apsonier
To this detested groom.
[Pointing at Oswald.
Gon. At your choice, sir.
Lear. I prithee, daughter, do not make me mad:
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:
We'll no more meet, no more see one another:
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;
Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine: thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle;
In my corrupted blood. But I'd not chide thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove;
Mend when thou canst: be better at thy leisure:
I can be patient: I can stay with Regan,
And my hundred knights.
Reg. Not altogether so:
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. Give ear, sir, to my sister;
For those that mingle reason with your passion
Must be content to think you old, and so —
But she knows what she does.
Lear. Is this well spoken?
Reg. I dare avouch it, sir: what, fifty followers?
Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many, sith that both charge and danger
Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one
Should many people, under two commanders, [house,
Hold sanity and light? It is hard; almost impossible.
Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants or from mine?
Reg. Why not, my lord? If then they chanced to slack you,
We could control them. If you will come to me,—
For now I spy a danger,— I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty: to no more
Will I give place or notice.
Lear. I gave you all —
Reg. And in good time you gave it.
Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number. What, must I come to you
With five and twenty, Regan? said you so?
Reg. And speak 't again, my lord; no more with me.
Gon. Thou of those wicked creatures yet do look well,
When others are more wicked; not being the worst Stands in some rank of praise. [To Gon.] I'll go with thee:
Thy fifty yet doth double five-and-twenty,
And thou art twice her love.
Gon. Hear me, my lord:
What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?
Reg. What need one?
Gon. O, reason not the need: our basest beggars
Are in the poorest thing superfluous:
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life's as cheap as beast's; thou art a lady:
If only to go warm were generous,
Why, nature needs not what thou generous wear'st,
Which scarcely keeps thee warm. But, for true need —
[need]
You heavens, give me that patience, patience I
Now see me, thou gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!
If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely: touch me with noble anger,
And let not women's weapons, water-drops.
Stain my man's cheeks! No, you unnatural bags,
I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the word shall — I will do such things —

707
ACT III.

KING LEAR.

What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be
The horrors of the earth. You think I'll weep;
No: I'll not weep:
I have full cause of weeping: but this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,
Or ere I'll weep. O fool, I shall go mad!

Corn. Let us withdraw; 'tis will be a storm.

Reg. This house is little: the old man and his people
Cannot be well bestow'd.

Gon. 'Tis is his own blame; hath put himself from rest.
And must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,
But not one follower.

Gon. So am I purposed.

Where is my lord of Gloucester?

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth: he is return'd.

SCENE I.—A heath.

Storm still. Enter Kent and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's there, besides foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most unqui-
Kent. I know you. Where's the king? [Exit.

Gent. Contending with the fretful element;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main, [hair,
That things might change or cease; tears his white
Which the impetuous blasts, with eyesless rage,
Catch in their fury, and make nothing of;
Strive in his little world of man to out-scorn
The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain. [couch,
This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbounded he runs,
And bids what will take all.

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to outjost
His heart-stuck injuries.

Kent. Sir. I do know you;
And dare, upon the warrant of my note,
Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,
Although as yet the face of it be cover'd,
With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;
Who have—as who have not, that their great stars
Throned and set high?—servants, who seem no less,
Which are to France the spiles and speculations
Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,
Either in smacks and packings of the dukes,
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne
Against the old kind king; or something deeper,
Whereof perchance these are but furnishing;
But, true it is, from France there comes a power
Into this scatter'd kingdom; who already,
Wise in our negligence, have secret feet
In some of our best parts, and are at point
To show their open banner. Now to you:
If on my credit you dare build so far
To make your speed to Dover, you shall find
Some that will thank you, making just report
Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow
The king hath cause to plain;
I am a gentleman of blood and breeding;
And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer
This office to you.

Gent. I will talk further with you.

Kent. No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more

ACT III.

Re-enter Gloucester.

Glot. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glot. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither.

[Exc. Kent.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads him.

Glot. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glot. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak
Do sorely ruffle; for many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to willful men,

The injuries that they themselves procure

Must be with schoolmasters. Shut up your doors:
He is attended with a desperate train;
And what they may incense him to, being apt
To have his ear abused, wisdom bids fear. [night:

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild
My Regan counsels well: come out of the storm.

[Exc.}

SCENE II.—Another part of the heath. Storm still.

Enter Lear and Fool.

Lear. Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks! rage!
You cataracts and hurricaines, spout [blow!
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the
The cock's
You sublunious and thought-executing fires,
Vaunt-couriers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts,
Sing me my white head! and thou, all-shaking thun-
Smite flat the thick rotundity o' the world! [der,
Crack nature's moulds, all germen spall at once,
That make ingratitude man.

Fool. O uncle, court holy-water in a dry house is better than this rain-water out o' door.

Good nuncle, in, and ask thy daughters' blessing: here's a night pities neither wise man nor fool;

[rain! Lear. Rumble thy bellyful! Spit, fire! spout,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children,
You owe me no subscription; then let fall
Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your slave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and desplaid old man:
But yet I call you servile ministers.

That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. O! O! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put 's head in has a good head-piece.

The cod-piece that will house

Before the head has any

The head and he shall lose;

So beggars marry many.

The man that makes his toe

What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake.
For there was never yet fair woman but she made mouths in a glass.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience; I will say nothing. Enter Kent.

Kent. Who's there? Fool. Marry, here's grace and a cod-piece; that's a wise man and a fool. [Exit.

Kent. Alas, sir, are you here? things that love love not such nights as these: the wrathful skies Gallow the very wanderers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves: since I was man, Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder, Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot carry The infection nor the fear.

Lear. Let the great gods, That keep this dreadful pother o'er our heads, Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch, That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice: hide thee, thou bloody hand; Thou perjured, and thou simian man of virtue That art lascivious: calliff, to pieces shake, That under covert and convenient seeming Hast practised on man's life: close pent-up guilts, Rive your concealing continents, and cry These dreadful summoners grace. I am a man More sim'ml'd against than sinning.

Kent. Alack, bare-headed! Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest: Repose you there; while I to this hard house—
More hard than the stones whereof 'tis mis'd; Which even but now, demanding after you, Denied me to come in,—return, and forgo These scanty summoners grace. I am a man More sim'ml'd against than sinning.

Lear. My wits begin to turn. Come on, my boy: how dost, my boy? art cold? I am cold myself. Where is this straw, my fellow? The art of our necessities is strange. [hovel. That can make vile things precious. Come, your Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. [Singing] He that has and a little tiny wit,— With hey, ho, the wind and the rain.— Must make content with his fortunes fit, For the rain it raineth every day.

Lear. That, my good boy. Come, bring us to his hovel. [Exeunt Lear and Kent. Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtzan.

I'll speak a prophecy ere I go: When priests are more in word than matter; When brewers mar their malt with water; When nobles are their tailors' tutors; No heretics burn'd, but wenchers' suitors; When every case in law is right; No squire in debt, nor no poor knight; When shamers do not live in tongues; Nor cutpurses come not to throngs; When usurers tell their gold i' the field; And bawds and whores do churches build; Then shall the realm of Albion Come to great confusion: Then comes the time, who lives to see 't, That going shall be used with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Gloucester's castle.

Enter Gloucester and Edmund.

Glou. Aack, aack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing. When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edm. Most savage and unnatural!

Glou. Go to; say you nothing. There's a division between the dukes; and a worse matter than that: I have not received a letter this night; 'tis dangerous to be spoken: I have locked the letter in my closet: these injuries the king now bears will be revenged home; there's part of a power already footed: we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privily relieve him: go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: if he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. Though I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund; pray you, be careful. [Exit.

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke Instantly know; and of that letter too; This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me That which my father loses; no less than all: The younger rises when the old doth fall. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The heath. Before a hovel.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, The tyranny of the open night's too rough [enter: For nature to endure. [Storm still.

Lear. Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Kent. Thou think'st 'tis much that contains Invasures us to the skin: so 'tis to thee; But where the greater malady is fix'd, The lesser is scarce felt. Thou 'ldst shun a bear; But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea, Thou 'ldst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind's free, The body's delicate: the tempest in my mind Doth from my senses take all feeling else Save what beats there. Filial ingratitude! Is not it as this mouth should tear this hand For lifting food to 't? But I will punish home: No, I will weep no more. In such a night To shut me out! Pour on; I will endure. In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril! Your old king and father, whose frank heart gave all, O, that way madness lies; let me shun that; No more of that.

Lear. Good my lord, enter here.

Kent. Prithee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease: This tempest will not give me leave to ponder On things would hurt me more. But I'll go in. [To the Fool] In, boy; go first. Thou houseless poverty,— Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.

[Exit.

Fool. Goes in.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er ye are, That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm, Know how you houseless heads and unfed sides, Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp; Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel, That thou mayst shun the superflux to them, And show the heavens more just.

Edg. [Within] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom! [The Fool runs out from the hovel.

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit. Help me, help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand. Who's there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit: he says his name's poor Tom.

Enter Edgar disguised as a madman.

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me! Through the sharp Hawthorn blows the cold wind. Hum! to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, and through ford and whirlpool, o' er bog and quagmire; that hath laid knives under his pillow, and hatters in his pew; set ratsbane by his porridge; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse, and fill'd his pockets, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Bless thy five wits! Tom's a-cold,—O, do de, do de, do de. Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-light, and blasting; and Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes: there could I have him now,—and there,—and there again, and there. [Storm still.

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him to this pass?

Edg. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all shamed.

Lear. Hang fate'd o'er men's faults light on thy daughters!

Kent. He hath no daughters, sir.

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued To such a lowness but his unhind daughters. Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers Should have thus little mercy on their flesh? Judicious punishment! 'twas this flesh begot Those pelican daughters.

Edg. Pillicock sat on Pillicock-hill: Hallow, hallow, loo, loo! Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed o' the foul fiend: obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array. Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curled my hairy worsted gloves in my cap; served the lust of my mistress' heart, and did the act of darkness with her; swore as many oaths as I spoke words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: one that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it: wine loved I deeply, dice dearly: and in woman found the Turk; false of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes nor the rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman: keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of place, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend.

Still through the Hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says snuff, man, ha, no, nonny. Dolphin my boy, my boy, sessa! let him trot by.

[Storm still.

Lear. Why, thou wert better in thy grave than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies. Is man no more than this? Consider him well. Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume. Ha! here's three on's are sophisticated! Thou art the thing itself unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Off, off, you lendings! come, unbutton here.

[Fool. Prithee, namele, be contented; 'tis a naughty night to swim in. Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest on's body cold. Look, here comes a walking fire.

Enter Gloucester, with a torch.

Edg. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet: he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

S. Withold footed thriue the old;
He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold;
Bled her alight,
And her troth plight,
And, aroint thee, witch, aroint thee!
Kent. How fares your grace?

Lear. What's he? Kent. Who's there? What is 't you seek?
Glou. What are you there? Your names?
Edg. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water; that in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallets; swallow's the old rat and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipped from tithing to tithing, and stock-punished, and imprisoned; who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear;

But a poor ragged and hard small deer.

Have been Tom's food for seven long year. Beware my follower. Peace, Smulkin; peace, thou fiend!

Glou. What, hath thy grace no better company?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman:

MODO he 's call'n, and Mahu.

Glou. Our flesh and blood is grown so vile, and That doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.

Glou. Go in with me: my duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughters' hard commands: Though their injunction be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you, Yet have I ventured to come seek you out,

And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher. What is the cause of thunder? [House.

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer; go into the Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned What is your study? [Thielan.

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to go, my lord;

His wits begin to unsettle.

His daughters seek his death: ah, that good Kent! He said it would be thus, poor banish'd man! Thou say'st the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend, I am almost mad myself: I had a son, Now overthrow'd from my blood; he sought my life,

But lately, very late: I loved him, friend;
No father his son dearer: truth to tell thee,
The grief hath crazed my wits. What a night's this? I do beseech your grace,—

Lear. O, cry you mercy, sir.

Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom 's a-cold.

Glou. Be, fellow, there, into the bavel: keep thee Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him; I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, soothe him; let him take the head, for he is mad and mad.

Glou. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glou. No words, no words: hush.

Edg. Child Rowland to the dark tower came, His word was still,—'Fie, fo, and fum. I smell the blood of a British man. [Exeunt.
KING LEAR.

SCENE V.—GloUCESTER’S castle.

Enter Cornwall and Edmund.

Corn. I will have my revenge ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother’s evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a-work by a reprovable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repeat to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloucester. Seek out why thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside] If I find him comforting the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully.—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A chamber in a farmhouse adjoining the castle.

Enter Gloucester, Lear, Kent, Fool, and Edgar.

Glo. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully. I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits have given way to his impatience: the gods reward your kindness!

[Exit Gloucester.

Edg. Frateretto calls me; and tells me Nero is an anger in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. Prithee, uncle, tell me whether a madman be a gentleman or a yeoman?

Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. No, he’s a yeoman that has a gentleman to his son; for he’s a mad yeoman that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits Come hissing in upon them,—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.

Fool. He’s mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse’s health, a boy’s love, or a whore’s oath.

Lear. It shall be done: I will arraign them straight.

[To Edgar] Come, sit thou here, most learned justice;

[To the Fool] Thou, sapient sir, sit here. Now, you—

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares! Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?

Come o’er the bourn, Bessy, to me,—

Fool. Her boat hath a leak, And she must not speak Well she would not come over to thee.

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom’s belly for two white herring. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amazed Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions? Lear. I’ll see their trial first. Bring in the evidence.

[Edgar] Thou robed man of justice, take thy [To the Fool] And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity, Bench by his side: [To Kent] you are o’ the com-

Sit you too.

Edg. Let us deal justly. Sleepiest or wakes thou, jolly shepherd? Thy sheep shall be in the corn; And for one blast of thy minikin mouth, Thy sheep shall take no harm.

Pur! the cat is gray.

Lear. Arraise his first: ’tis Goneril. I here take my curb before this honourable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress. Is it name Goner-

Lear. She cannot deny it. [cri? Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool.

Lear. And here’s another, whose warp’d looks proclaim What store her heart is made on. Stop her there! Arms, arms, sword, fire! Corruption in the place! False justicer, why hast thou let her ‘scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits! Kent. O pity! Sir, where is the patience now, That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. [Aside] My tears begin to take his part so They’ll mar my counterfeiting. [much Lear. The little dogs and all, Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them. [Avant, you curs! Be thy mouth or black or white, Tooth that poisons if it bite; Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim, Hound or spaniel, brach or lyn, Or ballotik tike or trouble-tail, Tom will make them weep and wail: For, with throwing thus my head, Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fed. Do de, de, de. Sessa! Come, march to wakes and fairs and market-towns. Poor Tom, thy horn is dry. Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan; see what breeds about her heart. Is there any cause in nature that makes these hard hearts? [To Edgar] You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments; you will say they are Persian attire; but let them be changed.

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains: so, so, so. We’ll go to supper i’ the morning. So, so, so.

Fool. And I’ll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter Gloucester.

Glo. Come hither, friend; where is the king my master? [gone Kent. Here, sir; but trouble him not, his wits are Glo. Good friend. I prithee, take him in thy arms; I have o’erheard a plot of death upon him:

There is a litter ready; lay him in’t, [meet And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master: If thou shouldst daily hale him, his life, With thine, and all that offer to defend him, Stand in assured loss. take up, take up; And follow me, that will to some provision Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. Oppressed nature sleeps: This thing might yet have balm’d thy broken senses, Which, if convenience will not allow, Stand in hard cure. [To the Fool] Come, help to bear thy master; Thou must not stay behind.

Glo. Come, come, away.

[Exeunt all but Edgar.

Edg. When we our betters shall be bearing our woes, We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Who alone suffers suffers most i’ the mind, Leaving free things and happy shows behind: But then the mind much sufferance doth o’erskip, When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship.
ACT III.

How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes the bend makes the king
He cried as I father'd! Tom, away! [bow,
Mark the high noises; and thyself beware,
When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles thee,
In thy just proof, repeals and reconciles thee.
What will hap more to-night, safe scape the king!
Lurk, lurk. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Gloucester's castle.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Goneril, Edmund, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband;
show him this letter; the army of France is landed.
Seek out the villain Gloucester.

[Exeunt some of the Servants.

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure. Edmund, keep you our sister company: the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festal preparation: we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift and inventive betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister: farewell, your lord of Gloucester.

Enter Oswald.

How now! where's the king?
Osw. My lord of Gloucester hath convey'd him
Some five or six and thirty of his knights,
Hot questasters after him, met him at gate;
Who, with some other of the lords dependants,
Are gone with him towards Dover; where they boast
To have well-armed friends.

Gon. Leave horses for your mistress.

Corn. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

Corn. Edmund, farewell.

[Exeunt Goneril, Edmund, and Oswald.

Go seek the traitor Gloucester,
Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.
[Exeunt other Servants.

Though well we may not pass upon his life
Without the form of justice, yet our power
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men May blame, but not control. Who's there? the traitor?

Enter Gloucester, brought in by two or three.

Reg. Ingratitude, fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky arms.

Gon. What mean your graces? Good my friends, consider
You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say.
[Servants bind him.

Gon. Unmerciful lady as you are, I'm none.

Corn. To this chair bind him. Villain, thou shalt find — [Regan plucks his beard.

Gon. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!
Gon. Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken, and accuse thee: I am your host.
With robbers' hands my hospitable favours
You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple answerer, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors?

Late footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the luminous speak.

Gon. I have a letter guessingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one opposed.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Gon. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover? Wast thou not charged at peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

Gon. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover, sir?

Gon. Because I would not see thy cruel nails
Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh stick boisterous fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endured, would have buoy'd up,
And quench'd the stilled fires:

Yet, poor old heart, he holp the heavens to rain.
If wolves had at thy gate how'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said 'Good porter, turn the key,'

All cruel else subscribed: but I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See 't shall thou never, follow, hold the Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.

Gon. He that will think to live till he be old,
Give me some help! O cruel! O you gods!

Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance,
First Serv. Hold your hand, my lord:

I have served you ever since I was a child;
But better service have I never done
Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog!

First Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,
I'd shake it on this quarrel. What do you mean?

Corn. My villain!
[They draw and fight.

First Serv. Nay, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.
[Thus!

Reg. Give me thy sword. A peasant stand up
Takes a sword, and runs at him behind.

First Serv. O, I am slain! My lord, you have one eye left.

To see some mischief on him. O!
[Dies.

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it. Out, vile jelly!
Where is thy lustre now?
[Edmund?

Gon. All dark and comfortless. Where's my son
Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain!
Thou call'st on him that hates thee: it was he
That made the overtaking of thy treasons to us:
Who is too good to pity thee.

Gon. O my follies! then Edgar was abused.
Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell
His way to Dover.
[Exeunt with Gloucester.
How is't, my lord? how look you?

Corn. I have received a hurt: follow me, lady.
Turn out that eyeless villain; throw this slave
Upon the dunghill. Regan, I bleed asleep;
Untimely comes this hurt: give me your arm.

[Exeunt Cornwall, led by Regan.

Sec. Serv. I'll never care what wickedness I do,
If this man come to good.

Third Serv. If she live long,
And in the end meet the old course of death
Women will all turn monsters.
[Bedlam

Sec. Serv. Let's follow the old ear, and get the
To lead him where he would: his roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing.

Third Serv. Go thou: I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help
him!
[Exeunt severally.
KING LEAR.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The heath.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Ye better thus, and known to be contemned,
Than still contemned and dasted. To be worst,
The lowest and most defected thing of fortune,
Standing in espousals, lives not in fear:
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air that I embrace!
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst
Owes nothing to thy blasts. But who comes here?

Enter Gloucester, led by an Old Man.

My father, poorly led? World, world, O world!
But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee,
Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O, my good lord, I have been your tenant,
And your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glou. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone:
Thy comforts can do me no good at all;
Their may they hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

Glou. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes;
I stumble when I see; full oft 'tis seen,
Our means secure us, and our mere defects
Prove our commodities. O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again!

Old Man. How now! Who's there?

Edg. [Aside] O gods! Who is 't can say 'I am
At worse than e'er I was. [the worst?]

Old Man.'T is poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside] And worse I may be yet: the worst
So long as we can say 'This is the worst.' [is not

Old Man. Fellow, where goest?

Glou. Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glou. He has some reason, else he could not beg.
I' the last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
Which made me think a man a worm: my son
Came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then seek with friends with him; I have heard more since.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport.

Edg. [Aside] How should this be?

Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow,
Angering itself and others.—Bless thee, master!

Glou. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glou. Then, prithee, get thee gone: if, for my sake,
Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain,
In the way toward Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,
Who I' the entreaty to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir, he is mad.

Glou. 'T is the times' plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
Above the rest, be gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,
Come on't what will. [Exit.]

Glou. Sirrah, naked fellow,—

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold. [Aside] I cannot daub it further.

Glou. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet
eyes.

Glou. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way and foot-path.
Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: bless thee, good man's son, from the foul fiend!

Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididdle, prince of dumness; Mauh, of stealing; Modo, of murder: Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesses chambermaids and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master.

Glou. Here, take this purse, whom the heavens' plagues
Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched
Makes thee the happier; heavens, deal so still!
Let the superfluous and lust-dieted man,
That shaves your ordinance, that will not see
Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly;
So distribution should undo excess,
And each man have enough. Dost thou know

Edg. Ay, master. [Dover?]

Glou. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep;
Bring me but to the very brink of it,
And I' ll repair the misery thou dost bear
With something rich about me: from that place
I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm:
Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Before the Duke of Albany's palace.

Enter Goneril and Edmund.

Gon. Welcome, my lord: I marvel our mild hus-
Not met us on the way.

[band

Enter Oswald.

Osw. Madam, within; but never man so changed.
I told him of the army that was landed;
He smiled at it: I told him you were coming;
His answer was: 'The worse:' of Gloucester's
And of the loyal service of his son, [treachery,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out:
What most he should dislike seems pleasant to him;
What like, offensive.

Gon. [To Edm.] Then shall you go no further.
It is the coward terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Our wishes on the way
May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother;
Hasten his musters and conduct his powers;
I must change arms at home, and give the distress
Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant
Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear,
If you dare venture in your own behalf,
A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;

[Coming forward.

Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloucester!

[Exit Edmund.

Osw. Madam, here comes my lord.

Gon. O, the difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due:
My fool usurps my body.

Osw. Madam, here comes my lord.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.

Alb. O Goneril!

You are not worth the dust which the rude wind
Blows in your face. I fear your disposition:
That nature, which contemns its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself;
She that herself will sliver and disbranch.
From her material sap, perchance must wither
And come to deadly use.

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

Kent. That bear'st a check for blows, a head for wrongs;
Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
Thine honour from thy suffering; that not know'st
Fools do those villains pity who are punish'd
Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy Drum?
France spreads his banners in our noiseless land;
With plumed helm thy slayer begins threats;
Whiles thou, a moral fool, sit'st still, and criest
'Alack, why does he so?'

Alb. See thyself, devil!
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman.

Gon. O vain fool! [shame,
Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd thing, for
Be-monster not thy feature. Were 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood,
They are apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: how'er thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Marry, your manhood now—

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news? [dead;

Mess. O, my good lord, the Duke of Cornwall's
Slain by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucester's eyes!

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with rememorse?

Opposed against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enraged,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead;
But not without that harmful stroke, which since
Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
You justicers, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge! But, O poor Gloucester!
Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.

This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;
'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside] One way I like this well;
But being widow, and my Gloucester with her,
May all the building in my fancy pluck
Upon my hateful life: another way,
The news is not so tart.—I'll read, and answer.

Alb. Where was his son when they did take his Mess. Come with my lady hither. [eyes
Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.
Alb. Knows he the wickedness? [him;
Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'tis he inform'd against
And quit the house on purpose, that their punish-Might have the freer course. [ment
Alb. Gloucester, I live
To thank thee for the love thou show'dst the king,
And to revenge thine eyes. Come hither, friend;
Tell me what more thou know'st. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The French camp near Dover.

Enter Kent and a Gentleman.

Kent. Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?

Gent. Something he left imperfect in the state, which since his coming forth is thought of; which imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger, that his personal return was most required and necessary.

Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?

Gent. The Marshal of France, Monsieur La Far.

Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

[presence;

Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek: it seem'd she was a queen
Over her passion; who, most rebel-like,
Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it moved her.

Gent. Not to a rage; patience and sorrow strove
Who should express her grief. You have seen
Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears
Were like a better way: those happy smilies,
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence,
As pearls from diamonds dropp'd. In brief,
Sorrow would be a rarity most beloved,
If all could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question?

Gent. 'Faith, once or twice she heaved the name
Of 'father'.

Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart;
Cried 'Sisters! sisters! shame of ladies! sisters!
Kent! father! sisters! What, is the storm? I? the Let pity not be believed!' There she shook [nighet,
The holy water from her heavenly eyes,
And clamour moisten'd: then away she started
To deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars,
The stars above us, govern our conditions;
Else one self mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. You spoke not with her since?

Gent. No.

Kent. Was this before the king return'd?

Gent. No, since.

Kent. Well, sir, the poor distressed Lear's! the Whosometime, in his better tune, remembers [town;
What we are come about, and by no means
Will yield to see his daughter.

Gent. Why, good sir?

Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him: his own unknownness,
That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-hearted daughters, these things sting
His mind so venomously, that burning shame
Detains him from Cordelia.

Gent. Alack, poor gentlewoman!

Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you
Gent. 'Tis so, they are afoot. [heard not?

Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master Lear,
And leave you to attend him: some dear cause
Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me.

[Exit.}

SCENE IV.—The same. A tent.

Enter, with drum and colours, Cordelia, Doctor, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he: why, he was met even now
As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud;
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds.
With hur-docks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow

714
In our sustaining corn. A century send forth;
Search every acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.] What can man's wisdom
In the restoring his bereaved sense?
He that helps him take all my outward worth.

Doct. There is means; madam:
Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks: that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All best secrets,
All you un publish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears! be aidant and remit;
In the good man's distress! Seek, seek for him;
Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. News, madam;
The British powers are marching hitherward.
Cor. 'Tis known before; our preparation stands
In expectation of them. O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about;
Therefore great France
My mourning and important tears hath pitied.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our aged father's right:
Soon may I hear and see him! [Exit.

SCENE V. — Gloucester's castle.

Enter Regan and Oswald.

Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth?
Osw. Ay, madam.
Reg. Himself in person there?
Osw. Madam, with much ado:
Your sister is the better soldier.
Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home?
Osw. No, madam, [him]
Reg. What might import my sister's letter to
Osw. I know not, lady.
Reg. ' Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.
It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live: where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us: Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his miseries, to dispatch.
His nighted life: moreover, to desp ray
The strength o' the enemy. [letter.
Osw. I must needs after him, madam, with my
Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow: stay with
The ways are dangerous. [us;
Osw. I may not, madam:
My lady charged my duty in this business.
Reg. Why should she write to Edmund? Might not you
Transport her purposes by word? Belike,
Something,—I know not what: I'll love thee much,
Let me unseal the letter.
Osw. Madam, I had rather—
Reg. I know your lady does not love her husband;
I am sure of that: and at her late being here
She gave strange wallfades and most speaking looks
To noble Edmund. I know you of her bosom.
Osw. I, madam?
Reg. I speak in understanding: you are, I know 'tis:
Therefore I do advise you, take this note;
My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk'd;
And more convenient is he for my hand
Than for your lady's: you may gather more.
If you do find him, pray you, give him this;
And when your mistress hears thus much from you,
I pray you, desire her call her wisdom to her.
So, fare you well.
If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Osw. Would I could meet him, madam! I should
What party I do follow. [show
Reg. Fare thee well. [Exit.

SCENE VI. — Fields near Dover.

Enter Gloucester, and Edgar dressed like a peasant.

Glo. When shall we come to the top of that same hill?

[bour.

Edg. You do climb up it now: look, how we la-
Glo. Methinks the ground is even.

Edg. Horrible steep.

Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glo. No, truly.

Edg. Why, then, your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes' anguish.

Glo. So may it be, indeed;
Methinks thy voice is alter'd; and thou speak'st
In better phrase and matter than thou didst.
Edg. You're much deceived: in nothing am I
But in my garments. [changed,
Glo. Methinks you're better spoken.
Edg. Come on, sir; here's the place: stand still.

How fearful
And dizzy 't is, to cast one's eyes so low!

The crows and choughs that wing the midway air
Show scarce so gross as beetles: half-way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than his head:
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight: the murmuring surge,
That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. I'll look no more;
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topples down headlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.
Edg. Give me your hand: you are now within a foot
Of the extreme verge: for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.
Here, friend, 's another purse; in it a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking: fairies and gods
Prosper it with thee! Go thou farther off;
Bide me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir.

Glo. With all my heart.

Edg. Why do I trifle thus with his despair
Is done to cure it.

Glo. [Kneeling] O you mighty gods!

This world I do renounce, and, in your sights,
Shake patiently my great affliction off;
If I could bear it longer, and not fail
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff and loathed part of nature should
Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!
Now, fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Gone, sir: farewell.

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft: had he been where he thought,
By this, had thought been past. Alive or dead?
Lo, you sir! friend! Here you, sir! speak!
Thus might he pass indeed: yet he revives.

What are you, sir?

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Hadst thou been bount but gosser, feath-
So many fathom down precipitating,
[ers, air,
Thou 'dst shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost

Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art.
Ten masts at each make not the altitude sound.
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell:
Thy life 's a miracle. Speak yet again.

715
Glou. But have I fall'n, or no?
Edg. From the dreadful summit of this chalky bourn,
Look up a-height; the shrill-gorged lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up.
Glou. Alack, I have no eyes.
Is wretchedness deprived that benefit,
To end itself by death?  'T was yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.
Edg. Give me your arm:
Up: so. How is 't? Feel you your legs? You
Glou. Too well, too well. [stand.
Edg. This is above all strangeness.
Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?
Glou. A poor unfortunate beggar.
Edg. As I stood here below, methought his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses.
Horns whelk'd and waved like the enrimed sea:
It was some fiend; therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them hon-
Of men's impossibilities, have preserved thee. [ours
Glou. I do remember now: henceforth I'll bear
Affliction till it do cry out itself
'Enough, enough,' and die. That thing you speak
I took it for a man; often 't would say
[of,
'The fiend, the fiend!' he led me to that place.
Edg. Bear free and patient thoughts. But who comes here?

Enter Lear, fantastically dressed with wild flowers.
The safer sense will ne'er accommodate
His master thus.
Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining; I am the king himself.
Edg. O thou side-piercing sight!
Nature 's above art in that respect. There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow lke a crow-keeper: draw me a clothier's yard.
Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace; this piece of toasted cheese will do 't. There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a giant. Bring up the brown bills. O well flown, bird! i' the clout, i' the clout: hewgh!
Give the word.
Edg. Sweet marjoram.
Lear. Pass.
Edg. I know that voice.
Lear. Ha! Goneril, with a white beard! They flattered me like a dog; and told me I had white hair in my beard ere the black ones were there.
To say 'ay' and 'no' to every thing that I said!—
'Ay' and 'no' too was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men o' their words; they told me I was every thing; 'tis a lie,
I am not ague-proof.
Glou. The trick of that voice I do well remember:
Lear. Ay, every inch a king:
When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.
I pardon that man's life. What was that cause?
Adultery?
Thou shalt not die for adultery! No:
The wren goes to 't, and the small gilded fly
Does lecher in my sight.
Let copulation thrive; for Gloucester's bastard son
Was kinder to his father than my daughters
Got 'twixt the lawful sheets.
To 't, luxury, peil-nell! for I lack soldiers.
Behold the simpering dame,
Whose face betrays her forks presages snow;
That mines the virtue, and does shake the head
To hear of pleasure's name;
The fichew, nor the soiled horse, goes to 't
With a more riotous appetite.

Down from the waist they are Centaurs,
Though women all above:
But to the girdle do the gods inherit,
Beneath is all the fiends.
There's hell, there's darkness, there's the sulphur-
ous pit,
Burning, scalding, stench, consumption; &c, &c,
! pah, pah! Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination: there's money for this!
Glou. O, let me kiss that hand!
Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.
Glou. O ruin'd piece of nature! This great world
Shall so wear out to nought. Dost thou know me?
Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thee squint at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I 'll not love. Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it. [one.
Glou. Were all the letters suns, I could not see
Edg. I would not take this from report; it is,
And my heart breaks at it.
Lear. Read.
Glou. What, with the case of eyes?
Lear. O, ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: yet you see how this world goes.
Glou. I see it feelingly.
Lear. What art mad? A man may see how this world goes with no eyes. Look with thine ears:
see how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief.
Hark, in thine ear: change places; and, handly-
dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?
Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?
Glou. Ay, sir.
Lear. And the creature run from the cur? There
Thou mightst behold the great image of authority:
a dog's obeyed in office.
Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand! [back;
Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own
Thou hotly lust'st to use her in that kind [conceit.
For which thou whippst her. The usurer hangs the Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes and fur'd gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw does piece it.
None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll able 'em:
Take that of mine, my friend to have the power
To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem [now:
To see the things thou dost not. Now, now, now,
Pull off my boots: harder, harder: so.
Edg. O, matter and impertinency mix'd!
Reason in madness!
Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.
I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloucester:
Thou must be patient; we came crying hither:
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wawl and cry. I will preach to thee: mark.
Glou. Alack, alack the day! [come
Lear. When we are born, we cry that we are
To this great stage of fools: this a good block;
It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe
A troop of horse with felt: I 'll put 't in proof;
And when I have stole 'n upon these sons-in-law,
Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill!

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.
Gent. O, here he is: lay hand upon him. Sir,
Your most dear daughter—
Lear. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even
The natural fool of fortune. Use me well:
You shall have the ransom. Let me have surgeons;
I am cut to the brains.
Gent. You shall have any thing.
Lear. No seconds? all myself?
Why, this would make a man a man of salt,
ACT IV. KING LEAR.  SCENE VII.

To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
Ay, and laying autumn’s dust.

Gent. Good sir,—
Lear. I will die bravely, like a bridegroom. What! I will be jovial: come, come; I am a king,
My masters, know you that.
Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you.
Lear. Then there’s life in ’t. Nay, if you get it,
You shall get it with running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.

[Exit running; Attendants follow.

Gent. A sight most pitiful, in the meanest wretch, Past speaking of in a king! Thou hast one daughter, Who redeems nature from the general curse Which twain have brought her to.
Edg. Hail, gentle sir.
Gent. Sir, speed you: what ’s your will?
Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward? Gent. Most sure and vulgar: every one hears that, Which can distinguish sound.
Edy. But, by your favour,
How near ’s the other army?
Gent. Near and on speedy foot; the main desery Stands on the hourly thought.
Edy. I thank you, sir; that ’s all.
Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is Her army is moved on. [here,
Edy. I thank you, sir.

Glo. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from Let not my worse spirit tempt me again [me; To die before you please!]
Edy. Well pray you, father.
Glo. Now, good sir, what are you? [blows;
Edy. A most poor man, made tame to fortune’s Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows, Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand, I ’ll lead you to some hiding.
Glo. Hearty thanks:
The bounty and the benison of heaven
To boot, and boot!

Enter Oswald.

Osw. A proclaim’d prize! Most happy!
That eyeless head of thine was first framed flesh
To raise my fortunes. Thou old unhappy traitor, Briefly thyself remember: the sword is out That must destroy thee.
Glo. Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough to ’t. [Edy interposes.
Osw. Wherefore, bold peasant, Darest thou support a publish’d traitor? Hence;
Lest that the infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.
Edy. Chill not let go, zir, without further ’casion.
Osw. Let go, slave, or thou diest!
Edy. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor villian pass. An chud ha’ bin waggled out of my life, it would not ha’ bin so long as it is by a vortnight. Nay, come not near th’ old man; keep out, chee vor ye, or ise try whether your costard or my ballow be the harder: chill be plain with you.
Osw. Out, thoug’hill! I thank you friendly
Edy. Chill pick your teeth, zir: come; no matter vor your foins. [They fight, and Edgar knocks him down.

Osw. Slave, thou hast slain me: villian, take my If ever thou will thrive, bury my body; [purse: And give the letters which thou find’st about me To Edmund earl of Gloucester; seek him out Upon the British party: O, untimely death! [Dies.
Edy. I know thee well: a serviceable villian; As duteous to the vices of thy mistress As badness would desire.
Glo. What, is he dead?
Edy. Sit you down, father; rest you.
Let ’s see these pockets: the letters that he speaks of May be my friends. He ’s dead; I am only sorry

He had no other death’s-man. Let us see: Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not: To know our enemies’ minds, we ’d rip their hearts; Their papers, is more lawful.

[Draughts] Let us our recapitulation be remembered.
You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror: then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal; from the loafed warmth whereof deliver me, and impale the place for your labour.

‘Your — wife, so I would say—

‘Affectionate servant,

‘GONERIL.’

O undistinguish’d space of woman’s will! A plot upon her virtuous husband’s life; And the exchange my brother! Here, in the sands, Thee I ’ll rake up, the post unsanctified Of murderous lechers: and in the mature time With this ungracious paper strike the sight Of the death-practised duke: for him it is well That of thy death and business I can tell.
Glo. The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense, That I stand thus, and have not any scathing feeling Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract; So should my thoughts be sever’d from my griefs, And woes by wrong imaginations lose The knowledge of themselves.
Edy. Give me your hand:

[Drum afar off.]

Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum:
Come, father, I ’ll bestow you with a friend.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. — A tent in the French camp. Lear on a bed asleep, soft music playing; Gentlemen, and others attending.

Enter Cordelia, Kent, and Doctor.

Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work, To match thy goodness? My life will be too short, And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledged, madam, is o’erpaid. All my reports go with the modest truth; Nor more nor clipp’d, but so.

Cor. Be better suited: These weeds are memories of those worsers hours: I pritchee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam; Yet to be known shortens my made intent: My boon I make it, that you know me not Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be it so, my good lord. [To the Doctor] How does the king?

Doc. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind gods, Cure this great breach in his abused nature! The untuned and jarring senses, O, wind up Of this child-changed father!

Doc. So please your majesty That we may wake the king: he hath slept long.

Cor. Be gener’d by your knowledges, and proceed I the sway of your own will. Is he array’d?

Gent. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of his sleep We put fresh garments on him.

Doc. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him; I doubt not of his temperance.

Cor. Very well. [there! Doc. Please you, draw near. Louder the music

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss Repair those violent harms that my two sisters Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess! Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flowers Had challenged pity of them. Was this a face
ACT V.

KING LEAR.

To be opposed against the warring winds?
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch—poor perdul!—
With this thin helm? Mine enemy’s dog.
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire; and wast thou fair, poor grave,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!
’T is wonder that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all. He wakes; speak to him.
Doc. Madam, do you; ’tis listest. [majesty?
Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your Lear. You do me wrong to take me out of
The hour a soul in bliss; but I am bound [over
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.
Cor. Sir, do you know me?
Lear. You are a spirit, I know: when did you die?
Cor. Still, still, far wide!
Doc. He’s scarce awake: let him alone awhile.
Lear. Where have I been? Where am I? Fair daylight.
I am mightily abused. I should’er die with pity,
To see another thus. I know not what to say.
I will not swear these are my hands: let ’s see;
I feel this pin prick. Would I were assured
Of my condition!
Cor. O, look upon me, sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o’er me:
No, sir, you must not kneel.
Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward, not an hour more nor less;
And, to deal plainly,
I fear I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks I should know you, and know this man;
Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remember not these garments: nor I know not Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me;
For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am.
Lear. Be your tears wet? yes, ‘faith. I pray, weep
If you have poison for me, I will drink it. [not:
I know you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.
Cor. No cause, no cause.
Lear. Am I in France?
Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.
Lear. Do not abuse me.
Doc. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage
You see, is kill’d in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even o’er the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more
Till further settling.
Cor. Will ’t please your highness walk?
Lear. You must hear with me:
Pray you now, forget and forgive: I am old and foolish. [Exeunt all but Kent and Gentleman.
Gent. Holds it true, sir, that the Duke of Cornwall was so slain?
Kent. Most certain, sir.
Gent. Who is conductor of his people?
Kent. As ’t is said, the bastard son of Gloucester.
Gent. They say Edgar, his banished son, is with the Earl of Kent in Germany.
Kent. Report is changeable. ’T is time to look about; the powers of the kingdom approach.
Gent. The arbitration is like to be bloody.
Fare you well, sir.
Kent. My point and period will be throngingly wrought,
Or well or ill, as this day’s battle’s fought. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The British camp, near Dover.

Enter, with drum and colours, Edmund, Regan,
Gentlemen, and Soldiers.

Edm. Know of the duke if his last purpose hold,
Or whether since he is advised by augst
To change the course: he’s full of alteration
And self-reproving: bring his constant pleasure.

[To a Gentleman, who goes out.
Reg. Our sister’s man is certainly miscarried.
Edm. ’Tis to be doubted, madam.
Reg. Now, sweet lord,
You know the goodness I intend upon you:
Tell me—but truly—but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister?
Edm. In honour’d love.
Reg. But have you never found my brother’s way
To the forfended place?
Edm. That thought abuses you.
Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjured
And bosom’d with her, as far as we call hers.
Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.
Reg. I never shall endure her: dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.
Edm. Fear me not:
She and the duke her husband!

Enter, with drum and colours, Albany, Goneril,
and Soldiers.

Gon. [Aside I had rather lose the battle than that Should loosen him and me. [sister
Alb. Our very loving sister, well be-met.
Sir, this I hear; the king is come to his daughter,
With others whom the rigour of our state

Forced to cry out. Where I could not be honest,
I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It toucheth us, as France invades our land,
Not holds the king, with others, whom I fear,
Most just and heavy causes make oppose.

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.
Reg. Why is this reason’d?
Gon. Combine together ’gainst the enemy;
For these domestic and particular broils
Are not the question here.

Let’s then determine
With the ancient of war on our proceedings.
Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.
Reg. Sister, you ’ll go with us?
Gon. No.
Reg. T is most convenient; pray you, go with us.
Gon. [Aside O, ho, I know the riddle—I will go.

As they are going out, enter Edgar disguised.
Edg. If e’er your grace had speech with man so
Hear me one word. [poor
Alb. I ’ll overtake you. Speak.
[Exeunt all but Albany and Edgar.
Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.
If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seem,
I can produce a champion that will prove
What is avouched there. If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And melancholy cases. Fortune love you!
Alb. Stay till I have read the letter.
Edg. I was forbid it.
When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I ’ll appear again.
ACT V.

KING LEAR.

SCENE III.

Alb. Why, fare thee well; I will o'erlook thy paper. [Exit Edgar.

Edm. The enemy's in view; draw up your powers. Here is the guess of their true strength and forces By diligent discovery; but your haste Is now urged on you.

Alb. We will greet the time. [Exit. Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my love; Each jealous of the other, as the stung Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take? Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd, If both remain alive: to take the widow Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril; And hardly shall I carry out my side, Her husband being alive. Now then we'll use His countenance for the battle; which being done, Let her who would be rid of him devise His speedy taking off. As for the mercy Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia, The battle done, and they within our power, Shall never see his pardon, for my state Stands on me to defend, not to debate. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A field between the two camps.

Alarum within. Enter, with drum and colours, Lear, Cordelia, and Soldiers, over the stage; and exeat.

Enter Edgar and Gloucester.

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree For your good host; pray that the right may thrive: If ever I return to you again, I'll bring you comfort.

Alarum and retreat within. Re-enter Edgar.

Edg. Away, old man; give me thy hand; away! King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en: Give me thy hand; come on.

Glon. No farther, sir; a man may rot even here. Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure Their going hence, even as their coming hither: Ripeness is all: come on.

Glon. And that's true too. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The British camp near Dover.

Enter, in companies, with drum and colours, Edmund; Lear and Cordelia, prisoners; Captain, Soldiers, &c.

Edm. Some officers take them away: good guard, Until their greater pleasures first be known That are to censure them.

Cor. We are not the first Who, with best meaning, have incurred'd the worst. For thee, oppress'd king, am I cast down; Myself could else out-frown false fortune's frown. Shall we not these daughters and these sisters? Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison: We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage: When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down, And ask of thee forgiveness: so we'll live, And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too, Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out; And take upon's the mystery of things, As if we were God's spies: and we'll wear out, In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones, That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away. Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia, [thee? The gods themselves throw incense. Have I caught He that parts us shall bring a brand from heaven, And fire us hence like foxes. Wipe thine eyes: The good-years shall devour them, 'tis but the rare,

Ere they shall make us weep: we'll see 'em starved first.

Cor. [Exit Lear and Cordelia, guarded.

Edm. Come, either, captain; hark. Take thou this note [giving a paper]; go follow them to prison:

One step I have advanced thee; if thou dost As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way To noble fortunes: know thou this, that men As the time is: to be tender-minded, Does not become a sword: thy great employment Will not bear question; either say thou 'It do's', Or thrive by other means. Capt. I'll do't, my lord. Edm. About it; and write happy when thou hast Mark, I say, instantly; and carry it so done. As I have set it down. Capt. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats; If it be man's work, I'll do't. [Exit.

Flourish. Enter Albany, Goneril, Regan, another Captain, and Soldiers.

Alb. Sir, you have shewn to-day your valiant strain, And fortune led you well: you have the captives That were the opposites of this day's strife: We do require of them, so to use them As we shall find their merits and our safety May equally determine. Edm. Sir, I thought it fit To send the old and miserable king To some retention and appointed guard; Whose age has charms in it, whose title more, To pluck the common bosom on his side, And turn our impress'd lances in our eyes [queen; Which do command them. With him I sent the My reason all the same; and they are ready To-morrow, or at further space, to appear Where you shall hold your session. At this time We sweat and bleed: the friend hath lost his friend; And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cursed By those that feel their sharpness: The question of Cordelia and her father Requires a fitter place.

Alb. Sir, by your patience, I hold you but a subject of this war, Not as a brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him. Men think our pleasure might have been demanded, Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers; Bore the commission of my place and person; The which immediacy may well stand up, And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot: In his own grace he doth exalt himself, More than in your addition.

Reg. In my rights, By me invested, he completes the best. [you. Gon. That were the most, if he should husband Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

Gon. Holla, holla! That eye that told you so look'd but a-squint.

Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer From a full-flowing stomach. General, Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony; Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine: Witness the world, that I create thee here My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him? Alb. The let-alone lies not in your good will. Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Strike, hear reason. Edmund, Iarest thee On capital treason: and, in thine attaint, Thisgilded serpent [pointing to Gon.]. For your claim, I bar it in the interest of my wife; [fair sister, 'tis she is sub-contracted to this lord, And I, her husband, contradict your bans. 719
ACT V.

KING LEAR.

SCENE III.

If you will marry, make your loves to me,
My lady is bespoken.

Gon. An interlude! [pet sound: Draw.]
Alb. Thou art arm’d, Gloucester: let the trump-
It non appear to prove upon thy head
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge [throwing down a glove]; I’ll prove it on thy heart.

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim’d thee.

Reg. Sick, O, sick!

Gon. [Aside] If not, I’ll ne’er trust medicine.
Edm. There’s my exchange [throwing down a glove]; what in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies:
Call by thy trumpet: he that dares approach,
On him, or you, who not? I will maintain
My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho!

Edm. A herald, ho, a herald!

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers,
All loved in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.

Reg. My sickness grows upon me.

Alb. She is not well; convey her to my tent.

[Exit Regan, led.

Enter Edgar, at the third sound, armed, with a trumpet before him.

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears
Upon this call o’ the trumpet.

Her. What are you?

Your name, your quality? and why you answer
This present summons?

Edg. Know, my name is lost;
By treason’s tooth bare-gnaw’d and canker-bitten:
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope.

Alb. Which is that adversary?

Edg. What’s he that speaks for Edmund Earl of Gloucester?

Edm. Himself: what say’st thou to him?

Edg. Draw thy sword,

That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine.
Behold, it is the privilege of mine honour,
My oath, and my profession: I protest,
Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,
Despite thy victor sword and fire-new fortune,
Thy valour and thy heart, thou art a traitor;
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father;
Conspiring against this high-illustrious prince;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou ‘No,!
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent
To prove upon thy heart, where’er I speak,
Thou hast.

Edm. In wisdom I should ask thy name;
But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
And that thou tongue some say of breeding breathes,
What safe and nicely I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn:
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head;
With the hell-hated lie o’erwhelm thy heart;

Which, for they yet glance by and scarcely bruise,
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest for ever. Trumpets, speak!

[Alarums. They fight. Edmund falls.

Alb. Save him, save him!

Gon. This is practice, Gloucester:
By the law of arms thou wast not bound to answer
An unknown opposite; thou art not vanquished,
But cozen’d and beguiled.

Alb. Shut your mouth, dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it: Ifold, sir:
Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil:
No teaching, lady; I perceive you know it.

[Gives the letter to Edmund.

Gon. Say, if I do, the laws are mine, not thine:
Who can arraign me for ‘t?

Alb. Most monstrous! oh!

Know’st thou this paper?

Gon. Ask me not what I know. [Eict.
Alb. Go after her: she’s desperate; govern her.

Edm. What you have charged me with, that have
I done.

And more, much more: the time will bring it out:
‘tis past, and so am I. But what art thou
That hast this fortune on me? If thou art noble,
I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let’s exchange charity.

I am no less in blood than thou art. Edmund;
If more, the more thou hast wrong’d me.
My name is Edgar, and thy father’s son.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to plague us:
The dark and vicious place where thee he got
Cost him his eyes.

Thou hast spoken right, ’tis true:
The wheel is come full circle; I am here.

Alb. Methought thy very gait did proply
A royal nobleness: I must embrace thee:
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever
Did hate thee or thy father.

Edm. Worthy prince, I know ‘t.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself?
How have you known the miseries of your father?

Edg. By nursing them, my lord. List a brief tale;
And when ‘tis told, O, that my heart would burst!
The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow’d me so near our lives’ sweetness!
That we the pain of death would hourly die
Rather than die at once!—taught me to shift
Into a madman’s rags; to assume a semblance
That very dogs disdain’d: and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious stones now lost: became his guide,
Led him, begg’d for him, saved him from despair;
Never.—O fault!—reveal’d myself unto him,
Until some half-hour past, when I was arm’d:
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask’d his blessing, and from first to last
Told him my pilgrimage: but his heart’s heart
To sack, too weak the oud to support!
Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst sympathizing.

Edm. This speech of yours hath moved me,
And shall perchance do good: but speak you on;
You look as if you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

Edg. This would seem’d a period

To such as love not sorrow; but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.

Whilst I was big in clamour came there in a man,
Who, having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn’d my abbhor’d society; but then, finding
What ‘twas that so endur’d, with his strong arms
He fasten’d on my neck, and bellow’d out
As he ’d burst heaven; threw him on my father;
Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him
That ever ear received: which in recounting
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack: twice then the trumpets sounded,
And there I left him trance.

'Ab. But who was this?
Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent; who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.

Enter a Gentleman, with a bloody knife.

Gent. Help, help, O, help!
Ab. What kind of help?
Edg. Speak, man.
Edg. What means that bloody knife?
Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;
It came even from the heart of—O, she's dead!
Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady: and her sister
By her is poisoned; she hath confess'd it.
Edm. I will contract them both: all three
Now marry in an instant.
Edg. Here comes Kent.
Ab. Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead:
This judgment of the heavens, that makesustremble,
Touch us not with pity.

[Exit Gentleman.

Enter Kent.

O, is this he?
The time will not allow the compliment
Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come
To bid my king and master eye good night:
Is he not here?
Ab. Great thing of us forgot!
Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's
See'st thou this object, Kent? [Cordelia?
Kent. Alack, why thus?
Edm. Yet Edmund was belov'd:
The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herself.
Ab. Even so. Cover their faces.
Edm. I pant for life: some good I mean to do,
Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,
Be brief in it, to the castle: for my writ
Is on the life of Lear and on Cordelia:
Nay, send in time.
Ab. Run, run, O, run!
Edg. To who, my lord? Who hath the office? send Thy token of reprieve.
Edm. Well thought on: take my sword,
Give it the captain.
Ab. Haste thee, for thy life. [Exit Edgar.
Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she for'd herself.
Ab. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile. [Edmund is borne off.

Re-enter Lear, with Cordelia dead in his arms;
Edgar, Captain, and others following.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl! O, you are men of stones:
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
That heaven's vault should crack. She's gone for
I know when one is dead, and when one lives; ever
She's dead as earth. Lend me a looking-glass;
If her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives.
Kent. Is this the promised end?
Edg. Or image of that horror?
Ab. Fall, and cease!
Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,
It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.

KENT. [Kneeling] O my good master!
Lear. Prithee, away,
Edg. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.
Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all!
I might have saved her; now she's gone for ever!
Cordelia, Cordelia! stay a little. Ha!
What is 't thou say'st? Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
I kill'd the slave that was a-hanging thee.
Cord. 'T is true, my lords, he did.
Lear. Did I not, fellow? I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion
I would have made them skip: I am old now;
And these same crosses spoil me. Who are you?
Mine eyes are not o' the best: I'll tell you straight.
Kent. If fortune brag of two she loved and hated,
One of them we behold.
Lear. This is a dull sight. Are you not Kent?
Kent. The same,
Your servant Kent. Where is your servant Cordia?
Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;
He'll strike, and quickly too: he's dead and rotten.
Kent. No, my good lord; I am the very man,—
Lear. I'll see that straight.
Kent. That, from your first of difference and de-
Have follow'd your sad steps. [cay, Lear.
Kent. Nor no man else; all's cheerless, dark, and deadly,
Your eldest daughters have fordone themselves,
And desperately are dead.
Lear. Ay, so I think.
Ab. He knows not what he says: and vain it is That we present us to him.

Enter a Captain.

Capt. Edmund is dead, my lord.
Ab. That's but a tride here.
You lords and noble friends, know our intent.
What comfort to this great decay may come
Shall be applied: for us, we will resign,
During the life of this old majesty,
To him our absolute power: [To Edgar and Kent]
you, to your rights?
With boot, and such addition as your honours
Have more than merited. All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. O, see, see!
Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no
Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life, [life!
And thou no breath at all? Thou 'rt come no more,
Never, never, never, never, never!
O, shoot him! My lord, my lord!
KENT. Break, heart; I prithee, break!
Edg. Look up, my lord.
Kent. Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! he hates him much
That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

Lear. He is gone, indeed.
KENT. The wonder is, he hath endured so long:
He but usurp'd his life.
Ab. Bear them from hence. Our present business
Is general woe. [To Kent and Edgar] Friends of my soul, you twain
Rule in this realm, and the gored state sustain.
KENT. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;
My master calls me, I must not say no.
Ab. The weight of this sad time we must obey;
Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.
The oldest hath borne most: we that are young
Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exit, with a dead march.

SCENE III.

ACT V.
OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Duke of Venice.
Brabantio, a senator.
Other Senators.
Gratiano, brother to Brabantio.
Lodovico, kinsman to Brabantio.
Othello, a noble Moor in the service of the Venetian state.
Cassio, his lieutenant.
Iago, his ancient.
Roderigo, a Venetian gentleman.

Montano, Othello's predecessor in the government of Cyprus.
Clown, servant to Othello.
Desdemona, daughter to Brabantio and wife to Othello.
Emilia, wife to Iago.
Bianca, mistress to Cassio.
Sailor, Messenger, Herald, Officers, Gentlemen, Musicians, and Attendants.

SCENE.—Venice: a Sea-port in Cyprus.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see page lxv.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A street.

Enter Roderigo and Iago.

Rodd. True! never tell me; I take it much unkindly
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this.
Iago. 'Sblood, but you will not hear me:
If ever I did dream of such a matter,
Abhor me, [hate.
Rodd. Thou told'st me thou didst hold him in thy Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city,
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Off-capp'd to him: and, by the faith of man,
I know my price, I am worth no worse a place:
But he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
Evades them, with a bountiful circumstance
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war;
And, in conclusion,
Nonsuits my mediators; for, 'Certes,' says he,
'I have already chose my officer.'
And what was he?
Forsooth, a great arithmetician,
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine,
A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife;
That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinster; unless the bookish theorist,
Wherein the toged consuls can propose
As masterly as he: mere practle, without practice,
Is all his soldiery. But he, sir, had the election:
And I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof
At Rhodes, at Cyprus and on other grounds
Christian and heathen, must be be-lee'd and calm'd
By debtor and creditor: this counter-easter,
He, in good time, must his lieutenant be, [fiend.
And I — God bless the mark! — his Moorship's an-Rodd. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman. [service.
Iago. Why, there's no remedy; 'tis the curse of Preferment goes by letter and affection.
And not by old gradation, where each second
Stood heir to the first. Now, sir, be judge yourself,
Whether I in any just term am affined
To love the Moor.

Iago. O, sir, content you;
I follow him to serve my turn upon him:
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters.
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass.
For nought but provender, and when he's old,
casier'd:
Whip me such honest knaves. Others there are
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves,
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them and when they have lined their costs
[soul;
Do themselves homage: these fellows have some
And such a one do I profess myself. For, sir,
It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but myself;
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end:
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at: I am not what I am.

Rodd. What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe,
If he can carry 't thus!

Iago. Call up her father,
Rouse him: make after him, poison his delight,
Proclaim him in the streets; incense her kinsmen,
And, though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plague him with flies; though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such changes of vexation on 't,
As it may lose some colour.

Rodd. Here is her father's house; I'll call aloud.
Iago. Do, with like timorous accent and dire yell
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is sped in populous cities.

Rodd. What, ho, Brabantio! Signior Brabantio, ho!

Brabantio appears above, at a window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons? What is the matter there?

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?

Iago. Are your doors lock'd?

Rod. Why, wherefore ask you this?

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you're robb'd; for shame, put on your gown;

Your heart is burst, you have lost half your soul;

Even now, now, very now, an old black ram
Is toppings your white ewe. Arise, arise;

Awake the snorting citizens with the bell,
Or else the devil will make a gransire of you:

Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my Bra. Not I: what are you? [voice Rod. My name is Roderigo.

Bra. The worser welcome:

I have charged thee not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say
My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,
Being full of supper and distempering draughts,
Upon malicious bravery, dost thou come
To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, sir, sir,—

Bra. But thou must needs be sure
My spirit and my place have in them power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience, good sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is My house is not a grange. [Venice;

Rod. Most grave Brabantio,

In simple and pure soul I come to you.

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are one of those that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service and you think we are ruffians, you'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary horse; you'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have courser for cousins and gennets for Germans.

Bra. What profane wretch art thou?

Iago. I am one, sir; that comes to tell you your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. You are—a senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer; I know thee, Roderigo.

Iago. Yes, sir; I will answer any thing. But, I beseech If 't be your pleasure and most wise consent,
As partly I find it is, that your fair daughter,
At this odd-and even dull watch o' the night,
Transported, with no worse nor better guard
But with a knave of common hire, a gondoliere,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor—
If this be known to you and your allowance,
We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs;
But if you know not this, my manners tell me
We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe
That, from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence:
Your daughter, if you have not given her leave,
I say again, hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit and fortunes
In an extravagant and wheeling stranger
Of here and every where. Straight satisfy yourself:
If she be in her chamber or your house,
Let loose on me the justice of the state
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho! Give me a taper! call up all my people!

This accident is not unlike my dream:
Belief of it oppresses me already.

Light, I say! light! [Exit above.

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you: It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place, To be produced—as, if I stay, I shall—

Against the Moor: for, I do know, the state,
However this may gall him with some cheek,
Cannot with safety cast him, for he's embark'd
With such bold reason to the Cyprus wars,
Which even now stand in act, that, for their souls,
Another of his fathom they have none,
To lead their business: in which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell-pains,
Yet, for necessity of present life,
I must show out a flag and sign of love, [find him, Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely Lead to the Suggestary the raised search;
And there will I be with him. So, farewell. [Exit.

Enter, below, Brabantio, and Servants with torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is;
And what's to come of my despaired time
Is nought but bitterness. Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her? O unhappy girl!
With the Moor, say'st thou? Who would be a father!
How didst thou know 'twas she? O, she deceives me
Past thought! What said she to you? Get more tapers,
Raise all my kindred. Are they married, think you?
Rod. Truly, I think they are. [the blood!

Bra. O heaven! How got she out? O treason of Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds
By what you see them act. Is there not charms
By which the property of youth and maidhood
May be abused? Have you not read, Roderigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir, I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother. O, would you had had her!
Some one way, some another. Do you know
Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?
Rod. I think I can discover him, if you please
To get good guard and go along with me. [call:
Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll
May command at most: Get weapons, ho!
And raise some special officers of night.
On, good Roderigo: I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another street.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Attendants with torches.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain
Yet do I hold it very stuff o' the conscience [men,
To do no contrived murder: I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I had thought to have yer'k'd him here under the
Oth. 'Tis better as it is. [riles.

Iago. Nay, but he prated,
And spoke such surry and provoking terms
Against your honour
That, with the little godliness I have,
I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray you, sir,
Are you fast married? Be assured of this,
That the magnifico is much beloved,
And hath in his effect a voice potent:
'Cause double art I in doubt he will divorce you;
Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law, with all his might to enforce it on,
Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite;
My services which I have done the signory
Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know,—
Which, when I know that boasting is an honour,
I shall promulgate—I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege, and my demerits

723
May speak unbonneted to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd: for know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhouse free condition
Put into circumscription and confine [yond?
For the sea's worth. But, look! what lights come Iago. Those are the raised father and his friends:
You were best go in.

Oth. Not I; I must be found:
My parts, my title and my perfect soul
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?
Iago. By Janus, I think no.

Enter Cassio, and certain Officers with torches.

Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant.
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!
What is the news?
Cas. The duke does greet you, general,
And he requires your haste-post-haste appearance,
Even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?
Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine:
It is a business of some heat: the galleys
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night at one another's heels,
And many of the consuls, raised and met,
Are at the duke's already: you have been hotly cal'd for;
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate hath sent about three several quests
To search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you. [Exit.]
Cas. Ancient, what makes he here?
Iago. 'Tis faith, he to-night hath board'd a land-carack:
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.
Cas. I do not understand.

Oth. He's married. To who?
Re-enter Othello.

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?
Oth. Have with you.
Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for you.
Iago. It is Brabantio. General, be advised;
He comes to bad intent.

Enter Brabantio, Rodrigo, and Officers with torches and weapons.

Oth. Ho! hoa! Stand there!
Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Br. Down with him, thief! [They draw on both sides.
Iago. You, Rodrigo! come, sir, I am for you.
Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew
Will rust them.

Good signior, you shall more command with years
Than with your weapons.

Br. O thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd my daughter?
Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her;
For I'll refer me to all things of sense,
If she in chains of magic were not bound,
Whether a maid so tender, fair and happy,
So opposite to marriage that she shunn'd
The wealthy curled darlings of our nation,
Would ever have, to incur a general mock,
Run from her guardian to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou, to fear, not to delight.
Judge me the world, if 'tis not gross in sense
That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms,
Abused her delicate youth with drugs or minerals
That weaken motion: 'I'll have't disputed on;
'T is probable and palpable to thinking.
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee
For an abuser of the world, a practitioner
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.
Lay hold upon him: if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Wore it my cue to fight, I should have known it
Without a prompter. Where will you that I go
To answer this your charge?

Br. To prison, till fit time
Of law and course of direct session
Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the duke be therewith satisfied,
Whose messengers are here about my side,
Upon some present business of the state
To bring me to him?

First Off. 'T is true, most worthy signior;
The duke's in council, and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

How! the duke in council!
In this time of the night! Bring him away;
Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself,
Or any of my brothers of the state,
Cannot but feel this wrong as 't were their own;
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be.

SCENE III.—A council-chamber.
The Duke and Senators sitting at a table; Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition in these news
That gives them credit.

First Sen. Indeed, they are disproportion'd;
My letters say a hundred and seven galleys.
Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.

Sec. Sen. But though they jump not on a just account,—
As in these cases, where the aim reports,
'T is oft with difference—yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.
Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment:
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.

First Off. A messenger from the galleys.

Enter a Sailor.

Duke. Now, what's the business?

Sail. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;
So was I bid report here to the state
By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

First Sen. This cannot be,
By no assay of reason: 't is a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze.

We consider
The Importance of Cyprus to the Turk,
And let ourselves again but understand,
That as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in: if we make thought of
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful
To leave that latest which concerns him first,
Neglecting an attempt of case and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless.

Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.
First Off. Here is more news.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Ottomites, reverence and gracious,
Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes.
Have there injointed them with an after fleet.

First Sen. Ay, so I thought. How many, as you guess?

724

ACT I.

Othello.

SCENE III.
ACT I.

OTHELLO.

SCENE III.

Mess. Of thirty sail: and now they do re-stem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance
Their courses toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your trusty and most valiant servitor.
With his free duty recommends you thus, and Prays you to believe him.
Duke. 'Tis certain, then, for Cyprus.

[Moor.
First Sen. He's now in Florence.

Duke. Write from us to him; post-post-haste dispatch.

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Iago, Roderigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ
Against the general enemy Ottoman.

[To Brabantio] I did not see you; welcome, gentle
signior;
We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.

Br. So did I yours. Good your grace, jardin
Neither my place nor aught I heard of business
Hath raised me from my bed, nor doth the general.
Take hold on me, for my particular grief [care
Is of so flood-gate and overbearing nature
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows
And it is still itself.

Duke. Why, what's the matter?

Br. My daughter! O, my daughter!

Duke and Sen. Dead?

Br. Ay, to me;
She is abused, stol'n from me, and corrupted
By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks;
For nature so preposterosly to err.
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not.

Duke. Who'er he be that in this foul proceeding
Hath thus beguil'd your daughter of herself
And you of her, the bloody look of law
You shall yourself read in the letter better
After your own sense, yea, though our proper son
Stood in your action.

Br. Humbly I thank your grace.
Here is the man, this Moor, whom now, it seems,
Your special mandate for the state-affairs
Hath so deserved.

Duke and Sen. We are very sorry for't.

Duke. [To Othello] What, in your own part, can you say to this?

Br. Nothing, but this is so.

Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,
My very noble and approved good masters,
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true, I have married her:
The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,
And little bless'd with the soft phrase of peace:
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have used
Their dearest action in the tented field,
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause
In speaking for myself. Yet, by your gracious
I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver [patience,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms,
What conjuration and what mighty magic,
For such proceeding I am charged withal,
I won his daughter.

Br. A maiden never bold;
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at herself; and she, in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit, every thing,
To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on!

It is a judgment maim'd and most imperfect
That will confess perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature, and must be driven
To find out such licences of cruelty as
Why this should be. I therefore vouch again
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood,
Or with some dram conjured to this effect,
He wrought upon her.

Duke. To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more wider and more overt test
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming do prefer against him.

First Sen. But, Othello, speak:
Did you by indirect and forced courses
Subdue and poison this young maid's affections?
Or came it by request and such fair question
As soul to soul affordeth?

Oth. I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary,
And let her speak of me before her father:
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office I do hold of you,
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Oth. Ancient, conduct them; you best know the place.

[Exit Iago and Attendants.
And, till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vises of my blood,
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.

Oth. Her father loved me; oft invited me;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year, the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd.
I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he lade me tell it;
Wherein I spake of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field, [breach,
Of hair-breadth escapes! the imminent deadly
Of being taken by the insolent foe
And sold to slavery, of my redemption thence
And portance in my travels' history:
Wherein of antres vast and deserts idle, [heaven,
Rough quarries, rocks and hills whose heads touch
It was my lot to speak; to pile process;
And of the Cannibals that each other eat;
The Anthropophagi and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders. This to hear
Would Desdemona seriously incline:
But still the house-affairs would draw her thence:
Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse: which I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not inventively: I did not.

And often did beguil'd her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore, in faith, 't was strange, 't was passing
I was pitiful, 't was wondrous pitiful: [strange,
She wish'd she had not heard it, yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man: she thank'd me,
And bade me, if I had a friend that loved her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake:
She loved me for the dangers I had pass'd,
And I loved her that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have used:
Here comes the lady; let her witness it.
Enter Desdemona, Iago, and Attendants.

Duke. I think this tale would win my daughter Good Brabantio, too.
Take up this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use
Than their bare hands.

Bra. If she confess she was half the worse,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man! Come hither, gentle mistress:
Do you perceive in all this noble company
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty:
To you I am bound for life and education;
My life and education both do learn me
How to respect you; you are the lord of duty;
I am hither to your daughter: but here's my hus-
And so much duty as my mother shew'd [hand,
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor my lord.

Bra. God be wi' you! I have done. Please it your grace, on to the state-affairs:
I had rather to adopt a child than get it.
Come hither, Iago; I here do give thee that with all my heart
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee. For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang eels on them. I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself, and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.
When remedies are past, the griefs are ended
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.
To mourn a mischief that is past and gone
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.
What cannot be preserved when fortune takes Patience her injury a mockery makes. [thief;
The robb'd that smiles steals something from the He robs himself that spends a boodless grief.

Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus be begiulle;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
He bears the sentence well that nothing bears
But the free comfort which from thence he hears,
But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow
That, to pay grief, must of poor patience borrow.
These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal:
But words are words; I never yet did hear
That the bruised heart was pierced through the ear.
I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of state.

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes war to Cyprus. Othello, the fortitude of the place is best known to you; and though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you: you must therefore be content to shudder the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and bolisterous expedition.

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators, Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down: I do agnize
A natural and prompt alacrity
I find in hardness, and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore hastening to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife
Due reference of place and exhibition,
With such accommodation and resort
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. Be't at her father's.

If you please,

Duke. I'll not have it so.

Oth. Nor I.

Bra. To put my father in impatient thoughts
By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfolding yond your prosperous ear;
And let me find a charter in your voice,
To assist my simplicity.

Duke. What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence and storm of fortunes
May trumpet to the world: my heart's subdued,
Even to the very quality of my lord:
I saw Othello's visage in his mind,
And to his honours and his valiant parts
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace; and he go to the war,
The rites for which I love him are bereft me,
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence. Let me go with him.

Oth. Let her have your voices.
Vouch with me, heaven, I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite,
Nor to comply with heat—the young affects
In me defunct—and proper satisfaction
But to be more and more my mind's delight:
And heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant
For she is with me: no, when light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid seel with wanton dulness
My speculative and officed instruments,
That his disports corrupt and train my business,
Let housewives make a skillett of my helm,
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation!

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay or going: the affair cries haste,
And speed must answer it.

First Sen. You must away to-night.

Oth. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i' the morning here we'll meet
Othello, leave some officer behind, [again.
And he shall our commission bring to you;
With such things else of quality and respect
As death import you.

Oth. So please your grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty and trust;
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.

Good night to every one. [To Brab. And, noble
If virtue no delighted beauty lack, [signior,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black. [well.

First Sen. Adieu, brave Moor; use Desdemona.

Bra. Look to her, Moor, if thou hast eyes to see:
She has delivered her father, and may thee. [Exeunt Duke, Senators, Officers, &c.

Oth. My life upon her faith! Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee;
I prithee, let thy wife attend on her;
And bring them after in the best advantage.
Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour
Of love, of worldly matters and direction,
To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.

Rod. Iago.—

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, thinkest thou?

Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep.

Rod. I will incontinent drown myself.

Iago. If thou dost, I shall never love thee after.

Rod. Why, thou silly gentleman!

Iago. It is silliness to live when to live is torment; and then have we a prescription to die when death is our physician.
ACT II.

OTHELLO.

SCENE I.—A Sea-port in Cyprus. An open place near the quay.

Enter Montano and two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?
First Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought cloud. I cannot, 'twixt the heaven and the main, [flood; Descends sail.

Mon. Methinks the wind hath spoke aloud at land:
A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath ruffled so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? What shall we hear of this?

See. Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet:
For do we double and upon the foaming shore,
The children billow seems to pelt the clouds:
The wind-shaken surge, with high and monstrous mane,
Seems to cast water on the burning ear,
And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole:
I never did like molestation view
On the enchanted flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet supersible Venetian be not too hard for my wits and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is clean out of the way: seek thou rather to be hanged in compassing thy joy than to be drowned and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me:—go, make money:—I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor:—my cause is hearted; thinke	hath no less reason. Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him; if thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time which will be delivered. Traverse! go, provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i'the morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

Rod. What say you?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear?

Rod. I am changed: I'll go sell all my land.

[Exit.

Iago. Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I would time expend with such a sprite,
But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets
He has done my office: I know not if't be true;
But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do as if for surety. He holds me well;
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper man: let me see now:
To get his place and to plume up my will.
In double knavery—How, how?—Let's see:—
After some time, to abuse Othello's ear
That he is too familiar with his wife.
He hath a person and a smooth dispose
To be suspected, framed to make women false.
The Moor is of a free and open nature,
That thinks men honest that but seem to be so,
And will as tenderly be led by the nose
As asses are.
I have't. It is engender'd. Hell and night
Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.

[Exit.
Like a full soldier. Let 's to the seaside, ho! As well to see the vessel that 's come in As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello, Even till we make the main and the aerial blue. An indistinct regard.

Third Gent. Come, let 's do so; For every minute is expectancy Of more arravance.

Enter Cassio.

Cas. Thanks, you the valiant of this warlike isle, That so approve the Moor! O, let the heavens Give him defence against the elements, For I have lost him on a dangerous sea.

Mon. Is he well shipp'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot Of very expert and approved allowance; Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death, Stand in bold cure.

[Enter a fourth Gentleman.

Cas. What noise?

Fourth Gent. The town is empty; on the brow o' the sea Stand ranks of people, and they cry 'A sail, a sail!'

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor. [Guns heard.

Sec. Gent. They do discharge their shot of cour Our friends at least. [Exit.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth, And give us truth who 'tis that is arrived.

Sec. Gent. I shall. [Exit.

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wived?

Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achieved a maid That paragon description and wild fame: One that excels the quirks of blazing pens, And in the essential vesture of creation Does tire the ingener.

Re-enter second Gentleman.

How now! who has put in?

Sec. Gent. 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

Cas. Has had most favourable and happy speed: Tempests themselves, high seas and howling winds, The gutter'd rocks and congregated sands,— Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,— As having sense of beauty, do omit Their mortal natures, letting go safely By the divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain's cap Left in the conduct of the bold Iago, [tai, Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts A se'might's speed. Great Jove, Othello guard, And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath, That he may bless this bay with his tall ship, Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms, Give renew'd fire to our extincted spirits, And bring all Cyprus comfort!

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, Iago, Roderigo, and Attendants.

O, behold, The riches of the ship is come on shore! Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees.

Hall to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven, Before, behind thee and on every hand, Ewheels thee round!

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio. What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Cas. He is not yet arrived: nor know I aught But that he 's well and will be shortly here.

Des. O, but I fear—How lost you company?

Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies Parted our fellowship — But, hark! a sail.

[Within. 'A sail, a sail!' Guns heard.
Cas. He speaks home, madam; you may relish him more in the soldier than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside] He takes her by the palm: ay, well said, whisper, why as I say a web as this will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do; I will gyve thee in thine own curtsie. You say true; 'tis so, indeed: if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenancy, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are not so fast to play the sir in. Very good; well kiss'd! an excellent courtesy! 'tis so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? would they be clyster-pipes for your sake! [Trumpet within.] The Moor! I know his trumpet.

Cas. 'Tis truly so.

Des. Let's meet him and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter Othello and Attendants.

Oth. O my fair warrior! My dear Othello!

Des. Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content To see you here before me. O my soul's joy! If after every tempest come such calms, May the winds blow till they have wak'n'd death! And let the labours bark climb hills of seas Olympus-high and duck again as low As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die, 'Twas would to be most happy: for, I fear, My soul hath her content so absolute That not another comfort like this Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid But that our loves and comforts should increase, Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers! I cannot speak enough of this content; It stops me here; it is too much of joy; And this, and this, the greatest discords be

That e'er our hearts shall make.

Iago. [Aside] O, you are well tuned now! But I'll set down the pegs that make this music, As honest as I am.

Oth. Come, let us to the castle. News, friends; our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd. How now, my old acquaintance of this isle? Honey, you shall be well desired in Cyprus; I have found great love amongst them. O my prattle out of fashion, and I dote [sweet, In mine own comforts. I prithee, good Iago, Go to the bay and disembro my coffers: Bring thon the master to the citadel; He is a good one, and his worthiness Does challenge much respect. Come, Desdemona, Once more, well met at Cyprus.

Iago. [Exeunt Othello, Desdemona, and Attendants.]

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour. Come hither. If thou be'st valiant,—as, they say, base and mean in love have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,—list me. The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard: first, I must tell thee this—Desdemona is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him! why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus, and let thy soul be instro'd. Mark what I say with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging and telling her fantastical lies: and will she love him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dry with the act of sport, there should be, again to inflame it and to give satiety a fresh appetite, love-liness in favour, sympathy in years, manners and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in; now, for want of these required conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to leave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor; for nature will interdict her in it and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted, — as it is a most pregnant and unforced position,— who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cassio does? a knife very voluble; no further conceivable than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? why, none; why, none: a slipper and subtle knife, a finder of occasions, that has an eye can stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself; a devilish knife. Besides, the knife is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him that folly and green minds look after: a pestilent complete knave; and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she's full of most blessed condition.

Iago. Blessed fig's-end! the wine she drinks is made of grapes. If she had been blessed, she would never have loved the Moor! Blessed pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? didst not mark that?

Rod. Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy.

Iago. Lechery, by this hand; an index and obscure presage to the history of lustful thoughts. They met so near with their lips that their breaths embraced together. Villainous thoughts, Roderigo! when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion, Pish! But, sir, be you ruled by me: I have brought you from Venice. Watch you tonight; for the command, I'll lay upon you. Cassio knows you not. I'll not be far from you: do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash and very sudden in choler, and haply may strike at you; provoke him, that he may; for even out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose qualification shall come into no true taste again but by the displasing of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires by threescore I'll tell then how to revenge yourself on Cassio, knows you not. I'll not be far from you: do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel: I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit.]

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it; That she loves him, 'tis apt and of great credit:

The Moor, howbeit that I endure him not, Is of a constant, loving, noble nature,

And I dare think he'll never love her to Desdemona A most dear husband. Now, I do love her too;

Not out of absolute lust, though peradventure I stand accountant for as great a sin, But partly led to diet my revenge,

For that I do suspect the lusty Moor Math! it's enough to my will to think whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards; And nothing can or shall content my soul Till I am even'd with him, wife for wife, Or falling so, yet that I put the Moor At least into a jealousy so strong That grief cannot alone, as which thing to do, If this poor madman of Venice, whom I rash For his quick hunting, stand the putting on, I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip,
ACT II.

OTHELLO.

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter a Herald with a proclamation; People following.

Herald. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the more perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make sport. Indeed, she's a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. Come, love, a night-cap; and let's to bed. I think the love of his Desdemona; who let us not therefore blame: he hath not yet made wanton the night with her; and she is sport for Jove.

Cas. She's a most excellent lady.

Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she's a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; yet methinks right.

Iago. And when she speaks, is it not an alarum?

Cas. She is indeed perfection.

[To Desdemona] Come, lieutenant; you have a stomp of wine; and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants that would fain have a measure to the health of black Othello.

Iago. Not to-night, good Iago: I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking; I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O, they are our friends; but one cup; I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too, and, behoid, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 'tis a night of revels; the gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I'll do 't; but it dislikes me.

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him, with that which he hath drunk to-night already, he'll be as full of quarrel and offences as my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool Roderigo,

Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,

To Desdemona hath to-night caroused.

And will be to-morrow'd with dealing cups,

And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards,

Am I to put Cassio in some action

That may offend the isle.—But here they come:

[Re-enter Cassio; with him Montano and Gentlemen; Servants following with wine. ]

Cas. Fore God, they have given me a rouse already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho!

[Speeches: And let me the canakin clink, clink; And let me the canakin clink: A soldier's a man; A life's but a span; Why, then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys! ]

Cas. Fore God, an excellent song.

Iago. I learned it in England, where, indeed, they are most potent in potting: your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English.

Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drink—

Iago. Why, he drinks you, with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives you your Hollander a vomit, ere the next pottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general!

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice.

Iago. O sweet England!

King Stephen was a worthy peer,

If it reaches cost him but a crown;

He held them sixpence all too dear,

With that he call'd the tailor low.

He was a wight of high renown,

And thou art but of low degree:

'Tis pride that pulls the country down,

Then take thine old cloak about thee.

Some wine, ho!

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear 't again?

Cas. No: for I hold him to be unworthy of his place that does those things. Well, God's above all; and there be souls must be saved, and there be sins must not be saved.

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, nor any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me; the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs.—Forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk: this is my ancient; this is my right hand, and this is my left: I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough.

All. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well then; you must not think then that I am drunk.

[Exit. ]

Mon. To the platform, masters; come, let's set the watch.

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.—Act II., Scene iii.
ACT II.

OTHELLO.

SCENE III.

Iago. You see this fellow that is gone before;
He is a soldier fit to stand by Cesar
And give direction: and do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtue a just equipoix.
The one as long as the other: 'tis pity of him.
I fear the trust Othello puts him in,
On some old time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep:
He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle.

Mon. It were well

The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils: is not this true?

Enter Roderigo.

Iago. [Aside to him] How now, Roderigo!
I pray you, after the lieutenant; go. [Exit Roderigo.]

Mon. And 'tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingrafted infirmity:
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But, hark! what noise?
[Cry within. 'Help! Help! Help!]

Re-enter Cassio, driving in Roderigo.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. 'Tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingrafted infirmity:
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But, hark! what noise?
[Cry within. 'Help! Help! Help!]

Re-enter Cassio, driving in Roderigo.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. 'Tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingrafted infirmity:
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But, hark! what noise?
[Cry within. 'Help! Help! Help!]

Re-enter Roderigo.

Iago. [Aside to him] How now, Roderigo!
I pray you, after the lieutenant; go. [Exit Roderigo.]

Mon. And 'tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingrafted infirmity:
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But, hark! what noise?
[Cry within. 'Help! Help! Help!]

Re-enter Othello and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?
Mon. 'Zounds, I bleed still; I am hurt to the death.

[Paints.

Oth. Hold, for your lives!

Iago. Hold, ho! Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—
Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?
Hold! the general speaks to you; hold, hold, for shame!

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence ariseth
We are turn'd Turks, and to ourselves do that
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?
For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl:
He that stirs next to carve for his own rage
Holds his soul light: he dies upon his motion.
Silence that dreadful bell: it frights the isle
From her prosperity. What is the matter, masters?
Honest Iago, that look'st dead with grieving,
Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge thee.

Iago. I do not know; friends all but now, even
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom [now,

Devosting them for bed; and then, but now —
As if some planet had unwrapt men—
Swords out, and tilting one another's breast,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds;
And would in action glorious I had lost
Those legs that brought me to a part of it!

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?
Cas. I pray you, pardon me; I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont be civil;
The gravity and stillness of your youth
The world hath noted, and your name is great
In mouths of wisest censure: what's the matter,
That you unlace your reputation thus
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-drawer? give me an answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger:
Your officer, Iago, can inform you. — [Me, —
While I spare speech, which something now offends
Of all that I do know: nor know I aught
By me that's said or done amiss this night;
Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin.

When violence assails us.

Oth. Now, by heaven,
My blood begins my safer guides to rule;
And passion, having my best judgment collied,
Assays to lead the way: if I once stir,
Or do but lift the ban, let this his noise
Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on;
And he that is approved in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,
Shall lose me. What! in a town of war,
Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,
To manage private and domestic quarrel,
In night, and on the court and guard of safety!
'Tis monstrous. Iago, who began't?

Mon. If partially affined, or leagued in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near:
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth
Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;
Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. Thus it is, general
Montano and myself being in speech,
There came a fellow cry Mutiny. [Exit Roderigo.]
And Cassio following him with determined sword,
To execute upon him. Sir, this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause:
Myself the crying fellow did pursue,
Lest by his clamour — as it so fell out —
The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot,
Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath; which till to-night
I ne'er might say before. When I came back —
For this was brief — I found them close together,
At blow and thrust; even as again they were
When you yourself did part other help;
More of this matter cannot I report:
But men are men; the best sometimes forget:
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,
Yet surely Cassio, I believe, received
From him that tied some strong indignity,
Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know, Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.

Re-enter Desdemona, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not raised up!
'I'll make thee an example.

Des. What's the matter?
Oth. All's well now, sweeting: come away to bed. Sir, for your hurts, myself will be your surgeon.
Lead him off. [To Montano, who is led off.]
Iago, look with care about the town.
And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.
Come, Desdemona: 'tis the soldiers' life.
To have their bulleting slumbered waked with strife. [Exit.

ACT II.

Scene III.

Cas. You advise me well.
Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love and honest kindness.
Cas. I think it freely; and betimes in the morning
I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desperate of my fortunes if they check me here. [Exit.

Iago. You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I must to the watch.

Cas. Good night, honest Iago. [Exit.

Iago. And what's he then that says I play the
When this advice is free I give and honest, [villain?]
Prob't to thinking and indeed the course
To win the Moor again? 'Tis most easy
The inclining Desdemona to subdue.
In any honest suit: she's framed as fruitful
As the free elements. And then for her
To win the Moor—were 't to renounce his baptism,
All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,
His soul is so enfeebled. 'Tis she
That she may make, unmake, do what she list,
Even as her appetite shall play the god
With his weak function. How am I then a villain
To counsel Cassio to this parallel course,
Directly to his good? Divinity of hell!
When devils will the blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,
As I do now: for whiles this honest fool
Plies Desdemona to repair his fortunes
And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor,
I'll pour this pestilence into his ear,
That she repeals him for her body's lust;
And by how much she strives to do him good,
She shall undo her credit with the Moor.
So will I turn her virtue into pitch,
And out of her own goodness make the net
That shall enmesh them all.

Re-enter Roderigo.

How now, Roderigo!

Rod. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry.
My money is almost spent; I have been to-night exceedingly well eulogized; and I think the issue will be. I shall have so much experience for my pains, and so, with no money at all and a little more wit, return again to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they that have not patience! What wound did ever heal but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft.

And wit depends on dilatory time.

Does 't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou, by that small hurt, hast cashier'd Cassio:
Though other things grow fair against the sun,
Yet fruits that blossom first will first be ripe:
Content thyself awhile. By the mass, 'tis morning; Pleasure and action make the hours seem short.
Retire thee; go where thou art billeted.
Away, I say; thou shalt know more hereafter.
Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Roderigo.] Two things are to be done:
My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress; I'll set her on it,
Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump when he may Cassio find
Soliciting his wife: ay, that's the way:
Dull not device by coldness and delay.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before the castle.

Enter Cassio and some Musicians.

Cas. Masters, play here; I will content your pains;
Something that's brief; and bid 'Good morrow, general.' [Music: Enter Clown.

Clo. Why, masters, have your instruments been in Naples, that they speak 't' the nose thus?
First Mus. How, sir, how!
Clo. Are these, I pray you, wind-instruments?
First Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.
Clo. O, thereby hangs a tail.
First Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir?
Clo. Marry, sir, by many a wind-instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you: and the general so likes your music, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.
First Mus. Well, sir, we will not.
Clo. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again: but, as they say, to hear music the general does not greatly care.
First Mus. We have none such, sir.
Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away: go; vanish into air; away! [Exeunt Musicians.

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend? I hear you.

Clo. Prithee, keep up thy quillets. There's a poor piece of gold for thee: if the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech: wilt thou do this?
Clo. She is stirring, sir: if she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her.
Cas. Do, good my friend. [Exit Clown.

Enter Iago.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed, then?
Cas. Why, no; the day had broke
Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife: my suit to her
Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona Procure me some access.
Iago. I'll send her to you presently;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free.
Cas. I humbly thank you for 't. [Exit Iago.] I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant: I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
The general and his wife are talking of it;
And she speaks for you stoutly: the Moor replies,
That he you hurt is of great fame in Cyprus
And great affinity and that in wholesome wisdom
He might not but refuse you, but he protests he loves you
And needs no other suitor but his likings
To take the safest occasion by the front
To bring you in again.
Cas. Yet, I beseech you,
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.
Emil. Pray you, come in:
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom freely.
Cas. I am much bound to you. [Exit.]
ACT III.

OTHELLO.

That he hath left part of his grief with me,
To suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other time.

Des. But shall 't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall 't be to-night at supper?

Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner, then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home;
I mean the captains at the citadell. [Exit.]

Des. Why, then, to-morrow night; or Tuesday
On Tuesday noon, or night; on Wednesday morn;
I prithee, name the time, but let it not Exceed three days: in faith, he's penitent;
And yet his treasys, in our common reason—
Save that, they say, the wars must make examples
Out of their best— is not almost a fault
To incur a private check. When shall he come?
Tell me, Othello: I wonder in my soul,
What you would ask me, that I should deny,
Or stand so manning on. What! Michael Cassio,
That came a wooing with you, and so many a time,
When I have took of you disparagingly,
Hath ta'en your part; to have so much to do
To bring him in! Trust me, I could do much,—

Oth. Prithee, no more: let him come when he will;
I will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a boon;
'Tis but I should entreat you wear your gloves,
Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm,
Or sue to you to do a peculiar profit
To your own person: nay, when I have a suit
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of noise and difficult weight
And fearful to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing:
Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.

Des. Shall I deny you? no: farewell, my lord.

Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona: I'll come to thee
straight.

Des. Emilia, come. Be as your fancies teach you;
What'er you be, I am obedient.

[Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.

Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Charles is come again.

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady,
Know of your love?

Oth. He did, from first to last: why dost thou ask?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;
No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?

Iago. I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

Oth. O, yes; and went between us very oft.

Iago. Indeed! [in that?]

Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed: discern'st thou aught
Is he not honest?

Iago. Honest, my lord!

Oth. Honest! ay, honest.

Iago. My lord, for aught I know.

Oth. What dost thou think?

Iago. Think, my lord!

Oth. Think, my lord!

By heaven, he echoes me,
As if there were some monster in his thought Too hideous to be shown. Thou dost mean something:
I heard thee say even now, thou liestest not that,
When Cassio left my wife: what didst thou like not?
And when I told thee he was of my counsel
In my whole course of wooing, thou cried'st 'Indeed!' And didst contract and pursy thy brow together,
As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain

Some horrible conceit: if thou dost love me,
Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost; and, for I know thou'rt full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou givest them
breath,
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more:
For such things in a false disloyal knave
Are tricks of custom, but in a man that's just
They are close delusions, working from the heart
That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,
I dare be sworn I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem:
Or those that be not, would they might seem none!

Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Iago. Why, then, I think Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this:
I prithee, speak to me as to thy thinnings,
As thou dost ruminate, and give thy worst of
The worst of words.

[thoughts

Iago. Good my lord, pardon me:
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to. [false;
Utter my thoughts? Why, say they are vile and
As where's that palace whereinto foul things
Sometimes intrude not? who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleane apprehensions
Keep leets and law-days and in session sit
With meditations lawful?

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago,
If thou but think'st him wrong'd and mak'st his ear
A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you—
Though I perchance am vicious in my guess,
As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses, and oft my jealousy
Shakes faults that are not—that your wisdom yet,
From one that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice, nor build yourself a trouble
Out of his scattering and unsure observance.
It were not for your quiet nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. Why dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name in man and woman, dear my
Is the immediate jewel of their souls: [lord,
Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something,
nothing;
'T was mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thou-
But he that flees from me my good name [sands;
Robes me of that which not enriches him
And makes me poor indeed.

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thoughts.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand;
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

Oth. Ha! O, beware, my lord, of jealousy:
It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock
The meat it feeds on: that cuckold lives in bliss
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger;
But, O, what damned minutes tells he o'er
Who dotes, yet doubts, suspects, yet strongly loves!

Oth. O misery!

Iago. Poor and content is rich and rich enough,
But riches senseless is as poor as winter
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.
Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

Oth. Why, why is this?
Think'st thou then I 'll make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions? No; to be once in doubt
Is once to be resolved: exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufflicate and blown surmises. [offs
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me jealous.
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays and dances well;
Where virtue is, these are more virtuous:
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear or doubt of her revolt;
For she, and eyes, and thee. No, Iago.
I'll see before I doubt: when I doubt, prove;
And on the proof, there is no more but this,—
Away at once with love or jealousy!

Iago. I am glad of it; for now I shall have reason
To show the love and duty that I bear you.
With franker spirit: with that I am bound,
Receive it from me. I speak not yet of proof.
Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio;
Wear your eye thus, not jealous nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abused; look to 't:
I know our country disposition well;
In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks
They dare not show their husbands; their best conscience
Is not to leave 't undone, but keep 't unknown.

Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did receive her father, marrying you;
And when she seemed to shake and fear your looks,
She loved them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to then;
She that, so young, could give out such a seeming,
To see her father's eyes up close as oak—
He thought 't was witchcraft—but I am much to Humbly do beseech you of your pardon [blame;
For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.
Iago. I see this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. I'll faith, I fear it has,
I hope you will consider what is spoke
Comes from my love. But I do see you're moved:
I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues nor to larger reach
Than to suspicion.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success
As my thoughts aim not at.
Casio's my worthy
My lord, I see you're moved. [friend

Oth. No, not much moved:
I do not think but Desdemona's honest. [think so!

Iago. Long live she so! and long live you to Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,— Iago. Ay, there's the point: as—to be bold with
Not to affect many proposed matches [you—
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,
Whereeto we see in all things nature tends—
Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank,
Foul disparory, thought unmaternal.
But pardon me; I do not in position
Distinctly speak of her; though I may fear
Her will, recoiling to her better judgment,
May fall to match you with her country forms
And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell;
If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;
Set on thy wife to observe: leave me, Iago.

Iago. [Going] My lord, I take my leave. [doubtless
Oth. Why did I marry? This honest creature
Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

Iago. [Returning] My lord, I would I might en-
To scan this thing no further; leave it to time:
Though it be fit that Cassio have his place,
For, sure, he fills it up with great ability,
Yet, if you please to hold him off awhile,
You shall by that perceive him and his means:

Note, if your lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vehement importunity;
Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
Let me be thought too busy in my fears—
As worthy cause I have to fear I am—
And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government.

Iago. I only mean to take my leave.

[Exit.

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,
Of human dealings. If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
I'd whistler her off and let her down the wind,
To pray at Fortune. Happily, for I am black
And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have, or for I am declined
Into the vale of years,—yet that's not much—
She's gone. I am abused; and my relief
Must be to beather. O curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others' uses. Yet, 't is the plague of great ones;
Prerogatiu'd are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death;
And the boon then this forked plague is fated to us
When we do quicken. Desdemona comes:

Re-enter Desdemona and Emilia.

If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!
I' ll not believe 't.

Des. How now, my dear Othello!
Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why do you speak so faintly?

Are you not well?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. 'Faith, that's with watching; 't will away
Let me but bind it hard, within this hour [again:
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin is too little:
[He puts the handkerchief from him; and it drops.
Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin:
This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steal it; but she so loves the token,
For he conjured her she should ever keep it,
That she reserves it evermore about her
To kiss and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,
And give 't Iago: what he will do with it
Heaven knows, not I;
I nothing but to please his fantasy.

Re-enter Iago.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

Iago. A thing for me? it is a common thing—

Emil. Ha!

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. What handkerchief!

Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stolen it from her?

Emil. No, 'faith; she let it drop by negligence,
And, to the advantage, I, being here, took 't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.

Emil. What will you do with 't, that you have been
To have me fetch it?
Iago. [Snatching it] Why, what's that to you?

Oth. If it be not for some purpose of import,

Give't me again: poor lady, she'll run mad

When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not acknowledg on't; I have use for it.

Go, leave me.

[Exit Emilia.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And lend it ind. Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ: this may do something.

The Moor already changes with my poison:
Dangers concur in, in their natures, poisons,
Which at the first are scarce found to distaste,
But when the little act upon the blood
Burn like the mines of sulphur. I did say so:
Look, where he comes!

Re-enter Othello.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nore all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicize thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owedst yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me?

Iago. Why, how now, general! no more of that.

Oth. Avault! be gone! thou hast set me on the

I swear 'tis better to be much abused [track:
Than but to know 't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord!

Oth. What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust?

I saw 't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:

I slept the next night well, was free and merry;

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:

He that is robust, not wanting what is stol'n,

Let him not know 't, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioners and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known. O, now, for ever

Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!

Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,

That make ambition virtue! O, farewell!

Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner, and all quality!

Pride, pomp and circumstance of glorious war!
And, O you mortal engines, whose rude throats
The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfoil,

Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

Iago. Is 't possible, my lord?

Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore,
Be sure of it; give me the one proof;

Or, by the worth of man's eternal soul,
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog

Than answer my waked wrath!

Iago. Is 't come to this?

Oth. Make me to see 't; or, at the least, so prove

That the probation knaves so hing nor loop [it,
To hang a doubt on; or woe upon thy life!

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. If thou dost slander her and torture me,
Never more pray; abandon all remorse;
On horror's head horrors accumulate;
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amazed;
For nothing canst thou to damnation add
Greater than that.

Iago. O grace! O heaven forgive me!

Are you a man? have you a soul or sense?
God be wi'you; take mine office. O wretched fool,
That livest to make thine honesty a vice!

O moan! Lord, take note; O world,
To be direct and honest is not safe.
I thank you for this profit; and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay, stay; thou shouldst be honest.

Iago. I should be wise, for honesty's a fool
And leses that it works for.

Oth. By the world,

I think my wife be honest and think she is not;
I think that thou are just and think thou art not.
I'll have some proof. Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrimed and black
As mine own face. If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not alit; Would I were satisfied!

Iago. I saw, sir, you are eaten up with passion—
I do repent that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would! nay, I will. [lord?

Iago. And may: but, how? how satisfied, my

Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on—

Behold her topos?

Oth. Death and damnation! O!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect: damn them then,
If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster

More than their own! What then? how then?

What shall I say? Where's satisfaction?
It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys,
As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say,

If imputation and strong circumstances,
Which lead the directly to the door of truth.
Will give you satisfaction, you may have 't.

Oth. Give me a living reason she's disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office:

But, sith I am enter'd in this cause so far,
Prick'd to 't by foolish honesty and love,
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately;
And, being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutter their affairs:

One of this kind is Cassio:
In sleep I heard him say 'Sweet Desdemona,
Let me be weary, let us live our loves; '

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand,

Cry 'O sweet creature!' and then kiss me hard,

As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots

That grew upon my lips: then laid his leg

Over my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd; and then

Cried 'Cursed fate that gave thee to the Moor!'

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion:
'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs

That do demonstrate this fact.

Oth. I'll bear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing done;
She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,

Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief
Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one; 't was my first gift.

Iago. I know not that: but such a handkerchief—

I am sure it was your wife's—did I to-day

See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,—

Iago. If it be that, or any that was hers,
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives!
One is too poor, too weak for my revenge.

Now do I see 'tis true. Look here, Iago;
All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven.

'Tis gone.

Arise, black vengeance from thy hollow cell!

Hold up, O love, thy crown and hearted throne
To tyrannous hate! Swell, bosom, with thy fraught,

For 'tis of asp's tongues!

Iago. Yet be content.

Oth. O, blood, blood, blood!

Iago. Patience, I say; your mind perhaps may

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic sea,
Whose icy current and compulsive course
ACT III.

OTHELLO.

SCENE IV.

Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontic and the Hellespont,
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,
Shall nor look back, ne'er ebb to humble love,
Till that a capable and wide revenge
Swallow them up. Now, by yond marble heaven,
[Kneels] In the due reverence of a sacred vow
I here engage my words.

Iago.
[Do not rise yet.

[Kneels] Witness, you ever-burning lights above,
You elements that clip us round about,
Witness that here Iago doth give up
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's service! Let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse,
What bloody business ever.

Oth. I greet thy love,
Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance bound,
And will upon the instant put thee to 't: [toes,
Within these three days let me hear thee say
That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead; 't is done at your request:
But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lewd minx! O, damn her!
Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw,
To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the fair devil.

Now art thou my lieutenant.
Iago. I am your own for ever. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Before the castle.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lies?
Clo. I dare not say he lies any where.

Des. Why, man?

Clo. He's a soldier, and for one to say a soldier lies, is stabbing.

Des. Go to: where lodges he?

Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Clo. I know not where he lodges, and for me to devise a lodging and say he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified by report?

Clo. I will catechize the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither: tell him I have moved my lord on his behalf, and hope all will be well.

Clo. To do this is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exeunt.

Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief,
Emil. I know not, madam. [Emilia?
Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of crusades: and, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill thinking.

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who, he? I think the sun where he was Drew all such hymns from him. [born
Emil. Look, where he comes.

Des. I will not leave him now till Cassio
Be call'd to him. Enter Othello.

How is 't with you, my lord?

Oth. Well, my good lady. [Aside] O, hardness to dissemble!—

How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good lord.

Oth. Give me your hand: this hand is moist, my lady.

Des. It yet hath felt no age nor known no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulness and liberal heart:

Hot, hot, and moist: this hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer,
Much castigation, exercise devout;
For here's a young and sweating devil here,
That commonly rebels. 'T is a good hand,
A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;
For 't was that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A liberal hand; the hearts of old gave
But our new heraldry in hands, not hearts. [hands;

Des. I cannot speak of this. Come now, your
Oth. What promise, chuck? [promise
Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you.

Oth. I have a salt and sorry rheum offends me;
Lend me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No, indeed, my lord.

That is a fault.

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer, and could almost read [kept it,
The thoughts of people: she told her, while she
Would make her amiable and subdue my father
Entirely to her love, but if she lost it
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathed and his spirits should hunt
After new fancies: she, dying, gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wife,
To give it her. I did so: and take heed on 't;
Make it a darling like your precious eye;
To lose 't or give 't away were such perdition
As nothing else could match.

Des. Is 't possible?

Oth. 'T is true: there's magic in the web of it:
A sibyl, that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;
The worms were hollow'd that did breed the silk;
And it was dyed in mummy which the skillful
Conserved of maidens' hearts.

Des. Indeed! is 't true?

Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to 't well.

Des. Then would to God that I had never seen 't!

Oth. Hia! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startingly and rash?

Oth. Is 't lost? is 't gone? speak, is it out o' the Des. Heaven bless us! [way

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; but what an if it were?

Oth. How?

Des. I say, it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch 't, let me see 't.

Des. Why, so I can, sir, but I will not now.

This is a trick to put me from my suit:
Pray you, let Cassio be received again.

Oth. Fetch me the handkerchief: my mind mis-gives. [gives.

Des. Come, come:
You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief!

Des. I pray, talk me of Cassio.

Oth. The handkerchief!

Des. A man that all his time
Hath founded his good fortunes on your love,
Shared dangers with you,—

Oth. The handkerchief!

Des. In sooth, you are to blame.

Oth. Away! [Exeunt.

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. I ne'er saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief:
I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'T is not a year or two shows us a man:
They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

737
They eat us hungrily, and when they are full, They belch us. Look you, Cassio and my husband!

Enter Cassio and Iago.

Iago. There is no other way; 'tis she must do 't:
And, lo, the happiness! go, and importune her.
Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news with you?
Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech you
That by your virtuous means I may again
Exist, and be a member of his love
Whom I with all the office of my heart
Entirely honour: I would not be delay'd.
If my offence be of such mortal kind
That nor my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purposed merit in futurity,
Can ransom me into his love again,
But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a forced content,
And shut myself up in some other course,
To fortune's alms.
Des. Alas, thrice-gentle Cassio!
My advocacy is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour as in humour alter'd.
So help me every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best
And stood within the blank of his displeasure
For my free speech! you must awhile be patient:
What I can do I will; and more I will
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.
Iago. Is my lord angry?
Exit. Iago. He went hence but now,
And certainly in strange unquietness.
Cas. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,
When it hath blown his ranks into the air,
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Puff'd his own brother:—and can he be angry?
Something of moment then: I will go meet him:
There's matter in 't indeed, if he be angry.
Des. I prithee, do so. [Exit Iago.
Somethingsure,of state,
Either from Venice, or some unhatch'd practice
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him,
Hath paddled his clear spirit; and in such cases
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even so;
For let our finger ache, and it indues
Our other healthful members even to that sense
Of pain: nay, we must think men are not gods,
Nor of them look for such observances
As if the bridal. Blessure me much, Emilia,
I was, unhandsome warrior as I am,
Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
But now I find I had suborn'd the witness,
And he's indicted falsely.
Emil. Pray heaven it be state-matters, as you think,
And no conception nor jealous toy
Concerning you.
Des. Alas the day! I never gave him cause.
Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;
They are not ever jealous for the cause,
But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster
Bezot upon itself, born on itself.
Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's
Emil. Lady, amen. [Exit.
Des. I will go see him. Cassio, walk hereabout:
If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit
And seek to effect it to my uttermost.
Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.
[Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.
Enter Bianca.
Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!
Cas. What make you from home?
Bian. And I was going to your lodging, Cassio,
What, keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eight score eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eight score times?
O weary reckoning!
Cas. Pardon me, Bianca:
I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;
But I shall, in a more continuate time,
Striko off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca, [Giving her Desdemona's handkerchief.
Take me this work out.
Bian. O Cassio, whence came this?
This is some token from a newer friend:
To the felt absence now I feel a cause:
Is't come to this? Well, well.
Cas. Go to, woman!
Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealous now
That this is from some mistress, some remembrance:
No, in good truth, Bianca.
Bian. Why, whose is it?
Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my cham-
I like the work well: ere it be demanded — [ber.
As like enough it will — I 'll have it copied;
Take it, and do 't; and leave me for this time.
Bian. Leave you! wherewith?
Cas. I do attend here on the general;
And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd.
Bian. Why, I pray you?
Cas. Not that I love you not.
Bian. But that you do not love me.
I pray you, bring me on the way a little,
And say if I shall see you soon at night.
Cas. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you;
For I attend here: but I 'll see you soon.
Bian. 'Tis very good; I must be circumstanced.
[Exeunt.}

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Cyprus. Before the castle.

Enter Othello and Iago.

Iago. Will you think so?
Oth. Think so, Iago!
Iago. What, To kiss in private?
Oth. An unauthorized kiss.
Iago. Or to be naked with her friend in bed
An hour or more, not meaning any harm?
Oth. Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean harm!
It is hypocrisy against the devil:
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so, [heaven.
The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt

738
What, if I had said I had seen him do you wrong?
Or heard him say,—as knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary doteage of some mistress,
Convinced or suppli'd, cannot choose
But they must blab—
Oth. Hath he said any thing? Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well assured,
No more than he'll unswear.
Oth. What hath he said? Iago. 'Faith, that he did—I know not what he Iago. Lie—
Iago. With her?
Oth. Lie with her, on her; what you will.
Oth. Lie with her! lie on her! We say lie on her,
When they belie her. Lie with her! that's subsom to Hainkerchief,—confessions—handkerchief!—To confess, and be hanged for his labour;
—first, to be hanged, and then to confess.—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion without some instruction. It is not words that shake me thus. Fish! Noses, ears, and fingers: Is it possible?—Confess—handkercief!—O devil!—
[Flies in a trance.
Iago. Work on,
My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are
And many worthy and chaste dames even thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. What, ho! my lord!
My lord, I say! Othello!

Enter Cassio.
Cass. How now, Cassio!
Iago. What's the matter? Cass. My lord is fall'n into an epilepsy:
This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.
Iago. Knob him about the temples.
Iago. No, forbear; the lethargy must have his quiet course:
If not, he foams at mouth and by and by Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs:
Do you withdraw yourself a little while,
He will recover straight: when he is gone,
I would on great occasion speak with you.
[Exit Cassio.
Iago. How is it, general? have you not hurt your head? Oth. Dost thou mock me?
Iago. I mock you, no, by heaven.
Would you would bear your fortune like a man!
Oth. A horned man's a monster and a beast.
Iago. There's many a beast then in a populous
And many a civil monster,
Iago. Did he confess it?
Iago. Good sir, be a man;
Think every bearded fellow that's but yok'd
May draw with you: there's millions now alive
That nightly lie in those unproper beds
[ter.
Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is bet-
O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
To lie a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;
And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be,
Oth. O, thou art wise; 'tis certain.
Iago. Stand you awhile apart;
Confine yourself but in a patient list.
Whilst you were here o'erwhelmed with your grief—
A passion most unsuiting such a man
Cassio came hither: I shifted him away,
And laid good sense upon your estacy,
Bade him anon return and here speak with me;
The which he promised. Do but excuse yourself,
And mark the flees, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in every region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew,
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is again to cope your wife:
I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience;
Or I shall say you are all in all in spleen,
And nothing of a man.
Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago? Iago. I will be found most cunning in my patience;
But—dost thou hear?—most bloody,
Iago. That's not amiss; But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?
[Othello Retires.
Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A housewife that by selling her desires
Buys herself bread and clothes; it is a creature
That dotes on Cassio; as 'tis the Trumpet's plague
To beguile many and be beguiled by one:
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
From the excess of laughter. Here he comes:

Re-enter Cassio.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures and light behaviour,
Quite in the wrong. How do you now, lieutenant?
Cas. The worser that you give me the addition
Whose want even kills me. Iago. Pity Desdemona well, and you are sure on't.
Iago. I knew never woman love man so. [me.
Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think, I faith, she loves
Oth. Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out.
Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?
Oth. Now he importunes him to Tell to him o'er; go to; well said, well said.
Oth. She gives it out that you shall marry her:
Do you intend it?
Cas. Ha, ha, ha!
Oth. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph?
Cas. I marry her! what? a customer! Prissie, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha.
Oth. So, so, so, so: they laugh that win.
Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes that you shall marry
Cas. Prissie, say true. [her.
Iago. I am a very villain else.
Oth. Have you scored me? Well.
Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out; she Is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and datility, not out of my promise.
Oth. Iago beckons me; now he begins the story.
Cas. She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was the other day talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians; and thither comes the bawble, and, by this hand, she falls me thus about my neck—
[Oth. Crying. O dear Cassio! as it were: his gesture imports it.
Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so hares, and pulls me: ha, ha, ha!
Oth. Now he tells how she pucked him to my chamber. O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to.
Cas. Well, I must leave her company.
Iago. Before me! look, where she comes.
Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfumed one.

Enter Bianca.
What do you mean by this haunting of me?
Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you! What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the work?—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There; give it your hobby-horse; wheresoever you had it, I'll take it out now work on't.
Cas. Now now, my sweet Bianca! now how! ho! now!
Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief!
Bian. An you'll come to supper to-night, you may; an you will not, come when you are next prepared. [Exit.

Iago. After her, after her.
Cas. 'Faith, I must; she'll rain in the street else.
Iago. Will you sup there?
Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.
Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very much speak with you.
Cas. Prithieue, come; will you?
Iago. Go to; say no more. [Exit Cassio.
Oth. [Advancing] How shall I murder him, Iago?
Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his own? Oth. O Iago!
Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?
Oth. Was that mine?
Iago. Yours, by this hand; and to see how he prizes that foolish woman your wife! she gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.
Oth. I would have him nine years a-killing. A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!
Iago. Nay, you must forget that.
Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be dammed to-night; for she shall not live: no, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand. O, the world hath not a sweeter creature: she might lie by an emperor's side and command him tasks.
Iago. Nay, that's not your way.
Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is: so delicate with her needle: an admirable musician: O! she will sing the savageness out of a bear: of so high and plenteous wit and invention:—
Iago. She's the worse for all this.
Oth. O, a thousand thousand times: and then, of so gentle a condition!
Iago. Ay, too gentle.
Oth. Nay, that's certain: but yet the pity of it, Iago! O Iago, the pity of it, Iago!
Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.
Oth. I will chop her into messes: cuckold me!
Iago. O, 'tis fool in her.
Oth. With mine officer!
Iago. That's fooler.
Oth. Get me some poison, Iago; this night: I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovid me my mind again: this night, Iago.
Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.
Oth. Good, good; the justice of it pleases: very good.
Iago. And for Cassio, let me be his undertaker: you shall hear more by midnight.

Enter Lodovico, Desdemona, and Attendants.
Lod. Save you, worthy general!
Oth. With all my heart, sir.
Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you. [Gives him a letter.

Iago. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures. [Opens the letter, and reads.
Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?
Iago. I am very glad to see you, signal! Welcome to Cyprus.
Lod. I thank you. How does Lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives, sir.
Des. Cousin, there's fall'n between him, and my An unkind breach: but you shall make all well.
Oth. Are you sure of that?
Des. My lord? [will—
Oth. [Aside] 'Tis fail you not to do, as you Lod. He did not call: he's busy in the paper. Is there division 'twixt my lord and Cassio?
Des. A most unhappy one: I would do much To atone them, for the love I bear to Cassio.
Oth. Fire and brimstone!
Des. My lord!
Oth. Are you wise?
Des. What, is he angry?
Lod. May be the letter moved him; For, as I think, they do command him home, Deputing Cassio in his government.
Des. Trust me, I am glad on't.
Oth. Indeed!
Des. My lord?
Oth. I am glad to see you mad.
Des. Why, sweet Othello,—
Oth. [Striking her] Devil!
Des. I have not deserved this. [Venice, Lod. My lord, this would not be believed in Though I should swear I saw 't: 'tis very much: Make her amends; she weeps.
Oth. O devil, devil!
If that the earth could teem with woman's tears, Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile. Out of my sight!
Des. I will not stay to offend you. [Going.
Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:
I do beseech your lordship, call her back.
Oth. Mistress!
Des. My lord?
Oth. What would you with her, sir?
Des. Who, I, my lord?
Oth. Ay; you did wish that I would make her Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on, [turn: And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep; And she's obedient, as you say, obedient. Very obedient. Proceed you in your tears. Concerning this sir,—O well-painted passion! I am commanded home. Get you away; I'll send for you anon. Sir, I obey the mandate, And will return to Venice. Hence, avaint! [Exit Desdemona.
Cassio shall have my place. And, sir, to-night, I do entreat that we may sup together:
You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus. —Goats and monkeys! [Exit.
Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full sense Call all in all sufficient? Is this the nature Whom passion could not shake? whose solid vir- The shot of accident, nor dart of chance, [tue Could neither graze nor pierce?
Iago. He is much changed.
Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?
Iago. He's that he is: I may not breathe my cun- sure.
What he might be,—if what he might he is not— I would to heaven he were!
Lod. What, strike his wife!
Iago. 'Faith, that was not so well; yet would I That stroke would prove the worst! [knew Lod. Is it his use? Or did the letters work upon his blood, And new-create this fault?
Iago. Alas, alas! It is not honesty in me to speak What I have seen and known. You shall observe And his own courses will denote him so [him, That I may save my speech: do but go after, And mark how he continues.
Lod. I am sorry that I am deceived in him. [Exit.
SCENE II. — A room in the castle.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You have seen nothing then?

Emilia. Nor ever heard, nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she to-gether.

Emilia. But then I saw no harm, and then I heard
Each syllable that breath made up between them.

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emilia. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o' the way?

Emilia. Never.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor Emilia. Never, my lord. [nothing]

Oth. That's strange.

Emilia. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest,

Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other,

Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom.

If any wretch have put this in your head,

Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!

For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true,

There's no man happy; the purest of their wives
Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither: go.

[Exit Emilia.

She says enough; yet she's a simple bawd

That cannot say as much. This is a subtle whore,

That cloak and key of villainous secrets:

And yet she'll kneel and pray; I have seen her do't.

Enter Desdemona with Emilia.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes;

Des. Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. [To Emilia] Some of your function, mistress;

Leave procreants alone and shut the door;

Cough, or cry 'hem,' if any body come:

Your mystery, your mystery: nay, dispatch.

[Exit Emilia.

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech

I understand a fury in your words, [import?

But not the words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true

And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;

Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves

Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double

Swear thou art honest. [damn'd:

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? how am

Oth. O Desdemona! away! away! away!

Des. Alas the heavy day! Why do you weep?

Am I the motive of these tears, my lord?

If haply you my father do suspect

An instrument of this your calling back,

Lay not your blame on me: if you have lost him,

Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleased heaven

To try me with affliction, had they rain'd

All kinds of sores and shame's on my bare head,

Stee'd me in poverty to the very lips,

Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes,

I should have found in some place of my soul

A drop of patience: but, alas, to make me

A fixed figure for the time of scorn

To point his slow unmoving finger at!

Yet could I bear that too; well, very well:

But there, where I have garner'd up my heart,

Where either I must live, or bear no life;

The fountain from which my current runs,
Des. Such as she says my lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her whore: a beggar in his drink
Could not have laid such terms upon his callat.

Iago. Why did he so?

Des. I do not know; I am sure I am none such.

Iago. Do not weep, do not weep. Alas the day!

Emil. Nay, for to say so she herself matches,
Her father and her country and her friends,
To be call'd whore? would it not make one weep?

Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Beshrew him for 't!

How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, heaven doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain,
Some busy and insinuating rogue,
Some coggling, cozening slave, to get some office,
Have not devised this slander: I 'll be hang'd else.

Iago. Fle. There is no such man; it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him.

Emil. A blear pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones!

Why should he call her whore? who keeps her corn.

The Moor's abused by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow.
O heaven, that such companions thou'ldst unfold,
And put in every honest hand a whip
To lash the rascals naked through the world
Even from the east to the west?

Iago. Speak within door.

Emil. O, fie upon them! Some such squire he was
That turn'd your wit the seamy side without,
And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. What shall I do to win my lord again?

Good friend, go to him: for, by this light of heaven,
I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:
If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,
Either in discourse of thought or actual deed,
Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,
Delighted them in any other form;
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will—though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorce—love him dearly,
Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do much;
And his unkindness may defeat my life,
But never taint my love. I cannot say 'whore':
It does ashor me now I speak the word;
To do the act that might the addition earn
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.

Iago. I pray you, he content; 'tis but his humour:
The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you.

Des. If 't were no other,

Iago. 'Tis but so, I warrant. [Trumpets within.

Hark, how these instruments summon to supper!

The messengers of Venice stay the meat:
Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

[Execut Desdemona and Emilia.

Enter Rodrigo.

How now, Rodrigo!

Iago. I do not find that thou dealest justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary?

Rod. Did you design me with some device, Iago; and rather, as it seems to me now, keeps thee from me all convenience than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will indeed no longer endure it, nor am I yet persuaded to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suffered.

Iago. Will you hear me, Rodrigo?

Rod. Faith, I have heard too much, for your words and performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jewels you have had from me to deliver to Desdemona would half have corrupted a votarist: you have told me she hath received them and returned me expectations and comforts of sweet respect and acquaintance, but, I find none.

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man;
not 'tis not very well: nay, I think it is scurvy,
and begin to find myself lobbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I think you 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: if she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit and repent my unlawful solicitation; if not, assure yourself I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee, and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Rodgerio: thou hast taken against me a most just exception: but yet, I protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appeared, and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment.
But, Rodrigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean purpose, courage and valour, this night show it: If thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery and devise engines for my life.

Rod. Well, what is it? is it within reason and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desemonah return again to Venice.

Iago. O, no; he goes into Mauritania and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be lingered here by some accident: wherein none can be so determinate as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean, removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him uncapable of Othello's place: knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me to do?

Iago. Ay, if you dare do yourself a profit and a right. He sups to-night with a harlotry, and thither will I go to him: he knows not yet of his honourable fortune. If you will watch his going thence, which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one, you may take him at your pleasure: I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me; I will show you such a necessity in his death that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste: about it.

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Execut.

SCENE III. —Another room in the castle.

Enter Othello, Lodovico, Desdemona, Emilia, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

Oth. 0, pardon me; 't will do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good-night; I humbly thank your ladship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?

Des. —Desdemona,—
Othello. Get you to bed on the instant; I will be returned forthwith: dismiss your attendant there: took it be done.

Des. I will, my lord.

[Exit Othello, Lodovico, and Attendants.]

Emil. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did. Des. He says he will return incontinent; I will command you to go to bed, and bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia, give me my nightly wearing, and adieu:

We must not now displease him.

Emil. I would you had never seen him. Des. So would not I: my love doth so approve him, That even his stubbornness, his checks, his frowns,— Pritho, unpin me,—have grace and favour in them.

Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Des. All's one. Good faith, how foolish are our If I do die before thee, prithee, shroud me [minds]! In one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid call'd Barbara: She was in love, and she her loved proved mad And did forsake her: she had a song of 'willow,' An old thing it was, but it express'd all her fortune, And she did singing it: that song to-night Will not go from my mind; I have much to do, But to go hang my head all at one side, And sing it like poor Barbara. Prithco, dispatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your night-gown?

Des. No, unpin me here. This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emil. A very handsome man.

Des. He speaks well.

Emil. I know a lady in Venice would have walked barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip.

Des. [Singing] The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree.

Sing all a green willow;
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow;
The fresh streams ran by her, and murmur'd her
Sing willow, willow, willow; [mourns;
Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the Lay by these:— [stones;

[Singing] Sing willow, willow, willow;
Prithco, hie thee; he'll come anon; [land.

[Singing] Sing all a green willow must be my gar-
Let nobody blame him; his scorn I approve,—
Nay, that's not next.—Hark! who's that knocks?

Emil. It's the wind.

Des. [Singing] I call'd my love false love; but what said he then?

Sing willow, willow, willow:

If I court mow women, you'll cooch with mow men.
So, get thee gone; good-night. Mine eyes do itch; Dosthatsoneeping?

Emil. 'Tis neither here nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so. O, these men, these men!

Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emilia,—
That there be women do abuse their husbands
In such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the Emil. Why, would not you? [world?

Des. No, by this heavenly light! [Emil.

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light;
I might do 't as well 'i' the dark.

[world?

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the Emil. The world's a huge thing: it is a great
For a small vice.

Des. In troth, I think thou wouldst not.

Emil. In troth, I think I should; and undo't when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring, nor for measures of lawn, nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition; but, for the whole world,—why, who would not make her husband a cuckold to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for 't.

Des. Besirew me, if I would do such a wrong
For the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong 'i' the world; and having the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen; and as many to the vantage as would store the world they played for.

But I do think it is their husbands' faults If wives do fall: say that they shuck their duties, And pour our treasures into foreign laps, Or else break out in peevish jealousies, Throwing restraint upon us; or say they strike us, Or scant our former having in despite; Why, we have galls, and though we have some grace, Yet have we some revenge. Let husbands know Their wives have sense like them: they see and smell And have their palates both for sweet and sour, As husbands have. What is it that they do When they change us for others? Is it sport? I think it is: and doth affection breed it? I think it doth: 'tis frailty that thus errs? It is so too: and have not we affections, Desires for sport, and frailty, as men have? Then let them use us well: else let them know, The ills we do, their ills instruct us so. [send, Des. Good night, good night: heaven me such uses Not to pick bad from bad, but by bad mend! [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. — Cyprus. A street.

Enter Iago and Roderigo.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home;
Quick, quick; fear nothing; 't will be at thy elbow: It makes us, or it mars us; think on that, And I am firm thy resolution.

Roderigo. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in 't.
Iago. Here, at thy hand: be bold, and take thy stand.

[Retires.

Roderigo. I have no great devotion to the deed;
And yet he hath given me satisfying reasons: 'Tis but a man gone. Forth, my sword: he dies.
Enter Cassio.

Rod. I know his gait, 'tis he. — Villain, thou diest! [Makes a pass at Cassio.
Cas. That thrust had been my enemy indeed, But that my coat is better than thou know'st: I will make proof of thine.

[Draws, and wounds Rodorigo.

Enter Othello.

Oth. The voice of Cassio; Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am! Oth. It is even so.

Cas. O, help, ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. 'Tis he: — O brave Iago, honest and just, That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong! Thou teachest me. Minion, your dear lies dead, And your unblest fate lies: strumpet, I come. Forth of my heart those charm's, thine eyes, are bled; Thy bed, lust-stain'd, shall with lust's blood be spotted. [Exit.

Enter Lodovico and Gratiano.

Cas. What, ho! no watch? no passage? murder! [Ind.

Gra. I am some miscanch; the cry is very dire-

Cas. O, help!

Lod. Hark!

Rod. O wretched villain!

Lod. Two or three groan: it is a heavy night:

These may be counterfeit; let's think't unsafe To come in to the cry without more help.

Rod. Nobody come? then shall I bleed to death.

Lod. Hark!

[Enter Iago, with a light.

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Whose there? whose noise is this that cries on murder?

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Did not you hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here! for heaven's sake, help me!

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you here that cry so grievously?

Cas. Iago? O, I am spoild, undone by villains!

Give me some help. [This.

Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done

Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout, And cannot make away.

Iago. One treacherous villains!

What are you there? come in, and give some help. [To Lodovico and Gratiano.

Rod. O, help me here.

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. [Stabs Rodorigo.

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhuman dog!

Iago. Kill men in the dark! — Where be these bloody thieves? —

How silent is this town! — Ho! murder! murder! —

What may you be? are you of good or evil? Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico? Lod. He, sir. [Villains.

Iago. I cry you mercy. Here's Cassio hurt by

Cas. Cassio! Iago. How is't, brother! Cas. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid! Light, gentlemen: I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter, ho? who is't that cried?

Iago. Who is't that cried?

Oth. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio!

Bian. Cassio, Cassio, Cassio! [Exit

Iago. O notable strumpet! Cassio, nay you sus-

Who should be that have thus mangled you?

Cas. No. [Seek you.

Gra. I am sorry to find you thus: I have been to Iago. Lend me a garter: So. O, for a chair, To bear him mildly hence!

Bian. Alas, he faints! O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash To be a party in this injury, Patience awhile, good Cassio. Come, come; Lend me a light. Know we this face or no? Alas, my friend and my dear countryman Roderigo! no: — yes, sure: — O heaven! Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Even he, sir; did you know him?

Gra. Know him! ay.

Iago. Signior Gratiano! I cry you gentle pardon; These bloody accidents must excuse my manners, That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio? O, a chair, a chair!

Gra. Roderigo!

Iago. He, he, 'tis he: [A chair brought in.] O, that's well said: the chair.

Some good man bear him carefully from hence;

I'll fetch the general's surgeon. [To Bianca.

For you, mistress, Save you your labour. He that lies slain here, Can—

Was my dear friend: what malice was between you? Cas. None in the world; nor do I know the man.

Iago. [To Bian.] What, look you pale? O, bear him out o' the air.

Bian. Cassio and Roderigo are borne off.

Stay you, good gentlemen. Look you pale, mistress? Do you perceive the gerriness of her eye? Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more soon. Behold her well: I pray you, look upon her: Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guiltiness will speak, Though tongues were out of use.

Enter Emilia.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter? what's the matter? business?

Iago. Cassio lath here been set on in the dark By Roderigo and fellows that were scaped: He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio! Iago. This is the fruit of whoring. Prithee, Emilia, Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night.

[To Bianca. What, do you shake at that?

Bian. He supp'd at my house; but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, did he so? I charge you, go with me. Emil. Fee, fie upon thee, strumpet! Bian. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest As you that thus abuse me.

Iago. [Aside] As I! foh! fie upon thee! Iago. Kind gentleman, let's go see poor Cassio dress'd.

Come, mistress, you must tell another tale. Emilia, run you to the citadel, And tell my lord and lady what hath happ'd. Will you go? I pray. [Aside This is the night That either makes me or fordoes me quite. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A bedchamber in the castle: Desdemona in bed asleep; a light burning.

Enter Othello.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,— Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars! —
ACT V.

OTHELLO.

I never gave it him: send for him hither.
Let him confess a truth.

Des. What, my lord? He hath confess'd.

Oth. That he hath used thee.

Oth. He will not say so.

Des. No, his mouth is stopp'd; but I trust Iago hath ta'en order for't.

Des. O! my fear interprets: what, is he dead?

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge
Had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas! he is betray'd and I undone. [face?]

Oth. Out, strumpet! weep'st thou for him to my

Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not!

Oth. Down, strumpet! Des. Kill me to-morrow: let me live to-night!

Oth. Nay, if you strive,—

Des. But half an hour! Oth. Being done, there is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer!

Oth. It is too late.[He stiles her.

Emil. [Within] My lord, my lord! what, ho! my

Oth. lord, my lord! [dead]

Des. What noise is this? Not dead? not yet quite
I that am cruel am yet merciful;
I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So, so.

Emil. [Within] What, ho! my lord, my lord!

Oth. Who's there? Emil. [Within] O, good my lord, I would speak a word with you!

Oth. Yes: 'tis Emilia. By and by. She's dead.
'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death.—

The noise was here. Hal! no more moving?
Still as the grave. Shall she come in? were 't good?—
I think she stirs again: —no. 'What's best to do?
If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife:
My wife! my wife! what wife? I have no wife.

O, insupportable! O heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon, and that the affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.

Emil. [Within] I do beseech you

That I may speak with you, O, good my lord!

Oth. I had forgot thee: O, come in, Emilia.

Soft; by and by. Let me the curtains draw.

Where art thou? [Unlocks the door.

Enter Emilia.

What's the matter with thee now?

Emil. O, my good lord, yonder's foul murder

Oth. It is the very error of the moon;
She comes more nearer earth than she was wont,
And makes men mad.

Emil. Cassio, my lord, hath kill'd a young Venetian

Cal'd Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo kill'd!

And Cassio kill'd!

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd! then murder's out of tune,
And sweet revenge grows harsh.

Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd!

Emil. Alas, what cry is that?

Oth. What! what?

Emil. Out, and alas! that was my lady's voice.
Help! help, ho! help! O lady, speak again!
Sweet Desdemona! O sweet mistress, speak!

Des. A guiltless death I die.

Emil. O, who hath done this deed?

Des. Nobody: I myself. Farewell!

Command me to thy kind lord: O, farewell! [Dies.

Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd?

745
I thought so then:—I'll kill myself for grief:—
O villany, villany! [home.

Iago. What, are you mad? I charge you, get you
Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak:
'Tis proper I obey him, but not now.
Perchance, Iago, I will not go home.

Emil. Nay, lay thee down and roar;
For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent
That ever did lift up eye.

Iago. [Rising] O, she was foul! I scarce did know you, uncle: there lies your niece, Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly
I know this act shows horrible and grim. [Stop'd:

Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's defail.

Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
Store his old thread in twain: did he live now,
This sight would make him do a desperate turn,
Yea, curse his better angel from his side,
And fall to reprobation.

Iago. 'Tis pitiful; but yet Iago knows
That she with Cassio hath the act of shame
A thousand times committed; Cassio confess'd it:
And she did gratify his amorous works
With that recognizance and pledge of love
Which I first gave her: I saw it in his hand;
It was a handkerchief, an antique token
My father gave my mother.

Iago. O heaven! O heavenly powers!

Iago. Come, hold your peace.

Iago. 'Twill out, 'twill out: I peace!

No, I will speak as liberal as the north:
Let heaven and men and devils, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.

Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Iago. I will not.

Iago offers to stab Emilia.

Gra. [Fie! Your sword upon a woman?

Iago. I speak'st of Emil. O thou dast Moor! that handkerchief thou

I found by fortune and did give my husband;
For often, with a solemn earnestness,
More than indeed belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago. Villanous whore!

Emil. She give it Cassio! no, alas! I found it,
And I did give 't my husband.

Iago. Filth, thou liest!

Iago. By heaven, I do not, I do not, gentlemen.
O murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool
Do with so good a woman?

Iago. Are there no stones in heaven
But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!

[He runs at Iago: Iago, from behind, stabs
Emilia, and exit.

Gra. The woman falls; sure, he hath kill'd his wife.

Emil. Ay, ay: O, lay me by my mistress' side.

Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kild. [weapon, :

Mon. 'Tis a notorious villain. Take you this
Which I have here recover'd from the Moor:
Come, guard the door without; let him not pass,
But kill him rather. I'll after that same villain,
For 'tis a damned slave.

[Exeunt Montano and Gratiano.

Oth. I am not valiant neither,
But every puny whisper gets my sword:
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy song bode, lady?

Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,
And die in music. [Singing] Willow, willow, willow.

Moor, she was chaste; she loved thee, cruel Moor;
So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true;
So speaking as I think, I die, I die. [Dies.
ACT V.

Othello.  Scene II.

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber; It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper:— O, here it is. Uncle, I must come forth. [Dear:
  Gra. [Within] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee The loss of thy sword, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Look in upon me then and speak with me, Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter Gratiano.

Gra. What is the matter?

Oth. Behold, I have a weapon; A better never did itself sustain

Upon a soldier's thigh: I have seen the day, That, with this little arm and this good sword, I have made my way through more impediments Than twenty times your stop: but, O vain boast! Who can control his fate? 'tis not so now.

Be not afraid, though you do see me weapon'd; Here is my journey's end, here is my butt, And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.

Do you go back dismay'd? 'tis a lost fear;

Man but a wretch against Othello's breast, And he retire. Where should Othello go?

Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-star'd wench! I pile as thy snick! when we shall meet at cursed,

This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven, And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl! Even like thy chastity. O cursed slave!

Whip me, ye devils!

From the possession of this heavenly sight!

Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!

Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!

O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead!

Oh! Oh! Oh!

Enter Lodovico, Montano, Cassio carried in a chair, and Officers with Iago, prisoner.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?

Oth. That's he that was Othello: here I am.

Lod. Where is that viper? bring the villain forth.

Oth. I look down towards his feet; but that's a

If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee. [Table.

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

Iago. I bleed sir; but not kill'd.

Oh. I am not sorry neither; I'd have thee live;

For, in my sense, 'tis happiness to die.

Lod. O thou Othello, that wert once so good,

Fall'n in the practice of a damned slave,

What shall be said to thee?

Oh. Why, any thing:

An honourable murderer, if you will;

For nought I did in hate, but all in honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confess'd his villany:

Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay.

Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask you pardon.

Will you, I pray, demand that demi-devil

Why he hath thus ensnared my soul and body?

Iago. Demand me nothing: what you know, you

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What, not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befell'n,

Which, as I think, you have not. Here is a letter

Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo;

And here another: the one of them imports

The death of Cassio to be undertook

By Roderigo.

Oth. O villain!

Cas. Most heathenish and most gross!

Lod. Now here's another discontented paper,

Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,

Roderigo meant to have sent this damned villain;

But that belike Iago in the interim

Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. O the pernicious caiffet!

How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief

That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber:

And he himself confess'd but even now

That there he drop'd it for a special purpose

Which wrought to his desire.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us:

Your power and your command is taken off,

And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,

If there be any cunning cruelty

That can torment him much and hold him long,

It shall be his. You shall close prisoner rest,

Till that the nature of your fault be known

To the Venetian state. Come, bring him away.

Oth. Soft you; a word or two before you go.

I have done the state some service, and they know't.

No more of that. I pray you, in your letters,

When you shall these milucky deeds relate,

Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate,

Nor set down ought in malice: then must you speak

Of one that loved not wisely but too well;

Of one not easily jealous, but being wrong'd

Perplex'd in the extreme; of one whose hand,

Like the base Indian, threw a pearl away [eyes,

Richer than all his tribe; of one whose subdu'd

Albeit unused to the melting mood,

Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Their medicinal gum. Set you down this;

And say besides, that in Aleppo once,

Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk

Beat a Venetian and traduced the state,

I took by the throat the circumcised dog,

And smote him, thus.

[Stabs himself.

Lod. O bloody period!

Gra. All that's spoke is mar'd.

Oh. I kiss'd thee ere I kill'd thee: no way but Killing myself, to die upon a kiss.

[Dies;

Lod. This did I fear, but thought he had no

For he was great of heart.

[weapon;

Lod. [To Iago] O Spartan dog,

More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea!

Look on the tragick leading of this bed;

This is thy work: the object poisous sight;

Let it be bid. Gratiano, keep the house,

And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,

For they succeed on you. To you, lord governor,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain;

The time, the place, the torture: O, enforce it!

Myself will straight a'board; and to the state

This heavy act with heavy heart relate.

[Exeunt.

747
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see page lxxv.]

ACT I.

Enter Demetrius and Philo.

Phi. Nay, but this doteage of our general's Overflows the measure: those his goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and stumps of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn,
The office and devotion of their view.
Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper,
And is become the bellows and the fan.
To cool a gipsy's lust.

Flourish. Enter Antony, Cleopatra, her Ladies, the Train, with Eunuchs fanning her.

Look, where they come:
Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see.
Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.
Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reck'n'd.
Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be beloved.
Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven,
New earth.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me: the sum.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony:
Fulvia perchance is angry: or, who knows
If the scar'd-bearded Cesar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you. Do this, or this;
Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
Perform 't, or else we damn thee.'

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance! nay, and most like:
You must not stay here longer, your submission
Is come from Caesar; therefore hear it, Antony, Where's Fulvia's process? Caesar's I would say?
both?
Call in the messengers. As I am Egypt's queen,
Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Caesar's hommage: else so thy cheek pays shame
When shrill-tongued Fulvia scolds. The messengers!

Ant. Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch
Of the ranged empire fall! Here is my space.
Kingdoms are clay: our dungy earth alike
Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life
Is to do thus; when such a mutual pair

[Embracing.

And such a twain can do't, in which I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet
We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood! Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.

Now, for the love of Love and her soft hours.
Let's not confound the time with conference harsh:
There's not a minute of our lives should stretch
Without some pleasure now. What sport to-night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fie, wrangling queen! Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives
To make itself, in thee, fair and admired!
No messenger, but thine; and all alone
To-night we'll wander through the streets and note

748
The qualities of people. Come, my queen; Last night you did desire it: speak not to us. [Exit Antony and Cleopatra with their train.]

Dem. Is Caesar with Antonius priz'd so slight? Phi. Sir, sometimes when he is not Antony, He comes too short of that great property Which still should go with Antony. [Exit.

Dem. I am full sorry That he approves the common liar, who Thus speaks of him at Rome: but I will hope Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy! [Exit.

SCENE II. — The same. Another room.

Enter Charmian, Iras, Alexis, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexis, sweet Alexis, most anything Alexis, almost most absolute Alexis, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? O, that I knew this husband, which you say, must charge his horns with garlands!

Alex. Sooth, will you? [Exit.

Char. Is this the man? Is 't you, sir, that know Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray, then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more believing than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage: find me to marry me with Octavius Cesar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs. [fortune

Sooth. You have seen and proved a fairer former Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then be like my children shall have no names: prithee, how many boys and wenchs must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb, And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think none but your sheets are privy To your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be — drunk to bed. [Exit.]

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing Char. E'en as the over-rolling Nilus presages famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bed-fellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear. Prithee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But bow, but bow? give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worser thoughts heavens mends! Alexis, — come, his fortune, his fortune! O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee! and let her die too, and give him a worse! and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Isis, I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man lose-wived, so is it a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded: therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now, if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they 'ld do 't.

Char. Not he; the queen.

Enter Cleopatra.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Cleo. No, lady.

Eno. Was he not here?

Cleo. He was disposed to mirth; but on the sudden A Roman thought hath struck him. Enobarbus!

Eno. Madam?

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's Alexis?

Alex. Here, at your service. My lord approaches.

Cleo. We will not look upon him: go with us. [Exit.

Enter Antony with a Messenger and Attendants.

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field. Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time 's state Made friends of them, jointing their force 'gainst Cesar;

Whose better issue in the war, from Italy, Upon the first encounter, drave them.

Ant. Well, what worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller. Ant. When it concerns the fool or coward. On: Things that are past are done with me. 'Tis thus; Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death, I hear him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labienus —

This is stiff news — hath, with his Parthian force, Extended Asia from Euphrates; His conquering banner shook from Syria To Lydia and to Ionia;

While —

Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say —

Mess. O, my lord! Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general tongue:

Name Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome; Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults With such full license as both truth and malice Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth words, When our quick minds lie still; and our ill told us Is as our caring. Fare thee well awhile.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit.

Ant. From Sicyon, bo, the news! Speak there! First Att. The man from Sicyon, — is there such an See. Att. He stays upon your will. [Exit.

Ant. Let him appear. These strong Egyptian fetters I must break, Or lose myself in dotage. 749
Enter another Messenger.

What are you?

Sec. Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where died she?

Sec. Mess. In Sicyon:

Her length of sickness, with what else more serious

Importeth thee to know, this bears.  [Gives a letter.

Ant. Forbear me.

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it:

What our contempt doth often hurl from us,

We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,

By revolution lowering, does become

The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone;

The hand could pluck her back that shoved her on.

I must from this enchanting queen break off:

Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,

My idleness doth haggle. How now! Enobarbus!

Re-enter Enobarbus.

Eho. What's your pleasure, sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eho. Why, then, we kill all our women: we see how mortal, an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eho. Under a compelling occasion, let women die:

it were pity to cast them away for nothing; though,

between them and a great cause, they should be estemened nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die

twenty times upon far poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some lovely act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eho. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: we cancot call her winds and waters sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacs can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. Would I had never seen her!

Eho. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blest withal would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eho. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eho. Fulvia!

Ant. Dead.

Eho. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice.

When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the cause to be lamented: this grief crowned with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticoat; and indeed the tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath broached in the state

Cannot endure my absence.

Eho. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers

Have notice what we purpose. I shall break

The cause of our expiation to the queen,

And get her leave to part. For not alone

The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,

Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too

Of many of our contriving friends in Rome

Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius

Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands

The empire of the sea: our slippery people,

Whose love is never link'd to the deserver

Till his deserts are past, begin to throw

Pompey the Great and all his dignities

Upon his son; who, high in name and power,

Higher than both in blood and life, stands up

For the main soldier: whose quality, going on,

The sides of the world may danger: much is breeding,

Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,

And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure,

To such whose place is under us, requires

Our quick remove from hence.

Eho. I shall do't.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Another room.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cle. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cle. See where he is, who's with him, what he

I did not send you: if you find him sad.

Char. Say I am dancing; if in mirth, report

That I am sudden sick: quick, and return.

[Exit Alexas.

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him

You do not hold the method to enforce

Clearly,

The like from him.

Cle. What should I do, I do not?

Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.

Cle. Thou teakest like a fool: the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so far too; I wish, forbear:

In time we hate that which we often fear.

But here comes Antony.

Enter Antony.

Ant. I am sick and sullen.

Cle. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose.—

Ant. Help me away, dear Charmian; I shall fail:

It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature

Will not sustain it.

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cle. Pray you, stand farther from me.

Ant. What's the matter?

Cle. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman? You may go:

Would she had never given you leave to come!

Let her not say 'tis I that keep you here:

I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know.

Cle. O, never was there queen

So mightily betray'd! yet at the first

I saw the treasures planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,— [true.

Cle. Why should I think you can be mine and

Though you in swearing shake the crowned gods,

Who have been false to Fulvia? Rietous madness,

To be entangled with those mouth-made vows,

Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen.

Cle. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going,

But bid farewell, and go: when you sued staying,

Then was the time for words: no going then;

Eternity was in your lips and eyes,

Bliss in our brows' bent: none our parts so poor,

But was a race of heaven: they are so still,

Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world,

Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cle. I would I had thy inches; thou shouldst know

There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant.

Hear me, queen:

The strong necessity of time commands

Our services awhile; but my full heart

Remains in use with you. Our Italy

Sluises o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius

Makes his approaches to the port of Rome:

Equality of two domestic powers

750
Breed scrupulous faction: the hated, grown to strength,
Are newly grown to love: the condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace
Into the hearts of such as have not thrilled
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;
And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
Till any desperate change: my more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my going,
Is Fulvia's death. [Freedom,
Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me
It does from childishness: can Fulvia die?
Ant. She's dead, my queen:
Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
The gloss she awaked; at the last, best:
See when and where she died.
Cleo. O most false love!
Where be the sacred vials thou shouldst fill
With sorrowful water? Now I see, I see,
In Fulvia's death, how mine received shall be.
Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepared to know
The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice. By the fire
That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence
Thy soldier, servant; making peace or war
As thou affect'st.

Ant. Cut my face, Charmian, come;
But let it be: I am quickly ill, and well,
So Antony loves.

Cleo. My precious queen, forbear;
And give true evidence to his love, which stands
An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I prithee, turn aside and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say the tears
Belong to Egypt: good now, play one scene
Of excellent disguising; and let it look
Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heest my blood: no more.
Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meekly.
Ant. Now, by my sword—

Cleo. And target. Still he musts;
But this is not the best. Look, prithee, Charmian,
How this Hereculean Roman does become
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.
Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.
Sir, you and I must part, but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have loved, but there's not it;
That you know well: something it is I would,—
O, my oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour
To bear such idleness so near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me;
Since you be things that kill me, then they do not
Eye well to you: your honour calls you hence;
Therefore be deaf to my unpitied folly,
And all the gods go with you! upon your sword
Sit laurel victory! and smooth success
Be strenth' before your feet!

Ant. Let us go. Come;
Our separation so abides, and flies,
That then, residing here, go'st yet with me,
And I, hence fleeting, here remain with thee.
Away! [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Octavius Caesar, reading a letter, Lepidus, and their Train.

Ces. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth
It is not Caesar's natural vice to hate [know,
Our great competitor: from Alexandria

This is the news: he fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel; is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra; nor the queen of Ptolemy
More womanly than he; hardly gave audience, or Vouchsafed to think he had partners: you shall
A man who is the abstract of all faults [find there
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think there are
Evils enow to darken all his goodness:
His faults in him seen as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness; hereditary,
Rather than purchased; what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.

Ces. You there too indulgent. Let us grant, it is Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy;
[not To give a kingdom for a mirth; to sit
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knives that smell of sweat: say this becomes
As his composer must be rare indeed, [him,—
Whom these things cannot blench,—yet must
No way excuse his soils, when we do bear [Antony
So great weight in his lightness. If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for 't: but to confound such time,
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud
As his own state and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys, who, being mature in knowledge,
Paw their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mess. Thy biddings have been done; and every
Most noble Caesar, shalt thou have report [hour,
How 't is abroad. Pompey is strong at sea;
And it appears he is beloved of those
That only have fear'd Caesar: to the ports
The deserts' reports, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Ces. I should have known no less.
It hath been taught us from the primal state,
That he which is was wish'd until he were; [love,
And the ebb'd man, ne'er loved till ne'er worth
Comes dea'd by being lack'd. This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,

to and back, lackeys the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Mess. Caesar, I bring thee word,
Mencenates and Menas, famous pirates, [wound
Make the sea serve them, which they ear and
With keels of every kind; many hot broods
They make in Italy; the Borders maritime
Lack blood to think on 't, and flush youth revolt:
No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen; for Pompey's name strikes more
Than could his war resisted.

Antony,

Ces. Leave thy lascivious saws. When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slewest
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow; whom thou fought'st against,
Though faintly brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer: thou didst drink
The stale of beshrewses, to the bubbl'd puddle
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge; [deign
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The banks of trees thou browsed'st; on the Alps
It is reported thou didst eat strange flesh.
Which some did die to look on; and all this—
It woundes thine honour that I speak it now—
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pity of him.

Ces. Let his shame's quickly

ACT II.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE I.

Enter Alexeeas, from Caesar.

Alex. [To Antony.] Sovereign of Egypt, hail! What much unlike art thou Mark Antony? Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath With his unct glance thee. How does it with my brave Mark Antony? Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen, He kiss'd—the last of many double kisses,— This orient pearl. His speech sticks in my heart. Cleo. [Aside.] Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex. 'Good friend,' quoth he, 'Say, the firm Roman to great Egypt sends This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot, To mend the petty present, I will piece Her opulent throne with kingdoms; all the cast, Say thou, shall call her mistress.' So he nodded, And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt steed, Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke Was beastly dumb'd by him.

Cleo. [To Antony.] What, was he sad or merry? Alex. Like to the time of the year between the ex- Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merry. [Tremes Cleo. O well-divided disposition! Note him, Note him, good Charrimian, 'tis the man; but note He was not sad, for he would shine on those [him: That make their show by him; he looks by him, he was not merry, Which seem'd to tell them his remembrance lay In Egypt with his joy; but between both: O heavenly mingle! Be'th thou sad or merry, The violence of either thee becomes, So does it no man else. Met'st thou my posts? Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers: Why do you send so thick? Cleo. Who's born that day When I forget to send to Antony, Shall de a beggar. Ink and paper, Charrimian. Welcome, my good Alexeeas. Did I, Charrimian, Ever love Caesar so?

Char. O that brave Caesar! Cleo. Be chocked with such another emphasis! Say, the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Caesar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth, If thou with Caesar paragon again My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon, I sing but after you.

Cleo. My salad days, When I was green in judgment: cold in blood, To say as I said then! But, come, away; Get me ink and paper: He shall have every day a several greeting, Or I'll unpeole Egypt. — [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Messina. Pompey's house.

Enter Pompey, Menocrates, and Menas, in war-like manner.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist The deeds of justest men.

Men. Know, worthy Pompey, That what they do delay, they not deny. [Says Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, de- The thing we sue for.

Men. We, ignorant of ourselves, Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers Deny us for our good; so find we profit By losing of our prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:

There would he anchor his aspect and die With looking on his life.

Enter Alexeeas, from Caesar.

Cleo. Prayer.

CHAR. What, was he sad or merry? Alex. Like to the time of the year between the ex- Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merry. [Tremes Cleo. O well-divided disposition! Note him, Note him, good Charrimian, 'tis the man; but note He was not sad, for he would shine on those [him: That make their show by him; he looks by him, he was not merry, Which seem'd to tell them his remembrance lay In Egypt with his joy; but between both: O heavenly mingle! Be'th thou sad or merry, The violence of either thee becomes, So does it no man else. Met'st thou my posts? Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers: Why do you send so thick? Cleo. Who's born that day When I forget to send to Antony, Shall de a beggar. Ink and paper, Charrimian. Welcome, my good Alexeeas. Did I, Charrimian, Ever love Caesar so?

Char. O that brave Caesar! Cleo. Be chocked with such another emphasis! Say, the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Caesar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth, If thou with Caesar paragon again My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon, I sing but after you.

Cleo. My salad days, When I was green in judgment: cold in blood, To say as I said then! But, come, away; Get me ink and paper: He shall have every day a several greeting, Or I'll unpeole Egypt. — [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Messina. Pompey's house.

Enter Pompey, Menocrates, and Menas, in war-like manner.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist The deeds of justest men.

Men. Know, worthy Pompey, That what they do delay, they not deny. [Says Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, de- The thing we sue for.

Men. We, ignorant of ourselves, Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers Deny us for our good; so find we profit By losing of our prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan'd lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both!
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain tuneing; Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with cloysless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour
Even till a Lethe'd dulness!

Enter Varrius.

Var. How now, Varrius?
This is most certain that I shall deliver:
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome;
Expected: since he went from Egypt 'tis
A space for further travel.

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear. Menas, I did not think
This amorous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm
For such a petty war: his soldiership
Is twice the other twain: but let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-just-wearied Antony.

Men. I cannot hope
Cesar and Antony shall well greet together:
His wife that's dead did trespasses to Caesar;
His brother warr'd upon him; although, I think,
Not moved by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser emnities may give way to greater.
Were 't not that we stand up against them all,
'T were pregnant they should square between themselves:
For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords; but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.
Be 't as our gods will have 't! It only stands
Our lives upon to use our strongest hands.
Come, Menas.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome. The house of Lepidus.

Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain
To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat him
To answer like himself: if Cesar move him,
Let Antony look over Cesar's head
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were 't the wearer of Antinues' beard,
I would not shave 't to-day.

Lep. 'T is not a time
For private stomaching.

Eho. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in 't.
Lep. But small to greater matters must give way.

Eno. Not if the small come first.

Lep. Your speech is passion:
But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter Antony and Ventidius.

Eno. And yonder, Cesar.

Enter Cæsar, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compose well here, to Parthia:
Hark, Ventidius.

Mecenas: I do not know, Mecenas; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends, that which combined us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. What 's amiss,
May it be gently heard: when we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds: then, noble partners,
The rather, for I earnestly beseech,

Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curstness grow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well.
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus.

Cæs. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Cæs. Sit.

Ant. Nay, then.

Ant. I learn, you take things ill which are not so,
Or being, concern you not.

Cæs. I must be laugh'd at,
If, or for nothing or a little, I
Should say myself offended, and with you
Chiefly i' the world; more laugh'd at, that I should Once name you derogately, when to sound your name
It not concern'd me.

Cæs. My being in Egypt, Cesar,
What was 't to you?

Cæs. No more than my residing here at Rome
Might be to you in Egypt: yet, if you there
Did practice on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practised?
Cæs. You may be pleased to catch at mine intent
By what did here befal me. Your wife and brother
Made wars upon me; and their contestation
Was theme for you, you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother
Did urge me in his act: I did inquire it: [never
And have my learning from some true reports,
That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours:
And make the wars alike against my stomach,
Having alike your cause? Of this my letters
Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,
As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Cæs. You praise yourself
By laying defects of judgment to me; but
You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so;
I know you could not lack, I am certain on 't,
Very necessity of this thought, that I
Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars
Which fronted mine own peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her spirit in such another:
The third o' the world is yours; which with a snaffle
You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eho. Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women!

Ant. So much invariable, her garboils, Cesar,
Made out of her impatience, which not wanted
Shrewdness of policy too, I grieving grant
Did you too much disquiet: for that you must
But say, I could not help it.

Cæs. I wrote to you
When rioting in Alexandria; you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did give my missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
He fell upon me ere admitted: then
Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want
Of what I was i' the morning: but next day
I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Let this fellow
Be nothing of our strife: if we contend,
Out of our question wipe him.

Cæs. You have broken
The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Ant. Soft, Cesar!

Cæs. No,

Lepidus, let him speak:
The honour is sacred which he talks on now,

753
Supposing that I lack'd it. But, on, Caesar;
The article of my oath.
Ces. To lend me arms and aid when I required
The which you both denied. [Then;]
Ant. Neglected, rather:
And then when poison'd hours had bound me up
From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
I'll play the penitent to you; but mine honesty
Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power
Work without it. Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made wars here;
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon as belts mine honour
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis noble spoken.

Mec. If it might please you, to enforce no further
The griefs between ye: to forget them quite Wore to remember that the present need
Speaks to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mecenas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle with you have nothing else to do.
Ant. Thou art a soldier only; speak no more.
Eno. That truth should be silent I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence; therefore speak
Eno. Go to, then; your considerate stone.

Ces. I do not much dislike the matter, but
The manner of his speech; for 't cannot be
We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us stanch, from edge to O' the world I would pursue it.

[Edge

Agg. Give me leave, Caesar;

Ces. Speak, Agrippa.

Agg. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side,
Admired Octavia: great Mark Antony
Is now a widower.

Ces. Say not so, Agrippa:
If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserved of rashness.

Ant. I am not married, Caesar: let me hear
Agrippa further speak.

Agg. To hold you in perpetual amity,
To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an unslippering knot, take Antony
Octavia to his wife; whose beauty claims
No worse a husband than the best of men;
Whose virtue and whose general graces speak
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
All little jealousies, which now seem great,
And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing: truths would be tales.
Where now half tales be truths: her love to both
Would, each to other and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke;
For 't is a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Caesar speak?

Ces. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa;
If I would say, 'Agrippa, be it so,'
To make this good?

Ces. The power of Caesar, and
His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shows,
Dream of impediment! Let me have thy hand;
Further this act of grace: and from this hour
The heart of brothers govern in our loves
And say our great designs!

Ces. There is my hand.
A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
Did ever love so dearly: let her live

To join our kingdoms and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen!

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst Pompey:
For he hath laid strange courtesies and great
Of late upon me: I must thank him only,
Lest my remembrance suffer ill report;
At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon's:

Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks us out.

Ant. Where lies he?

Ces. About the mount Misenum.

Ant. What is his strength by land?

Ces. Great and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.

Would we had spoke together! haste we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, dispatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Ces. With most gladness;

And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I'll lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,

Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,

Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt Caesar, Antony, and Lepidus.

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.

Eno. Half the heart of Caesar, worthy Mecenas!
My honourable friend, Agrippa!

Agg. Good Enobarbus!

Mec. We have cause to be glad that matters are so well digested. You stayed well by 't in Egypt.

Eno. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild-boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there; is this true?

Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of feast, which wor-fully deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.

Eno. When she first met Mark Antony, she pursed up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus.

Agg. There she appeared indeed; or my reporter devis'd well for her.

Eno. I will tell you.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfum'd that silver

The winds were love-sick with them; the car's were

w Age to which the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made

The water which they beat to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,
It beggar'd all description: she did lie
In her pavilion — cloth-of-gold of tissue—
O'er-picturing that Venus where we see
The fancy out work nature: on each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they undid did.

Agg. O, rare for Antony!

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her! the eyes,
And made their heads adorning: at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers: the silken tackle
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That barely frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enthroned i' the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
ACT II.  ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.  SCENE V.

Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too
And made a gap in nature.

Ag.  Rare Egyptian!
Eno.  Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she replied,
It should be better he became her guest;
Which she entreated: our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of 'No' woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast,
And for his ordinary pays his heart
For what his eyes eat only.

Ag.  Royal wench! She made great Caesar lay his sword to bed:
He plough'd her, and she cropp'd.
Eno.  I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the public street;
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and pant'd,
That she did make defect perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec.  Now Antony must leave her utterly.
Eno.  Never; he will not:
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: other women clow,
The appetites they feed: but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies: for vilest things
Become themselves in her; that the holy priests
Bless her when she is right.

Mec.  If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Ag.  Let us go.
Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest
Whilst you abide here.

Eno.  Humbly, sir, I thank you.  [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.  Caesar's house.

Enter Antony, Caesar, Octavia between them, and Attendants.

Ant.  The world and my great office will some-Divide me from your bosom.  [times
Octa.  All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant.  Good night, sir.  My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come
Shall all be done by the rule.  Good night, dear lady.
Good night, sir.

Oec.  Good night.  [Exeunt Caesar and Octavia.

Enter Soothsayer.

Ant.  Now, sirrah; do you wish yourself in Egypt?

Sooth.  Would I had never come from thence, nor Thither!

Ant.  If you can, your reason?

Sooth.  I see it in My motion, have it not in my tongue: but yet
I lie to Egypt again.

Ant.  Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Caesar's or mine?

Sooth.  Caesar's.

Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side:
Thy demon, that 's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Caesar's is not; but, near him, thy angel Becomes a fear, as being overpow'rd: therefore
Make space enough between you.

Ant.  Speak this no more.

Sooth.  To none but thee; no more, but when to
If thou dost play with him at any game,
[thee.
Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds: thy lustre thickens,
When he shines by: I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him;
But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant.  Get thee gone:

Say to Ventidius I would speak with him:

[Exit Soothsayer.

He shall to Parthia.  Be it art or hap,
He hath spoken true: the very dice obey him;
And in our sports my better cunning faints,
Under his chance: if we draw lots, he speeds;
His cocks do win the battle still of mine.
When it is all to nought; and his qualls ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds.  I will to Egypt:
And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I' the cast my pleasure lies.

Enter Ventidius.

O, come, Ventidius,
You must to Parthia: your commission's ready;
Follow me, and receive 't.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same.  A street.

Enter Lepidus, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Lep.  Trouble yourselves no further: pray you,
Your generals after.

[ Hasten

Ag.  Sir, Mark Antony
Will 'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep.  Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec.  We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at the Mount
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep.  Your way is shorter;
My purposes do draw me much about:
You'll win two days upon me.

Mec.  Sir, good success!

Lep.  Farewell.  [Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo.  Give me some music; music, moody food
Of us that trade in love.

[Attend.

The music, ho!

Enter Mardian, the Evanuch.

Cleo.  Let it alone; let's to billiards: come, Charmian.

Char.  My arm is sore; best play with Mardian.

Cleo.  As well a woman with an ennuch play'd
As with a woman.  Come, you'll play with me, sir?

Mar.  As well as I can, madam.

Cleo.  And when good will is show'd, though 't is come too short,
The actor may plead pardon.  I'll none now:
Give me mine angle; we'll to the river: there,
My music playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fishes; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say 'Ah, ha! you're caught.'

Cher.  'T was merry when
You wager'd on your angling; when your diver
Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo.  That time,—O times!—
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience; and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drank him to his bed:
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan.

[Enter a Messenger.

Mes.  O, from Italy!
Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears!
That long time have been barnard.

Cleo.  Antonius dead!—If thou say so, villain,
Thou kill'st thy mistress: but well and free,
If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veils to kiss: a hand that kings
Have lipp’d, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he is well.

Ant. Why, there’s more gold.

But. Sirrah, mark, we use
To say the dead are well: bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;
But there’s no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful,—so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings! If not well,
Thou shouldst come like a Fury crown’d with
Not like a formal man.

[snakes.]

Mess. Will ‘t please you hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee ere thou speak’st:
Yet, if thou say Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Caesar, or not captive to him,
I’ll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee.

Mess. Madam, he’s well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Caesar.

Cleo. Thou’rt an honest man.

Mess. Caesar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. But yet, madam,—

Cleo. I do not like ’t But yet,’ it does alay
The good precedence: fie upon ’t But yet ’t!
‘ But yet ’t is as a gaoler to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Prithie, friend,--
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear, [Cesar;—
The good and bad together: he’s friends with
In state of health thou say’st; and thou say’st free.

Mess. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:
He’s bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turn?

Mess. For the best turn i’ the bed.

Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he’s married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee!

[Strike him down.]

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you? Hence,

[Strike him down again.]

Hor. Horrible villain! or I’ll spurn thine eyes
Like balls before me: I’ll unhaire thy head:

[She hates him up and down.

Thou shalt be whipp’d with wire, and stew’d in brine,
Smearing in lingering pickle.

Mess. Gracious madam, I that do bring the news made not the match.

Cleo. Say ’tis not so, a province I will give thee,
And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hast
Shall make thy peace for moving me to rage;
And I will boot thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He’s married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast lived too long.

[Draws a knife.

Nay, then I’ll run.

Mess. What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.

[Exit.]

Char. Good madam, keep yourself within your Man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents escape not the thunderbolt.
Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents! Call the slave again:
Though I am mad, I will not bite him: call.

Char. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him.

[Exit Charmian.]

These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.

---

SCENE VI.

Re-enter Charmian and Messenger.

Come hither, sir.

Though it be honest; it is never good
To bring bad news: give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell
Themselves when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

Mess. I cannot hate thee worse than I do,
If thou again say ‘Yes.’

Cleo. He’s married, madam.

Mess. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would thou didst,
So half my Egypt were subdued and made
A cistern for scaled snakes! Go, get thee hence:
Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness’ pardon.

Cleo. Take no offence that I would not offend you:
To punish me for what you make me do
Seems much unequal: he’s married to Octavia.

Mess. O, that his fault should make a knave of thee,
That art not what thou ‘rt sure of! Get thee hence:
The merchandise which thou hast brought from Rome.
Are all too dear for me: lie they upon thy hand,
And be undone by ‘em.

[Exit Messenger.]

Char. Good your highness, patience.

Cleo. In praising Antony, I have displeased Caesar.

Char. Many times, madam.

Cleo. I am paid for ’t now.

Mess. Lead me from hence;

Char. I faint: O Iras, Charmian! ’t is no matter.
Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him
Report the feature of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination, let him not leave out
The colour of her hair: bring me word quickly.

[Exit Alexas.]

Let him for ever go:—let him not—Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
The other way’s a Mars. Bid you Alexas

[To Mardian.]

Bring me word how tall she is. Pity me, Charmian,
But do not speak to me. Lead me to my chamber.

[Exit.]

SCENE VI.

Near Misenum.

Flourish Enter Pompey and Menæus at once, with Drum and trumpet: of another, Caesar, Antony, Lepi-dus, Enoborbus, Mæneas, with Soldiers Marching.

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine;

And we shall talk before we fight.

Ces. Most meet

That first we come to words; and therefore have we
Our written purposes before us sent;
Which, if thou hast considered, let us know
If ’t will tie up thy discontented sword,
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth
That else must perish here.

[Pom. To you all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods, I do not know
Whencefore my father should excommune want,
Having a son and friends; since Julius Caesar,
Who at Philippa the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was ’t That moved pale Cassius to conspire; and what Made the all-honour’d, honest Roman, Brutus,
With the arm’d rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the Capitol; but that they would Have one man but a man? And that is it
Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burthen
The anger’d ocean foams; with which I meant
ACT II.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE VII.

To scourge the ingratitude that despicable Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails;
We'll speak with thee at sea: at land, thou know'st
How much we do o'er-count thee.

Pom. At land, indeed,
Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house:
But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself,
Remain in 't as thou mayst.

Lep. Be pleased to tell us—
For this is from the present—how you take
The offers we have sent you.

Ant. There's the point.

Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth embraced,
To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Bid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome: this 'greed upon,
To part with unha'cl'd edges, and bear back
Our targes undented.

Ant. Lep. That's our offer.

Pom. Know, then,
I came before you here a man prepared
To take this offer: but Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience: though I lose
The praise of it by telling, you must know,
When Caesar and your brother were at blows,
Your mother came to Sicily and did find
Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks
Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand: I did not think, sir, to have met you here. [you,
Ant. The beds if the east are soft; and thanks to
That call'd me timelier than my purpose hither;
For I have gain'd by't.

Ces. There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not
What counts harsh fortune casts upon my face;
But in my bosom shall she never come,
To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. I hope so, Lepidus. Thus we are agreed:
I crave our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.

Ces. That's the next to do.

Pom. We'll feast each other ere we part; and Draw lots who shall begin. [let's

Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pom. No, Antony, take the lot: but, first
Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery
Shall have the fame. I have heard that Julius Grew fat with feasting there.

[Caesar

Ant. You have heard much.

Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pom. Then so much have I heard;
And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—

[Eno. No more of that: he did so.

Pom. What, I pray you?

Eno. A certain queen to Caesar in a mattress.

Pom. I know thee now: how farwest thou, soldier?

Eno. Well; and well am I like to do; for, I perceive,
Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand;
I never hated thee: I have seen thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Sir. I never loved you much; but I ha' praised ye,
When you have well deserved ten times as much
As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.

Ant. Aboard my galley I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

Ces. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Men. [Aside] Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—You and I have known,
Eno. At sea, I think. [sir.

Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me;
Though it cannot be denied what I have done by Men. Nor what I have done by water. [land.

Eno. Ye. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: if our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, whatso'ever their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true
Men. No slander; they steal hearts. [face.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure, he cannot weep 't back again.

Men. You've said, sir. We looked not for Mark
Antony here: pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Caesar's sister is called Octavia. [cellus.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Mar-
Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray ye, sir?

Eno. 'Tis true.

Men. Then is Caesar and he for ever knitted togeth-

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this uity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think the policy of that purpose made more in the marrying than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find, the band that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very strangler of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not I that he himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again; then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Caesar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is: he married but his occasion here.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard? I have a health for you. [in Egypt.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats
Men. Come, let's away. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—On board Pompey's galley, off

Misenum.

Music plays. Enter two or three Servants with a banquet.

First Serv. Here they'll be, man. Some o' their plants are ill-rooted already; the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

Sec. Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

First Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink. Sec. Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out 'No more;' reconciles them to his treaty, and himself to the drink.

First Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.
ACT II. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA. SCENE VII.

Se. Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men’s fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service as a partisan I could not leave.

First Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in’t, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

A semlet sounded. Enter Caesar, Antony, Lepidus, Pompey, Agrippa, Mecenas, Enobarbus, Menas, with other captains.

Ant. [To Caesar] Thus do they, sir: they take the flow o’ the Nile
By certain scales in the pyramid: they know,
By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth
Or foison follow: the higher Nilus swells,
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You’ve strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your croco-

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine! A health to Lepidus!
Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I’ll ne’er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept; I fear me you’ll be in till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard the Ptolemies’ pyramids are very good things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. [Aside to Pom.] Pompey, a word.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Say in mine ear: what is’t?

Men. [Aside to Pom.] Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain,
And hear me speak a word.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Forbear me till anon.
This wine for Lepidus!

Lep. What manner o’ thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth: it is just so high as it is, and moves with it own organs: it lives by that which nourisheth it; and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it own colour too.

Lep. ‘Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. ‘Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Ces. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] Go hang, sir, hang! Tell me of that: away!

Do as I bid you. Where’s this cup I call’d for?

Men. [Aside to Pom.] If for the sake of merit thou wilt bear it.

Rise from thy stool.

Pom. [Aside to Men.] I think thou’rt mad. The matter?

[Rises, and walks aside.

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast served me with much faith.

But what’s else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus,
Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say’st thou?

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world?

That’s twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, and, though thou think me poor, I am the man
Wilt give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.

Thou art, if thou darest be, the earthily Jove:

Whate’er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha’t.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these compatriots
Are in thy vessel: let me cut the cable; [lors,
And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:
All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou shouldst have done,
And not have spoke on’t! In me’t is villany:
In thee’t had been good service. Thou must know,
’Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour;
Mine honour, it. Repent that e’r thy tongue
Hath so betray’d thine act: being done unknown,
I should have found it afterwards well done;
But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. [Aside for this.
I’ll never follow thy path but fortunes more.
Who seeks, and will not take when once ’tis offer’d,
Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus!

Ant. Bear him ashore. I’ll pledge it for him,

Eno. Here’s to thee, Menas! [Pom. [Pom. Menas.

Enobarbus, welcome!

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There’s a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off Lepidus.

Men. Why? [see’st not?

Eno. A bears the third part of the world, man;

Men. The third part, then, is drunk: would it
That it might go on wheels! [were all,

Eno. Drink thou; increase the reels.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it. Strike the vessels, ho!
Here is to Caesar!

Ces. I could well forbear’t.

It’s monstrous labour, when I wash my brain,
And it grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o’ the time.

Men. Possess it, I’ll make answer;

But I had rather fast from all four days
Than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! [To Antony.

Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals,
And celebrate our drink?

Pom. Let’s ha’t, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let’s all take hands,

Till that the conquering wine hath steep’d our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands.

Make battery to our ears with the loud music:
The while I’ll place you: then the boy shall sing;

The holding every man shall bear as loud
As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. Enobarbus places them hand in hand.

THE SONG.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus with pink eye!
In thy fets our cares be drowned;
With thy grapes our hairs be crown’d:
Cup us, till the world go round,

Cup us, till the world go round!

Ces. What would you more? Pompey, good night. Good brother,
Let me request you off: our graver business
Frowns at this levity. Gentle lords, let’s part;
We see you have burnt our cheeks: strong Enobarbus
Is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antick’d us all. What needs more words? Good

Ant. Good Antony, your hand. [night.

Pom. I’ll try you on the shore.

Ant. And shall, sir: give’s your hand.

Pom. O Antony,
ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE II.

You have my father's house,—But, what? what are we Come, down into the boat. [friends.

Eno. Take heed you fall not.

MENNS, I'll not on shore.

Eno. Ho! says a'. There's my cap.

Men. Ho! Noble captain, come. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A plain in Syria.

Enter Ventidius as it were in triumph, with Silius, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead body of Paccorus borne before him.

Ven. Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck; and now
Pleased fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death
Make me revenger. Bear the king's son's body
Before our army. Thy Paccorus, Orodes,
Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius,
While yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,
The fugitive Parthians follow; sparrow through Media,
Mesopotamia, and the shadiers whither
The routed fly: so thy grand captain Antony
Shall set thee on triumphant chariots and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius,
I have done enough; a lower place, note well,
May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius;
Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame when he who serve's away.
Cesar and Antony have ever won
More in their officer than person: Sossius,
One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renown,
Which he achieved by the minute, lost his favour.
Who does i' the wars more than his captain can Become his captain's captain: and ambition,
The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss,
Than gain which darkens him.
I could do more to do Antonius good,
But 'twould offend him; and in his offence
Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius, that Without the which a soldier, and his sword, [tony?
Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to An-

Ven. 'Till humbly signify what in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected;
How, with his banners and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We have jaded out o' the field.

Sil. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens: whither, with what haste
The weight we must convey with 's will permit,
We shall appear before him. On, there; pass along! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Rome. An ante-chamber in Cesar's house.

Enter Agrippa at one door, Eobabarbus at another.

Agr. What, are the brothers parted? [gone;

Eno. They have dispatch'd with Pompey, he is
The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps
To part from Rome; Cesar is sad; and Lepidus,
Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled
With the green sickness.

Agr. 'Tis a noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: O, how he loves Cesar!

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark Antony!

These drums! these trumpets, flutes! what!
Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell
To these great fellows: sound and be hang'd, sound out! [Sound a flourish, with drums.

Eno. Ho! says a'. There's my cap.

Men. Ho! Noble captain, come. [Exeunt.

Eno. Spake you of Cesar? How! the nonpareil!

Agr. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird!

Eno. Would you praise Cesar, say 'Cesar': go no further. [praises.

Agr. Indeed, he plied them both with excellent

Eno. But he loves Cesar best; yet he loves An-

Tony: [cannot

Ho! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets,
Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!
His love to Antony. But as for Cesar,
Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves,

Eno. They are his shadirs, and he their beetle. [Trumpets within.] So

This is to horse: Adieu, noble Agrippa.

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

Enter Cesar, Antony, Lepidus, and Octavia.

Ant. No further, sir.

Cesar. You take me from me a great part of myself;
Use me well in't. Sister, prove such a wife
As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest band
Shall pass on thy approach. Most noble Antony,
Let not the piece of virtue, which is set
Betwixt us as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the run to batter
The fortress of it; for better might we
Have loved without this mean, if on both parts
This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended
In your distrust.

Cesar. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find,

Though you be therein curious, the least cause
For what you seem to fear: so, the gods keep you,
And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends!
We will here part.

Cesar. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well:
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well.

Opet. My noble brother!

Ant. The April's in her eyes: it is love's spring,
And these the showers to bring it on. Be cheerful.

Oct. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—

Cesar. What, Octavia?

Oct. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can
Her heart inform her tongue,—the swan's down-feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
And neither way inclines.

Eno. [Aside to Agr.] Will Cesar weep?

Agr. [Aside to Eno.] He has a cloud in his face.

Eno. [Aside to Agr.] He was the worse for that,
were he a horse;

So is he, being a man.

Agr. [Aside to Eno.] Why, Eobabarbus,
When Antony found Julius Cesar dead,
He cried almost he was roaring; and he wept
When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. [Aside to Agr.] That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound he wail'd,
Believe 't, till I wept too.

ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE V.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much
That so I harried him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend,
And serving you so long! [Charimian:
Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good
But 't is no matter; thou shalt bring him to me
Where I will write. All may be well enough.
Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Athens. A room in Antony's house.

Enter Antony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import,—but he hath waged
'Gainst Pompey; made his will, and read
To public ear:
Spoke scantly of me: when perforce he could not
But say me terms of honour, cold and sickly
He vented them; most narrow measure lent me:
When the best hint was given him, he not took it,
Or did it from his teeth.

Oct. O my good lord,
Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,
If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
Praying for both parts:
The good gods will mock me presently,
When I shall pray, 'O, bless my lord and husband!'—
Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
'O, bless my brother!' Husband win, win brother,
Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway
'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks
Best to preserve it: if I lose mine honour,
I lose myself; better I were not yours
Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,
Yourself shall go between: the mean time, lady,
I'll raise the preparation of a war
Shall strain your brother: make your soonest haste;
So your desires are yours.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.
The Jove of power make me most weak, most weak,
Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men
Shouldoulder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,
Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love
Can equally move with them. Provide your going;
Choose your own company, and command what cost
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. Another room.

Enter Enobarbus and Eros, meeting.

Eros. How now, friend Eros!

Eros. There's strange news come, sir.

Eno. What, man?

Eros. Cesar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

Eno. This is old: what is the success?

Eros. Cesar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry:
would not let him partake in the glory of the action:
and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal, seizes him: so the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confines.

Eno. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no
And throw between them all the food thou hast,
They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony?
ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.  SCENE VII.

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurns
The rush that lies before him; cries, 'Fool Lepidus!' And threatens the throat of that his officer That murder'd Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigg'd.

Eros. For Italy and Caesar. More, Domitius; My lord desires you presently: my news I might have told hereafter.

Eno. 'T will be naught.

But let it be. Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come, sir.  [Exeunt.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Mecenas.

Ces. Contemning Rome, he has done all this, and In Alexandria; here's the manner of 't: [more, I' the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd, Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold Were publickly enthron'd; at the feet sat Caesarion, whom they call my father's son, And all the unlawful issue that their lust Since then hath made between them. Unto her He gave the establishment of Egypt; made her Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, Absolute queen. Mec. This in the public eye? [Erasure. Ces. 'T is the common show-place, where they ex-His sons he there proclaim'd the kings of kings: Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia, He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia: she In the habiliments of the goddess Isis That they appear'd; and oft before gave audience, As 't is reported, so. Let Rome be thus Inform'd.

Agr. Who, quasy with his insolence Already, will their good thoughts call from him. Ces. The people know it; and have now received His accusations.

Agr. Who does he accuse?

Ces. Caesar: and that, having in Sicily Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him His part o' the isle: then does he say, he lent me Some shipping unseasonable; that he, by he frets That Lepidus of the triumvirate Should be deposed; and, being, that we detain All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Ces. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone. I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel; That be his high authority abused, [quer'd, And did deserve his change: for what I have con-grant him part; but then, in his Armenia, And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He 'll never yield to that.

Ces. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter Octavia with her train.

Oct. Hail, Caesar, and—my lord! hail, most dear Caesar!

Ces. That ever I should call thee castaway! Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause. Ces. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You Like Caesar's sister: the wife of Antony [come not Should have an army for an usher, and The neighs of horse to tell of her approach Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way Should have borne men; and expectation faint'd, Longing for what it had not; nay, the dust Should have ascended to the roof of heaven, Raised by your populous troops: but you are come A market-maid to Rome: and have prevented The ostentation of our love, which, left unshown, Is often left unloved: we should have met you By sea and land; supplying every stage With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord, To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did On my free will. My lord, Mark Antony, Hearing that you prepared for war, acquainted My griev'd ear withal; whereon, I begg'd His pardon for return.

Ces. Which soon he granted, Being an obstruct 'tween his lust and him. Oct. Do not say so, my lord. Ces. I have eyes upon him, And his affairs come to me on the wind. Where is he now?

Oct. My lord, in Athens. Ces. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra Hath nod'd him to her. He hath given his empire Up to a whore; who now are levying The kings o' the earth for war: he hath assembled Bocchus, the king of Libya; Archelaus, Of Cappadocia; Philædæos, king Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas, King Malchus of Arabia; King of Pont; Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king Of Comagene; Poelmon and Amyntas, The kings of Mede and Lycaonia, With a more larger list of sceptres.

Oct. Ay me, most wretched, That have my heart parted betwixt two friends That do afflict each other! Ces. Welcome hither: Your letters did withhold our breaking forth; Till we perceived, both how you were wrong led, and we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart: Be you not troubled with the time, which drives O'er your content these strong necessities; But let determined things to destiny Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome; Nothing more dear to me. You are abused Beyond the mark of thought: and the great gods, To do you justice, make them ministers Of us and those that love you. Best of comfort; And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.

Mec. Welcome, dear madam. Each heart in love does offer him, and pity you: Only the adulterous Antony, most large In his abominations, turns you off; And gives his potent regiment to a trull, That noises it against us.

Oct. Is it so, sir?

Ces. Most certain. Sister, welcome: pray you, Be ever known to patience: my dear'st sister! [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Near Actium.  Antony's camp.

Enter Cleopatra and Enochorus.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not. Eno. But why, why, why? Cleo. Thou hast forspoke my being in these wars, And say'st it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it?

Cleo. If not denounced against you, why should not we Be there in person?

Eno. [Aside] Well, I could reply: If we should serve with horse and mares together, The horse were merely lost; the mares would bear A soldier and his horse.

Cleo. What is 't you say?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony; Take from his heart, take from his brain, from's time, What should not then be spared. He is already Traduced for levity; and 't is said in Rome
ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE X.

That Photinus an eunuch and your maids
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome, and their tongues rot
That speak against us! A charge we bear! the war,
And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done.
Here comes the emperor.

Enter Antony and Canidius.

Ant. Is it not strange, Canidius,
That from Tarentum and Brundisium
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in Taurine? You have heard on’t, sweet?
Cleo. Celerity is never more admired
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well become the best of men,
To taunt at slackness. Canidius, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! what else?

Ant. Can. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to’t.

Cleo. So hath my lord dared him to single fight.

Eno. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia,
Where Caesar fought with Pompey: but these offers,
Which serve not for his vantage, he shkes off;
And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann’d;
Your mariners are muleters, reapers, people
Ingress’d by swift impress; in Cesar’s fleet
Are those that often have ‘gainst Pompey fought:
Their ships are yare; yours, heavy: no disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepared for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.

Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark’d footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From firm security.

Ant. I’ll fight at sea.

Cleo. I have sixty sails, Caesar none better.

Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full mann’d, from the head of Actium
Beat the approaching Caesar. But if we fail,
We then can do’t at land.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Thy business?

Ant. Set we our squadrons on yond side o’ the hill,
In eye of Caesar’s battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Another part of the plain.

Enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. The news is true, my lord; he is descried
Cesar has taken Taurine.

Ant. Can he be there in person? ’t is impossible;
Strange that his power should be. Canidius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse. We’ll to our ship:
Away, my Thetis!

Enter a Soldier.

Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: do you mistake
This sword and these my wounds? Let the Egyptian
And the Phoenicians go a-ducking: we Hath used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well; away! We are women’s men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?
Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justeius,
Publicola, and Caecilius, are for sea:
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cesar’s
Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions as Bequiled all spies.

Can. Who’s his lieutenant, hear you?
Sold. They say, one Taurus.

Can. Well I know the man.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Another part of the plain.

Enter Antony and Cleopatra.

Cleo. Antony, Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.

Cleo. March with his land army one way over the stage; and Taurus, the lieutenant of Caesar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a sea-fight.

Enobarb. Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Naught, naught, naught! I can behold
The Antoniad, the Egyptian admiral, [no longer:
With all their sixty, fly and turn the rudder:
To see’t mine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scarus.

Scars. Gods and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What’s thy passion? Scarus. The greater candy of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss’d away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?

Scars. On our side like the token’d pestileence,
Where death is sure. Yon ribauded mag of Egypt,—
Whom leprous o’ertake!—’t the midst o’ the fight,
When vantage like a pair of twins appear’d,
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,
The breese upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails and flies.

Eno. That I beheld:
Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Endure a further view.

Scars. She once being loof’d,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing, and, like a doting mallard,
Leaving the fight in height, flies after her;
I never saw an action of such shame:
Experience, manhood, honour, ne’er before
Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!
Enter Candidius.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath, and sinks most lamentably. Had our general been what he knew himself, it had gone well: O, he has given example for our flight, most grossly, by his own!

Ero. Ay, are you thereabouts?

Why then, good night indeed.

Can. Toward Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'Tis easy to 't; and there I will attend what further comes.

Can. To Cassius will I render my legions and my horse: six kings already show me the way of yielding.

Ero. I'll yet follow.

The wounded chance of Antony, though my reason sits in the wind against me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE XI.—Alexandria. Cleopatra’s palace.

Enter Antony with attendants.

Ant. Hark! the land bids me tread no more upon 't; it is ashamed to bear me! Friends, come hither: I am so lated in the world, that I have lost my way for ever: I have a ship laden with gold; take that, divide it; fly, and make your peace with Caesar.

All. Fly! not we.

Ant. I have fled myself; and have instructed cowards to run and show their shoulders. Friends, be gone; I have myself resolved upon a course, which has no need of you: be gone! My treasure’s in the harbour, take it. O, I follow'd that I blush to look upon: My very hairs do mutiny; for the white reproves the brown for rashness, and they them for fear and dooting. Friends, be gone; you shall have letters from me to some friends that will sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad, nor make replies of leatheness: take the hint which my despair proclaims; let that be left which leaves itself: to the sea-roll straightway: I will possess you of that ship and treasure. Leave me, I pray, a little; pray you now: Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command, therefore I pray you: I’ll see you by and by.

[Sits down.

Enter Cleopatra led by Charmian and Iras; Eros following.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him, comfort him.

Iras. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do! why: what else?

Cle. Let me sit down. O Juno!

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir?

Ant. O fle, fle, fle!

Char. Madam!

Iras. Madam, O good empress!

Eros. Sir, sir—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes; he at Philippi kept his sword o’er like a dancer: while I struck the lean and wrinkled Cassius; and ’twas I that the mad Brutus ended; he alone dealt on lieutenant, and no practice had in the brave squares of war: yet now—No matter.

Cleo. Ah, stand by.

Eros. The queen may lord, the queen.

Iras. Go to him, madam, speak to him:

He is unqualified with very shame.

Char. Well then, sustain me: O!

Eros. Most noble sir, arise: the queen approaches; her head’s declined, and death will seize her, but your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation,

A most amiable swerving.

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See, how I convey my shame out of thine eyes by looking back what I have left behind: Stray’d in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord, forgive my fearful sails! I little thought you would have follow’d.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew’st too well my heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings, and thou shouldst tow me after: ’er my spirit thy full supremacy thou knew’st, and that thy beek might from the bidding of the gods command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon!

Ant. Now I must to the young man send humble treatises, dodge and palter in the shifts of lowness: who with half the bulk o’ the world play’d as I pleased, making and marring fortunes. You did know how much you were my conqueror; and that my sword, made weak by my affection, would obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon!

Ant. Fall not a tear, I pray; one of them rates all that is won and lost: give me a kiss; even this repays me. We sent our schoolmaster; is he come back? Love, I am full of lead. [Knows some wine, within there, and our viands! Fortune we scorn her most when most she offers blows.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE XII.—Egypt. Caesar’s camp.

Enter Caesar, Dolabella, Thryerus, with others.

Ces. Let him appear that’s come from Antony.

Know you him?

Dol. Caesar, ’tis his schoolmaster: an argument that he is pluck’d, when hither he sends so poor a pinion of his wing, which had superfluous kings for messengers not many moons gone by.

Enter Euphrénus, ambassador from Antony.

Ces. Approach, and speak.

Euph. Such as I am, I come from Antony: I was of late as petty to his ends as is the morn-dew on the myrtle-leaf to his grand sea.

Ces. Be’t so; declare thine office.

Euph. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and requires to live in Egypt: which not granted, he lessens his requests; and to thee sues to let him breathe between the heavens and earth, a private man in Athens: this for him.

Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness; submits her to thy might; and of these graves the circle of the Ptolemies for her heirs, now hazard’d to thy grace.

Ces. For Antony, I have no ears to his request. The queen of audience nor desire shall fail, so she from Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend, or take his life there: this if she perform, she shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Euph. Fortune pursue thee!

Ces. Bring him through the bands.

[Exeunt Euphrénus.

[To Thryerus] To try thy eloquence, now ’tis time: dispatch.

From Antony win Cleopatra: promise, and in our name, what she requires; add more, from thine invention, offers: women are not in their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure the neer-touch’d vestal: try thy cunning, Thryerus;
ACT III.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA. SCENE XIII.

Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we
Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Caesar, I go.
Ces. Observe how Antony becomes his law,
And what thou think'st his very action speaks
In every power that moves.

Thyr. Caesar, I shall. [Exeunt.

SCENE XIII.—Aleandria. Cleopatra’s palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, and Irass.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?
Eno. Think, and die.
Cleo. Is Antony or we in fault for this?
Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled
From that great face of war, whose several ranges
Frighted each other? why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick’d his captainship: at such a point,
When half to half the world opposed, he being
The meek’d question: ’twas a shame no less
Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,
And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Prithée, peace.

Enter Antony with Euphranios, the Ambassador.

Ant. Is that his answer?
Euph. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen shall then have courtesy, so she Will yield us up.

Euph. He says so.

Ant. Let her know’t.

To the boy Caesar send this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again: tell him he wears the rose
Of youth upon him; from which the world should note
Something particular: his coin, ships, legions,
May be a coward’s; whose ministers would prevail
Under the service of a child as soon
As ’t he command of Caesar: I dare him therefore
To lay his gay comparisons apart,
And answer me declined, sword against sword,
Ourselves alone. I’ll write it: follow me.

[Exeunt Antony and Euphranios.

Eno. [Aside] Yes, like enough; high-battled Caesar will
Unstate his happiness, and be staged to the show,
Against a swor’d! I see men’s judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward
Do draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream,
Knowing all measures, the full Caesar will Answer his emptiness! Caesar, thou hast subdued
His judgment too.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. A messenger from Caesar.
Cleo. What, no more ceremony? See, my women!
Against the blown rose may they stop their nose
That kneel’d unto the buds. Admit him, sir.

[Exit Attendant.

Eno. [Aside] Mine honesty and I begin to square.
The loyalty well held to fools does make
Our faith more holy: yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall’n lord
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
And earns a place i’ the story.

Enter Thyreus.

Cleo. Caesar’s will?
Thyr. Hear it apart.
Cleo. None but friends: say boldly.

Thyr. So, ha’ly, are they friends to Antony?
Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Caesar has;
Or needs not us. If Caesar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: for us, you know
Whose he is we are, and that is, Caesar’s.
Thyr. Thus then, thou most renown’d: Caesar entreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand’st,
Further than he is Caesar.
Cleo. Go on: right royal.
Thyr. He knows that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you fear’d him.
Cleo. O! Thy. The scars upon your honour, therefore, he Does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserved.
Cleo. He is a god, and knows
What is most right: mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer’d merely.
Eno. [Aside] To be sure of that,
I will ask Antony. Sir, sir, thou art so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.

Thyr. Shall I say to Caesar
What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desired to give. It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you should make a staff
To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shrowd,
The universal landlord.
Cleo. What’s your name?
Thyr. My name is Thyreus.
Cleo. Most kind messenger,
Say to great Caesar this: in deputation
I kiss his conquering hand: tell him, I am prompt
To lay my crown at’s feet, and there to kneel:
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear
The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. ’T is your noblest course.
Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.

Your Caesar’s father oft,
When he hath mused of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow’d his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain’d kisses.

Re-enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders! What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One that but performs
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obey’d.

Eno. [Aside] You will be whip’d.

Ant. Approach, there! Ah, you kifie! Now, gods and devils! [Exit.
Authority melts from me: of late, when I cried
Like boys unto a muss, kings would start forth,
And cry ‘Your will?’ Have you no ears? I am Antony yet.

Enter Attendants.

Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. [Aside] ’T is better playing with a lion’s
Than with an old one dying.

Whip him. Were’t twenty of the greatest tributaries
That do acknowledge Caesar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of her she, —what’s her name,
Since she was Cleopatra? Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine alound for mercy: take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony!

Ant. Tug him away: being whip’d,
ACT IV.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE I.

Bring him again: this Jack of Caesar's shall bear us an errand to him.

[Exit Attendants with Thyeus.]

You were half blasted ere I knew you: ha! Have I my pillow left unpressed'd in Rome, Forborne the getting of a lawful race, And by a gem of women, to be abused By one that looks on feeders?

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a boggler ever:

But when we in our viciousness grow hard— 0 misery on 't!—the wise gods seal our eyes; [us Is our own slight drop our clear judgments; make Adore our errors; laugh at 's, while we strut To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is 't come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel cold upon Dead Caesar's tureen; nay, you were a fragment Of Cneius Pompey's; besides what hotter hours, Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out: for, I am sure, Though you can guess what temperance should be, You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards And say 'God quit you!' be familiar with My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal And plighted of high hearts! O, that I were Upon the hill of Basan, to outroar The Horned herd! for I have savage cause; And to proclaim it civilly, were like A halter'd neck which does the hangman thank For being wary about him.

Re-enter Attendants with Thyeus. Is he whipp'd?

First Att. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. 'Cried he? and begg'd a pardon?'

First Att. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou sorry To follow Caesar in his triumph, since Thou hast been whipp'd for following him: henceforth

The white band of a lady fever thee. Shake thou to look on 't. Get thee back to Caesar, Tell him thy entertainment: look, thou say He makes me angry with him; for he seems Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am, Not what he knew I was: he makes me angry; And at this time easy 't is to do 't, When my good stars, that were my former guides, Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires Into the abyss of hell. If he mislike My speech and what is done, tell him he has Hipparchus, my enchanced bondman, whom He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture, As he shall like, to quell me: urge it thou: Hence with thy stripes, begone! [Exit Thyeus.

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terreneren moon Is now eclipsed; and it portends alone The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,

From my cold heart let heaven engender hail, And poison it in the source; and the first stone Drop in my neck: as it determines, so

Dissolve my life! The next Caesarion smite! Till by degrees the memory of my womb, Together with my brave Egyptians all, By the discandying of this pelleted storm, I lie graveless, fill the flies and gnats of Nile Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cesar sits down in Alexandria; where I will oppose his fate. Our force by land Hath nobly held: our seyen'ry navy too Have knit again, and fleet, threatening most sea-like, Where hast thou been, my heart? Dost thou hear, If from the field I shall return once more [lady? To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood; And my sword will earn our chronicle:

There's hope in 't yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breathed, And fight maliciously: for when mine hours Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives Of me for jests; but now I'll set my teeth, And send to darkness all that stop me. Come, Let's have one other gaudy night; call to me All my sad captains; fill our bowls once more; Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birth-day:

I had thought to have held it poor; but, since my lord Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord. Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them; and to-night I'll force

The wine peep through their scars. Come on, my queen;

There's sap in 't yet. The next time I do fight, I'll make death love me; for I will contend Even with his pestilent seythe. [Exit all but Enoarbus.

Eno. Now he'll outstage the lightning. To be furious, Is to be frightened out of fear; and in that mood The dove will peck the egresside; and I see still, A diminution in our captain's brain Restores his heart: when valour preys on reason, It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek Some way to leave him.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Mecenas, with his Army; Caesar reading a letter.

Cces. He calls me boy; and chides, as he had power To beat me out of Egypt; my messenger—

He hath whipp'd with rods; dares me to personal combat,

Cesar to Antony: let the old ruffian know I have many other ways to die; meantime Laugh at his challenge.

Mcc. Caesar must think,

When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now Make boot of his distraction; never anger Made good guard for itself.

Ces. Let our best heads Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles We mean to fight: within our files there are, Of those that served Mark Antony but late, Enough to fetch him in. See it done; And feast the army: we have store to do 't, And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony! [Exeunt.
ACT IV.

Enter Antony, Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, Iras, Aegyptius, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitian.

Eno. [aside.] No, he thinks, being twenty times of better force than I am, twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier, by sea and land I'll fight: or I will live, or I will die as my dying honour in the blood shall make it live again. Woe! 'tis thou fight well?

Eno. 'Tis; I'll strike, and cry 'Tis a good trick.

Ant. Well said; come on.

Call forth my household servants: let's to-night.

Enter three or four Servitors.

Give me thy hand, good fellow; thou hast been rightly honest:—so hast thou;—Thou, and thou; and thou:—you have served me and kings have been your fellows.

[An Eunuch and a physician enter: they attend Cleopatra.

Ant. What's this? Is it one of those odd tricks which Woes sharp the inmost mind of me?

Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too. I wish I could be made so many men, and all of you clapp'd up together in an Antony, that I might do you service so good as you have done.

All. The gods forbid!

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night: Send not my cups; and make as much of me as when mine empire was your fellow too, and suffer'd my command.

Cleo. [aside.] What does he mean?

Eno. [aside to Eno.] What is this? What is this to-night? What is this that makes us woe?

Ant. Tend me to-night; may be it is the period of your duty: Haply you shall not see me more; or if, A mangled shadow: perchance to-morrow you'll serve another master. I look on you as one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends, I turn you not away; but, like a master Married to your good service, stay till death: Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more, And the gods yield you for't!

Eno. What mean you, sir, to give them this discomfort? Look, they weep; and I, an ass, am onion-eyed: for shame, Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho! Now the witch take me, if I mean it thus! Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty friends, you take me in too dolorous a sense; For I spake to you for your comfort; did desire you To burn this night with torches; know, my hearts, I hope well of to-morrow; and will lead you Where rather I'll expect victorious life Than death and honour. Let's to supper, come, And drown consideration.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. Before the palace.

Enter two Soldiers to their guard.

First Sold. Brother, good night: to-morrow is the day.

Sec. Sold. It will determine one way: fare you well.

If you come of nothing strange about the streets?

First Sold. Nothing. What news?

Sec. Sold. Belike 'tis but a rumour. Good night to you.

First Sold. Well, sir, good night.

Enter two other Soldiers.

Sec. Sold. Soldiers, have careful watch.

Third Sold. And you. Good night, good night. [They place themselves in every corner of the stage. Fourth Sold. Here we are: and if to-morrow our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope Our landmen well will stand up.

Third Sold. 'T is a brave army, and full of purpose.

[Music of the hautboys as under the stage.

Fourth Sold. Peace! what noise?

First Sold. List, list!

Sec. Sold. Hark!

First Sold. Music i' the air.

Third Sold. Under the earth.

Fourth Sold. It signs well, does it not?

Third Sold. No.

First Sold. Peace, I say! What should this mean?

[loved,

Sec. Sold. 'T is the god Hercules, whom Antony now leaves him.

First Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchers Do hear what we do? [They advance to another post.

Sec. Sold. How now, masters! All. [Speaking together] How now! How now! do you hear this?

First Sold. Ay; is't not strange?

Third Sold. Do you hear, masters? do you hear? First Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have Let's see how it will give off.

All. [quarter.] Content. 'T is strange. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. A room in the palace.

Enter Antony and Cleopatra, Charmian, and others attending.

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros! Sleep a little.

Cleo. No, my chuck. Eros, come; mine armour, Eros! Enter Eros with armour.

Come, good fellow, put mine iron on: If fortune be not ours to-day, it is because we brave her: come.

Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.

What's this for?

Ant. Ah, let be, let be! thou art the armurer of my heart: false, false; this, this. Cleo. Sooth, I'll help: thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well; we shall thrive now. Seest thou, my good fellow? Go put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly, sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well?

Ant. Rarely, rarely: He that unbucks this, till we do please To daff 't for our repose, shall hear a storm. Thou fustiest, Eros; and my queen's a squire More tight at this than thou: dispatch. O love, That thou couldst see my wars to-day, and knew'st the royal occupation! thou should'st see A workman in't.

Enter an armed Soldier.

Good morrow to thee: welcome: Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge: To business that we love we rise betime, And go to 't with delight.

A thousand, sir. Early though 't be, have on their riveted trim, And at the port expect you.

[Shout. Trumpets flourish.

Enter Captains and Soldiers.

Cpt. The morn is fair. Good morrow, general.

All. Good morrow, general.
SCENE V.—Alexandria. Antony's camp.

Enter Antony and Eros; a Soldier meeting them.

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony!
Ant. Would thou and those thy sears had once prevail'd
To make me fight at land!
Sold. Hadst thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Flow'd thy cheeks.
Ant. Who's gone this morning?
Sold. Who!

One ever near thee: call for Enobarbus,
He shall not hear thee: or from Caesar's camp
Say 'I am none of thine.'
Ant. What say'st thou? Sir,
He is with Cæsar.
Eros. Sir, his chests and treasure
He not with him.
Ant. Is he gone?
Sold. Most certain.
Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee: write to him—
I will subscribe—gentle adiues and greetings;
Say that I wish he never more find cause
To change a master. O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men! Dispatch.—Enobarbus!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Alexandria. Cæsar's camp.

Flourish. Enter Cæsar, Agrippa, with Enobarbus, and others.

Cæs. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight:
Our will is Antony be took alive;
Make it so known.
Agr. Cæsar, I shall.

[Exit.]
Cæs. The time of universal peace is near;
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd world
Shall bear the olive freely.

[Enter Agrippa.]

Antony.

Mess. Is come into the field.
Cæs. Go charge Agrippa
Plant those that have revolted in the van,
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Exeunt all but Enobarbus.]

Eros. Alexas did revolt; and went to Jewry on Affairs of Antony; there did persuade
Great Herod to incline himself to Cæsar,
And leave his master Antony; for this pains
Cæsar hath hang'd him. Candidus and the rest
That fell away have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill;
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Cæsar's.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony
Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty overplus: the messenger
Came on my guard; and at thy tent is now
Unloading of his mules.

Eros. I give it you.
Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus.
I tell you true: best you saved the bringer
Out of the host; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done 't myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove.

[Exit.]
Eros. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O Antony,
Thou mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude
Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows my heart:
If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought: but thought will do't,
I fight against thee: No: I will go seek'The
Some ditch wherein to die; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life.

[Exit.]

SCENE VII.—Field of battle between the camps.

Alarums. Drums and trumpets. Enter Agrippa
and others.

Agr. Retire, we have engaged ourselves too far:
Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected.

[Exeunt.]

Alarums. Enter Antony, and Scarus wounded,
Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!
Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads.

Ant. Thou blest'st space.
Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 't is made an H.

Ant. They do retire.
Scar. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes: I have yet
Room for six scotches more.

[Enter Eros.]

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage
For a fair victory.

[Exeunt.]

[Enter Cæsar, and others.

Cæs. To-morrow, when the morning riseth,
Washed with the dew
And scald'd with the sun's first beam,
We'll stand the battle; and with a fire
Dreaded as bitter and so searing hot
As the green hart on the bloody heath;
We'll settle even with this rebel Antony;
And so return home, laden with the spoil
Our eyes do hourly mark.

[Enter Cleopatra, attended.

Cleo. To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee. [To Cleo.] O thou day of the world,

767
Chain mine arm’d neck; leap thou, attire and all; Through proof of harness to my heart, and there Ride on the pants triumphing?

Cle. Lord of lords!

Our infinite virtue, comest thou smiling From the world’s great sense uncaught?

Ant. My nightingale, We have beat them to their beds. What, girl, though grey Do something mingled with our younger brown, yet One brain that nourishes our nerves, and can [ha ‘we Get goal for goal of youth. Behold this man; Command unto his lips thy favouring hand: Kiss it, my warrior: he hath fought to-day As if a god, in hate of mankind, had Destroy’d in such a shape.

Cleo. I’ll give thee, friend, An armour all of gold; it was a king’s.

Ant. He has deserved it, were it carbuncled Like holy Phæbus’ car. Give me thy hand; Through Alexandria make a jolly march; Betwixt our hand’s full targets like the men that owe Had our great palace the capacity [them: To camp this host, we all would sup together, And drink carouseth to the next day’s fate, Which promises royal peril. Trumpeters, With brazen din blast down the city’s ear; Make mingle with our rattling labours; That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together, Applauding our approach.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Cæsar’s camp.

Sentinels at their post.

First Sold. If we be not relieved within this hour, We must return to the court of guard: the night Is shiny; and they say we shall embattle By the second hour if the morn.

Sec. Sold. This last day was A shrewd one to’s.

Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. O, hear me witness, night,—

Third Sold. What man is this?

Sec. Sold. Stand close, and list him.

Eno. Be witness to me, O thou blessed moon, When men revolted shall upon record Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did Before thy face repent!

First Sold. Enobarbus! Peace!

Hark further. Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy, The poisonous damp of night dispone upon me, That life, a very rebel to my will, May hang no longer on me: throw my heart Against the flat and hardness of my fault; Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder, And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony, Nobler than my revolt is infamous, Forgive me in thine own particular; But let the world rank me in register A master-levy and a fugitive: O Antony! O Antony! [Dies.

Sec. Sold. Let’s speak To him.

First Sold. Let’s hear him, for the things he speaks May concern Cæsar.

Third Sold. Let’s do so. But he sleeps.

Sec. Sold. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer as Was never yet for sleep. [his Third Sold. Awake, sir, awake; speak to us.

Sec. Sold. Hear you, sir?

First Sold. The hand of death hath raught him. [Drums afar off.] Hark! the drums

Demurely wake the sleepers. Let us bear him To the court of guard; he is of note: our hour Is fully out.

Third Sold. Come on, then; He may recover yet.

[Exeunt with the body.

SCENE X.—Between the two camps.

Enter Antony and Scærus, with their army.

Ans. Their preparation is to-day by sea;

We please them not by land.

Scærus. For both, my lord.

Ant. I would they ’d fight ’t the fire or ’t the air; We’d fight there too. But this it is; our foot Upon the hills adjoining to the city Shall stay with us: order for sea is given; They have put forth the haven... Where their appointment we may best discover, And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt.

SCENE XI.—Another part of the same.

Enter Cæsar, and his army.

Cæs. But being charged, we will be still by land, Which, as I take ’t, we shall: for his best force Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales, And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.

SCENE XII.—Another part of the same.

Enter Antony and Scærus.

Ant. Yet they are not join’d: where yond pine does stand, I shall discover all: I’ll bring thee word Straight, how ’tis like to go. [Exit. Scærus. Swallows have built In Cleopatra’s sails their nests: the augurers Say they know not, they cannot tell; look grimly, And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony Is valiant, and deserted; and, by starts, His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear, Of what he has, and what has not.

[Alarum afar off, as at a sea-fight. Re-enter Antony.

Ant. All is lost; This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me: My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder They cast their caps up and carouse together Like friends long lost. Triple-turn’d whore! ’tis Hast sold me to this novice: and my heart [thou Makes only wars on thee. Bid them all fly; For when I am revenged upon my chariot, I have done all. Bid them all fly; begone.

[Exit Scærus.

O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more: Fortune and Antony part here: even here Do we shake hands. All come to this? The hearts That spaniel’d me at heels, to whom I gave Their wishes, do disconsolately their sweets On blossoming Cæsar; and this pine is bark’d, That overtopp’d them all. Betray’d I am: O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,— Whose eye beck’d forth my wars, and call’d them home; Whose bosom was my crownet, my chief end,— Like a right gypsy, hath, at fast and loose, Beguiled me to the very heart of loss. What, Eros, Eros!

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt! Cleo. Why is my lord enraged against his love? Ant. Vanish, or I shall give thee thy deserving, And blemish Cæsar’s triumph. Let him take thee, And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians: Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
ACT IV.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Scene XIV.

Between her heart and lips: she render'd life,
Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead, then?

Mar. Dead. Unarm, Eros: the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep. [To Mar.] That thou depart'st hence safe,
Does pay thy labour richly; go. [Exit Marcellus.

Eros. The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep
The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!
Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,
Crack thy frail case! Apace, Eros, apace.
No more a soldier: bruised pieces, go;
You have been nobly borne. From me awhile. [Exit Eros.

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is torture: since the torch is out,
Lie down, and stay no farther: now all labour
Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles
Itself with strength; seal then, and all is done.
Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me:
Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand,
And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze:
Dido and her Aeneas shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours. Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter Eros.

Eros. What would my lord?
Ant. Since Cleopatra died,
I have lived in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword
Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back
With ships made cities, condemn myself to lack
The courage of a woman; less noble mind
Than she which by her death our Caesar tells
'I am conqueror of myself.' Thou art sworn, Eros,
That, when the exigent should come, which now
Is come indeed, when I should see behind me
The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command,
Thou then wouldst kill me: do 't; the time is come:
Thou strikst not me, 'tis Caesar thou defeat'st.
Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!

Ant. Shall I do that which all the Parthian darts,
Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Eros. Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome and see
Thy master thus with pleas'd arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdued
To penetrative shame, whilst the wheel'd seat
Of fortunate Caesar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensued?

Eros. I would not see 't.
Ant. Come, then; for with a wound I must becur'd.
Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn
Most useful for thy country.

O, sir, pardon me!

Ant. When I did make thee free, swornest thou not then
To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurposed. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turn from me, then, that noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee! [Turning from him.

Eros. My sword is drawn.

Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master,
My captain, and my emperor, let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said, man; and farewell.

Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now, Eros.
ACT IV.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE XV.

Eros. Why, there then: thus I do escape the sorrow
Of Antony's death.

Ant.

Kills himself.

Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what
I should, and thou couldst not. My queen and Eros
Have by their brave instruction got upon me
A nobleness in record: but I will be
A bridegroom in my death, and run into 't
As to a lover's bed. Come, then; and, Eros,
Thy master dies thy scholar: to do thus

[Pulling on his sword.

I learn'd of thee. How! not dead? not dead?
The guard, ho! O, dispatch me!

Enter Dercetas and Guard.

First Guard. What's the noise?

Ant. I have done my work ill, friends: O, make
Of what I have begun.

Sec. Guard. The star is fall'n.

First Guard. And time is at his period.

All. Alas, and woe!

Ant. Let him that loves me strike me dead.

First Guard. Not I.

Sec. Guard. Nor I.

Third Guard. Nor any one.

[Exit Dercetas.

Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.

This sword but shown to Caesar, with this tidings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Where's Antony?

Der. There, Diomed there.

Dio. Lives he?

Will thou not answer, man?

[Exit Dercetas.

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me
Sufficing strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute lord,
My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did she send thee?

Dio. Now, my lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear
Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw —
Which never shall be found — you did suspect
She had disposed with Caesar, and that your rage
Would not be purged, she sent you word she was dead;
But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent
Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,
I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late, good Diomed: call my guard, I
Dio. What, ho, the emperor's guard! The guard.
Come, your lord calls!

[what, ho!

Enter four or five of the Guard of Antony.

Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra bides;
'Tis the last service that I shall command you.

First Guard. Woe, woe are we, sir, you may not Live to wear

All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day!

Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate
To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it
Seeming to bear it lightly. 'Take me up:
I have led you oft: carry me now, good friends,
And have my thanks for all.

[Exeunt, bearing Antony.

SCENE XV.

The same. A monument.

Enter Cleopatra, and her maids aloft, with Charmian and Iras.

Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from hence.
O Char. Be comforted, dear madam.
O Cleo. No, I will not:

All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
As that which makes it.

Enter, below, Diomedes.

Cleo. O sun,

Burn the great sphere thou movest in! darkling stand
The varying shore 'o' the world. O Antony,
Antony, Antony! Help, Charmian, help, Iras, help,
Help, friends below; let's draw him hither.

Peace!

Not Caesar's valor hath o'erthrown Antony,
But Antony's hath triumphed on itself.

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony
Should conquer Antony: but woe 'tis so!
Ant. I am dying. Egypt, dying; only
I here importune God death awhile, until
Of many thousand kisses the poor last
I lay upon thy lips.

Cleo.

Dear my lord, pardon,— I dare not,
Lest I be taken: not the imperious show
Of the full-fortuned Caesar ever shall
Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have
Edge, sting, or operation, I am sate:
Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour
Demurring upon me. But come, come, Antony,—
Help me, my women,— we must draw thee up:
Assist, good friends.

Ant.

O, quick, or I am gone.

Cleo. Here's sport indeed! How heavy weighs
Our strength is all gone into heaviness, [my lord!
That makes the weight: had I great Juno's power
Of the full-fortuned Caesar ever shall
Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have
Edge, sting, or operation, I am sate:
Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour
Demurring upon me. But come, come, Antony,—
Wishers were ever fools.— O, come, come, come;
[They hear Antony aloft to Cleopatra.
And welcome, welcome! die where thou hast lived:
Quicken with kissing: had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out.

All.

A heavy sight!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying:
Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.
Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high,
That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel,
Provoked by my offence.

One word, sweet queen:
Of Caesar seek your honour, with your safety. O
Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant.

None about Caesar trust but Proculeius.
Cleo. My resolution and my hands I'll trust;
None about Caesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end
Lament nor sorrow at; but please your thoughts
In feeding them with those my former fortunes
Wherein I lived, the greatest prince o' the world,
The noblest; and do now not basely die,
Not cowardly put off my helmet to
My countryman,— a Roman by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now my spirit is going;
I can no more.

Cleo.

Noblest of men, who 'tis dead?
Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better than a sty? O, see, my women.

[Antony dies.

The crown o' the earth doth melt. My lord!
O, with'er'd is the Garland of the world,
ACT V.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

SCENE II.

The soldier's pole is fall'n: young boys and girls
Are level now with men; the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting moon. [Faints.
Char. O, quietness, lady! Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign.
Char. O madam, madam, madam! Iras. Royal Egypt, Empress!
Cleo. No more, but 'ere a woman, and com-
By such poor passion as the maid that milks
And does the meanest chares. It were for me
To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;

To tell them that this world did equal theirs
Till they had stol'n our jewel. All's but naught;
Patience is sottish, and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad: then is it sin
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us? How do you, women?
What, what! good cheer! Why, how now, Char-
My noble girls! Ah, women, women, look, [mian!
Our lamp is spent, it's out! Good sirs, take heart:
We'll bury him; and then, what's brave, what's
Let's do it after the high Roman fashion, [noble,
And make death proud to take us. Come, away;
This case of that huge spirit now is cold:
Ah, women, women! come; we have no friend
But resolution, and the briefest end.
[Exeunt; those above bearing off Antony's body.

ACT V.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Mecenas, Gallus, Proculeius, and others, his council of war.

Ces. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate, tell him he mocks
The pauses that he makes.

Dol. Caesar, I shall. [Exit.

Enter Dercetas, with the sword of Antony.

Ces. Wherefore is that? and what art thou that Appear thus to us? [darest

Der. I am call'd Dercetas; Mary Antony I served, who best was worthy
Best to be served: whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters. If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him
I'll be to Caesar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Ces. What is 't thou say'st? [Exit.

Der. I say, O Caesar, Antony is dead.

Ces. The breaking of so great a thing should make
A greater crack: the round world
Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens: the death of Antony
Is not a single doin'; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Ces. He is dead, Caesar; Not by a public minister of justice.
Nor by a bired knife: but that self hand,
Which writ his honour in the acts it did,
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Splittered the heart. This is his sword;
I rob'd him of his wound of it; behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Ces. Look you sad, friends?
The gods rebuke me, but it is tidings
To wash the eyes of kings.

Agg. And strange it is,
That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honours
Waged equal with him.

Ces. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Caesar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror's set before
He needs must see himself. [him,

Ces. O Antony!
I have follow'd thee to this; but we do Lance
Discourses in our bodies: I must perforce
Have shown to thee such a declining day,
Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: but yet let me lament,

With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my companion,
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle,—that our stars,
Unreconcilable, should divide
Our equalness to this. Hear me, good friends,—
But I will tell you at some moeter season:

Enter an Egyptian.

The business of this man looks out of him;
We'll hear him what he says. Whence are you?

Egyp. A poor Egyptian yet. The queen my mis-
Commed in all she has, her monument,
[ress,
Of thy intents desires instruction,
That she preparedly may frame herself
To the way she's forc'd to.

Ces. Bid her have good heart;
She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourable and how kindly we Determine for her; for Caesar cannot live
To be ungentle.

Egyp. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.

Ces. Come hither, Proculeius. Go and say,
We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts
The quality of her passion shall require.
Lest, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke
She do defeat us; for her life in Rome
Would be eternal in our triumph: go,
And with your speediest bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Caesar, I shall. [Exit.

Ces. Gallus, go you along. [Exit Gallus.] Where's
To second Proculeius? [Dolabella, All.

Dolabella!

Ces. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he 's employ'd: he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent; where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings: go with me, and see
What I can show in this.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A room in the monument.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life. 'Tis paltry to be Caesar;
Not being Fortune, he 's but Fortune's knave,
A minister of her will; and it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackle accidents and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dug,
The beggar's nurse and Caesar's.
ACT V.  ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.  SCENE II.

Enter, to the gates of the monument, Proculeius, Gallus, and Soldiers.

Pro. Cesar sends greeting to the Queen of Egypt; And bids thee study on what fair demands Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Proculeius, Antony Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceived, That have no use for trusting. If your master Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him, That majesty, to keep decorum, must No less beg than a kingdom: if he please To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son, He gives me so much of mine own, as I Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer; You're fall'n into a princely hand, fear nothing: Make your full reference freely to my lord, Who is so full of grace, that it flows over On all that need: let me report to him Your sweet dependency; and you shall find A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness, Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. Pray you, tell him I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him The greatness he has got. I hourly learn A doctrine of obedience; and would gladly Look him in the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady. I have comfort, for I know your plight is pitied Of him that caused it.

Gal. You see how easily she may be surprised: [Here Proculeius and two of the Guard ascend the monument by a ladder placed against a window, and, having descended, come behind Cleopatra. Some of the Guard uncover and open the gates.] [To Proculeius and the Guard] Guard her till Caesar come. [Exit.

Iras. Royal queen! O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen.

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a dagger]

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold: [Seizes and disarms her.

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Relieved, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too, That rides our dogs of languish?

Pro. Do not abuse my master's bounty by Theundoing of yourself: let the world see His nobleness well acted, which your death Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death? Come hither, come! come, come, and take a queen Worth many labes and beggars!

Pro. O, temperance, lady! Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir: If idle talk will once be necessary, I'll not sleep either: this mortal house I'll ruin, Do Caesar what he can. Know, sir, that I Will not wait pension'd at your master's court; Nor once be chasti.ised with the sober eye Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up And show me to the shaking vesture Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt Be gentle grave unto me! rather on Nilus' mud Lay me stark naked, and let the water-dies Blow me into abhorring! rather make My country's high pyramids my gibbet, And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Caesar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius, What thou hast done thy master Cesar knows, And he hath sent for thee: for the queen, I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella, It shall content me best: be gentle to her. [please,

[To Cleo.] To Cesar I will speak what you shall If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

[Dol. Exeunt Proculeius and Soldiers.

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of me? Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly you know me. Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known. You laugh when boys or women tell their dreams; Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam. Cleo. I dream'd there was an Emperor Antony: O, such another sleep, that I might see But such another man!

Dol. If it might please ye,— Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck A sun and moon, which kept their course, and The little O, the earth. [lighted Dol. Most sovereign creature. Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean: his rear'd arm Crested the world: his voice was propertied As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends; But when he meant to quail and shake the orb, He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty, There was no winter in 't; an autumn 'twas That grew the more by reaping: his delights Were dolphin-like: they show'd his back above The element they lived in: in his livery were Walk'd crowns and crownets; realms and islands As plates drop'd from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra! Cleo. Think you there was, or might be, such a man As this I dream'd of?

Dol. Gentle madam, no. Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods. But, if there be, or ever were, one such, It's past the size of dreaming: nature wants stuff To vie strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy, Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam. Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it As answering to the weight; would I might never Overtake pursued success, but I do feel, By the rebound of yours, a grief that smites My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir. Know you what Cesar means to do with me?

Dol. I am told to tell you what I would you knew. Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir. — Though he be honorable,— Cleo. He 'll lead me, then, in triumph? Dol. Madam, he will; I know 't. [Cesar!]

[Flourish and shout within, 'Make way there: Enter Caesar, Gallus, Proculeius, Mecenas, Seleucus, and others of his Train.

Ces. Which is the Queen of Egypt?

Dol. It is the emperor, madam. [Cleopatra kneels.

Ces. Arise, you shall not kneel: I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods Will have it thus; my master and my lord I must obey.

Ces. Take to you no hard thoughts: The record of what injuries you did us, Though written in our flesh, we shall remember As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world, I cannot project mine own cause so well
To make it clear; but do confess I have Been laden with like frailties which before
Have often shamed our sex.

Ces. Cleopatra, know,
We will extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our intents,
Which towards you are most gentle, you shall find
A benefit in this change; but if you seek
To buy on me a cruelty, by taking
Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thenon you rely. I'll take my leave. [and we,
*Cleo. And may, through all the world: 'tis yours;
Your scentuous and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.

Ces. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.
Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,
I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued;
Not petty things admitted. Where's Seleucus?
Sel. Here, madam. [lord
Cleo. This is my treasurer: let him speak, my Upon his peril, that I have reserved
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam, I had rather seal my lips, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?
Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Ces. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Caesar! O, behold,
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours;
And, should we shift estates, yours would be mine.
The ingratitude of this Seleucus does
Even make me wild: O slave, of no more trust
Than love that 's hired! What, goest thou back?

shalt
Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes,
Though they had wings: slave, soulless villain, dog!
O rarely base!

Ces. Good queen, let us entreat you.
Cleo. O Caesar, what a wounding shame is this,
That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parend the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Say, good Caesar,
That I some lady trifies had reserve
Immortal things, toys of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal; and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded
[me
With one that I have bred? The gods! it smiles
Beneath the fall I have. [To Seleucus] Prithée, go
Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits [hence]
Through the ashes of my chance: Wert thou a man,
Thou wouldst have mercy on me.

Ces. Forbear, Seleucus. [Exit Seleucus.

Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are mistrusted
For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits in our name,
Are therefore to be pitied.

Ces. Cleopatra, [edged
Not what you have reserved, nor what acknowledg'd
Put we in the roll of conquest: still be 't yours,
Beslow it at your pleasure; and believe,
Caesar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be 'chear'd;
Make not your thoughts your prisons: no, dear
For we intend so to dispose you as
queen;
Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:
Our care and pity is so much upon you,
That we remain your friend; and so, adieu.

Cleo. My master, and my lord!

Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should Not be noble to myself: but, hark thee, Charmian.
[Whisper to Charmian.

Iras. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,
And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Heie thou again:
I have spoke already, and it is provided;
Go put it to the haste.

Charm. Madam, I will.

Re-enter Dolabella.

Dol. Where is the queen?

Charm. Behold, sir. [Exit

Dolabella.

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,
Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Caesar through Syria
Intends his journey; and within three days
You with your children will be sent before;
Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella,
I shall remain your debtor.

Dol. I your servant.

Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Caesar,
Cleo. Farewell, and thanks. [Exit Dolabella.

Iras. Nay, Iras, what think'st thou?
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shown
In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breasts,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclosed,
And forced to drink their vapours.

Iras. The gods forbid!
Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain, Iras: saucy licitors
Will catch at us, like Trumpet; and scald rymers
Ballad us out o' time: the quick comedians,
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness
I' the posture of a whore.

Iras. O the good gods!
Cleo. Nay, that's certain.
Iras. I'll never see 't; for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo. Why, that's the way
To fool their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.

Re-enter Charmian.

Charm. Now, Charmian!
Show me, my women, like a queen; go fetch
My best attires: I am again for Cydhus,
To meet Mark Antony: sirrah Iras, go.
Now, noble Charmian, we'll dispatch indeed: I'll leave
And, when thou hast done this charge, I'll give thee
To play till dosamay. Bring our crown and all.
Wherefore's this noise? [Exit Iras. A noise within.

Enter a Guardsman.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow
That will not be denied his highness' presence:
He brings you ligs.

Cleo. Let him come in. [Exit Guardsman.

What poor an instrument
May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's placed, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: now from head to foot
I am marble-constant; now the fleeting moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter Guardsman, with Clown bringing in a basket.

Guard. This is the man.

773
Antony, I, speak tremblingly.

Bravest and noblest, have I die, to have been, I, for his biting is immortal; those that do die of it do seldom or never recover.

Remember thou any that have died on 't?

Very many, many, and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday: a very honest woman, but something given to lie; as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty: how she died of the biting of it, what pain she felt: truly, she makes a very good report o' the worm; but he that will believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do; but this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm.

I wish you all joy of the worm.

You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his will.

Ay, ay; farewell.

Look you, the worm is not to be trusted but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Take thou no care; it shall be needed.

Very good. Give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeling.

Will it eat me?

You must not think I am so simple but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whorish devils do the gods great harm in their women; for in every ten that they make, the devils mar live.

Well, get thee gone; farewell.

Yes, forsooth: I wish you joy o' the worm.

Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have immortal longings in me: now no more.

The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip: Yare, yare, good Iras; quick. Methinks I hear Antony call; I see him rouse himself.

To praise my noble act: I hear him mock

The luck of Caesar, which the gods give men

To excuse their after wrath: husband, I come:

Now to that name my courage prove my title!

I am fire and air; my other elements

I give to bauer life. So; have you done?

Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.

Farewell, kind Charmian! Iras, long farewell.

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall?

If thou and nature can so gently part

The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,

Which hurts, and is desired. Dost thou lie still?

If thou liest best, thou tell'st the world

It is not worth! leave-taking.

Kisses them. Iras falls and dies.

I, [Exeunt.]

I, if she first meet the curled Antony,

He'll make demand of her, and spend that kiss

Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mort'leth,

To an asp, which she applies to her breast.

With th' sharp teeth this knot insinuate

Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,

Be party, and dispatch. O, condescend thou,

That I might hear thee call great Caesar ass

Unpolite'd!

O eastern star!

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,

That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break! O, break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle,—

O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too:

[Applying another asp to her arm.

What should I stay,—

Char. In this vile world? So, fare thee well.

Now boast thee, death, in thy possession lies

A iass unparalleled. Downy windows, close;

And golden Phebus never be beheld

Of eyes again so royal! Your crown's awry;

I'll mend it, and then play.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

First Guard. Where is the queen?

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

First Guard. Caesar hath sent

Char. Too slow a messenger.

[Applies an asp.

O, come safe, dispatch! I partly feel thee.

First Guard. Approach, ho! All's not well:

Cæsar's beguiled. [Call high.

Sec. Guard. There's Dolabella sent from Caesar;

First Guard. What work is here? Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess

Descended of so many royal kings.

Ah, soldier!—

Re-enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?

Sec. Guard. All dead.

Dol. Caesar, thy thoughts

Touch their effects in this: thyself art coming

To see perform'd the dreaded act which thou

So sought'st to hinder.

[Within 'A way there, a way for Caesar!' ...

Re-enter Caesar and all his train, marching.

Dol. O sir, you are too sure an augurer;

That you did fear is done.

Cæs. Bravest at the last,

She level'd at our purposes, and, being royal,

Took her own way. The manner of their deaths?

I do not see them bleed.

Who was last with them?

First Guard. A simple countryman, that brought

This was his basket. [her wings.

Cæs. Poison'd, then.

First Guard. O Caesar,

This Charmian lived but now; she stood and spake: I found her trimming up the diadem On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stood And on the sudden dropp'd.

Cæs. O noble weakness! If they had swallow'd poison, 't would appear By external swallowing; but she looks like sleep, As she would catch another Antony In her strong toil of grace.

Here, on her breast, There is a vent of blood and something blown: The like is on her arm.

First Guard. This is an aspie's trail: and these fig-leaves

Have shine upon them, such as the asp' leaves

Upon the caves of Nile.

Cæs. Most probable That so she died; for her physician tells me She hath pursued conclusions infinite

Of easy ways to die. Take up her bed; And bear her women from the monument: She shall be buried by her Antony: No grave upon the earth shall clip in it A pair so famous. High events are these Strike those that make them; and their story is Not less in pity than his glory which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall In solemn show attend this funeral; And then to Rome. Come, Dolabella, see High order in this great solemnity.

Scene—Britain; Rome.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see page lxviii.]

Act I.

Scene I.—Britain. The garden of Cymbeline’s palace.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

First Gent. You do not meet a man but frowns: our bloods

No more obey the heavens than our courtiers

Still seem as does the king.

Sec. Gent. But what’s the matter?

First Gent. His daughter, and the heir of ’s kingdom, whom

He purposed to his wife’s sole son—a widow

That late he married—hath refer’d herself

Unto a poor but worthy gentleman: she’s wedded;

Her husband banish’d; she imprison’d: all

Is outward sorrow; though I think the king

Be touch’d at very heart.

Sec. Gent. None but the king?

First Gent. He that hath lost her too: so is the queen,

That most desired the match; but not a courtier,

Although they wear their faces to the bent

Of the king’s looks, hath a heart that is not

Glad at the thing they scowl at.

Sec. Gent. And why so? [thing

First Gent. He that hath miss’d the princess is a

Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her—

I mean, that married her, aack, good man!

And therefore banish’d—a creature such

As, to seek through the regions of the earth

For one his like, there would be something failing

In him that should compare. I do not think

So fair an outward and such stuff within

Endows a man but he.

Sec. Gent. You speak him far.

First Gent. I do extend him, sir, within himself,

Crush him together rather than unfold

His measure duly.

Sec. Gent. What’s his name and birth?

First Gent. I cannot delve him to the root: his father

Was call’d Sicilius, who did join his honour

Against the Romans with Cassiobian,

But had his titles by Tenantius whom

He served with glory and admired success,

So gain’d the sur-addition Leonatus;

And had, besides this gentleman in question,

Two other sons, who in the wars o’ the time

Died with their swords in hand; for which their father

Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow

That he quit being, and his gentle lady,

Big of this gentleman our theme, deceased

As he was born. The king he takes the babe

To his protection, calls him Posthumus Leonatus,

Breed him and makes him of his bed-chamber,

Puts to him all the learnings that his time

Could make him the receiver of; which he took,

As we do air, fast as ’t was minister’d,

And in ’s spring became a harvest, lived in court—

Which rare it is to do—most praised, most loved,

A sample to the youngest, to the more mature

A glass that feated them, and to the graver

A child that guided dotard’s; to his mistress,

For whom he now is banish’d, her own price

Proclaims how she esteem’d him and his virtue;

By her election may be truly read

What kind of man he is.

Sec. Gent. I honour him

Even out of your report. But, pray you, tell me,

Is she sole child to the king?

First Gent. His only child.

He had two sons: if this be worth your hearing,

Mark it: the eldest of them at three years old,

I the swathing-clothes the other, from their nursery

Were stol’n, and to this hour no guess in knowledge

Which way they went.

Sec. Gent. How long is this ago?

First Gent. Some twenty years. [convey’d,

Sec. Gent. That a king’s children should be so

So slackly guarded, and the search so slow,

That could not trace them! 775
Enter Cymbeline and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king!
Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid! hence, from my sight!

If after this command thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou diest: away!
Thou 'rt poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you!

And bless the good remainders of the court!
I am gone.

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
More sharp than this is.

O disloyal thing,
That shouldst repair my youth, thou heap'st
A year's age on me.

Imo. I beseech you, sir,

Harm not yourself with your vexation:
I am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cym. Past grace? obedience?
Imo. Past hope, and in despair; that way, past grace.

Cym. That mightst have had the sole son of my
Imo. O blest, that I might not! I chose an eagle,
And did avoid a puttock [my throne]
Cym. Thou took'st a beggar; wouldst have made
A sent for baseness.

Imo. No; I rather added
A lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vile one!
Imo. Sir,

It is your fault that I have loved Posthumus:
You bred him as my playfellow, and he is
A man worth any woman, overbuys me
Almost the sum he pays.

Cym. What, art thou mad?
Imo. Almost, sir; heaven restore me! Would I
A ne'er-her'd daughter, and my Leonatus [were
Our neighbour shepherd's son!]
Thou foolish thing!

Re-enter Queen.

They were again together: you have done
Not after our command. Away with her,
And pen her up.

Queen. Beseech your patience. Peace,
Dear lady daughter, peace! Sweet sovereign,
Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some
Out of your best advice.

Cym. Nay, let her languish
A drop of blood a day: and, being aged,
Die of this folly! [Exit Cymbeline and Lords.
Queen. Fle! you must give way.

Enter Pisanio.

Here is your servant. How now, sir! What news?

Pis. My lord your son drew on my master.

Queen. Ha!

No harm, I trust, is done?

Pis. There might have been,
But that my master rather play'd than fought
And had no help of anger: they were parted
By gentlemen at hand.

Queen. I am very glad on 't.

Imo. Your son's my father's friend; he takes his
To draw upon an exile! O brave sir! [part.
I would they were in Afric both together;
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goe-back. Why came you from your master?

Pis. On his command: he would not suffer me
To bring him to the haven; left these notes
Of what commands I should be subject to,
When 't pleased you to employ me.

Queen. You are the servant: I dare lay mine honour
He will remain so.

ACT I.

Cymbeline.

SCENE I.

Enter the Queen, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Queen. No, be assured you shall not find me,
After the slander of most stepmothers, [daughter,
Evil-eyed unto you: you 're my prisoner, but
Your gaoler shall deliver you the keys
That lock up your restraint. For you, Posthumus,
So soon as I can win the offended king,
I will be known your advocate: marry, yet
The fire of rage is in him, and 't were good
You lean'd unto his sentence with what patience
Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness,
I will from hence to-day.

You know the peril.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections, though the king
Hath charged you should not speak together.

Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds! My dearest husband,
I something fear my father's wrath; but nothing—
Always reserved my holy duty—what
His rage can do on me: you must be gone;
And I shall here abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes, not comforted to live,
But that there is this jewel in the world
That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress!
O lady, weep no more, lest I give cause
To be suspected of more tenderness
Than doth become a man. I will remain
The loyal'st husband that did e'er plight troth:
My residence in Rome at one Philario's,
Who to my father was a friend, to me
Known but by letter: thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter Queen.

Post. Should we be taking leave
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The lastness to depart would grow. Adieu!

Imo. Nay, stay a little:
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Look here, love;
This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;
But keep it till you woo another wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How, how! another?
You gentle gods, give me but this I have,
And sear up my embracements from a next
With bonds of death! [Putting on the ring.] Remain,
Remain thou here
While sense can keep it on. And, sweetest, fairest,
As I my poor self did exchange for you,
To your so infinite loss, so in our triles
I still win of you: for my sake wear this;
It is a manacle of love; 't will place it
Upon this fairest prisoner.

Imo. [Putting a bracelet upon her arm.
When shall we see again?

O the gods!
ACT I.

CYMBELINE.

ACT II.—The same. A public place.

Enter Cloten and two Lords.

First Lord. Sir, I would advise you to shift a shirt; the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: where air comes out, air comes in: there's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

Cloten. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it.

First Lord. Hurst! his body is a passable carcass, if he be not hurt: it is a throughfare for steel, if it be not hurt.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] His steel was in debt; it went o' the backside the youth.

Cloten. The villain would not stand me.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] No; but he fled forward still, toward your face.

First Lord. Stand you! You have land enough of your own; but he added to your having; gave you some ground.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] As many inches as you have oceans. Puppies!

Cloten. I would they had not come between us.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground.

Cloten. And that she should love this fellow and refuse me!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damned.

First Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together; she's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.

Sec. Lord. [ Aside] She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her.

Cloten. Come, I'll to my chamber. Would there had been some hurt done!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an ass, youth is no great hurt.

Cloten. You'll go with us?

First Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

Cloten. Nay, come, let's go together.

Sec. Lord. Well, my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.—A room in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Imogen and Pisanio.

Imogen. I would thou gwest unto the shores o' the haven,
And question'd every sail: if he should write,
And I not have it, 't was a paper lost,
As o'er'd mercy is. What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pisanio. It was his queen, his queen!

Imogen. Then waved his handkerchief?

Pisanio. And kiss'd y e, madam.

Imogen. Senseless linen! happier therein than I!

Pisanio. What was it all?

Imogen. No, madam; for so long
As he could make me with this eye or ear
Distinguish him from others, he did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of his mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship.

Imogen. Thou shouldest have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To after-eye him.

Pisanio. Madam, so I did.

Imogen. I would have broke mine eye-strings; crack'd
To look upon him, till the diminution
Of space had past him sharp as my needle,
Nay, follow'd him, till he had melted from
The smallness of a gnat to air, and then
Have turned mine eye and wept. But, good Pisanio,
When shall we hear from him?

Pisanio. Be assured, madam,
With his next vantage.

Imogen. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him
How I would think on him at certain hours
Such thoughts and such, or I could make him swear
The skies of Italy should not betray
Mine interest and his honour, or have charged him,
As it the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,
To encounter me with orisons, for then
I am in heaven for him; or ere I could Give him that parting kiss which I had set
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father.
And like the tyrannous breathing of the north
Shakes all our buds from growing.

Enter a Lady.

Lady. The queen, madam,
Desires your highness' company. [patch'd.]

Imogen. Those things I bid you do, get them dis,
I will attend the queen.

Pisanio. Madam, I shall. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.—Rome. Philario's house.

Enter Philario, Iachimo, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Iachimo. Believe it, sir, I have seen him in Britain:
he was then of a crescent note, expected to prove so worthy as since he hath been allowed the name of;
but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side and I to peruse him by items.

Philario. You speak of him when he was less furnished than now he is with that which maketh him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very many there could behold the sun with as fine eyes are.

Iachimo. This matter of marrying his king's daughter, wherein he must be weighed rather by her value than his own, words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.

French. And then his banishment.

Iachimo. Ay, and the approbation of those that weep this lamentable divorce under her colours are wonderfully to extend him; be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might fly flat, for taking a beggar without less quality. But how comes it he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Philario. His father and I were soldiers together; to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life. Here comes the Briton: let him be so entertain-ted amongst you as suits, with gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of his quality.

Enter Posthumus.

I beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman; whom I commend to you as a noble friend of mine: how worthy he is I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans.

Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'er-rate my poor kindness: I was glad I did alone my countryman and you; it had been pity you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose as then each bore, upon importance of so slight and trivial a nature.
Post. By your pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller; rather shunned to go even with what I heard than in my every action to be guided by others’ experiences: but upon my mendicant judgment, I cannot but say it is mend — my quarrel was not altogether slight.
French. ’Faith, yes, to be put to the arbritment-of swords, and by such two that would by all likelihood have confounded one the other, or have fallen
both.
Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?
French. Safely, I think: ’t was a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses; this gentleman at that time vouching — and upon warrant of bloody affirmation — his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualified and less attempting than any the rarest of our ladies in France.
Iach. That lady is not now living, or this gentleman’s opinion by this would have prevailed.
Post. She holds her virtue still and I my mind.
Iach. You must not so far prefer her ’fore ours of Italy.
Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing, though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.
Iach. As fair and as good—a kind of hand-in-hand comparison — had been something too fair and too good for any lady in Britain. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours outlustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe she excelled many: but I have not seen the most prizables diamond that is, nor you the lady.
Post. I praised her as I rated her: so do I my stone.
Iach. What do you esteem it at?
Post. More than the world enjoys.
Iach. Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she’s outprized by a trifle.
Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given, if there were wealth enough for the purchase, or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale,
and only the gift of the gods.
Iach. Which the gods have given you?
Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.
Iach. You may wear in title yours: but, you know, strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds.
Your ring may be stolen too: so your brace of unprizables estimations; the one is but frail and the other casual: a cunning thief, or a that way accomplished courtier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.
Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier to convince the honour of my mistress, if, in the holding or loss of that, you term her frail.
I do nothing doubt you have store of thieves: notwithstanding, I fear not my ring.
Phi. Let us leave here, gentleman.
Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signior,
I thank him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.
Iach. With five times so much conversation, I should get ground of your fair mistresa, make her go back, even to the yielding, had I admittance and opportunity to friend.
Post. No, no.
Iach. I dare thereupon pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, o’ervalues it something: but I make my wager rather against your confidence than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.
Post. You are a great deal abused in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you’re worthy of by your attempt.
Iach. What’s that?
Post. A repulse: though your attempt, as you call it, deserve more; a punishment too.
Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly: I thought it died when it was born, and, I pray you, be better acquainted.
Iach. Would I had put my estate and my neigh-bour’s on the approbation of what I have spoke!
Post. What lady would you choose to assail?
Iach. Yours: whom in constancy you think stands so, only I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers which you imagine so reserved.
Iach. Will I wage against your gold, gold to it:
my ring I hold dear as my finger: ’tis part of it.
Iach. You are afraid, and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies’ flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting: but I see you have some religion in you, that you fear.
Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.
Iach. I am the master of my speeches, and would undergo what’s spoken, I swear.
Post. Will you? I shall but lend my diamond till your return: let there be covenants drawn be-tween’s: my mistress exceeds in goodness the hug-ness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match: here’s my ring.
Phi. I will have it no lay.
Iach. By the gods, it is one. If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the nearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours: so is your diamond too: if I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in,
she your jewel, this your jewels, and my gold are yours: provided I have your commendation for my more free entertainment.
Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us. Only, thus far shall you answer: if you make your voyage upon her and give me directly to understand you have prevailed,
I am no further your enemy; she is not worth our debate: if she remain unseduced, not making it appear otherwise, for your ill opinion and the assault you have made to her chastity you shall answer me with your sword.
Iach. Your hand; a covenant: we will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain, lest the bargain should catch cold and starve: I will fetch my gold and have our two wagers recorded.
Post. Agreed.
[Exeunt Posthumus and Iachimo.
French. Will this hold, think you?
Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray, let us follow ’em. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. — Britain. A room in Cymbeline’s palace.

Enter Queen, Ladies, and Corinellus.
Queen. Whiles yet the dev’s by ground, gather those flowers;
Make haste; who has the note of them?
First Lady. I, madam.
Queen. Dispatch. [Exeunt Ladies.
Now, master doctor, have you brought those drugs?
Cor. Pleadeth your highness, ay; here they are, madam:
[Presenting a small box.
But I beseech your grace without offence,—
My conscience bids me ask — wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poisonous com-

ACT I.

Cymbeline.

SCENE VI.

Which are the movers of a languishing death;
But though slow, deadly?

Queen. I wonder, doctor,
Thou ask'st me such a question. Have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? distil? preserve? yea, so
That our great king himself doth woo me oft
For my confection here, and thus far proceeded, —
Unless thou think'st me devilish — is 't not meet
That I did amplify my judgment in
Other conclusions? I will try the forces
Of these thy compounds on such creatures as
We count not worth the hanging, but none human,
To try the vigour of thy and apply
Allayments to their act, and by them gather
Their several virtues and effects.

Cor. Your highness
Shall from this practice but make hard your heart:
Besides, the seeing these effects will be
Both noisome and infectious.

Queen. O, content thee.

Enter Pisanio.

[Aside] Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him
Will I first work: he's for his master,
And eny my son. How now, Pisanio!
Doctor, to serve for this time is called;
Take your own way.

Cor. [Aside] I do suspect you, madam;
But you shall do no harm.

Queen. [To Pisanio] Hark thee, a word. [she has Cor. [Aside] I do not like her. She doth think
Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit,
And will not trust one of her malice with
A drug of such damn'd nature. Those she has
Will stupify and dull the sense awhile; [dogs,
Which first, perchance, she'll prove on cats and Then afterward up higher: but there is
No danger in what show of death it makes,
More than the locking-up the spirits a time,
To be more fresh,reviving. She is fool'd
With a most false effect; and I the truer,
So to be false with her.

Queen. No further service, doctor,
Until I send for thee.

Cor. [Aside] I humbly take my leave. [Exit.
Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think in time
She will not quench and let instructions enter
Where folly now possesseth? Do thou work:
When thou shalt bring me word she loves my son,
I'll tell thee where on the instant thou art then
As great as is thy master, greater, for
His fortunes all lie speechless and his name
Is at last gasp: return he cannot, nor Continue where he is; to shift his being
Is to exchange one misery with another,
And every day that comes to decay
A day's work in him. What shall thou expect,
To be dependant on a thing that leans,
Who cannot be new built, nor has no friends,
So much as to prop him? [The Queen drops the box: Pisanio takes it up.] Thou takest up
Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy labour:
It is a thing I made, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Nay, I prithee, take it;
It is an earnest of a further good
That I mean to thee, Tell thy mistress how
The case stands with her; do 't as from thyself.
Think what a change thou know on, but think
Thou hast thy mistress still, to boast, my son,
Who shall take notice of thee: I'll move the king
To any shape of thy preffernent such
As thou 'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly,
That set thee on to this desert, am bound
To load thy merit richly. Call my women:

Think on my words. [Exit Pisanio.

Not to be shaked; the agent for his master
And the rememberance of her to hold
The hand-fast to her lord. I have given him that
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople
Of liegers for her sweet, and which she after,
Except she bend her humour, shall be assured
To taste of too.

Re-enter Pisanio and Ladies.

So, so: well done, well done:
The violets, cowslips, and the primroses,
Bear to my closet. Fare thee well, Pisanio:
Think on my words. [Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

Pis. And shall do:
But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll chafe myself; there's all I'll do for you. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same. Another room in the palace.

Enter Imogen.

Imo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false;
A foolish suitor to a wedded lady,
That hath her husband banish'd! —O, that husband!
My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated
Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stol'n,
As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable
Is the desire that's glorious: best be those,
How mean seer, that have their honest wills,
Which sensons comfort. Who may this be? Fele!

Enter Pisanio and Iachimo.

Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome,
Comes from my lord with letters.

Iach. Change you, madam?
The worthy Leonatus is in safety
And greets your highness dearly. [Presents a letter.
Imo. Thanks, good sir:
You're kindly welcome. [rich!
Iach. [Aside] All of her that is out of door most
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird, and I
Have lost the wagers. Boldness be my friend!
Arm me, audacity, from head to foot!
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight;
Rather, directly fly.
Imo. [Reads] 'He is one of the noblest note, to whose kindnesses I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust—' LEONATUS.'

So far I read aloud:
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warn'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully.
You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I
Have words to bid you, and shall find it so
In all that I can do.

Iach. Thanks, fairest lady.
What, are men mad? Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich crop
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above and the twin'd stones
Upon the number'd beach? and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious
'Twixt fair and foul?
Imo. What makes your admiration?
Iach. It cannot be 't the eye, for apes and monkeys
'Twixt two such shes would chatter this way and Contemn with mows the other; nor 't the judgment,
For fools in this case of favour would
Be wisely definite; nor 't the appetite;
Stutterly to such neat excellence opposed
Should make desire vomit emptiness,
Not so allured to feed.
Imo. What is the matter, trow?
Iach.

The cloyed will, 779
That satiate yet unsatisfied desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb.
Longs after for the garbage.

Is. What, dear sir,

Tis very true? Are you well?

Is. Thanks, madam: well. [To Pisanio] Be see you, sir, desire

Is. My man's abode where I did leave him: he Is strange and peevish.

Fis. I was going, sir,

To give him welcome. [Exit.

Is. Continues well my lord? His health, be see you?

Is. Well, madam.

Is. Is he disposed to mirth? I hope he is.

Is. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger there

Secretary and so gamsome: he is call'd

The Briton reveller.

Is. When he was here,

He did incline to sadness, and oft-times

Not knowing why.

Is. There is a Frenchman his companion, one

An eminent Monsieur, that, it seems, much loves

A Gallian girl at home: he furnaces

The thick sighs from him, while the jolly Briton

—Your lord, I mean—langus from a fue longs, cries

Is.

Can my mind hold, to think that man, who knows

By history, report, or his own proof,

What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose

But must be, will his free hours languish for Assured bondage?

Is. Will my lord say so?

Is. Ay, madam, with his eyes in blood with

It is a recreation to be

[laughter: And hear him mock the Frenchman. But, heavens

Some men are much to blame.]

[Know.

Is. Not he, I hope.

Is. Not he; but yet heaven's bounty towards him might

Be used more thankfully. In himself, 'tis much;

In you, which I account his beyond all talents,

Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound

To pity too.

Is. What do you pity, sir?

Is. Two creatures heartily.

Is. Am I one, sir?

Is. Look you on me; what reck discern you in me

Deserves your pity?

Is. Lamentable! What,

To hide me from the radiant sun and solace

I the dungeon by a snuff?

I pray you, sir,

Deliver with more openness your answers

To my demands. Why do you pity me?

Is. That others do—

I was about to say—enjoy your — But

It is an office of the gods to venge it,

Not mine to speak on it.

Is. You do seem to know

Something of me, or what concerns me: pray you,—

Since doubting things go ill often hurts more

Than to be sure they do: for certainties

Either are past remedies, or, timely knowing,

The remedy then born —discover to me

What bane you spur and stop?

Is. Had I this check

To bathe my lips upon; this hand, whose touch,

Whose every touch, would force the feeder's soul

To the oath of loyalty: this object, which

Take ample part in the wild motion of mine eye,

Fixing it only here: should I, damn'd then,

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs

That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands

Made hard with hourly falsehood—falsehood, as

With labour: then by-peeking in an eye

Base and unlastrous as the smoky light

That's fed with stinking bellow: it were fit

That all the plagues of hell should at one time

Encounter such revolt.

Is. My lord, I fear,

Has forgot Britain.

Is. And himself. Not I,

Inclined to this intelligence, pronounce

The beggary of his change: but 'tis your graces

That from my mildest conscience to my tongue

Charms this report out.

Is. Let me hear no more.

Is. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike my heart

With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady

So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,

[her'd

Well the greatest virtue,—to be partial

With tomboys hired with that self-exhibition

Which your own coffers yield! with discedven-

That play with all infirnities far gold

Which rottenness can lend nature! such hellish stuff

As well a godly poison poison'd; revenge'd,

Or she that bore you was no queen, and you

Recoll from your great stock.

Is. Reveng'd!

Is. How should I be revenge'd? If this be true,—

As I have such a heart that both mine ears

Must not in haste abuse—shoe if it be true,

How should I be revenge'd?

Is. Should he make me Live, like Diana's priest, betwixt cold sheets,

While he is vailing variable rumps,

In your deserts, upon your purse? Revenge it.

I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure.

More noble than that rungmate to your bed,

And will continue fast to your affection,

Still close as sure.

Is. What, ho, Pisanio?

Is. Let me my service tender on your lips.

Is. Away! I do condemn mine ears that have

So long attended thee. If thou wert honourable,

Thou wouldst have told this tale for virtue, not

For such an end thou seek'st,—as base as strange.

Thou wrong'st a gentleman, who is as far

From thy report as thou from honour, and

Solicit'st her a lady that doth affins

Thee and the devil alike. What ho, Pisanio!

The king my father shall be made acquainted

Of thy assault: if he shall think it fit,

A saucy stranger in his court to mart

As in a Roman stew and to expound

His beastly mind to us, he hath a court

The little cares for and yet king for who

He not respects at all. What, ho, Pisanio?

Is. O happy Leonatus! I may say:

The credit that thy lady hath of thee

Deserves thy trust, and thy perfect goodness

Her assured credit. Blessed live you long!

A lady to the worthiest sir that ever

Country call'd his! and your mistersse, only

For the most worthiest fit! Give me your pardon,

I have spoke this, to know if your alliance

Were deeply rooted: and shall make your lord,

That which he is, new ever: and he is one

The truest manner'd; such a lady which

That he enacts societies into him;

Half all men's hearts are his.

Is. You make amends.

Is. He sits 'mongst men like a descended god:

He hath a kind of honour sets him off,

More than a mortal oeconomy. He not angry,

Most mighty princess, that I have adveristed

To try your taking of a false report: which hath

Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment

In the election of a sir so rare,

Which you know cannot err: the love I bear him
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Britain. Before Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Cloten and two Lords.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck! when I kissed the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away! I had a hundred pound on 't; and then a whoreson jackanapes must make me up for swearing; as if I borrowed mine oaths of him and might not spend them at my pleasure.

First Lord. What got he by that? You have lost his part with your bowl.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would have run all out.

Clot. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths, ha?

Sec. Lord. No, my lord; [Aside] nor crop the ears of them.

Clo. Whoreson dog! I give him satisfaction? Would he had been one of my rank!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] To have smelt like a fool.

Clo. I am not vexed more at any thing in the earth: a poson 't! I had rather not be so noble as I am; they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother; every Jack-slave hath his bellyful of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] You are cock and capon too; and you crow, cock, with your comb on.

Clo. Sayest thou? [Aside] It is not fit your lordship should undertake every companion that you give offence to.

No. No, I know that: but it is fit I should commit offence to my inferiors.

Sec. Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

First Lord. Did you hear of a stranger that's come to court to-night?

Clo. A stranger, and I not know 't!

Sec. Lord. [Aside] He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not.

First Lord. There's an Italian come; and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus' friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal; and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger?

First Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit I went to look upon him? Is there no derogation in 't?

Sec. Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them in my bedchamber.

Iach. They are in a trunk, attended by my men: I will make bold to send them to you, only for this night: I must aboard to-morrow.

Iach. Yes, I beseech; or I shall short my word by lengthening my return. From Gallia I cross'd the seas on purpose and on promise to see your grace.

Iach. I thank you for your pains: But not away to-morrow!

Iach. O, I must, madam: Therefore I shall beseech you, if you please to greet your lord with writing, do 't to-night: I have outstood my time: which is material to the tender of our present.

Iach. I will write. Send your trunk to me; it shall safe be kept, and truly yielded you. 'Tis very welcome.

[Exeunt.

Sec. Lord. [Aside] You are a fool granted; therefore your issues, being foolish, do not derogate.

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian: what I have lost to-day at bowls I'll win to-night of him.

Come, go.

Sec. Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

[Exeunt Cloten and First Lord.

That such a crafty devil as is his mother Should yield the world this ass! a woman that Bears all down with her brain; and this her son Cannot take two from twenty, for his heart, And leave eighteen. A las, poor princess! Thou divine Imogen, what thou endurest, Betwixt a father by thy step-dame govern'd, A mother hourly coming plots, a wooer More hateful than the foul expulsion is Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act Of the divorce he 'd make! The heavens hold firm The walls of thy dear honour, keep unshaken That temple, thy fair mind, that thou mayst stand, To enjoy thy banish'd lord and this great land!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Imogen's bedchamber in Cymbeline's palace: a trunk in one corner of it.

Imogen in bed, reading; a Lady attending.

Iach. Who's there? my woman Helen?

Helen. Please you, madam.

Iach. What hour is it?

Helen. Almost midnight, madam.

Iach. I have read three hours then: mine eyes are weak: Fold down the leaf where I have left: to bed: Take not away the taper, leave it burning; And if thou canst awake by four o' the clock, I prithee, call me. Sleep hath seized me wholly.

[Exeunt Helen.

To your protection I commend me, gods, From fairies and the tempters of the night Guard me, beseech ye.

[Exit Imogen.

Iach. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labour'd Repairs itself by rest. Our Tarquin thus sense Did softly press the rushes, ere he wak't The chastity he wounded. Cytherea, How bravely thou becomest thy bed, fresh lily, And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch! But kiss; one kiss! Rubies unparagon'd, How dearly do they do 't! 'Tis her breathing that

781
Perfumes the chamber thus: the flame o’ the taper
Bows toward her, and would under-peep her lids,
To see the enclosed lights, now canopied
Under these windows, white and azure laced
With blue of thousand’s meaner than. But my design,
To note the chamber: I will write all down:
Such and such pictures; there the window; such
The adornment of her bed; the arras; figures,
Why, such and such; and the contents o’ the story.
Ah, but some natural notes about her body,
Above ten thousand’s meaner then. But my design,
Would testify, to enrich mine inventory.
O sleep, thou pace of death, lie dull upon her!
And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying! Come off, come off:
[Taking off her bracelet.
As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard!
’Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. On her left breast
A mole cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
I’ the bottom of a cow’s milk; here’s a voucher,
Stray how excellent law could make: this secret
Will fore, till think: I have pick’d the lock and ta’en
The treasure of her honour. No more. To what end?
Why should I write this down, that’s riveted,
Screw’d to my memory? She hath been reading late
The tale of Toreus; here the leaf’s turn’d down
Where Philemole gave up. I have enough:
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night, that dawning
May bare the raven’s eye! I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here. [Clock strikes.
One, two, three: time, time!
[Go into the trunk. The scene closes.

SCENE III.—An ante-chamber adjoining Imogen’s apartments.

Enter Cloten and Lords.

First Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turned up
Clo. It would make any man cold to lose. [ace.
First Lord. But not every man patient after the noble temper of your lordship. You are most hot and furious when you win.
Clo. Winning will put any man into courage. If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough. It’s almost morning, is’t not?
First Lord. Day, my lord.
Clo. I would this music would come: I am ad-vis’d to give her music o’ mornings; they say it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: if you can penetrate her with your fingering, so; we’ll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remain; but I’ll never give o’er.
First, a very excellent good concocted thing; after,
a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it: and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven’s gate sings,
And Phoebus’ gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs
On chanced flowers that lies;
And winking Mary-buds begin
To ope their golden eyes:
With every thing that pretty is,
My lady sweet, arise:
Arise, arise.

Clo. So, get you gone. If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better: if it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs and calves’guts, nor the voice of unpaved eunuch to boot, can never amend.

[Exeunt Musicians.

Sec. Lord. Here comes the king.

Clo. I am glad I was up so late; for that’s the reason I was up so early: he cannot choose but take this service I have done fatherly.

Enter Cymbeline and Queen.

Good morrow to your majesty and to my gracious mother.

Cym. Attend you here the door of our stern
Will she not forth?

Clo. I have assail’d her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her minion is too new;
She hath not yet forgot him: some more time
Must wear the print of his remembrance out,
And then she’s yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king,
Who lets go by no vantages that may Prefer you to his daughter. Frame yourself
To orderly soliciting, and be friended
With aptness of the season. Make denials
Increase your services; so seem as if You were inspired to do those duties which
You tender to her; that you in all obey her,
Save when command to your discretion tends,
And therein you are senseless.

Clo. Senseless! not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome;
The one is Calus Lucius.

Cym. A worthy fellow,
Albeit he comes on angry purpose now;
But that’s no fault of his: we must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness fore-spent on us,
We must extend our notice. Our dear son, [tress,
When you have given good morning to your mis-
Attend the queen and us; we shall have need To employ you towards this Roman. Come, our queen.

[Exeunt all but Cloten.

Clo. If she be up, I’ll speak with her; if not,
Let her lie still and dream. [Knocks By your
I know her women are about her: what [leave, ho!
If I do line one of their hands? ’Tis gold [makes Which buys admittance: off it doth; yea, and Diana’s rangers false themselves, yield up
Their deer to the stand o’ the stealer; and ’tis gold
Which makes the true man kill’d and saves the thief;
Nay, sometime hangs both thief and true man;
Can I not do and undo? I will make [what
One of her women lawyer to me, for
I yet not understand the case myself.

[Knocks By your leave.

Enter a Lady.

Lady. Who’s there that knocks?

Clo. A gentleman.

Lady. No more?

Clo. Yes, and a gentlewoman’s son.

Lady. That’s more
Than some, whose tailors are as dear as yours,
Can justly boast of. What’s your lordship’s pleas-
Clo. Your lady’s person: is she ready? [ure?

Lady. Ay.

Clo. To keep her chamber.

Lady. There is gold for you;
Sell me your good report.

Lady. How? my good name? or to report of you
What I shall think is good?—The princess!

Enter Imogen.

Clo. Good morrow, fairest: sister, your sweet hand.

[Exit Lady.

782
ACT II.

Cymbeline.

Scene IV.

Imo. Good morrow, sir. You lay out too much pains For purse-aching but trouble; the thanks I give Is telling you that I am poor of thanks And scarce can spare them.

Clo. If you but said so, 't were as deep with me: If you swear still, your recompense is still That I regard it not.

Imo. This is no answer. [silently.

Clo. But that you shall not say I yield being I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: 'faith, I shall unfold equal discourtesy To your best kindness: one of your great knowing Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

Imo. To leave you in your madness, 't were my will not.

Clo. Fools are not mad folks.

Imo. Do you call me fool?

Clo. As I am mad, I do:
If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad;
That cures us both. I am much sorry, sir,
You put me to forget a lady's manners,
By being so verbal: and learn now, for all,
That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce,
By the very truth of it, I care not for you,
And am so near the lack of charity —
To accuse myself — I hate you; which I had rather
You felt than make 't my boast.

Imo. You sin against
Obedience, which you owe your father. For The contract you pretend with that base wretch, One bred of arms and fostered with gold dishes, With scraps o' the court, it is no contract, none:
And though it be allow'd in meaner parties — Yet who than he more mean? — to knit their souls, On whom there is no more dependency But brats and beggary, in self-figured knot;
Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by The consequence o' the crown, and must not soil The precious note of it with a base slave, A hindling for a livery, a squire's cloth, A pantler, not so eminent.

Imo. Profane fellow!

Clo. Wert thou the son of Jupiter and no more But what thou art besides, thouwert too base To be his magnified: thou was magnified enough, Even to the point of envy, if 't were made Comparative for your virtues, to be styled The under-hangman of his kingdom, and hated For being prefer'd so well.

Clo. He never can meet more miscarriage than come To be but named of thee. His meanest garment, That ever hath but clipp'd his body, is dearer In my respect than all the hairs above thee, Were they all made such men. How now, Pisania!

Enter Pisania.

Clo. 'His garment!' Now the devil —

Imo. To Dorothy my woman hie thee presently—

Clo. 'His garment!'

Imo. I am spirited with a fool,
Frighted, and anger'd worse: go bid my woman Send for a jewel that was commend enough, Hath left mine arm: it was thy master's: 'shrew me, If I would lose it for a revenue
Of any king's in Europe. I do think I saw 't this morning: confident I am
Last night 't was on mine arm; I kiss'd it: I hope it be not gone to tell my lord
That I kiss aught but he.

Pis. 'T will not be lost.

Imo. I hope so: go and search. [Exit Pisania. Clo. You have abused me:

'His meanest garment!'
If you keep covenant. Had I not brought
The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant
We were to question further: but I now
Profess myself the winner of her honour,
Together with your ring; and not the wronger
Of her or you, having proceeded but
By both your wills.
Post. If you can make't apparent
That you have tasted her in bed, my hand
And ring is yours; if not, the foul opinion
You had of her pure honour gains or loses
Your sweat or mine, or masterless leaves both
To whom shall find them.
Iach. Sir, my circumstances,
Being so near the truth as I will make them,
Must first induce you to believe: whose strength
I will confirm with oath; which, I doubt not.
You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find
You need it not.
Post. Proceed.
Iach. First, her bedchamber,—
Where, I confess, I slept not, but profess
Had that was well worth watching — it was hang'd
With tapestry of silk and silver; the story
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And thus she swell'd above the banks, or for
The press of boats or pride: a piece of work
So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive
In workmanship and value; which I wonder'd
Could be so rarely and exactly wrought,
Since the true life on't was —
Post. This is true; And this you might have heard of here, by me,
Or by some other.
Iach. More particulars
Must justify my knowledge.
Post. Or do your honour injury.
Iach. The chimney
Is south the chamber, and the chimney-piece
Chaste Diana bathing: never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves: the cutter
Was as another nature, dumb; outwent her,
Motion and breath left out.
Post. This is a thing
Which you might from relation likewise reap,
Being, as it is, much spoke of.
Iach. The roof o' the chamber
With golden cherubins is fretted: her andirons —
I had forgot them — were two winking Cupids
Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely
Depending on their brands.
Post. This is her honour!
Let it be granted you have seen all this — and praise
Be given to your remembrance — the description
Of what is in her chamber nothing saves
The wager you have laid.
Iach. Then, if you can,
[Showing the bracelet.
Be pale: I beg but leave to air this jewel; see!
And now 'tis up again: it must be married
To that your diamond; I'll keep them.
Post. Once more let me behold it: is it that
Which I left with her?
Iach. Sir — I thank her — that:
She stripp'd it from her arm; I see her yet;
Her pretty action did outsell her gift,
And yet enrich'd it too: she gave it me, and said
She prized it once.
Post. May be she pluck'd it off
To send it me.
Iach. She writes so to you, doth she?
Post. O, no, no, no! 'tis true. Here, take this too;
It is a basilisk unto mine eye,
Kills me to look on't. Let there be no honour
Where there is beauty; truth, where semblance; love,
Where there's another man: the vows of women
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Than they are to their virtues; which is nothing.
O, above measure false!
Phil. Have patience, sir,
And take your ring again: 'tis not yet won!
It may be probable she lost it; or
Who knows if one of her women, being corrupted,
Hath stol'n it from her?
Post. Very true;
And so, I hope, he came by't. Hack my ring:
Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this; for this was stolen.
Iach. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.
Post. Hank you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears.
'T is true — nay, keep the ring — 't is true: I am sure
She would not lose it: her attendants are [lit!]
All sworn and honourable: — they induced to steal
And by a stranger! — No, he hath enjoyed her:
The cognizance of her incontinency
Is this: she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly.
There, take thy hire; and all the fiends of hell
Divide themselves between you!
Phil. Sir, be patient:
This is not strong enough to be believed
Of one persuaded well of —
Post. She hath been coltied by him.
If you seek
For further satisfying, under her breast —
Worthy the pressing — lies a mole, right proud
Of that most delicate lodging: by my life,
I kiss'd it; and it gave me present hunger
To feel again, though full. You do remember
This stain upon her?
Post. Ay, and it doth confirm
Another stain, as big as hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.
Iach. Will you hear more?
Post. Spare your arithmetic: never count the Once, and a million! [turns;
Iach. I'll be sworn —
No swearing.
If you will swear you have not done it, you lie;
And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny
Thou 'st made me cuckold.
Iach. I'll deny nothing.
Post. O, that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal!
I will go there and do 't, i' the court, before
Her father. I'll do something —
[Exit.
Phil. Quite besides
The government of patience! You have won:
Let's follow him, and pervert the present wrath
He hath against himself.
Iach. With all my heart. [Exeunt.
Like a full-acorn'd boar, a German one,
Cried 'O!' and mounted; found no opposition
But what he look'd for should oppose and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The wanderer's part in me! For there's no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part: be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, her; deceiving, hers;
Lust and rank thoughts, hers, hers; revenges, hers;
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice longing, slanders, mutability,
All faults that may be named, may, that hell knows,
Why, hers, in part or all; but rather, all;
For even to vice
They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them: yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate, to pray they have their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better. [Exit."

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Britain. A hall in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter in state, Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, and Lords at one door, and at another, Caius Lucius and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Caesar with us? [yet
Luc. When Julius Caesar, whose remembrance
Lives in men's eyes and will to ears and tongues
Be theme and hearing ever, was in this Britain
And conquer'd it, Cassibelan, thine uncle,—
Famous in Caesar's praises, no whit less
Than in his feats deserving it— for him
And his successor grant us Rome a tribute,
Yearly three thousand pounds, which by thee lately
Is left un'tender'd.

Quee. And, to kill the marvell,
Shall be so ever.

Clo. There be many Caesars,
Ere such another Julius, Britain is
A world by itself; and we will nothing pay
For wearing our own noses.

Quee. That opportunity
Where they then had to take from's, to resume
We have again. Remember, sir, my liege,
The kings your ancestors, together with
The natural bravery of your isle, which stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unscaleable and roaring waters,
With sands that will not bear your enemies' boats,
But sink them up to the topmast. A kind of conquest
Cesar made here; but made not here his brag
Of 'Come' and 'saw' and 'overcame'; with shame—
The first that ever touch'd him — he was carri'd
From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping—
Poor ignorant babbles!—on our terrible seas,
Like egg-shells moved upon their surges, crack'd
As easily 'gainst our rocks: for joy whereof
The famed Cassibelan, who was once at point—
O gigot fortune!—to master Caesar's sword,
Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright
And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid:
our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and,
and, when I said, there is no more Caesar: other of them may have crook'd noses, but to owe such straight arms, none.

Cym. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cassiclan: I do not say I am one; but I have a hand here: why tribute? why should we pay tribute?
If Caesar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the noon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know,
Till the injurious Romans did extort [then,
This tribute from us, we were free: Caesar's ambi-
Which well'd so much that it did almost stretch
The sides o' the world, against all colour here
Did put the yoke upon 's; which to shake off

SCENE II.—Another room in the palace.

Enter Pisanio, with a letter.

Pis. How! of adultery? Wherefore write you not What monster's her virtue? Leonatus! O master! what a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! What false Italian,
As poisonous-tongued asándosented, hath prevail'd
On thy too-ready hearing? Disloyal! No:
She's punish'd for her truth, and undergoes
More goddess-like than wife-like such assaults
As would take upon some virtue. O my master!
Thy mind to her is now as low as were
Thy fortunes. How! that should murder her?
Upon the love and truth and vows which I
Have made to thy command? I, her? her blood?
If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I,
That I should seem to lack humanity [the letter
So much as this fact comes to? [Reading] 'Do't:

385
That I have sent her, by her own command
Shall give thee opportunity. O damnd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee! Senseless bauble,
Art thou a foolary for this net, and look'st
So virgin-like without? Lo, here she comes.
I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

Enter Imogen.

How now, Pisano? Madam, here is a letter from my lord.
Who? thy lord? that is my lord, Leonatus?
O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer
That knew the stars as I his characters;
He'll find the heavy heaven of his gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content, yet not
That we two are asunder; let that grieve him;
Some griefs are med'cinal; that is one of them,
For it doth physic love: of his content,
All but in that! Good wax, thy leave. Blest be
You bees that make these locks of counsel! Lovers
And men in dangerous bonds pray not alike:
Though forrester ye cast in prison yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables. Good news, gods!
[Reads] 'Justice, and your father's shrith, should be taken in my dominion, could not be so cruel to me:
O, the dearest of creatures, would ever renew me with your eyes. Take notice that I am in Cambria, at Milford-Haven: what your own love will out of this advise you, follow. So he wishes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love,
Leonatus Posthumus.' O, for a horse with wings! Heart's thou, Pisano? He is at Milford-Haven: read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Then, true Pisano,—
Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who long'st,—
O, let me bate,—but not like me,—yet long'st,
But in a fainter kind:—O, not like me;
For mine's beyond beyond,—say, and speak thick;
Love's counsellor should fill the bores of hearing,
To the smoothing of the sense—how far it is
To this same blessed Milford: and by the way
Tell me how Wales was made so happy as
To inherit such a haven: but first of all,
How we may steal hence, and for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going
And our return, to excuse: but first, how get hence:
Why should excuse be born or ever begot?
We'll have it thus hereafter. Prithee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour?

Pis. One score 'twixt sun and sun,
Madam, 'enough for you: [Aside] and too much too.

Imo. Why, that one rode to 's execution, man,
Could never so slow: I have heard of riding wagers,
Where horses have been nimbler than the sands
That run i' the clock's behalf. But this is foolery:
Go bid my woman feign a sickness: say
She'll home to her father: and provide me presently
A riding-suit, no costlier than would fit
A franklin's housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me, man: nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues, but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through. Away, I prithee;
Do as I bid thee: there's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Wales: a mountainous country with a

Enter, from the cave, Bolarios; Guidierius and Arviragus following.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such Whose roods 's as low as ours! Stoop, boys; this gate

Instructs you how to adore the heavens and bow you
To a morning's holy office: the gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Hail, thou fair heaven!
We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Guil. Hail, heaven!

Arr. Hall, heaven!

Bel. Now for our mountain sport: up to yond hill;
Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats. Con;
When you above perceive me like a crow, [sider,
That it is place which lessens and sets off;
And you may here all the work I have told
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war: [you
This service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd: to apprehend thus.
Draws us a profit from all things we see;
And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold.
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life
Is nobler than attending for a check,
Richeer than doing nothing for a bauble,
Prouder than rustling in unpard-for slink:
Such gain the cap of him that makes 'em fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd: no life to ours.

Guil. Only by your proof you speak: we, poor unfledged,

not
Have never wing'd from view o' the nest, nor know
What air's from home. Haply this life is best,
If quiet life be best; sweeter to you
That have a sharper known; well corresponding With your stiff age; but unto us it is
A cell of ignorance; travelling a-bed;
A prison for a debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit.

Arr. What should we speak of
When we are old as you? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how,
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away? We have seen nothing;
We are beastly, subtle as the fox for prey,
Like warlike as the wolf for what we eat;
Our value is to chase what flies; our cage
We make a quire, as doth the prison bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!
Did you but know the city's usuries
And felt them knowingly; the art o' the court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or else he that fails
The fear as much as falling; the toll o' the war,
A pain that only seems to seek out danger [search,
I' the name of fame and honour; which dies i' the
And hath as oft a slanderous epitaph
As record of fair act; nay, many times,
Both ill deserve by doing well; what's worse.
Must court'sy at the censure:—O boys, this story
The world may read in me: my body's mark'd
With Roman swords, and my report was once
First with the best of note: Cymbeline loved me,
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: then was I as a tree
[night,
Whose boughs did bend with fruit: but in one
A storm or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, my, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather.

Guil. Uncertain favour!

Bel. My fault being nothing — as I have told you off —
But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd
Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline
I was confederate with the Romans: so
Follow'd my banishment, and this twenty years
This rock and these demons have been my world;
Where I have lived at honest freedom, paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all

ACT III.

SCENE IV.

The fore-end of my time. But up to the mountains! This is not hunters’ language: he that strikes The venison first shall be the lord of the feast; To him the other two shall minister; And we will fear no poison, which attends In place of greater state. I’ll meet you in the valleys, [Exeunt Guiderius and Arviragus.] How hard it is to hide the sparks of nature! These boys know little: they been some to the king; Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. They think they are mine; and though train’d up thus meanly The cave wherein they bow, their thoughts do hit The roofs of palaces, and nature prompts them In simple and low things to prince it much Beyond the trick of others. This Polydore, The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, who The king his father call’d Guiderius.—Jove! When on my three-foot stool I sit and tell The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out Into my story: say ‘Thus mine enemy fell, And thus I set my foot on his neck;’ even then The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats, strains his young nerves and puts himself in posture That acts my words. The younger brother, Cadwal, Once Arviragus, in as like a figure, strikes life into my speech and shows much more His own receiving.—Hark, the game is roused!— O Cymbeline! heaven and my conscience knows Thou dost unjustly banish me: whereon, At three and two years old, I stole these babes; Thinking to bar thee of succession, as Thou refus’dst me of my hands. EURYPHILE, Thou wast their nurse; they took thee for their And every day do honour to her grave: mother, Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call’d, They take for natural father. The game is up. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Country near Milford-Haven.

Enter Pisanio and Imogen.

Ino. Thou told’st me, when we came from horse, the place Was near at hand: ne’er long’d my mother so — To see me first, as I have now. Pisanio! man! Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind, That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that sigh From the inward of thee? One, but painted thus, Would be interpreted a thing perplex’d Beyond self-explication: put thyself Into a harbour of less fear, ere wildness Vanquish my staid senses. What’s the matter? Why tender’st thou that paper to me, with A look antender’d? If’t be summer news, Smile to’t before; if winterly, thou need’st But keep that countenance still. My husband’s hand! That drug-damn’d Italy hath out-crafted him, And he’s at some hard point. Speak, man: thy tongue May take off some extremity, which to read Would be even mortal to me.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my sword? the paper Hath cut her throat already. No, ’tis slander, Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue Outvans all the worms of Nile, whose breath Rides on the posting winds and doth belie All corners of the world: kings, queens and states, Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave This vipers’ slander enters; that is it, madam? Ino. False to his bed! What is it to be false? To lie in watch there and to think on him? To weep ’twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge na To break it with a fearful dream of him? [ture, And cry myself awake? that’s false to ’s bed, is it? Pis. Alas, good lady! Ino. I false! Thy conscience witness: Iachimo, Thou didst accuse him of incontinency; Thou then look’dst like a villain; now methinks Thy favour’s good enough. Some day of Italy Whose mother was her painting, hath betray’d him: Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion; And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls, I must be ripp’d: — to pieces with me! — O, Men’s vows are women’s traitors! All good seeming, By thy revolt, O husband, shall be thought Put on for villainy; not born where ’t grows, But worn a bait for ladies.

Ino. Good madam, hear me. Were in his time thought false, and Simon’s weeping Did scanclry many a holy tear, took pity From most true wretchedness: so thou, Posthumus, Wilt lay the heaven on all proper men; Goodly and gallant shall be false and perfirgured From thy great fail. Come, fellow, be thou honest: Do thou thy master’s bidding: when thou see’st him, A little witness my obedience: look! I draw the sword myself: take it, and hit The innocent mansion of my love, my heart; Fear not: ’tis empty of all things but grief: Thy master is not there, who was indeed The riches of it: do his bidding; strike Thou mayst be valiant in a better cause; But now thou seem’st a coward.

Ino. Hence, vile instrument! Thou shalt not damn my hand.

Ino. Why, I must die; And if I do not by thy hand, thou art No servant of thy master’s. Against self-slaughter There is a prohibition so divine [heart. That craven my weak hand. Come, here’s my Some thing’s afar t. Soft, soft! we’ll no defence; Obedient as the scabbard. What is here? The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus, All turn’d to heresy? Away, away, Corrupters of my faith! thou shall no more Be stomachers to my heart. Thus may poor fools Believe false teachers: though those that are betray’d Do feel the passion sharply, yet the traitor Stands in worse case of woe. And thou, Posthumus, thou that didst set up My disobedience’gainst the king my father And make me put into contempt the suits Of princely fellows, shall hereafter find It is no act of common passage, but A strain of greatness; all shall give way To think, when thou shalt be disdained by her That now thou tirest on, how thy memory Will then be pardon’d by me. Pritesse, dispatch: The lamb entreats the butcher: where’s thy knife? Thou art too slow to do thy master’s bidding, When I desire it too. O gracious lady, Since I received command to do this business I have not slept one wink. [Do’t, and to bed then. 787
Cymbeline.

ACT III.

SCENE V.

Pis. I'll wake mine eye-balls blind first.

Imo. Wherefore then

Didst undertake it? Why hast thou abused

So many miles with a pretence? this place?

Mine action and thine own? our horses' labour?

The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,

For my being absent? whereunto I never

Purpose return. Why hath thou gone so far,

To be unbet when thou hast ta''en thy stand,

The elected deer before thee?

Pis. But to win time

To load so bad employment; in the which

I have consider'd of a course. Good lady,

Hear me with patience.

Imo. Talk thy tongue weary; speak:

I have heard I am a strumpet; and mine ear,

Therein false struck, can take no greater wound,

Nor tent to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. I thought you would not back again.

Imo. Most like;

Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither:

But if I were as wise as honest, then

My purpose would prove well. It cannot be

But that my master is abused:

Some villain, ay, and singular in his art,

Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Imo. Some Roman courtesan.

Pis. No, on my life,

I'll give but notice you are dead and send him

Some bloody sign of it; for 'tis commanded

I should do so: you shall be miss'd at court,

And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,

What shall I do whilst? where bid? how live?

Or in my life what comfort, when I am

Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court—

Imo. No court, no father; nor no more ado

With that harsh, noble, simple nothing,

That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me

As fearful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,

Then not in Britain must you abide.

Imo. Where then?

Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day, night,

Are they not but in Britain? 1 the world's volume

Our Britain seems as of it, but not in 't;

In a great pool a swan's nest: prithee, think

There's lives out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad

You think of other place. The ambassador,

Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford-Haven

To-morrow: now, if you could wear a mind

Dark as your fortune is, and but disguise

That which, to appear itself, must not yet be

But by self-danger, you should tread a course

Pretty and full of view; yea, haply, near

The residence of Posthumus; so night at least

That though his actions were not visible, yet

Report should render him hourly to your ear

As truly as he moves.

Imo. O, for such means!

Though peril to my modesty, not death on 't,

I would adventure.

Pis. Well, then, here's the point:

You must forget to be a woman; change

Command into obdience; fear and niceness—

The handmaidens of all women, or, more truly,

Woman its pretty self—into a waggish courage;

Ready in gibes, quick-answer'd, saucy and

As quarrelous as the weasel; nay, you must

Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,

Exposing it—but, O, the harder heart!

Alack, no remedy!—to the greedy touch

Of common-kissing Titan, and forget

Your laboursome and dainty trius, wherein

You made great Juno angry.

Imo. Nay, be brief:

I see into thy end, and am almost

A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one.

Fore-thinking this, I have already fit—

'Tis in my cloak-bag—doublet, hat, hose, all

That answer to them: would you in their serving,

And with what imitation you can borrow

From youth of such a season, 'fore noble Lucius.

Present yourself, desire his service, tell him—[know

Wherein you're happy,—which you'll make him

If that his head have ear in music,—doubtless

With joy he will embrace you, for he's honourable

And doubting that, most holy. Your means abroad,

You have me, rich; and I will never fail

Beginning nor supplyment.

Thou art all the comfort

The gods will diet me with. Prithee, away:

There's more to be consider'd: but we'll even

All that good time will give us: this attempt

I am soldier to, and will abide it with

A prince's courage. Away, I prithee.

Pis. Well, madam, we move not to a short farewell,

Lest, being miss'd, I be suspected of

Your carriage from the court. My noble mistress,

Here is a box; I had it from the queen;

What 's in 't is precious; if you are sick at sea,

Or stomach-qualm'd at land, a dram of this

Will drive away distemper. To some shade,

And fit you to your manhood. May the gods

Direct you to the best!

Imo. Amen: I thank thee. [Exeunt, severally.

SCENE V. — A room in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Queen, Cloten, Lucius, Lords, and Attendants.

Cym. Thus far; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir.

My emperor hath wrote, I must from hence;

And an right sorry that I must report ye

Pis. My master's enemy.

Cym. Our subjects, sir,

Will not endure his yoke; and for ourself

To show less sovereignty than they, must needs

Appear unkinglike.

Luc. So, sir: I desire of you

A conduct over-land to Milford-Haven.

Madam, all joy befall your grace!

Que. And you!

Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office;

The due of honour in no point omit.

So farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.

Clo. Receive it friendly; but from this time forth

I wear it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event

Is yet to name the winner: fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords,

Till he have cross'd the world's remotest region,

And in the utmost of the Roman empire.

[Exeunt Lucius and Lords.

Que. He goes hence frowning: but it honours

That we have given him cause.

Clo. 'Tis all the better;

Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor

How it goes here. It fits me therefore ripely

Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness:

The powers that he already hath in Gallia

Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves

His war for Britain.

Que. 'Tis not sleepy business;

But must be look'd to speedily and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus

Hath made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
ACT III.

Cymbeline.

SCENE V.

Where is our daughter? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd
The duty of the day: she looks us like
A thing more made of malice than of duty:
We have noted it. Call her before us; for
We have been too slight in suffering Posthumus.

[Exit an Attendant.

Queen.
Since the exile of Posthumus, most retir'd
Hath her life been; the cure whereof, my lord,
'Tis thine must do. Beseach your majesty,
Forbear sharp speeches to her: she 's a lady
So tender of rebukes that words are strokes
And strokes death to her.

Re-enter Attendant.

Cyn.
Where is she, sir? How
Can her contempt be answer'd?

Att.
Please you, sir,
Her chambers are all lock'd; and there 's no answer
That will be given to the loudest noise we make.

Queen.
My lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close,
Whereeto constrain'd by her infirmity,
She should that duty leave unpaid to you,
Which daily she was bound to profer: this
She wish'd me to make known; but our great court
Made me to blame in memory.

Cyn.
Her doors lock'd?
Not seen of late? Grant, heavens, that which I fear
Prove false!

Queen.
Son, I say, follow the king.
Clo.
That man of hers, Pisanio, his old servant,
I have not seen these two days.

Queen.
Go, look after.

Pisanio, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus!
He hath a drug of mine; I pray his absence
Proceed by swallowing that, for he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone? Haply, despair hath seized her,
Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her desired Posthumus: gone she is
To death or to dishonour; and my end
Can make good use of either: she being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter Cloten.

How now, my son!

Clo.
'Tis certain she is fled.
Go in and cheer the king: he rages; none
Dare come about him.

Queen.
[Aside] All the better: may
This night forestall him of the coming day!

Clo.
I love and hate her: for she's fair and royal,
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lady, ladies, woman; from every one
The best she hath, and she, of all compounded,
Outsells them all: I love her therefore: but Disdaining me and throwing favours on
The low Posthumus slanders so her judgment
That what 's else rare is chok'd; and in that point
I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed,
To be revenged upon her. For when fools

Enter Pisanio.

Who is here? What are you packing, sirrah?
Come hither; ah, you precious pandar! Villain,
Where is thy lady? In a word; or else
Thou art straightway with the fiends.

Pis.
O, good my lord!

Clo.
Where is thy lady? or, by Jupiter,—
I will not ask again. Close villain,
I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus?
From whose so many weights of baseness cannot
A drum of worth be drawn.

Pis.
Alas, my lord,
How can she be with him? When was she miss'd?
He is in Rome.

Clo.
Where is she, sir? Come nearer;
No further halting; satisfy me home
What is become of her.

Pis.
O, my all-worthy lord!

Clo.
Discover where thy mistress is at once.
At the next word: no more of 'worthy lord!'
Speak, or thy silence on the instant is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis.
Then, sir,
This paper is the history of my knowledge
Touching her flight.

Pis. [Aside] Or this, or perish.
She's far enough; and what he learns by this
May prove his travel, not her danger.

Clo.
Humm!

Pis. [Aside] I'll write to my lord she's dead.
O Imogen,
Safe mayst thou wander, safe return again!

Clo.
Sirrah, is this letter true?

Pis. Sir, as I think.

Clo.
It is Posthumus' hand: I know 't. Sirrah, if thou wouldest not be a villain, but do me true service, undergo those employments wherein
I should have cause to use thee with a serious industry, that is, what villany se' or I bid thee do, to perform it directly and truly, I would think the an honest man: thou shouldst neither want my means for thy relief nor my voice for thy pre-

Pis.
Well, my good lord.

Ferment.

Clo.
Wilt thou serve me? for since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune of that beggar Posthumus, thou canst not, in the course of garment, I know, but be a diligent follower of mine: wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Clo.
Give me thy hand: here's my purse. Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.

Clo.
The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither: let it be thy first service; go.

Pis. I shall, my lord.

Clo.
[Exit.

Meet thee at Milford-Haven!—I forgot to ask him one thing: I'll remember 'an anon:—
even then, thou villain Posthumus, will I kill thee.
I would these garments were come. She said upon a time—the bitterness of it I now belch from my heart—that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back, will I ravish him: first kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body, and when my lust hath dined,—which, as I say, to vex her I will execute in the clothes that she so praised,— to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter Pisanio, with the clothes.

Be those the garments?

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

[Exit.

Clo.
How long is't since she went to Milford?

Pis.
She can scarce be there yet.

Clo.
Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee: the third is, that thou wilt be a voluntary mute to my design. Be but duteous, and true preferrment shall shelter itself to thee. My revenge is now at Milford: would I had wings to follow it! Come, and be true.  [Exit]

Pis. Thou bid’st me to thy loss: for true to thee
Were to prove false, which I will never be,
To him that is most true. To Milford go,
And find not her whom thou pursuest. Flow, flow,
You heavenly blessings, on her! This fool’s speed
Be cross’d with slowness; labour be his need!  [Exit]

SCENE VI.—Wales. Before the cave of Belarius.

Enter Imogen, in boy’s clothes.

Imo. I see a man’s life is a tedious one:
I have tired myself, and for two nights together
Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick,
But that my resolution helps me. Milford,
When from the mountain-top Pisanio shew’d thee,
Thou wast within a ken: O Jove! I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean, [me
Where they should be relieved. Two beggars told
I could not miss my way: will poor folks lie,
That have afflictions on them, knowing ‘tis
A punishment or trial? Yes; no wonder,
When rich ones scarce tell true. To lapse in fulness
Is sorrier than to lie for need, and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. My dear lord!
They were one ‘t the false ones. Y’s true
I think on thee, my hunger’s gone; but even before, I was
At point to sink for food. But what is this?
Here is a path to ‘t: ‘tis some savage hold:
I were best not call; I dare not call: yet famine,
Ere clean it o’erthrow nature, makes it valiant.
Plenty and peace breeds cowards: hardness ever
Of hardness is mother. Ho! who’s here?
If any thing that’s civil, speak; if savage,
Take or lend. Ho! No answer? Then I’ll enter.
Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy
But fear the sword like me, he’ll scarcely look on ‘t.
Such a foe, good heavens!  [Exit, to the cave.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arrviragus.

Bel. You, Polydore, have proved best woodman
Are master of the feast: Cadwal and I [and
Will play the cook and servant; ‘t is our match:
The sweat of industry would dry and die.
But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs
Will make what’s homely savoury: weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth
Finds the down pillow hard. Now peace be here,
Poor house, that keep’s thyself!

Gui. Am I thoroughly weary.

Arr. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.

Gui. There is cold meat i’ the cave: we’ll browse
Whilst what we have kill’d be cook’d. [on that,
Bel. [Looking into the cave] Stay; come not in.
But that it eats our victuals, I should think
Here were a fairy.

Gui. What’s the matter, sir?

Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
An earthly paragon. Behold divineness
No elder than a boy!

Re-enter Imogen.

Imo. Good masters, harm me not:
Before I enter here, I call’d; and thought
To have begg’d or bought what I have took: good trough, [found
I have stol’n nought, nor would not, though I had Gold skew’d i’ the floor. Here’s money for my
I would have left it on the board so soon [meat:
As I had made my meal, and parted
With prayers for the provider.

Gui. Money, youth?

Arr. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt!
And ‘t is no better reckon’d, but of those Who worship dirty gods.

790
SCENE I.—Wales: near the cave of Belarius.

Enter Cloten.

Clo. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapped it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather—saving reverence of the word—for 'tis said a woman's fitness comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself—for it is not vain-glory for a man and his glass to confer in his own chamber—I mean, the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more strong, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single oppositions: yet this imperceivable thing loves him in my despite. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now is growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off; thy mistress enforced; thy garments cut to pieces before thy face: and all this done, spare her home to her father; who may haply be a little angry for my so rough usage; but my mother, having power of her testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe: out, sword, and to a sort purpose! Fortune, put these into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting; and the fellow dares not deceive me. [Exit.

SCENE II. Before the cave of Belarius.

Enter, from the cave, Belarius, Guidoerius, Arrivarquis, and Imogen.

Bel. [To Imogen] You are not well: remain here in We'll come to you after hunting. [the cave;]

Arc. [To Imogen] Brother, stay here: Are we not brothers? So man and man should be; But clay and clay differs in dignity, Whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gui. Go you to hunting; I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not, yet I am not well; But not so citizen a wanton as To seem to die and sick: so p lease you, leave me; Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom Is breach of all. I am ill, but your being by me Cannot amend me; society is no comfort To one not sociable: I am not very sick, Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here: I'll rob none but myself; and let me die, Stealing so poorly.

Gui. I love thee; I have spoke it: How much the quantity, the weight as much, As I do love my father.

Bel. What! how! how! how! Arc. If it be sin to say so, sir, I yoke me In my good brother's fault: I know not why I love this youth; and I have heard you say, Love's reason's without reason: the bier at door, And a demand who 'tis shall die, I'd say 'My father, not this youth.'

Bel. [Aside] O noble strain! Our wantonness of nature! breed of greatness! Cowards father cowards and they themselves are base: Nature hath meal and bran, contempt and grace. I'm not their father; yet who this should, Doth miracle itself, loved before me. 'Tis the ninth hour o' the morn.

Arc. I wish ye sport.

Arc. You health. So please you, sir.

Imo. [Aside] These are kind creatures. Gods, what lies I have heard!

Our courtiers say all's savage but at court: Experience, O, thou disprovest report! The imperious seas breed monsters, for the dish Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish. I am sick still; heart-sick. Pisanio, I'll now taste of thy drug. [Swallows some.]

Gui. I could not stir him: He said he was gentle, but unfortunate; Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arc. Thus did he answer me: yet said, hereafter I might know more.

Bel. To the field, to the field! We'll leave you for this time: go in and rest.

Arc. We'll not be long away.

Bel. Pray, be not sick, For you must be our housewife. Well or ill,

Imo. I am bound to you.

Bel. And shall be ever.

[Exit Imogen, to the cave.

This youth, how'er distress'd, appears he hath had Good ancestors.

Arc. How angel-like he sings!

Gui. But his neat cookery! he cut our roots In characters, And sauced our broths, as Juno had been sick And he dieter.

Arc. Nobly he yokes A smiling with a sigh, as if the sight Was that it was, for not being such a smile; The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly From so divine a temple, to conniex With winds that sailors roll at.

I do note That grief and patience, rooted in him both, Mingle their spurs together.

Gui. Grow, patience! And let the stinking elder, grief, unwine His perishing root with the increasing vine! Bel. It is great morning. Come, away!—Who's there?

Enter Cloten.

Clo. I cannot find those runagates; that villain Hath mock'd me. I am faint.

Bel. Those runagates! Means he not us? I partly know him: 'tis Cloten, the son o' the queen. I fear some ambush. I saw him not these many years, and yet I know 'tis he. We are held as outlaws: hence! Gui. He is but one: you and my brother search What companies are near: pray you, away; Let me alone with him.

[Exeunt Belarius and Arrivarquis.

Clo. Soft! What are you That fly me thus? some villain mountaineers? I have heard of such. What slave art thou? Gui. A thing More lavish did I ne'er than answering A slave without a knock.

Clo. Thou art a robber, A law-breaker, a villain; yield thee, thief.

Gui. To who? to thee? What art thou? Have not I An arm as big as thine? a heart as big? Thy words, I grant, are bigger, for I wear not My dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art, Why I should yield to thee?

Clo. Thou villain base, Know'st me not by my clothes?

Gui. No, nor thy tailor, rascal. Who is thy grandfather? he made those clothes, Which, as it seems, make thee.

Clo. Thou precious varlet, My tailor made them not.
Cymbeline.

A. Hence, then, and thank The man that gave them thee. Thou art some fool; I am loath to beat thee.

C. Thon injurious thief, Hear but my name, and tremble.

G. What's thy name?

C. Cloten, thou villain.

G. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name, I cannot tremble at it: were it Tad, or Ader, slip-T would move me sooner.

C. To thy further fear, Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know I am son to the queen.

G. I am sorry for 't; not seeming so worthy as thy birth.

C. Art not afraid?

G. Those that I reverence those I fear, the wise: At fools I laugh, not fear them.

C. Die the death:

When I have slain thee with my proper hand, I'll lay low those that even now did hence.

And on the gates of Lud's-town set your heads: Yield, rustic mountaineer.

[Exeunt, fighting.]

Re-enter Belarius and Arviragus.

B. No companies abroad?

A. None in the world: you did mistake him, B. I cannot tell; long is it since I saw him, But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favour Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice, And burst of speaking, were as his: I am absolute T was very Cloten.

C. In this place we left them: I wish my brother make good time with him, You say he is so fell.

B. Being scarce made up, I mean, to man, he had not apprehension Of roaring terrors; for the effect of judgment Is oft the cause of fear. But, see, thy brother.

Re-enter Guiderius, with Cloten's head.

G. This Cloten was a fool, an empty purse; There was no money in 't: not Hercules Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none: Yet I not doing this, the fool had borne My head as I do his.

B. What hast thou done?

G. I am perfect what: cut off one Cloten's head, Son to the queen, after his own report; Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer, and swore With his own single hand he 'ld take us in, [grow, Displace our heads where—thank the gods!—they And set them on Lud's-town.

B. We are all undone.

G. Why, worthy father, what have we to lose, But that he swore to take, our lives? The law Protects not us: then why should we be tender To let an arrogant piece of des'd trait us, Play judge and executioner all himself, For we do fear the law? What company Discover you abroad?

B. No single soul Can we set eye on; but in all safe reason He must have some attendants. Though his humour Was nothing but mutation, ay, and that From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have rav'd To bring him here alone; although perhaps It may be heard at court that such as we Came here, hunt here, are outlawts, and in time May make some stronger head: the which he hear- As it is like him—might break out, and swear [ing— He 'ld fetch us in; yet is 't not probable To come alone, either he so undertaking, Or they so suffering: then on good ground we fear, If we do fear this body hath a tail More perilous than the head.

Arc. Let ordinance Come as the gods foresay it: howsoe'er, My brother hath done well.

B. I had no mind To hunt this day: the boy Fidele's sickness Did make my way long forth.

G. With his own sword, Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en His head from him: I'll throw 't into the creek Behind our rock; and let it to the sea, And tell the fishes he's the queen's son, Cloten: That's all I reck.

[Exit.

B. I fear 't will be revenged: Would, Polydore, thou hadst not done 't! though valour Becomes thee well enough.

A. Would I had done 't,

So the revenge alone pursued me! Polydore, I love thee brotherly, but envy much Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would revenges, That possible strength might meet, would seek us And put us to our answer.

[through

B. Well, 't is done: We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger Where there's no profit. I prithee, to our rock; You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him To dinner presently.

A. Poor sick Fidele! I'll willingly to him: to gain his colour I'd let a parish of such Clotens' blood, And praise myself for charity.

[Exit.

B. Thou divine Nature, how thyself thou blazon'st In these two princely boys! They are as gentle As sycamors blowing below the violet, Not wagging his sweet head; and yet as rough, Their royal blood enclas'd, as the rudest wind, That by the top doth take the mountain pine, And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonder That an invisible instinct should frame them To royalty unlearn'd, honour untaught, Civility not seen from other, valour That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop As if it had been sow'd. Yet still it's strange What Cloten's being here to us pertains, Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter Guiderius.

G. Where's my brother?

I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream, In embassy to his mother: his body's haste For his return.

[Solena music.

B. My ingenious instrument!

Hark, Polydore, it sounds! But what occasion Hath Cadwal now to give it motion? Hark!

G. Is he at home?

B. He went hence even now.

G. What does he mean? since death of my dearst mother It did not speak before. All solemn things Should answer solemn accidents. The matter? Triumphs for nothing and lamenting toys Is jollity for ayes and grief for boys. Is Cadwal mad?

B. Look, here he comes, And brings the dire occasion in his arms Of what we blame him for.

Re-enter Arviragus, with Imogen, as dead, bearing her in his arms.

A. The bird is dead That we have made so much on. I had rather Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to sixty, To have turn'd my leaping-time into a crutch, Than have seen this.

G. O sweetest, fairest lily!
CYMBELINE.—Act IV., Scene ii.
My brother wears thee not the one half so well
As when thou grew'st thyself.
Bel. O melancholy!
Who ever yet could sound thy bottom?—
Thou comest, to show what coast thy sluggish crake
Might casiest harbour in? Thou blessed thing!
Jove knows what man thou mightest have made;
Thou diest, a most rare boy, of melancholy. [but I,
How found you him?]
Arc. Stark, as you see:
Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber,
Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at: his right cheek
Reposing on a cushion.
Gui. Where?
Arc. O' the floor;
His arms thus leagued: I thought he slept, and put My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness
Answer'd my steps too loud.
Gui. Why, he but sleeps:
If he be, he'll make his grave a bed;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.
Arc. With fairest flowers
Whilst summer lasts and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: thou shalt not lack
The flower that's like thy face, pale primrose, nor
The azured harebell, like thy veins, no, nor
The leaf of galantine, whom not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddock would,
With charitable bill,—O bill, sore shaming
Those rich-left heirs that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!—bring thee all this;
Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are
To winter-ground thy corse. [none,
Gui. Prithhee, have done;
And do not play in wenche-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration what
Is now due debt. To the grave!
Arc. Say, where shall 's lay him?
Gui. By good Euriaphile, our mother.
Arc. Be 't so:
And let us, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground,
As once our mother; use like note and words,
Save that Euriaphile must be Fidele.
Gui. Cadwal,
I cannot sing: I'll weep, and word it with thee;
For notes of sorrow out of tune are worse
Than priests and fanes that lie,
Arc. We'll speak it, then.
Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less; for Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys; And though he came our enemy, remember [ting
He was paid for that: though mean and mighty, rol-
Together, have one dust, yet reverence,
That angel of the world, doth make distinction
Of place 'tween high and low. Our foe was princely:
And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him a prince.
Gui. Pray you, fetch him hither.
Theirselves' body is as good as Ajax',
When neither are alive.
Arc. If you'll go fetch him,
We'll say our song the whilst. Brother, begin.
[Exit Belarius.]
Gui. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the
My father hath a reason for 't. [east;
Arc. 'Tis true.
Gui. Come on then, and remove him.
SONG.
Gui. Fear no more the heat o' the sun,
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.
Arc. Fear no more the cloud o' the great;
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothes and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak;
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.
Gui. Fear no more the lightning-flash;
Arc. Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Gui. Fear not slander, censure rash;
Arc. Thou hast finish'd joy and mean:
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.
Gui. No exerciser harm thee!
Arc. Nor with witchcraft charm thee!
Gui. Ghost unaided forbear thee!
Arc. Nothing ill come near thee!
Both. Quiet consummation have;
And renowned be thy grave!
Re-enter Belarius, with the body of Cloten.
Gui. We have done our obsequies: come, lay him down. [more:
Bel. Here's a few flowers; but 'bout midnight,
The herbs that have on them cold dew o' the night
Are strewings filt't for graves. Upon their faces,
You were as flowers, now withered: even so
These herbetts shall, which we upon you strew.
Come on, away: apart upon our knees.
The ground that gave them first has them again:
Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.
[Exeunt Belarius, Guiderius and Arreurgus.
Ino. [Awaking] Xes, ye, to Milford-Haven; which is the way?—[latterly]
I thank you.—By yond bush?—Pray, how far 'Ods pittikins! can it be six mile yet?—
I have gone all night. 'Faith, I'll lie down and sleep.
But, soft! no bedfellow!—O gods and goddesses!
[Seeing the body of Cloten.
These flowers are like the pleasures of the world;
This bloody man, the care on. I hope dream;
For so I thought I was a cave-keeper,
And cook to honest creatures: but 't is not so;
'Was but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
Which the brain makes of fumes: our very eyes
Were sometimes like our judgments, blind.
Good I tremble still with fear: but if there be [faith,
Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity
As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it!
The dream's here still: even when I wake, it is Without me, as within me; not imagined, felt.
A heartless man! The garments of Posthumus!
I know the shape of 's leg: this is his hand;
His foot Mercureial; his Martial thigh;
The brawns of Hercules: but his Jovial face—
Murder in heaven?—How!—'T is gone. Pisano,
All cursed maddens Hecba gave the Greeks,
And mine to heaven, be darted on thee! Thou,
Conspired with that irreproachable devil, Cloten,
Hast here cut off my lord. To write and read
Be henceforth treacherous!Damn'd Pisano!
Hath with his forged letters,—damn'd Pisano—
From this most bravest vessel of the world
Struck the main-top? O Posthumus! alas, [that?
Where is thy head? Ay, where? Ay me! where's
Pisano might have kill'd thee at the heart.
And left this head on. How should this be? Pisano?
'Tis he and Cloten: malice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. O, 't is pregnant, pregnant!
The drug he gave me, which he said was precious
And cordial to me, have I not found it
Murderous to the senses? That confirms it home:
This is Pisano's deed, and Cloten's: O!
Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrider may seem to those
Which chance to find us: O, my lord, my lord!
[Falls on the body.

Enter Lucius, a Captain and other Officers, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them the legions garrison'd in Gallia,
After your will, have cross'd the sea, attending
You here at Milford-Haven with your ships:
They are in readiness.

Luc. But what from Rome?

Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners
And gentlemen of Italy, most willing spirits,
That promise noble service: and they come
Under the conduct of bold Iachimo,
Syenna's brother.

Luc. When expect you them?
Cap. With the next benefit o' the wind.

Luc. This forwardness
Makes our hopes fair. Command our present numbers
Be muster'd; bid the captains look to 't. Now, sir,
What have you dream'd of late of this war's purpose?

Sooth. Last night the very gods show'd me a
I fast and pray'd for their intelligence—thus:
I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spongy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends—
Unless my sins abuse my divination—
Success to the Roman host.

Luc. Dream often so,
And never false. Soft, ho! what trunk is here
Without his top? The ruin speaks that sometime
It was a worthy building. How! a page!
Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead rather;
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.
Let's see the boy's face.

Cap. He's alive, my lord.

Luc. He'll then instruct us of this body. Young
Inform us of thy fortunes, for it seems [one,
They crave to be demanded. Who is this Thou makest thy bloody pillow? Or who was he
That, otherwise than noble nature did,
Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy interest
In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be were better. This was my master,
A very valiant Briton and a good,
That here by mountaineers lies slain. Alas!
There is no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, cry out for service,
Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Luc. 'Lack, good youth!
Thou movest no less with thy complaining than
Thy master in bleeding: say his name, good friend.

Imo. Richard du Champ. [Aside] If I do lie and
No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope [do
They'll pardon it.—Say you, sir?

Luc. Thy name?

Imo. Fidele, sir.

Luc. Thou dost approve thyself the very same:
Thy name well fits thy faith, thy faith thy name.
Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say
Thou shalt be so well master'd, but, be sure,
No less beloved. The Roman emperor's letters,
Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner
Than thine own worth prefer thee: go with me.

Imo. I'll follow, sir. But first, an't please the gods,
I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep
As these poor pickaxes can dig: and when [grave,
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' straw'd his

And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you enjoin me.

Luc. Ay, good youth;
And rather father thee than master thee.

My friends,
The boy hath taught us many duties: let us
Find out the prettiest dalsted plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave: come, arm him. Boy, he is pretend'd
By thee to us, and he shall be inter'd
As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes:
Some falls are means the happier to arise. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A room in Cymbeline's palace.

Enter Cymbeline, Lords, Pisianio, and Attendants.

Cym. Again; and bring me word how 'tis with her.

[Exit an Attendant.

A fever with the absence of her son,
A madness, of which her life's in danger. Heavens,
How deeply you at once do touch me! Imogen,
The great part of my comfort, gone; my queen
Upon a desperate bed, and most assuredly
As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes:
Some falls are means the happier to arise. [Exeunt.

Pis. Sir, my life is yours;
I humbly set it at your will; but, for my mistress,
I nothing know where she remains, why gone,
Nor when she pursues return. Beseech your high
Hold me your loyal servant.

[First Lord. Good my liege,
The day that she was missing he was here:
I dare be bound he's true and shall perform
All parts of his subjection loyally. For Cloten,
There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will, no doubt, be found.

Cym. The time is troublesome.

[To Pisianio.] We'll slip you for a season; but our jealousy
Does yet depend.

First Lord. So please your majesty,
The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn,
Are landed on your coast, with a supply
Of Roman gentlemen, by the senate sent.

Cym. Now for the counsel of my son and queen!
I am amazed with matter.

First Lord. Good my liege,
Your preparation can afford no less
Than what you hear of: come more, for more you're ready!

The want is but to put those powers in motion
That long to move.

Cym. I thank you. Let's withdraw;
And meet the time as it seeks us. We fear not What can from Italy annoy us; but We grieve at chances here. Away!

[Exeunt all but Pisianio.

Pis. I heard no letter from my master since
I wrote him Imogen was slain: 'tis strange;
Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise
To yield me often tidings: neither know I
What is done to Cloten; but remain
Perplex'd in all. The heavens still must work.
Wherein I am false I am honest; not true, to be true.

These present wars shall find I love my country,
Even to the note o' the king, or I'll fall in them.
All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd;
Fortune brings in some boats that are not steer'd.

[Exit.
SCENE IV.—Wales: before the cave of Belarius.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Gua. The noise is round about us.

Bel. Let us from it. Arr. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to lock it from action and adventure?

Gua. Nay, what hope have we in hiding us? This way, the Romans Must or for Brutos stay us, or receive us For barbarous and unnatural revolts During their use, and slay us after.

Bel. We'll higher to the mountains; there secure us. To the king's party there's no going: newness Of Cloten's death—we being not known, not missed. Among the lands—may drive us to a render [ter'd Where we have lived, and so extort from 's that Which we have done, whose answer would be death Drawn on with torture. Gua. This is, sir, a doubt In such a time nothing becoming you, Nor satisfying us. Arr. It is not likely That when they hear the Roman horses neigh, Behold their quarter'd fires, have both their eyes And ears so cloy'd importunately as now, That they will waste their time upon our note, To know from whence we are.

Bel. O, I am known Of many in the army: many years, [him Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore From my remembrance. And, besides, the king Hath not deserved my service nor your loves; Who find in my exile the want of breeding, The certainty of this hard life; aye hopeless To have the courtesy your cradle promised; But to be still hot summer's tulplings and The shrinking slaves of winter.

Gua. Than he so Better to cease to be. Pray, sir, to the army: I and my brother are not known; yourself So out of thought, and thereto so stergrown, Cannot be question'd.

Arr. By this sun that shines, I'll thither: what thing is it that I never Did see man die! scarce ever look'd on blood, But that of coward haries, hot goats, and venison! Never bestridden a horse, save one that had A rider like myself, who ne'er wore ravel Nor iron on his heel! I am ashamed To look upon the holy sun, to have The benefit of his blest beams, remaining So long a poor unknown.

Gua. By heavens, I'll go: If you will bless me, sir, and give me leave, I'll take the better care, but if you will not, The hazard therefore due fall on me by The hands of Romans!

Arr. So say I: amen.

Bel. No reason I, since of your lives you set So slight a valuation, should reserve My crack'd one to more care. Have with you, boys! If in your country wars you chance to die, That is my bed too, lads, and there I'll lie: Lead, lead. [Aside] The time seems long; their blood thinks scorn, Till it fly out and show them princes born. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Britain. The Roman camp.

Enter Posthumus, with a bloody handkerchief.

Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I'll keep thee, for I wish'd Thou should'st be colour'd thus. You married ones, If each of you should take this course, how many Must murder wives much better than themselves For wrying but a little! O Pisania! Every good servant does not all commands: No bond but to do just ones. Gods! if you Should have ta'en vengeance on my faults, I never Had lived to put on this: so bad you saved The noble Imogen to repent, and struck Me, wretch more worth your vengeance. But, alack, You snatch some hence for little faults; that's love, To have them fail no more: you some permit To secondills with ill's, each elder worse, And make them dread it, to the doers' thrift. But Imogen is your own: do your best wills, And make me blest to obey! I am brought hither Among the Italian gentry, and to fight Against my lady's kingdom: 'tis enough That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistress; peace! I'll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens, Have patiently my purpose: I'll disprove Me of these Italian weeds and suit myself As does a Briton peasant: so I'll fight Against the part I come with; so I'll die For thee, O Imogen, even for whom my life Is every breath a death; and thus, unknown, Flied nor hated, to the face of peril Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know More valour in me than my habits show. Gods, put the strength o' the Leonati in me! To shame the guise o' the world. I will begin The fashion, less without and more within. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Field of battle between the British and Roman camps.

Enter, from one side, Lucius, Iachimo, and the Roman Army: from the other side, the British Army; Lacemelades Posthumus following, like a poor soldier. They march over and go out. Then enter again, in skirmish, Iachimo and Posthumus: he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaves him.

Jach. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady, The princess of this country, and the air on't Rievengingly enfeebles me; or could this ear, A very drudge of nature's, have subdued me In my profession? Knighthoods and honours, borne As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn. If that thy gentry, Britain, go before This lust as he exceeds our lords, the odds Is that we scarce are men and you are gods. [Exeunt. The battle continues: the Britons fly; Cymbeline is taken: then enter, to his rescue, Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the ground: The lane is guarded: nothing routs us but The villany of our fears.

Gua. Stand, stand, and fight! [Exeunt. Posthumus, and seconds the Britons: they rescue Cymbeline, and exeunt. Then re-enter Lucius, and Iachimo, with Imogen.

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save thyself; For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such As war were woodwink'd.

Jach. 'Tis their fresh supplies.
SCENE III.—Another part of the field.

Enter Posthumus and a British Lord.

Post. I do not know where they made the stand? I think, where the old man and his sons were angels. Sec. Cap. There was a fourth man, in a sily habit, that gave the affront with them.

First Capt. Lay hands on him; a dog! A leg of Rome shall not return to tell service what crows have peck'd them here. He brags his As if he were of note; bring him to the king.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderus, Arviragus, Pisanio, Soldiers, Attendants, and Roman Captives.

The Captains present Posthumus to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Gaoler: then exectube omnes.

SCENE IV.—A British prison.

Enter Posthumus and two Gaolers.

First Gaol. You shall not now be stol'n, you have locks upon you; so graze as you find pasture.

Sec. Gaol. Ay, or a stomach. [Exeunt Gaolers.

Post. Most welcome, bondage! for thou art a way, I think, to liberty: yet am I better than one that 's sick o' the gout; since he had rather Groan so in perpetuity than be cured by the sure physician, death, who is the key to unbar these locks. My conscience, thou art a fetter'd. More than my shanks and wrists: you good gods, give me

The penitent instrument to pick that bolt, then, free for ever! Is 't enough I am sorry? So children temporal fathers do appease; God and a more full of mercy, if I repent? I cannot do it better than in gyves, Desired more than constrain'd: to satisfy, if of my freedom 't is the main part, take no stricter render of me than my all, I know you are more element than vile men, Who of their broken debtors take a third, A sixth or tenth, letting them thrive again on their abatement: that 's not my desire: For Imogen's dear life take mine; and though 'Tis not so dear, yet 't is a life; you coin'd it: 'Tween man and man they weigh not every stamp; Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake: You ruin mine, being yours: and so, great powers, if you will take this audit, take this life, and cancel these cold bonds. O Imogen! I shall speak to thee in silence.

[Sleeps.}
Both Bro. Help, Jupiter; or we appeal,
And from thy justice fly.

Jup. No more. No more, you petty spirits of region low.
Offend our hearing! hush! How dare you ghosts
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt, you know,
Sky-planted batters all rebelling coasts?
Poor shadows of Elysium, hence, and rest
Upon your tender-springing banks of flowers:
Be not with mortal accidents oppress:
No care of yours it is; you know 'tis ours.
Whom best I love I cross; to make my gift,
The more delay'd, delighted. Be content;
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent.
Our Jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in
Our temple was he married. Rise, and fade.
He shall be lord of lady Imogen,
And happier much by his affliction made.
This tablet lay upon his breast, wherein
Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine:
And so, away! There's further with our din
Express inpatience, lest you stir up mine.
Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline. [Ascends.
Sici. He came in thunder; his celestial breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle
Stoop'd, as to foot us: his ascension is
More sweet than all our blest fields; his royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing and cleans his beak,
As when his god is pleased.
All. Thanks, Jupiter! Sici. The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd
His radiant roof. Away! and, to blest,
Let us with care perform his great behove.
[The Ghosts vanish.
Post. [Waking] Sleep, thou hast been a grand sire,
A father to me; and thou hast created [and begot
A mother and two brothers: but, O scorn!
Gone! they went hence so soon as they were born:
And so I am awake. Poor wretches that depend
On greatness' favour dream as I have done,
Wake and find nothing. But, alas, I sverve:
Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours; so am I,
That have this golden chance and know not why.
What fairies haunt this ground? A book? O rare
Be not, as is our fangled world, a garment [one!
No better than that it covereth let thy effects
So follow, to be most unlike our courtiers,
As good as promise.
[Reads] 'When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopped branches, which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock and freshly grow; then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate and flourish in peace and plenty.
'T is still a dream, or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue and brain not: either both or nothing;
Or senseless speaking or a speaking such
As sense cannot untie. Be what it is,
The action of my life is it, which
I 'll keep, if but for sympathy.

Re-enter First Gaoler.
First Gaol. Come, sir, are you ready for death?
Post. Over-roasted rather; ready long ago.
First Gaol. Hanging is the word, sir: if you be ready for that, you are well cooked.
Post. So, if I prove a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot.
First Gaol. A heavy reckoning for you, sir. But the comfort is, you shall be called to no more pavements, fear no more tavern-bills; which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for want of meat, depart reeling with too much drink; sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much; pursue and brush the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heaviness: of this contradiction you shall now be quit.

O, the charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debitor and creditor but it; of what 's past, is, and to come, the discharge: you, sir, is pen, look and counters; so the acquittance follows.

Post. I am merrier to die than thou art to live.

First Gaol. Indeed, sir, he that sleeps feels not the tooth-ache: but a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a hangman to help him to bed, I think he would change places with his officer: for, look you, sir; you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes, indeed do I, fellow.

First Gaol. Your death has eyes in 's head then; I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or take upon yourself that which I am sure you do not know, or hangman to your own peril: and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think you'll never return to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going, but such as wink and will not use them.

First Gaol. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes to see the way of blineth! I am sure hanging 's the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Knock off his manacles; bring your prisoner to the king.

Post. Thou bring'st good news; I am called to be made free.

First Gaol. I 'll be hang'd then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a gaoler; no bolts for the dead.

[Exeunt Posthumus and Messenger.

First Gaol. Unless a man would marry a gallows and beget young gibbets, I never saw one so prone. Yet, on my conscience, there are verier knaves desirous to live, for all be a Roman: and there be some of them too that die against their wills; so shal I, if I were one. If I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were dissolution of gaolers and gallowses! I speak against my present profit, but my wish hath a preferment in 't.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Cymbeline's tent.

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Pisanius, Lords, Officers, and Attendants.

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have preserved of my throne. Woe is my heart [made That the poor soldier that so richly fought, Whose rags shamed gilded arms, whose naked breast Stood proud of grave, of noble] am not be found: He shall be happy that can find him, if Our grace can make him so.

Bel. I never saw
Such noble fury in so poor a thing; Such precious deeds in one that promised mighty beggary and poor looks.

Cym. No tidings of him? Pits. He hath been search'd among the dead and But no trace of him. [living, Cym. To my grief, I am The heir of his reward: [To Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus] which I will add To you, the liver, heart, and brain of Britain, By whom I grant she lives. 'Tis now the time To ask of whence you are. Report it. Bel. Sir, In Cambria are we born, and gentlemen: Further to boast were neither true nor modest, Unless I add, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees. Arise my knights o' the battle: I create you Companions to our person and will fit you With dignities becoming your estates.

Enter Cornelius and Ladies.

There's business in these faces. Why so sadly Greet you our victory? you look like Romans, And not o' the court of Britain.

Cor. Hail, great king! To sour your happiness, I must report The queen is dead.

Cym. Who worse than a physician Would this report become? But I consider, By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death Will seize the doctor too. How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life, Which, being cruel to the world, concluded Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd I will reveal not: she is to you; whose women Can trip me, if I err; who with wet cheeks Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prithée, say.

Cor. First, she confess'd she never loved you, only Affected greatness got by you, not you: Married your royalty, was wife to your place; Abhorr'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this;
And, but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand To with such integrity, she did confess Love was as a scorpion to her sight; whose life, But that her flight prevented it, she had Ta'en off by poison.

Cym. O most delicate fiend! Who is't can read a woman? Is there more? Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess she had For you a mortal mineral: which, being took, Should by the minute feed on life and lingering By inches waste you: in which time she purposed, By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to O'come you with her show, and in time, When she had fitted you with her craft, to work Her son into the adoption of the crown; But, failing of her end by his strange alacrity, Grew shameless-desperate; open'd, in despite Of heaven and men, her purposes; repeated The evils she hatch'd were not effected; so Despailing died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?

First Lady. We did, so please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes Were not in fault, for she was beautiful; Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart, That thought her like her seeming; it had been viscous To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter! That it was folly in me, thou mayst say, And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, the Soothsayer, and other Roman Prisoners, guarded; Posthumus behind, and Imogen.

Thou comest not, Caius, now for tribute; that The Britons have roused out, though with the loss Of many a bold one; whose kinsmen have made suit That their good souls may be appeased with slaughter Of you their captives, which ourself have granted: So think of your estate.

Luc. Sir, the chance of way: the day Was yours by accident; had it gone with us, We should not, when the blood was cool, have threaten'd
Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call’d ransom, let it come: subhich a
Roman with a Roman’s heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to think on’t: and so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat; my boy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransom’d: never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true:
So fair, so nurse-like; let his virtue join
With my request, which I’ll make bold your high-
Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm,
Though he have served a Roman: save him, sir,
And spare no blood beside.

I have surely seen him:
His favour is familiar to me. Boy,
Thou hast look’d thyself into my grace,
And art mine own. I know not why, wherefore,
To say ‘live, boy;’ ne’er thank thy master; live:
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty and thy state, I’ll give it;
Yearning thou do demand a prisoner,
The noblest tan’en.

Ino. I humbly thank your highness.

Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad;
And yet I know thou wilt.

Ino. No, no; no lack,
There’s other work in hand: I see a thing
Bitter to me as death: thy life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.

Luc. The boy disdains me,
He leaves me, scorches me: briefly die their joys
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.
Why stands he so perplex’d?

Cym. What wouldst thou, boy?
I love thee more and more: think more and more
What’s best to ask. Know’st thou him thou look’st on?
speak.

Wilt have him live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?
Ino. He is a Roman; no more kinsm to me [sal,
Than I to thy highness; who, being born thy vas-
Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore eyeest thou him so?
Ino. I’ll tell you, sir, in private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. What’s thy name?

Ino. Fidiele, sir.

Cym. Thou’rt my gentle youth, my page;
I’ll be thy master; walk with me; speak freely.

Cymbeline and Iloen: merge apart.

Bel. Is not this boy reviv’d from death?
Arr. One sand another
Not more resembles that sweet rosy lad
Who died, and was Fidiele. What think you?

Gui. The same dead thing alive.

Bel. Peace, peace! see further; he eyes us not; forbear;
Creatures may be alike: were ’t he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Gui. But saw he him dead.

Bel. Be silent; let’s see further.

Ps. [Aside] It is my mistress;
Since she is living, let the time run on
To good or bad.

Cymbeline and Iloen come forward.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side:
Make thy demand aloud: [To Iachimo] Sir, step
you forth;
Give answer to this boy, and do it freely;
Or, by our greatness and the grace of it,
Which is our honour, bitter torture shall
him.
Winnow the truth from falsehood. On, speak to Ino. My boon is, that this gentleman may render
Of whom he had this ring.

Post. [Aside] What’s that to him?

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say
How came it yours?

Iach. Thou’lt torture me to leave unspoken that
Which, to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How! me?

Iach. I am glad to be constrain’d to utter that Which torments me to conceal. By villainy
I got this ring: ’twas Leonatus’s jewel;
Whom thou didst banish; and — which more may grieve Heaven.

As it doth me — a noble sir ne’er lived [lord?
Twixt sky and ground. Will thou hear me, more
Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter.—
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
Quail to remember — Give me leave; I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her? Renew thy strength:
I had rather thou shouldst live while nature will
Than die ere I more strive: man, and speak.

Iach. Upon a time, — unhappy was the clock
That struck the hour! — it was in Rome, — accursed
The Mansion where — itself. — O, would
Our viands had been poison’d, or at least
Those which I heaved to head! — the good Post-

Ino. What should I say? he was too good to be Where ill men were; and was the best of all
Amongst the rarest of good men; — sitting sadly,
Hearing us praise our loves of Italy;

For beauty that made barren the swell’d boast
Of him that best could speak, for feature, laning
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva,
Postures beyond brief nature, for condition,
A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that book of wiving,
Fairness which strikes the eye —

Cym. I stand on fire:
Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soon I shall, [mus,
Unless thou wouldst grieve quickly. This Posthu-
Most like a noble lord in love and one
That had a royal lover, took his hint:
And, not disparing whom we praised,—therin
He was as calm as virtue — he began [made,
His mistress’ picture; which by his tongue being
And then a mind put in ’t, either our brags
Were crack’d of kitchen-trulls, or his description
There was unspeaking soul.

Cym. Nay, nay, to the purpose.

Iach. Your daughter’s chastity — there it begins.
He spoke of her, as Dian had hot dreams,
And she alone were cold; whereat I, wretch,
Made scruple of his praise; and wager’d with him
Pieces of gold against this which then he wore
Upon his honour’d finger, to attain
In suit the place of ’s bed and win this ring
By hers and mine adultery. He, true knight,
No lesser of her honour confident
Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring;
And would so, had it been a carbuncle
Of Phoebus’ wheel, and might so safely, had it
Been all the worth of ’s car. Away to Britain
Post In this design: well may you, sir,
Remember me at court; where I was taught
Of your chaste daughter the wide difference
Twixt amorous and villainous. Being thus quench’d
Of hope, not long withstanding, in his brain
‘Gain in your duller Britain operate
Most vilely; for my vantage, excellent:
And, to be brief, my practice so prevail’d,
That I return’d with simular proof enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad;
By woundings of his brain in her own
With tokens thus, and thus; averring notes
Of chamber-hanging, pictures, this her bracelet,—
O cunning, how I got it! — nay, some marks

799
Of secret on her person, that he could not
But I have to the person, that he could not
Methinks, I see him now —
Post. [Advancing] Ay, so thou dost, Italian fiend! Ay me, most credulous fool,
Egregious murderer, thief, any thing
That's due to all the villains past, in being,
To come! O, give me cord, or knife, or poison,
Some upright justicer! Thou, king, send out
For torturers ingenious; it is I
That all the abhorred things o' the earth amend
By being worse than they. 'T am Posthumus,
That's told thy daughter,—villain like. I lie —
That caused a lesser villain than myself,
A sacrilegious thief, to do 't: the temple
Of virtue was she; yea, and she herself.
Spit, and throw stones, cast mine upon me, set
The dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villainy less than 't was! O Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! O Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

Post. Shall's have a play of this? Thou scornful
There lie thy part. [Striking her: she falls.]
Pis. O, gentlemen, help.
Mine and your mistress! O, my lord Posthumus!
You never kill'd Imogen till now. Help, help!
Mine honour'd lady!

Cym. Does the world go round?
Pis. How come these staggerers on me?
Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me
To death with mortal joy.
Pis. How fares my mistress?
Imo. O, get thee from my sight!
Though gavest me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!
Breathe not where princes are.

The tune of Imogen!

Pis. Lady,
The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gave you was not thought by me
A precious thing; I had it from the queen.
Cym. New matter still?
Imo. It poison'd me.

Cor. O gods!
I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,
Which must approve thee honest: 't is Pisanio
Have said she: given his mistress that confession
Which I gave him for corriol, she is serv'd
As I would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius?
Cor. The queen, sir, very oft importuned me
To temper poisons for her, still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs,
Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease
The present power of life, but in short time
All offices of nature should again
Do their due functions. Have you ta'en of it?
Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. Our error.

Gui. This is, sure, Fidelia.
Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from Think that you are upon a rock; and now you
Throw me again.
Post. Hang there like fruit, my soul.
Cym. Till the tree die!

Cym. How now, my flesh, my child!
What, makest thou me a dudlard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me?

Ino. [Kneeling] Your blessing, sir.
And let it be confiscate all, so soon
As I have received it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons!
Bel. I am too blunt and saucy: here's my knee:
Ere I arise, I will prefer my sons;
Then spare not the old father. Mighty sir,
These two young gentlemen, that call me father
And think they are my sons, are none of mine;
They are the issue of your joins, my liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How! my issue! Bel.
So sure as you your father's. I, old Morgan,
Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd:—
Your pleasure was my mere offence, my punishment
Itself, and all my treason; that I suffer'd
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes—
For such and so they are—these twenty years
Have I train'd up: those arts they have as I Could put into them; my breeding was, sir, as
Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euriphile,
Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children
Upon my banishment: I moved her to 't,
Having received the punishment before.
For that which I did then: beaten for loyalty
Excited me to treason: their dear loss,
The more of you 't was felt, the more it shaped
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,
Here are your sons again; and I must lose
Two of the sweet' st companions in the world.
The heredity of these covering heavens
Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy
To inlay heaven with stars.

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st.
The service that you three have done is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st. I lost my children:
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.

Bel. Be pleased awhile.
This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,
Most worthy prince, as yours, is true Guiderius:
This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,
Your younger princely son; he, sir, was lapp'd
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother, which for more probation
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guiderius had
Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star;
It was a mark of wonder.

Bel. This is he;
Who hath upon him still that natural stamp:
It was wise nature's end in the donation,
To be his evidence now.

Cym. O, what, am I
A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother
Rejoiced deliverance more. Blest pray you be,
That, after this strange starting from your orbs,
You may reign in them now! O Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.

Imo. No, my lord;
I have got two worlds by 't. O my gentle brothers,
Have we thus met? O, never say hereafter
But I am trusty speaker: you call'd me brother,
When I was but your sister; you brothers,
When ye were so indeed.

Cym. Did you ever meet?

Arv. Ay, my good lord.

Cym. And at first meeting loved;
Continued so, until we thought to divide
By the queen's dram she swallowed.'d.

Cym. O rare instinct!
When shall I hear all through? This fierce afront
Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinguish should be rich in. Where? how lived you?
And when came you to serve our Roman captive?
We term it 'mulier:' which 'mulier' I divine
Is this most constant wise; who, even now,
Answering the letter of the oracle,
Unknown to you, unsought, were clipp'd about
With this most tender air.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline.
Personates thee: and thy lopp'd branches point
Thy two sons forth; who, by Belarius stol'n,
For many years thought dead, are now revived,
To the majestic cedar join'd, whose issue
Promises Britain peace and plenty.

Cym. Well; My peace we will begin. And, Caius Lucius,
Although the victor, we submit to Caesar,
And to the Roman empire; promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen:
Whom heavens, in justice, both on her and hers,
Have laid most heavy hand.

Sooth. The fingers of the powers above do tune
The harmony of this peace. The vision
Which I made known to Lucius, ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd; for the Roman eagle,
From south to west on wing soaring aloft,
Lessen'd herself, and in the beams o' the sun
So vanish'd: which foreshow'd our princely eagle,
The Imperial Caesar, should again unite
His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the west.

Cym. Laud we the gods;
And let our crooked smokes climb to their nostrils
From our blest altars. Publish we this peace
To all our subjects. Set we forward: let
A Roman and a British ensign wave
Friendly together: so through Lud's-town march:
And in the temple of great Jupiter
Our peace we 'll ratify; seal it with feasts.
Set on there! Never was a war did cease,
Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace.

[Exeunt.]

ACT I.

Enter Gower.

Before the palace of Antioch.

To sing a song that old was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come;
Assuming man's ininfirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eyes and holy-ales;
And lords and ladies in their lives
Have read it for restoratives:
The purchase is to make men glorious;
Et bonum quo antiquus, eo melius.
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing
May to your wishes pleasure bring,
I life would wish, and that I might
Waste it for you, like taper-light.
This Antioch, then, Antiochus the Great
Built up, this city, for his chiefest seat;
The fairest in all Syria.
I tell you what mine authors say:
This king unto him took a faire,
Who died and left a female heir,
So luxom, blithe, and full of face,
As heaven had lent her all his grace;
With whom the father liking look,
And her to incest did provoke:
Bad child! worse father! to entice his own
To evil should be done by none:
But custom what they did begin
Was with long use account no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,
To seek her as a bed-fellow,
In marriage-pleasures play-fellow:
Which to prevent he made a law,
To keep her still, and men in awe,
That whose ask'd her for his wife,
His riddle told not, lost his life:
So for her many a wight did die,
As you grim looks do testify.
What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye
I give, my cause who best can justify. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Antioch. A room in the palace.

Enter Antiochus, Prince Pericles, and followers.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large re-
The danger of the task you undertake. [celved
Per. I have, Antiochus, and, with a soul
Embolden'd with the glory of her praise,
Think death no hazard in this enterprise.
Ant. Bring in my daughter, clothed like a bride,
For the embracements even of Jove himself;
At whose conception, till Lucina reign'd,
Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,
The senate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best pefections.

Music. Enter the Daughter of Antiochus.

Per. See where she comes, apparel'd like the spring,
Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
Of every virtue gives renown to men!
Her face the book of praises, where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever razed, and testy wrath
Could never be her mild companion.
You gods that made me man, and sway in love,
That have inflamed desire in my breast
To taste the fruit of yen celestial tree,
Or die in the adventure, be my helps,
As I am son and servant to your will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles.—

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.
Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
For death-like dragons here a fright thee hard:
Her face, like heaven, entice thee to view
Her countless glory, which desert must gain;
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
You sometimes famous princes, like thyself,
Draw by my work, and venturous by desire, [pause.
Tell thee, with speechless tongues and semblance
That without covering, save you field of stars,
Here they stand martyr's, slain in Cupid's wars;
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist
For going on death's net, whom none resist.
Per. You could trust him who hath taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must;
For death remember'd should be like a mirror,
Who tells us life's but breath, to trust it error.
I'll make my say will then, and, as sick men do
Who know the world, see heaven, but, feeling woe,
Gripe not at earthly joys as erst they did;
So I bequeath a happy peace to you
And all good men, as every prince should do;
My riches to the earth from whence they came;
But my unsnapt fire of love to you.
[To the daughter of Antiochus.
Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus.
Ant. Scorning advice, read the conclusion, then:
Which read and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As these before thee thou thyself shalt bleed.
I say'dst yet, once more, to say good pros-
Of all say'dst yet, I wish thee happiness! [perous!
Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness and courage.
He reads the riddle.
I am of noeper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh which did me breed.
I sought a husband, in which labour
I found that kindness in a father:
He's father, son, and husband mild;
I mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two,
As you will live, resolve it you.
Sharp physic is the last: but, O you powers
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,
Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?
Fair glass of life, I loved you still.
[Takes hold of the hand of the Princess.
Were not this glorious casket stored with ill:
But I must tell you, now my thoughts revolt;
For he's no man on whom perfecions wait
That, knowing sin within, will touch the gate.
You make a fair visol, and your sense the strings;
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods, to
But being play'd upon before your time, [hearken;
Helt only danceath so harsh a cime.
Good sooth, I care not for you.
Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not, upon thy life,
For that's an article with thy law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expired:
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.
Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act;
'Twould braid yourself too near for me to tell it.
Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut than shown:
For vice repeated is like the wendinge wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear:
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts [through'd
Copp'd hills towards heaven, to tell the earth is
By man's oppression; and the poor worm doth die for't.
Kings are earth's gods; in vice their law's their will;
And if Jove stray, who dares say Jove doth ill?
It is enough you know; and it is fit,
What being more known grows worse, to smother it.
All love the wound that their first being bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.
Ant. [Aside] Heaven, that I had thy head! he has found the meaning:
But I will glaze with him,—Young prince of Tyre,
Though by the tenour of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed to cancel of your days;
Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree
As your fair self, both tune us otherwise:
Forty days longer we do repose you;
If by which time our secret be undone,
This mercy shows we'll joy in such a son:
And until then your entertain shall be
As doth befit our honour and your worth.
[Exit all but Pericles.
Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin,
When what is done is like an hypocrite,
The which is good in nothing but in sight!
If it be true that I interpret false,
Then were it certain you were not so bad
As with foul incest to abuse your soul;
Where now you're both a father and a son,
By your untimely claspings with your child,
Which pleasure fits an husband, not a father;
And she an eateth of her mother's flesh,
By the defiling of her parent's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night.
Will shun no course to keep them from the light.
One sin, I know, another doth provoke;
Murder's as near to lust as flame to smoke:
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
Ay, and the targets, to put off the shame;
Then, lest my life be crop'd'd to keep you clear,
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear. [Exit.

Re-enter Antiochus.
Ant. He hath found the meaning, for which we
To have his head. [mean
He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
Nor tell the world Antiochus doth sin:
In such a loathed manner;
And therefore instantly this prince must die;
For by his fall my honour must keep high.
Who attends us there?

Enter Thaliard.
Thal. Doth your highness call?
Ant. Thaliard,
You are of our chamber, and our mind partakes
Her private actions to your secrecy;
And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
Thaliard, behold, here's poison, and here's gold;
We hate that presence of Tyre, and thou must kill him:
It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
Because we bid it. Say, is it done?
Thal. My lord,
'T is done.
Ant. Enough.

Enter a Messenger.
Let your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.
Mess. My lord, prince Pericles is fled. [Exit.
Ant. As thou
Wilt live fly after: and like an arrow shot
From a well-experienced archer hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so thou ne'er return
Unless thou say ' Prince Pericles is dead.'
Thal. My lord,
If I can get him within my pistol's length, [mess.
I'll make him sure enough: so, farewell to your high-
ACT I.

PERICLES.

SCENE I. — Tyre. A room in the palace.

Enter Pericles.

Per. Thaliard, adieu! [Exit Thal.] Till Pericles be dead,
My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.

SCENE II. — Tyre. A room in the palace.

Enter Pericles.

Per. [To Lords without] Let none disturb us,—
Why should this change of thoughts,
The sad companion, dull-eyed melancholy,
The in my so used a guest as not an hour,
In the day’s glorious walk, or peaceful night,
The tomb where grief should sleep, can breed me grief?
Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun
And danger, which I fear’d, is at Antioch,
Whose aim seems far too short to hit me here;
Yet neither pleasure’s art can joy my spirits,
Nor yet the other’s distance comfort me.
Then it is thus: the passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by mis-dread,
Have after-nourishment and life by care;
And what was first but fear what might be done,
Grows elder now and cares it be not done.
And so with me: the great Antiochus,
Against whom I am too little to contend,
Since his design, cannot weep his will his act,
Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence;
Nor boots it me to say I honour him.
If he suspect I may dishonour him;
And what may make him blush in being known,
He’ll stop the course by which it might be known;
With hostile forces he’ll over spread the land,
And with the ostent of war will look so huge.
Amazement shall drive courage from the state;
Our men be vanquish’d ere they do resist,
And subjects punish’d that ne’er thought offence:
Which care of them, not pity of myself.
Who am no more but as the tops of trees,
Which fence the roots they grow by and defend them,
Makes both my body pine and soul to languish,
And punish that before that he would punish.

Enter Helicanus, with other Lords.

First Lord, Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast was to us,

Hel. Lord, and keep your mind, till you return
Peaceful and comfortable!

Hel. Peace, peace, and give experience tongue.

They do abuse the king that flatten him:
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin;
The thing which is flat is flat, but a spark,
To which that blast gives heat and stronger glow—
Whereas reproof, obedient and in order, [ing;
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.
When Signior Soot here does proclaim a peace,
He flattens you, makes war upon your life.
Prince, pardon me, or strike me,—if you please;
I cannot bear a lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else: but let your cares o’erlook
What shipping and what lading’s in our haven,
And then return to us. [Exeunt Lords.] Helicanus,

Hel. Thou hast mov’d us: what seemest thou in our looks?

Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes’ frowns,
How durst thy tongue move anger to our face?

Hel. How dare the plants look up to heaven,
From they have their nourishment? [wherein

Per. Thou know’st I have power
To take thy life from thee.

Hel. [Kneeling] I have ground the axe myself;
Do you then strike the blow.

Per. Rise, prithee, rise.

Sit down: thou art no flattener:
I thank thee for it; and heaven forbid
That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid!

Fit counsellor and servant for a prince,
Who by thy wisdom makest a prince thy servant,
What wouldst thou have me do?

Hel. To bear with patience
Such griefs as you yourself do lay upon yourself.

Per. Thou speak’st like a physician, Helicanus,
That minister’s a potion unto me.

That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.
Attend me, then: I went to Antioch,
Where as thou know’st, against the face of death,
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,
Are arms to princes, and bring joys to subjects.
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder:
The rest — hark In thine ear—as black as incest:
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father
Seem’d not to strike, but smooth: but thou know’st
’Tis time to fear when tyrants seem to kiss. [this,
Which fear so grew in me, I hither fled,
Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem’d my good protector; and, being here,
Brought me what was past, what might succeed.
I knew him tyrannous; and tyrants’ fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than the years;
And should he doubt it, as no doubt he doth,
That I should open to the listening air
How much could make him such a mislier act,
To keep his bed of blackness un laid ope,
To lo’d that doubt, he’ll fill this hand with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him;
When all, for mine, if I may call offence,
Must feel war’s blow, who spares not innocence;
Which love to all, of which thyself art one,
Who now reprovest me for it—

Hel. Alas, sir! [Exeunt Pericles and Lords.]

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,
Musings into my mind, with thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to speak,
Freely will I speak. Antiochus you fear,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
Who either by public war or private treason
Will take away your life.

Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot,
Or till the Destinies do cut his thread of life.
Your rule direct to any; if to me,
But serves not lighter, are faithless than I’ll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith;
But should he wrong my liberties in my absence?

Hel. We’ll mingle our bloods together in the earth,
From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to Tarsus

Intend my travel, where I’ll hear from thee;
And by whose letters I’ll dispose myself.
The care I had and have of subjects’ good
On thee I lay, whose wisdom’s strength can bear it.
I’ll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath:
Who shuns not to break one will sure crack both;
But in our ties we’ll live so round and safe.
That time of both this truth shall ne’er convince,
Thou show’st a subject’s shine, I a true prince.

[Exeunt.]
king, desired he might know none of his secrets:
now do I see he had some reason for 't; for if a king bid a man be a villain, he's bound by the indenture of his oath to be one. Hush! here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter Helicanus and Escanes, with other Lords
of Tyre.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre,
Further to question me of your king's departure;
His seal'd commission, left in trust with me,
Dobb'd and sufficiently he's gone to travel.
Thal. [Aside] How! the king gone!
Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,
Why, as it were unlicensed of your loves,
He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
Being at Antioch—

Thal. [Aside] What from Antioch?
Hel. Royal Antiochus—on what cause I know not—
Took some displeasure at him; at least he judged so:
And doubting lest that he had err'd or sinn'd,
To show his sorrow, he'd correct himself;
So puts himself unto the shipman's toil,
With whom each minute threatens death or life.
Thal. [Aside] Well, I perceive
I shall not be hang'd now, although I would;
But since he's gone, the king's seas must please:
He 'scape d the land, to perish at the sea.
I'll present myself. Peace to the lords of Tyre!
Hel. Lord Thaliald from Antiochus is welcome.
Thal. From him I come
With message unto princely Pericles;
But since my landing I have understood
Your lord has betook himself to unknown travels,
My message must return from whence it came.
Hel. We have no reason to desire it, it,
Commended to our master, not to us:
Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre.

[Exit.

SCENE IV. — Tarsus. A room in the Governor's house.

Enter Cleon, the governor of Tarsus, with Dionzya,
and others.

Cleon. My Dionzya, shall we rest us here,
And by relating tales of others' griefs,
See if 't will teach us to forget our own?
Dio. That were to blow at fire in hope to quench it;
For who digs hills because they do aspire
Throws down one mountain to cast up a higher.
O my distressed lord, even such our griefs are;
Here they're but felt, and seen with mischief's eyes,
But like to groves, being top'd, they higher rise.
Cleon. O Dionzya, Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it,
Or can conceal his hunger till he famish?
Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep
Our woes into the air; our eyes do weep,
Till tongues fetch breath that may proclaim them louder;
That, if heaven slumber while their creatures want,
They may awake their helps to comfort them.
I'll then discourse our woes, felt several years,
And wanting breath to speak help me with tears.
Dio. I'll do my best, sir.
Cleon. This Tarsus, o'er which I have the government,
A city on whom plenty held full hand,
For riches strew'd herself even in the streets;
Whose towers bore heads so high they kiss'd the clouds,
And strangers ne'er beheld but wonder'd at;
Whose men and dames so jetted and adorn'd,
Like one another's glass to trim them by:

Their tables were stored full, to glad the sight,
And not so much to feed on as delight;
All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,
The name of help grew odious to repeat.
Cleon. But see what heaven can do! By this our change,
These mouths, who but of late, earth, sea, and air,
Were all too little to content and please,
Although they gave their creatures in abundance,
As houses are deli'd for want of use;
They are now served for want of exercise:
Those palates who, not yet two summers younger,
Must have inventions to delight the taste,
Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it;
Those mothers who, to nouse up their babes,
Thought nought too curious, are ready now
To eat those little darlings whom they loved.
So slorp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife
Draw lots who first shall die to lengthen life:
Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;
Here many shriek, yet those which see them fall
Have scarce strength left to give them burial.
Is not this true?
Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it.
Cleon. O, let those cities that of plenty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots, hear these tears!
The misery of Tarsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?
Cleon. Here.
Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st in haste,
For comfort is too far for us to expect.
Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbour ing shore,
A portly sail of ships make hitherward.
Cleon. I thought as much.
One sorrow never comes but brings an heir,
That may succeed as his inheritor;
And so in ours: some neighbouring nation,
Taking advantage of our misery,
Hath stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power,
To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,
Whereas no glory's got to overcome.
Lord. That's the least fear; for by the semblance
Of their white flags display'd, they bring us peace,
And come to us as favourites, not as foes.
Cleon. Thou speak'st like him's untutor'd to repeat:
Who makes the fairest show means most deceit.
But bring they what they will and what they can,
What need we fear?
The ground's the lowest, and we are half way there.
Go tell their general we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he comes,
And what he craves.
Lord. I go, my lord.
[Exit.
Cleon. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist;
If wars, we are unable to resist.

Enter Pericles with Attendants.

Pericles. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships and number of our men
Be like a beacon fired to amaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And seen the desolation of your streets:
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load;
And these our ships, you happily may think
Are like the Trojan horse was stuff'd with
With bloody veins, expecting overthrow,
Are stored with corn to make your needy bread,
And give them life whom hunger starved half dead.
All. The gods of Greece protect you!
And we'll pray for you.
ACT II.

PERICLES.

SCENE I.

Per. Arise, I pray you, rise: We do not look for reverence, but for love, And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men. Cle. The which when any shall not gratify, Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought, Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves, The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils! Till when,—the which I hope shall ne'er be seen,— Your grace is welcome to our town and us. Per. Which welcome we'll accept; feast here awhile, Until our stars thatrown lend us a smile. [Exit.]

ACT II.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king His child, I wis, to incest bring; A better prince and benign lord, That will prove awfull in deed and word. Be quiet then as men should be, Till he hath pass'd necessity. I'll show you those in troubles reign, Losing a mite, a mountain gain. The good in conversation, To whom I give my benison, Is still at Tarsus, where each man Thinks all is writ he spoken can; And, to remember what he does, Build his statue to make him glorious: But tidings to the contrary Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Dumb Show.

Enter at one door Pericles talking with Cleon; all the train with them. Enter at another door a Gentleman, with a letter to Pericles; Pericles shows the letter to Cleon; gives the Messenger a reward, and knight him. Exit Pericles at one door, and Cleon at another.

Good Hellene, that stay'd at home, Not to eat honey like a drone From others' labours; for though he strive To killen bad, keep good alive; And to fulfill his prince's desire, Sends word of all that haps in Tyre; How Thaliard came full bent with sin And had intent to murder him; And that in Tarsus was not best Longer for him to make his rest. He, doing so, put forth to sea, Where when men been, there's seldom ease; For now the wind begins to blow; Thunder above and deeps below Make such unquiet, that the ship Should house him safe is wreck't and split; And he, good prince, having all lost, By waves from coast to coast is lost: All perishen of man, of pelf, Ne aught escape but himself; Till fortune, tired with doing bad, Threw him ashore, to give him glad: And here he comes. What shall be next, Pardon old Gower,—this longs the text. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Pentapolis. An open place by the seaside.

Enter Pericles, vieu.

Per. Ye't cease your ire, you angry stars of heaven! Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man Is but a substance that must yield to you; And I, as fits my nature, do obey you: Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks, Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breath Nothing to think on but ensuing death: Let it suffice the greatness of your powers To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes; And having thrown him from your watery grave, Here to have death in peace is all he'll crave.
ACT II. PERICLES. SCENE II.

Per. What have I been I have forgot to know; But what I am, want teaches me to think on: A man congealed up with cold; my veins are chill, And have no more of life than may suffice To give my tongue that heat to ask your help; Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For that I am a man, pray see me buried. First Fish. Die quothea? Now gods forbid! I have here, for I am alive: give it on; keep thee warm. Now, afores, me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and more'or puddings and flap-jacks, and thou shalt be welcome. Per. I thank you, sir. Sec. Fish. Hark you, my friend; you said you could not give it on; I. Did but crave. Sec. Fish. But crave! Then I'll turn craver too, and so I shall 'scape whipping. Per. Why, are all your beggars whipped, then? Sec. Fish. O, not all, my friend, not all; for if a hour my dead father did bequeath to me a better office than to be beadle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net. [Exit with Third Fisherman. Per. [Aside] How well this honest mirth becomes their labour! First Fish. Hark you, sir, do you know where ye are? Per. Not well. First Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king the good Simonides. Per. The good King Simonides, do you call him? First Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves so to be called for his peaceable reign and good government. Per. He is a happy king, since he gains from his subjects the name of good by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore? First Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey: and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birthday: and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world to just and tourney for her love. Per. Were my fortunes equal to my desires, I could wish to make one there. First Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for— his wife's soul.

Re-enter Second and Third Fishermen, drawing up a net.

Sec. Fish. Help, master, help! here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 't will hardly come out. Ha! boats on't, 't is come at last, and 't is turned to a rusty armour. Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it. Thanks, fortune, yet, that, after all my crosses, Thou givest me somewhat to repair myself; And though it was mine own, part of my heritage, Whose present beauty will make thee a fellow, With this strict charge, even as he left his life, 'Keep it, my Pericles; it hath been a shield 'Twixt me and death;'—and pointed to this brace:— 'For that it saved me, keep it: in like necessity— The which the gods protect thee from!—may defend thee. It kept where I kept, I so dearly loved it; Till the rough seas, that spare not any man, Took it in rage, though calm'd have given 't again: I thank thee for 't: my shipwreck now's no ill, Since I have here my father's gift in 's will. First Fish. Ay, sir, it makes me glad. Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth, For it was sometime target to a king; I know it by this mark. He loved me dearly, And for his sake I wish the having of it; And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court, Where with it I may appear a gentleman; And if that ever my low fortune 's better, I'll pay your bounties; till then rest your debtor. First Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the lady? Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne in arms. First Fish. Why, do 'e take it, and the gods give thee good on 't! Sec. Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend; 't was we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolements, certain vails. I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it. Per. Believe 't, I will. By your furtherance I am clothed in steel; And, spite of all the rapture of the sea, This jewel holds his building on my arm: Unto thy value I will mount myself. Upon a courser, whose delightful steps Shall make the gazer joy to see him read. Only, my friend, I yet am unprovided Of a pair of bases. Sec. Fish. We'll sure provide: thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair, and I'll bring thee to the court myself. Per. Then honour be a goal to my will, This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A public way or platform leading to the lists. A pavilion by the side of it for the reception of the King, Princess, Lords, &c.

Enter Simonides, Thaisa, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph? First Lord. They are, my liege; And stay your coming to present yourselves. Sim. Return them, we are ready; and our daughter, In honour of whose birth these triumphs are, Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat For men to see, and seeing wonder at. [Exit a Lord.

Thai. It pleaseth you, my royal father, to express My commendations great, whose merit 's less. Sim. It's fit it should be so; for princes are A model, which heaven makes like to itself: As jewels lose their glory if neglected, So princes their renown if not respected. This is now our honour, daughter, to explain The labour of each knight in his device. [form. Thai. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight; he passes over, and his Squire presents his shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself? Thai. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father; And the device he bears upon his shield Is a black Ethiope reaching at the sun; The word, ' LuX tua vita mihii.' Sim. He loves you well that holds his life of you. [The Second Knight passes over. Who is the second that presents himself? Thai. A prince of Macedon, my royal father; And the device he bears upon his shield Is an arm'd knight that 's conquer'd by a lady; The motto thus, in Spanish, ' Piu por dulzura que por fuerza.' [The Third Knight passes over.

Sim. And what's the third? Thai. The third of Antioch; And his device, a wreath of chivalry; The word, ' Me pompas proventia.' Sim. What is the fourth? Thai. A burning torch that's turned upside down; The word, ' Quod me alit, me extinguit.' Sim. Which shows that beauty hath his power And which can as well insame as it can kill. [will, [The Fifth Knight passes over.
ACT II.

PERICLES.

That the fifth, an hand environed with clouds, Holding out gold that 's by the touchstone tried; 'Tis but the scaffold of a spectacula fides,'

[The Sixth Knight, Pericles, passes over.

Sim. And what 's The sixth and last, the which the knight himself With such regal courtesy deliver'd? Thai. He seems to be a stranger; but his present is A wither'd branch, that 's only green at top; The motto, 'In hae spe vivo.'

Sim. A pretty moral; From the dejected state wherein he is, He hopes by such fortunes yet may flourish.

First Lord. He had need mean better than his outward show Can any way speak in his just commend; For by his rusty outside he appears To have practised more the whisppick than the lance. Sec. Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes To an honour'd triumph strangely furnish'd; [rust

Third Lord. And on set purpose let his armour Until this day, to scour it in the dust.

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan The outward habit by the inward man. But stay, the knights are coming: we will withdraw Into the gallery. [Exeunt.

[Great shouts within, and all cry 'The mean knight!'

SCENE III.—The same. A hall of state: a banquet prepared.

Enter Simonides, Thaisa, Lords, Attendants, and Knights, from sitting.

Sim. Knights, To say you 're welcome were superfluous. To place upon the volume of your deeds, As in a lifetime, your worth in arms, Were more than you expect, or more than 's fit, Since every worth in show commends itself. Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast: You are princes and my guests.

Thai. But you, my knight and guest; To whom this wreath of victory I give, And crown you king of your day's happiness. Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than by merit. Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours; And here, I hope, is none that envies it. In framing an artist, art hath thus decreed, To make some good, but others to exceed; And you are her labour'd scholar. Come, queen o' the feast,— For, daughter, so you are,—here take your place: Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simonides. Sim. Your presence glads our days: honour we Forsem. On honour hates the gods above. [love; Per. Marshal, Sir, yonder is your place.

Per. Some other is more fit. First Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentle- That neither in our hearts nor outward eyes [men Envy the great nor do the low despire. Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Bids sit, sir, sit. Per. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts, These cates resist me, she but thought upon.

Thai. By Juno, that is queen of marriage, All viands that I eat do seem unsavoury, [man. Wishing him my meat. Sure, he's a gallant gentle- Sim. He's but a country gentleman; Has done no more than other knights have done; Has broken a staff or so; so let it pass. Thai. To me he seems like diamond to glass. Per. Your king 's to me like to my father's picture, Which tells me in that glory once he was; Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne, And he the sun, for them to reverence;

None that beheld him, but, like lesser lights, Did vail their crowns to his supremacy: Where now his son's like a glow-worm in the night, The which hath fire in darkness, none in light: Whereby I see that Time's the king of men, He's both their parent, and he is their grave, And gives them what he will, not what they crave, Sim. What, are you merry, knights? Knights. Who can be other in this royal presence? Sim. Here, with a cup that's stored unto the brim,— As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips,— We drink this health to you, Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause awhile:— You knight doth sit too melancholy, As if the entertainment in our court Had not a show mighty countervail his worth. Note it not you, Thaisa? That. What is it To me, my father? Sim. O, attend, my daughter: Princes in this should live like gods above, Who freely give to every one that comes To honour them. And princes not doing so are like to gnats, Which make a sound, but kill'd are wonder'd at. Therefore to make his entrance more sweet, Here, say we drink this standing-bowl of wine to him. Thai. Alas, my father, it belitts not me Unto a stranger knight to be so bold: He may my proffer take for an offence, Since men take women's gifts for impudence. Sim. How! Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thai. [Aside] Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. [of him, Sim. And further he tells me, we desire to know Of whence he is, his name and parentage.

That. The king my father, sir, has drunk to you. Per. I thank him.

That. Wishing it so much blood unto your life. Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely. That. And further he desires to know of you, Of whence he are, your name and parentage. Per. A gentleman of Tyre; my name, Pericles; My education been in arts and arms; Who, looking for adventures in the world, Was by the rough seas, and ships and men, And after shipwreck driven upon this shore.

That. He thanks your grace; names himself A gentleman of Tyre, [Pericles, [Knights, Who only by misfortune of the seas Bereft of ships and men, cast on this shore. Sim. Now, by the gods, I pity his misfortune, And will awake him from his melancholy. Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles, And waste the time, which looks for other revels. Even in your armours, as you are address'd, Will very well become a soldier's dance. I will not have excuse, with saying this Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads, Since they love men in arms as well as beds. [The Knights dance.

So, this was well ask'd, 't was so well perform'd. Come, sir; Here is a lady that wants breathing too: And I have heard, you knights of Tyre Are excellent in making ladies' trip; And that their measures are as excellent. [lord. Per. In those that practise them they are, my Sim. O, that's as much as you would be denied Of your fair courtesy.

[The Knights and Ladies dance.

Unglasp, unclasps:

Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well.
ACT II.

PERICLES.

SCENE V.

[To Per.] But you the best. Pages and lights, to conduct
These knights unto their several lodgings! [To Per.] Young, sir,
We have given order to be next our own.
Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.
Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love;
And that's the mark I know you level at:
Therefore each one betake him to his rest;
To-morrow all for speeding do their best. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Tyre. A room in the Governor's house.

Enter Helicanes and Escanes.

Hel. No, Escanes, know this of me,
Antiochus from incest lived not free:
For while the most high gods not minding longer
To withhold the vengeance that they had in store,
Due to this heinous capital offence,
Even in the height and pride of all his glory,
When he was seated in a chariot
Of an unmatched value, and his daughter with him,
A fire from heaven came and shrivel'd up
Their bodies, even to loathing; for they so stunk,
That all those eyes adored them ere their fall
Scorn now their hand should give them burial.
Esec. 'T was very strange.
Hel. And yet but justice: for though
This thing was great, his greatness was no guard
To bar heaven's staff; but sin had his reward.
Esec. 'T is very true.

Enter two or three Lords.

First Lord. See, not a man in private conference
Or council has respect with him but he. [proof.
Sec. Lord. It shall no longer grieve without a Third lord. And cursed be he that will not second Esec. 'T is word.

First Lord. Follow me, then. Lord Helicanes, a Hel. With me? and welcome: happy day, my Lord. [top.

First Lord. Know that our griefs are risen to the
And now at length they overflow their banks.
Hel. Your griefs! for what? wrong not your prince you love. [Helicanes;

First Lord. Wrong not yourself, then, noble
But if the prince do live, let us salute him,
Or know what ground's made happy by his breath.
If in the world he live, we'll seek him out;
If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there;
And be resolved he lives to govern us,
Or dead, give's cause to mourn his funeral,
And leave us to our free election.

Sec. Lord. Whose death indeed's the strongest in our censure:
And knowing this kingdom is without a head,—
Like goodly buildings left without a roof
Soon fall to ruin,—your noble self,
That best know how to rule and how to reign,
With'to submit unto,—our sovereign.

All. Long live noble Helicanes!

Hel. For honour's cause, forbear your suffrages:
If that you love Prince Pericles, forbear.
Tike I your wish, I leap into the seas,
Where's hourly trouble for a minute's ease.
A twelvemonth longer, let me entreat you to Forbear the allusion of your king;
If in which time expired, he not return,
I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.
But if I cannot win you to this love,
Go search like nobles, like noble subjects,
And in your search spend your adventurous worth;
Whom find, and with what issue return,
You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

First Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not
And since Lord Helicanes enjoineth us, [yield;
We with our travels will endeavour us.

Hel. Then you love us, ye you, and we'll clasp hands:
When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

EXEUNT.

SCENE V.—Pentapolis. A room in the palace.

Enter Simonides, reading a letter, at one door: the Knights meet him.

First Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.
Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let you,
That for this twelvemonth she 'll not undertake
A married life.
Her reason to herself is only known,
Which yet from her by no means can I get. Lord? [Sec. Knight. May we not get access to her, my
Sim. 'faith, by no means; she has so strictly tied
Her to her chamber, that 't is impossible.
One twelve moons more she 'll wear Diana's livery;
This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vowed,
And on her virgin honour will not break it.
Third Knight. Loath to bid farewell, we take our leaves. [Exeunt Knights.
Sim. So, [letter:
They are well dispatch'd; now to my daughter's
She tells me here, she 'll wed the stranger knight,
Or never more to view nor day nor light.
'T is well, mistress, that choice agrees with mine:
I like that well: nay, how absolute she's in't,
Not minding whether I dislike or no!
Well, I do commend her choice;
And will no longer have it be delay'd.
Soft! here he comes: I must dismiss it.

Enter Pericles.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!
Sim. To you as much, sir! I am beholding to you
For your sweet music this last night: I do
Protest my ears were never better fed
With such delightful pleasing harmony.
Per. It is your grace's pleasure to commend:
Not my desert.
Sim. Sir, you are music's master.
Per. The worst of all scholars, my good lord.
Sim. Let me ask you one thing:
What do you think of my daughter, sir?
Per. A most virtuous princess.
Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?
Per. As a fair day in summer, wondrous fair.
Sim. Sir, my daughter thinks very well of you;
Ay, so well, that you must be her master,
And she will be your scholar: therefore look to it.
Per. I am unworthy for 1st schoolmaster.
Sim. She thinks not so; perseue this writing else.
Per. [Aside] What's here?
A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre!
'T is the king's subtlety to have my life,
O, seek not to entrap me, gracious lord,
A stranger and distressed gentleman,
That should not, nor daud't so high to love your daughter,
But pent all offices to honour her.
Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thon
A villain. [art
Per. By the gods, I have not:
Never did thought of mine levy offence;
Nay never did my actions yet compass
A deed might gain her love or your displeasure.
Sim. Traitor, thou liest.
Per. Traitor!
Sim. Ay, traitor.
Per. Even in his throat—unless it be the king—
That calls me traitor, I return the lie.
Sim. [Aside] Now, by the gods, I do applaud his Courage.
Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish'd of a base descent.

ACT III.

PERICLES.

I came unto your court for honour's cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove he's honour's enemy.

Sim. No?

Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter Thaisa.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did ever solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you.

Thai. Why, sir, say if you had,
Who takes offence at that would make me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?

[Aside] I'll take you: I'll bring you in subjection.

Will you, not having my consent,
Bestow your love and your affections

ACT III.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Now sleep yshaked hath the rout;
No din but snores the house about,
Made louder by the o'er-fed breast
Of this most pious man's most marriage-feast.
The cat, with eyne of burning coal,
Now coughs fore the mouse's hole;
And crickets sing at the oven's mouth,
E'er the blither for their drouth.
Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A bate is moulded. Be attent,
And time that is so briefly spent
With your fine fancies quaintly echo:
What 's dumb in show I 'll plain with speech.

Dumb Show.

Enter, Pericles and Simonides, at one door, with Attendants; a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives Pericles a letter: Pericles shows it Simonides: the Lords kneel to him. Then enter Thaisa with child, with Lychorida a nurse. The King shows her the letter; she rejoices; she and Pericles take leave of her father, and depart with Lychorida and their Attendants. Then exeunt Simonides and the rest.

By many a durn and painful perch
Of Pericles the careful search,
By the four opposing coigns
Which the world together joins,
Is made with all due diligence
That horse and sail and high expense
Can steal the quest. At last from Tyre,
Fame answering the most strange inquirer,
To the court of King Simonides
Are letters brought, the tenour these:
And others and his daughter dead;
The men of Tyrus on the head
Of Helicamus would set on
The crown of Tyre, but he will none:
The mutiny he there hastes't oppress;
Says to 'em, if King Pericles
Come not home in twice six moons,
He, obedient to their dooms,
Will take the crown. The sum of this,
Brought hither to Pentapolis,
Y'rfushed the regions round,
And every one with claps can sound,
'Sem, by apparent is a king.
Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?
Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre:
His queen with child makes her desire—

Upon a stranger? [Aside] who, for aught I know,
May be, nor can I think the contrary,
As great in blood as I myself.
Therefore hear you, mistress; either frame
Your will to mine,—and you, sir, hear you,
Either be ruled by me, or I will make you—
Man and wife:
Nay, come, your hands and lips must seal it too:
And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;
And for a further grief,—God give you joy!—

What, are you both pleased?

Thai. Yes, if you love me, sir.

Per. Even as my life, or blood that fosters it.

Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, if it please your majesty.

Sim. It pleaseth me so well, that I will see you wed;
And then with what haste you can get to bed.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.

Enter Pericles, on shipboard.

Per. Thou god of this great vast, rebuke these surges, [cast Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou, that Upon the winds command, bind them in brass,
Having call'd them from the deep! O, still Thy deaening, dreadful thunders; gently quench
Thy nimble, sulphurous flashes! O, how, Lychorida,
How does my queen? Thou stormiest venemously;
Wilt thou spit all thyself? The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
Unheard. Lychorida!—Lucina, O
Divinest patroness, and midwife gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
Absurd our dancing bark; make swift the pangs
Of my queen's travails!

Enter Lychorida, with an Infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing too young for such a place,
Who, if it had conceit, would die, as I
Am like to do: take in your arms this piece
Of your dead queen.

Per. How, how, Lychorida!

Lyc. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm.
Here's all that is left living of your queen,
A little daughter: for the sake of it,
Be more, and take comfort.

Per. O you gods!
Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,

811
And snatch them straight away? We here below
Recall not what we give, and therein may Use honour with you.

Lyce. Patience, good sir,

Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life!

For a more blustering birth had never babe;
Quiet and gentle thy conditions! for
Thou art the rudestliest welcome to this world
That ever was prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding a native
Of fire, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb: even at the first
Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit,
With all thou canst find here. Now, the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon 't!

Enter two Sailors.

First Sail. What courage, sir? God save you!
Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw;
It hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh-new sea-farer,
I would it would be quiet.

First Sail. Slack the bolins there! Thou wilt not, wilt thou? Blow, and spit thyself.

Sec. Sail. But sea-room, an the brine and cloudy
Bellow kiss the moon, I care not.

First Sail. Sir, your queen must overboard: the Sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not let Till the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition.

First Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it hath
Been still observed: and we are strong in custom.
Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard straight.

Per. As you think meet. Most wretched queen!

Lyce. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible childbed hast thou had, my dear;
No light, no fire; the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly: nor have I time
To give thee hollow'd to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the oze.
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And e'er-remaining lamps, the belching whale
And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
Lying with simple shells. O Lychorida,
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink and paper,
My casket and my jewels; and bid Nxeander
Bring me the saltnest casket: lay the babe
Upon the pillow: hie thee, whiles I say
A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit Lychorida.

Sec. Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the Hatches, caulked and bitumed ready.

[This? Per. I thank thee. Mariner, say what coast is Sec. Sail. We are near Tarsus.

Per. Thither, gentle mariner, [it?
Alter thy course for Tyre. When canst thou reach
Sec. Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. O, make for Tarsus!

There shall I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tarsus: there I'll leave it
At careful nursing. Go thy ways, good mariner: I'll bring the body presently.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Ephesus. A room in Cerimon's house.

Enter Cerimon, with a Servant, and some Persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter Philemon.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men:
'T has been a turbulent and stormy night.
[This, Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as Till now, I ne'er endured.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return;
There's nothing can be minister'd to nature
That can recover him. [To Philemon Give this to the pothercy,
And tell me how it works. [Exeunt all but Cerimon.

Enter two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Good morrow.
Sec. Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Gentlemen, Why do you stir so early?

First Gent. Sir, Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook as the earth did quake;
The very principals did seem to rend,
And all to topple: pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house.

[early; Sec. Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so
'T is not our husbandry.

Cer. O, you say well.

First Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship, having Rich connect about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.
'T is most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer. I hold it ever,
Virtue and cunning were encompassed greater
Than nobleness and riches: careless heirs.
May the two latter darken and expend;
But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'T is known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have,
Together with my practice, made familiar
To me and to my aid the blest infusions
That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones;
And I can speak of the disturbances
That nature works, and of her cures: which doth.
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,
Or tie my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death.

Sec. Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus
Pour'd forth
Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restored:
And from your knowledge, your personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath built Lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall ne'er decay.

Enter two or three Servants with a chest.

First Serv. So; lift there.

Cer. What is that?

First Serv. Sir, even now
Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest:
'T is of some wreck.

Cer. Sir, set 't down, let 's look upon 't.

Sec. Gent. 'T is like a coffin, sir.

Cer. Whate'er it be,
'T is wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight:
If the sea's stomach be o'ercharged with gold,
'T is a good constraint of fortune it belches upon us,
Sec. Gent. 'T is so, my lord.

How close 't is caulk'd and bitumed!

Did the sea cast it up?

First Serv. I never saw so huge a bilow, sir,
As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Wrench it open;
Soft! It smells most sweetly in my sense.

Sec. Gent. A delicate odour.

Cer. It ever hit my nostril. So, up with it. O
You most potent gods! what's here? a corse!

First Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state! balm'd and en-
ACT III.

PERICLES.

SCENE IV.

With full bags of spices! A passport too! Apollo, perfect me in the characters!

[Reads from a scroll.

'Here I give to understand,
If e'er this coffin drive a-haund,
I, King Pericles, have lost
That queen, worth all our mundane cost.
Who finds her, give her burying;
She was the daughter of a king:
Besides this treasure for a fee,
The gods requite his charity!'

If thou livest, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even crucks for woeful. This chanced to-night.
Sec. Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;
For look how fresh she looks! They were too rough
That threw her in the sea. Make a fire within:
Fetch hither all my boxes in my closet.

Yes, a servant, with boxes, napkins, and fire.
Well said, well said; the fire and cloths.
The rough and woeeful music that we have,
Cause it to sound, beseech you.
The viol once more: how thou stirrest, thou block!
The music there! — I pray you, give her air.

Gentlemen,
This queen will live: nature awakes; a warmth
Breathes out of her: she hath not been entombed
Above five hours: see how she gins to blow
Into life's flower again!

First Gent. The heavens,
Through you, increase our wonder and set up
Your fame for ever.
Cer. She is alive; behold,
Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly Jewels
Which Pericles hath lost,
Begin to part their fringes of bright gold;
The diamonds of a most praised water
Do appear, to make the world twice rich. Live,
And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,
Rare as you seem to be.

[She moves.

Thai. O dear Diana,
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?
Sec. Gent. Is not this strange?
First Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Lend me your hands; to the next chamber bear her.
Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
For her repose is mortal. Come, come;
And Escalus pius guide us!

[Exeunt, carrying her away.

SCENE III.—Tarsus. A room in Cleon's house.

Enter Pericles, Cleon, Dionyza, and Lychoidea with Marina in her arms.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;
My twelve months are expired, and Tyrrus stands
In a litigious peace. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness! 'The gods
Make up the rest upon you!'
Enter Gower.

Gov. Imagine Pericles arrived at Tyre, welcomed and settled to his own desire. His woeful queen we leave at Ephesus, unto Diana there a taressa's death. Now to Marina bend your mind, whom our fast-growing scene must find at Tarsus, and by Cleon train'd in music, letters: who hath gain'd Of education all the grace, which makes her both the heart and place of General wonder. But, alack, that monster envy, off the wrack Of earned praise, Marina's life Seeks to take off by treason's knife. And in this kind hath our Cleon One daughter, and a wench full grown, Even ripe for marriage-rite; this maid Hight Philoten: and it is said For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be: Be't when she wove the slided silk With fingers long, small, white as milk; Or when she would with sharp needle wound The cambrie, which she made more sound By hurtling it; or when to the lute She sung, and made the night-bird mute, That still records with mew; or when She wold with rich and constant pen Vail to her mistress Dion; still This Philoten contends in skill With absolute Marina: so With the dove of Paphos might the crow Vie feathers white. Marina gets All praises, which are paid as debts, And not as given. This so darks In Philoten all graceful marks, That Cleon's wife, with envy rare, A present murderer does prepare For good Marina, that her daughter Might stand peerless by this slaughter. The sooner her vile thoughts to steal, Lychorida, our nurse, is dead: And cursed Dionyza hath The pregnant instrument of wrath Prest for this blow. The unborn event I do commend to your content: Only I carry winged time Post on the lame feet of my rhyme; Which never could I so convey, Unless your thoughts went on my way. Dionyza does appear, With Leonine, a murderer. [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Tarsus. An open place near the seashore.

Enter Dionyza and Leonine.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do 't: ‘Tis but a blow, which never shall be known. Thou canst not do a thing in the world so soon, To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience, Which is but cold, inflaming love 't thy bosom, Inflame too nicely: nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I will do 't; but yet she is a valuable creature.

Dion. The fitter, then, the gods should have her. Here she comes weeping for her only mistress' death. Then art resolved?

Leon. I am resolved.

Enter Marina, with a basket of flowers.

Mar. No, I will rob Tellus of her weed, To stew thy green with flowers: the yellows, blues, The purple violads, and marigolds, Shall as a carpet hang upon thy grave, While summer-days do last. Ay me! poor maid, Born in a tempest, when my mother died, This world to me is like a lasting storm, Whirring me from my friends.

Dion. How now, Marina! why do you keep alone? How change my daughter is not with you? Do not Consume your blood with sorrowing: you have A nurse of me. Lord, how your favour's changed With this unprofitable woe! Come, give me your flowers, ere the sea mar it. Walk with Leonine: the air is quick there. And it pierces and sharps the stomach. Come, Leonine, take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you; I'll not bereave you of your servant.

Dion. Come, come; I love the king your father, and yourself, With more than foreign heart. We every day Expect him here: when he shall come and find Our paragon to all reports thus blasted, He will repent the breadth of his great voyage; Blame both my lord and me, that we have taken No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you, Walk, and be cheerful once again; reserve That excellent complexion, which did steal The eyes of young and old. Care not for me; I can go home alone.

Mar. Well, I will go; But yet I have no desire to it.

Dion. Come, come, I know 'tis good for you. Walk half an hour, Leonine, at the least: Remember what I have said.

Leon. I warrant you, madam.

Dion. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while: Pray, walk softly, do not heat your blood: What! I must have a care of you.

Mar. My thanks, sweet madam. [Exit Dionyza.

Is this wind westerly that blows?

Leon. South-west.

Mar. When I was born, the wind was north.

Dion. Was 't so?

Mar. My father, as nurse said, did never fear But cried ' Good sea-nunn! ' to the sailors, galling His kindly hands, haling ropes; And, clasping to the mast, endured a sea That almost burst the deck.

Leon. When was this?

Mar. When I was born:

Never was waves nor wind more violent; And from the ladder-tackle washes off A canvas-climber. ' Ha! ' says one, ' wilt out? ' And with a dropping industry they skip From stem to stern: the beat-swain whistles, and The master calls, and trebles their confusion. Leon. Come, say your prayers.

Mar. What mean you?

Leon. If you require a little space for prayer, I grant it: pray; but be not tedious, For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me?

Leon. To satisfy my lady.

Mar. Why would she have me kill'd?

Now, as I can remember, by my troth, I never did her hurt in all my life: I never spoke bad word, nor did I'll turn To any living creature: believe me, la,
I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly:
I trod upon a worm against my will,
But I wont for it. How have I offended,
Wherin my death might yield her any profit,
Or my life imply her any danger?
Leon. My commission
Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.
Mar. You will not do 't for all the world. I hope.
You are well favour'd, and your looks foreshow
You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately.
When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:
Good sooth, it show'd well in you: do so now:
Your lady seeks my life; come you betwixt,
And save poor me, the weaker.
Leon.
And we dispatch.
[He seizes her.

Enter Pirates.

First Pirate. Hold, villain! [Leonine runs away.

See. Pirate. A prize! a prize!

Third Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part.

Come, let 's have her aboard suddenly.
[Exeunt Pirates with Marina.

Re-enter Leonine.

Leon. These rogueing thieves serve the great pirate
Valdes:
And they have seized Marina. Let her go: [dead,
There's no hope she will return. I'll swear she's
And thrown into the sea. But I'll see further;
Perhaps they will but pleasure themselves upon her,
Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd must by me be slain.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—Mytilene. A room in a brothel.

Enter Pandar, Bawd, and Boul't.

Pandal. Boul't!
Boult. Sir?
Pandal. Search the market narrowly; Mytilene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this mart by being too wenchless.
Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures.
We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and with continual action are even as good as rotten.
Pandal. Therefore let 's have fresh ones, whate' er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper.
Bawd. Thou sayest true: 'tis not our bringing up of poor bastards,—as, I think, I have brought up some eleven—
Boult. Ay, to eleven; and brought them down again. But shall I search the market?
Bawd. What else, man? The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sodden.
Pandal. Thou sayest true; they're too unwholesome, o' conscience. The poor Transylvania is dead, that lay with the little baggage.
Bawd. Ay, she quickly pooped him; she made him roast-meat for worms. But I 'll go search the market.
[Exeunt.

Pandal. Three or four thousand chequins were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so give over.
Bawd. Why to give over, I pray you? Is it a shame to get when we are old?
Pandal. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity, nor the commodity wages not with the danger: therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep our door hatched. Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods will be strong with us for giving over.
Bawd. Come, other sorts offend as well as we.

Pandal. As well as we! ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade;
it's no calling. But here comes Boul't.

Re-enter Boul't, with the Pirates and Marina.

Boul't. [To Marina] Come your ways. My masters, you say she's a virgin?

First Pirate. O, sir, we doubt it not.
Boul't. Master, I have gone through for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my Bawd. Boul't, has she any qualities? [earnest.
Boul't. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity qualities can make her be refused.
Bawd. What's her price, Boul't? [pieces.
Boul't. I cannot be bated one doit of a thousand Pandal. Well, follow me, my masters, you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment.

[Exeunt Pandar and Pirates.

Bawd. Boul't, take you the marks of her, the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity: and cry 'He that will give most shall have her first.' Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been.
Get this done as I command you.
Bawd. Performance shall follow.

[Exit. Mor. Alack that Leonine was so slack, so slow!
He should have struck, not spoke; or that these pirates,
Not enough barbarous, had not o'板oard thrown me
For to seek my mother!
Bawd. Why lament you, pretty one?
Mor. That I am pretty. [you.
Bawd. Come, the gods have done their part in
Mor. I accuse them not.
Bawd. You are light into my hands, where you are like to live.
Mor. The more my fault.
To scape his hands where I was like to die.
Bawd. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.
Mor. No.
Bawd. Yes, indeed shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions: you shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexion. What! do you stool your ears?
Mor. Are you a woman?
Bawd. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?
Mor. An honest woman, or not a woman.
Bawd. Marry, whip thee, galoshing: I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you're a young foolish suppling, and must be bawed as I would have you.
Mor. The gods defend me!
Bawd. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you,
men must stir you up. Boul't's returned.

Re-enter Boul't.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?
Boul't. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs; I have drawn her picture with my voice.
Bawd. And I prithee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?
Boul't. Faith, they listened to me as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very description.
Bawd. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.
Boul't. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers i' the hams?
Bawd. Who, Monsieur Veroleus?
Boul't. Ay, he: he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Bawd. Well, well; as for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it. I know he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.

Bawd. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we should divest them with this sign.

[Exit Mar.] Pray you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me: you must seem to do that fearfully which you commit willingly, despite profit where you have most gain. To weep that you live as ye do makes pity in your lovers: seldom but that pity begets your good opinion, and that opinion a mere profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Bawd. O, take her home, mistress, take her home: these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practices.

Bawd. Thou sayest true, i' faith, so they must; for your bride goes to that with shame which is her way to go with warrant.

Bawd. 'Faith, some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargained for the joint,— Bawd. Thou mayst cut a morsel off the spit.

Bawd. I may so.

Bawd. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well. [yet.

Bawd. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed.

Bawd. Boult, spend thou that in the town: report what a sojourner we have; you'll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

Bawd. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly-inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

Bawd. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep, Untied I still my virgin knot will keep.

Diana, aid my purpose!

Bawd. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Tarsus. A room in Cleon's house.

Enter Cleon and Dionyza.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter
The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think
You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all this spacious world, I'd give it to undo the deed. O lady, Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess To call my single crown o' the earth I the justice of compare! O villain Leonine! Whom thou last poison'd too:

If thou hast drunk to him, 't had been a kindness Becoming well thy fact: what canst thou say
When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates, To foster it, nor ever to preserve.

She died at night: I'll say so. Who can cross it? Unless you play the pious innocent, And for an honest attribute cry out
'She died by foul play.'

Cle. O, go to. Well, well,
Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those that think
The petty wrens of Tarsus will fly hence, And open this to Pericles. I do shane To think of what a noble strain you are, And of how coward a spirit.

[Exeunt.

Cleon. To such proceeding
Who ever but his approbation added?
Though not his prime consent, he did not flow
From honourable sources.

Dion. Be it so, then:
Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead,
Nor none can know, Leonine being gone.
She did disdain my child, and stood between Her and her fortune, we will look on her,
But cast their gazes on Marina's face;
Whilst ours was brusht at and held a malkin
Not worth the time of day. It pierced me through;
And though you call my course unnatural,
You not your child well loving, yet I had
Dis Approb'd to your sole daughter.

Cle. Heavens forgive it!

Dion. And as for Pericles.
What should he say? We wept after her hearse,
And yet we mourn: her monument
Is almost finish'd, and her epitaphs
In glittering golden characters express
A general praise to her, and care in us
At whose expense 'tis done.

Cle. Thou art like the harpy,
Which, to betray, dost, with thine angel's face,
Seize with thine eagle's talon.

Dion. You are like one that superstitiongiously
Doth swear to the gods that winter kills the flies:
But yet I know you'll do as I advise. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Enter Gower, before the Monument of Marina at Tarsus.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues
Make short;
Sail seas in cockles, have an wish but for 't;
Making, to take your imagination,
From bourn to bourn, region to region.
By you being pardon'd, we commit no crime
To use one language in each several clime
Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech you
To learn of me, who stand I the gaps to teach you
The stases of our story. Pericles
Is not again thwarting the wayward seas,
Attended on by many a lord and knight,
To see his daughter, all his life's delight.
Old Escanes, whom Helicanus late
Advanced in time to great and high estate,
Is left to govern. Bear you I in mind
Old Helicanus goes along this land,
Brought Well-sailing ships and bounteous winds have
This king to Tarsus,—think his pilot thought;
So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow on,—
To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.
Like notion and shadows see them move awhile;
Your ears unto your yells I'll reconcile.

Dumb Show.

Enter Pericles, at one door, with all his train; Cleon and Dionyza, at the other. Cleon shows Pericles the tomb; whereto Pericles makes lamentation, puts on sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs. Then exeunt Cleon and Dionyza.

See how belief may suffer by foul show!
This borrow'd passion stands for true old woe;
And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd, [shower'd,
With sighs shot through, and biggest tears o'er-
Leaves Tarsus and again embarks. He swears Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs;
He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears
A tempest, which his mortal vessel tears,
And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit
The epitaph is for Marina writ
By wicked Dionyza.

[Heads the inscription on Marina's monument.

ACT IV.

Scene V. — Mytilene. A street before the brothel. Enter, from the brothel, two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Did you ever hear the like? See, Gent. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.

First Gent. But to have divinity preached there! did you ever dream of such a thing? See, Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more body-houses; shall's go hear the vestals sing? First Gent. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous; but I am out of the road of rutting for ever.

[Exeunt.

Scene VI. — The same. A room in the brothel.

Enter Pandar, Bawd, and Boult.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her she had ne'er come here.

Bawd. Vie, lie upon her! she's able to freeze the god Priapus, and undo a whole generation. We must either get her ravished, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her fitment, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master reasons, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a puritan of the devil, if he should cheapen a kiss of her.

Boult. 'Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll disfigure us of all our cavaliers, and make our swearsiers priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

Bawd. 'Faith, there's no way to be rid on 't but by the way to the pox. Here comes the Lord Lysimachus disguised.

Boult. We should have both lord and lown, if the peevish baggidge would but give way to customers.

Enter Lysimachus.

Lys. How now! How a dozen of virginitias? Bawd. Now, the gods to bless your honour! Boult. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so; 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs. How now! wholesome iniquity have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Bawd. We have here one, sir, if she would — but there never came her like in Mytilene.

Lys. If she 'ld do the deed of darkness, thou wouldst say.

Boult. Your honour knows what 'tis to say well.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

[Exit Boult. Lys. Here comes that which grows to the stalk; never plucked yet, I can assure you.

Scene VII. — Re-enter Boult with Marina.

Is she not a fair creature? Lys. 'Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you; leave us.

Bawd. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.

Bawd. [To Marina]. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man. [Note him. Mar. I desire to find him so that I may worthily.

Bawd. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Bawd. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thank.

Bawd. My lord, she's not paced yet: you must take some pains to work her to your manner. Come, we will leave his honour and her together. Go thy ways.

[Exeunt Bawd, Pandar, and Boult. Lys. Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. Why, I cannot name 't but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession? Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to 't so young? Were you a gamster at five or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into 't? I hear say you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place: come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, show it now; if put upon you, make the judgment good.

That thought you worthy of.

Lys. How's this? how's this? Some more; be Mar. For me, [sage.

That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune. Have placed me in this sty, where, since I came, Diseases have been sold dearer than physic, O, that the gods Would set me free from this unhallow'd place.

Though they did change me to the meanest bird That flies i' the purer air!

Lys. I did not think Thou couldst have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou couldst.

If had I brought, either a corrupted mind, Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for Persever in that clear way thou goest, [thee: And the gods strengthen thee!

Mar. The good gods preserve you!

PERICLES.

Mar. Whither wilt thou have me?
Boul. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.
Mar. Prithée, tell me one thing first.
Boul. Come now, your one thing.
Mar. What canst thou wish thine enemy to be?
Boul. Why, I would wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.
Mar. Neither of these are so bad as thou art, since they do better thee in their command.
Thou hold'st a place, for which the pained'st fiend
Of hell would not in reputation change:
Thou art the damned doorkeeper to every
Coistrel that comes inquiring for his Tib;
To the choleric listing of every rogue
Thy ear is liable; thy food is such
As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.
Boul. What would you have me do? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one?
Mar. Do any thing but this thou dost. Empty
Old receptacles, or common shores, of filth;
Serve by indenture to the common hangman:
Any of these ways are yet better than this;
For what thou professest, a baboon, could he speak,
Would own a name too dear. O, that the gods
Would safely deliver me from this place!
Here, here's gold for thee.
If that thy master would gain by me,
Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance,
With other virtues, which I'll keep from boast;
And I will undertake all these to teach.
I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.
Boul. But can you teach all this you speak of?
Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again,
And prostitute me to the basest groom
That doth frequent your house.
Boul. Well, I will see what I can do for thee: if I can place thee, I will.
Boul. 'Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent:
therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can; come your ways.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

Enter Gower.

Gow. Mariana thus the brothel 'scapes, and chances
Into an honest house, our story says.
She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lass;
Deep clerks she dumbs; and with her need composes
Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry,
That even her art sisters the natural roses;
Her inkle, silk, twin with the rubied cherry:
That pupils lacks she none of noble race,
Who pour their bounty on her; and her gain
She gives the cursed bawd. Here we her place:
And to her father turn our thoughts again,
Where we left him, on the sea. We there him lost;
Where, driven before the winds, he is arrived
Here where his daughter dwells; and on this coast
Suppose him now at anchor. The city strived
God Neptune's annual feast to keep: from whence Lykindachus our Tyrian ship espy'd,
His banners sable, trimm'd with rich expense;
And to him in his barge with fervour hies.

In your supposing once more put your sight
Of heavy Pericles; think this his bark:
Where what is done in action, more, if might,
Shall be discover'd; please you, sit and hark.

[Exit.

SCENE I.—On board Pericles' ship, off Mytilene.
A close pavilion on deck, with a curtain before it; Pericles within it, reclined on a couch. A barge lying beside the Tyrian vessel.

Enter two Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian vessel,
the other to the barge; to them Helicanus.

Tyr. Sail. [To the Sailor of Mytilene] Where is lord Helicanus? he can resolve you.
O, here he is! before the winds, he is arrived.
Sir, there's a barge put off from Mytilene,
And in it is Lykindachus the governor,
Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?
Hel. That he have his. Call up some gentle-
men.

Tyr. Sail. Ho, gentlemen! my lord calls.
ACT V.
PERICLES.
SCENE I.

Enter two or three Gentlemen.

First Gent. Both your lordship call?
Hel. Gentlemen, there's some of worth would come aboard;
I pray ye, greet them fairly.
[The Gentlemen and the two Sailors descend, and go on board the barge.

Enter, from thence, Lysimachus and Lords; with the Gentlemen and the two Sailors.

Tyr. Sall. Sir,
This is the man that can, in aught you would,
Resolve you.
Lys. Hail, reverend sir! the gods preserve you!
Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,
And die as I would do.
Lys. You wish me well.
Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,
Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
I made it to, to know of whence you are.
Hel. First, what is your place?
Lys. I am the governor of this place you lie by.
Hel. Sir,
Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;
A man who for this three months hath not spoken
To any one, nor taken sustenance
But to prorogue his grief.
Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperature?
Hel. 'Tis would be too tedious to repeat;
But the main grief springs from the loss of a beloved daughter and a wife.
Lys. May we not see him?
Hel. You may;
But bootless is your sight: he will not speak
To any.
Lys. Yet let me obtain my wish.
Hel. Behold him. [Pericles discovered.] This was a goodly person,
Till the disaster that, one mortal night,
Drove him to this.
Lys. Sir king, all hail! the gods preserve you!
Hail, royal sir!
Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.
First Lord. Sir,
We have a maid in Mytilene, I durst wager,
Would win some words of him.
Lys. Tis well bethought.
She questionless with her sweet harmony
And other chosen attractions, would allure,
And make a battery through his deafen'd parts,
Which now are midway stopped:
She is all happy as the fairest of all,
And, with her fellow maids, is now upon
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side.

[Whispers a Lord, who goes off in the barge of Lysimachus.

Hel. Sure, all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit.
That bears recovery's name. But, since your kind
We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you [ness
That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the slackness.
Lys. O, sir, a courtesy
Which if we should deny, the most just gods
For every graff would send a caterpillar,
And so afflict our province. Yet once more
Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.
Hel. Sit, sir, I will recount it to you:
But, see, I am prevented.
Re-enter, from the barge, Lord, with Marina, and a young Lady.

Lys. O, here is
The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!
Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. She's a gallant lady.
Lys. She's such a one, that, were I well assured
Came of a gentle kind and noble stock,
I'd wish no better choice, and think me rarely wed.
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty
Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:
If that thy prosperous and artificial feat
Can draw him but to answer thee in aught,
Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.
Mar.
Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided
That none but I and my companion maid
Be suffer'd to come near him.
Lys. Come, let us leave her;
And the gods make her prosperous! [Marina sings.
Lys. Mark'd he your music.
Mar. No, nor look'd on us.
Lys. See, she will speak to him.
Mar. Hall, sir! my lord, lend ear.
Per. Hum, ha!
Mar. I am a maid,
My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on like a comet: she speaks,
My lord, she may be, hath incurred a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But time hath root'd out my parentage,
And to the world and awkward casualties
Bound me in servitude. [Aside] I will deist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear! 'Go not till he speak.'
Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—
To equal mine!—was it not thus? what say you?
Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parent.
You would not do me violence.
Per. I do think so. Pray you, turn your eyes on me?
You are like something that— What country—
Here of these shores?
Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear. [ing.
Per. I am great with woe, and shall deliver weep.
My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: my queen's square
brows;
Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;
As silver-voiced: her eyes as jewel-like
And cased as richly; in pace another Juno;
Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hungry, [live?
The more she gives them speech. Where do you
Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck
You may discern the place.
Per. Where were you bred?
And how achieved you these endowments, which
You make your rich to owe?
Mar. If I should tell my history, it would seem Like lies disdain'd in the reporting.
Prithue, speak:
Falseness cannot come from thee; for thou look'st
Modest as Justice, and thou seem'st a palace
For the crown'd Truth to dwell in: I will believe
And make my senses credit thy relation [thee,
To points that seem impossible: for thou look'st
Like one I loved indeed. What were thy friends?
Dost thou not say, when I did push thee back—
Which was when I perceived thee—that thou camest
From good descending?
Mar. So indeed I did.
Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st
Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal
If both were open'd.'

Mar. Some such thing I said, and said no more but what my thoughts Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story; If thine consider'd prove the thousandth part Of my endurance, thou art a man, and I Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look Like Patience gazing on kings' graves, and smiling Extremity out of act. What were thy friends? How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin? Recount, I do beseech thee: come, sit by me. Mar. My name is Marina. Per. O, I am mock'd, And thou by some incensed god sent hither To make the world to laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, good sir, Or else I'll cease. Per. Nay, I'll be patient. Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me, To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name Was given me by one that had some power, My father, and a king.

Per. And call'd Marina? Mar. You said you would believe me; But, not to be a troubler of your peace, I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood? Have you a working pulse? and are no palsy? Motion! Well; speak on. Where were you born? And wherefore call'd Marina?

Mar. Call'd Marina, For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea! what mother?

Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king; As my good nurse Lychoraha hath oft Deliver'd weeping.

Per. O, stop there a little! [Aside] This is the rarest dream that e'er dull sleep Did mock sad foolishness: this cannot be: My daughter's buried. Well: where were you bred? I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story, And never interrupt you. [gives her.] Mar. You scorn: believe me, 't were best I did. Per. I will believe you by the syllable Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave: How came you in these parts? where were you bred?

Mar. The king my father did in Tarsus leave me; Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife, Did seek to murder me: and having woo'd A villain to attempt it, who having drawn to do it, A crew of pirates came and rescued me; Brought me to Mytilene. But, good sir, Whither will you have me? Why do you weep? It may be, You think me an impostor: no, good faith; I am the daughter to King Pericles, If good King Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus! Hel. Calls my lord? Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor, Most wise in general: tell me, if thou canst, What this maid is, or what is like to be, That thus hath made me weep?

Hel. I know not; but Here is the regent, sir, of Mytilene Speaks nobly of her.

Lys. She would never tell Her parentage; being demanded that, She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd sir; Give me a gash, put me to present pain; Lost this great sea of joys rushing upon me O'erbear the shores of my mortality, And drown me with their sweetness. O, come hither, Thou that beget'st him that did thee beget; Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tarsus, And found at sea again! O Helicanus, Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods as loud As thunder threatens us: this is Marina. What was thy mother's name? tell me but that, For truth can never be confir'd enough, Though doubts did ever sleep.

Mar. First, sir, I pray, What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now My drown'd queen's name, as in the rest you said Thou hast been godlike perfect, The heir of kingdoms and another like To Pericles thy father.

Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter than To say my mother's name was Thaisa?

Thaisa was my mother, who did end The minute I began. [child.] Per. Now, blessing on thee! rise; thou art my Give me fresh garments. Mine own. Helicanus; She is not dead at Tarsus, as she should have been, But, the savage Cleon: she shall tell thee all: When thou shalt kneel, and justify in knowledge She is thy very princess. Who is this? Hel. Sir, 'tis the governor of Mytilene, Who, hearing of your melancholy state, Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you. Give me my robes. I am wild in my beholding, O heavens bless my girl! But, hark, what music? Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him O'er, point by point, for yet he seems to doubt, How sure you are my daughter. But, what music? Hel. My lord, I hear none.

Per. None! The music of the spheres! List, my Marina. Lys. It is not good to cross him; give him way.

Per. Rarest sounds! Do ye not hear? Lys. Of my lord, I hear. [Music.] Per. Most heavenly music! It nips me unto listening, and thick slumber Hangs upon mine eyes: let me rest. [Sleeps.] Lys. A pillow for his head:

So, leave him all. Well, my companion friends, If this but answer to my just belief, I'll well remember you. [Exit all but Pericles.]

Diana appears to Pericles as in a vision. Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus: hee thee And do upon mine altar sacrifice. [thither, There, when my maiden priests are met together, Before the people all, Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife: To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's, call And give them repetition to the life. Or perform my bidding, or thou livest in woe; Do it, and happy; by my silver bow! Awake, and tell thy dream. [Disappears.] Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentia, I will obey thee. Helicanus!

Re-enter Helicanus, Lysimachus, and Marina. Hel. Sir? Per. My purpose was for Tarsus, there to strike The inhospitable Cleon; but I am For other service first: toward Ephesus Turn our blown sails; eftsoons I'll tell thee why. [To Lysimachus] Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your And give you gold for such provision [shore, As our intents will need? Lys. Sir, With all my heart; and, when you come ashore, I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail, Were it to woo my daughter: for it seems You have been noble towards her.
ACT V.

PERICLES.

SCENE II. — Enter Gower, before the temple of Diana at Ephesus.

Per. This, this: no more, you gods! your present kindness
Makes my night miseries sport: you shall do well,
That on the touching of her lips I may
Melt and no more be seen. O, come, be buried
A second time within these arms.

Mar.

Leaps to be gone into my mother’s bosom.

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of my flesh,
Thy burden at the sea, and call’d Marina, (Thaisa;)
For she was yielded there.

Thai.

Blest, and mine own! I know you not.

Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from
I have named him oft.

Thai.

T was Helicanus then.

Per. Still confirmation:
Embrace him, dear Thaisa; this is he,
Now do I long to hear how you were found;
How possibly preserved; and who to thank,
Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man,
Through whom the gods have shown their power;
From first to last resolve you,

That can Per.

Reverend sir,
The gods can have no mortal officer
More like a god than you. Will you deliver
How this dead queen re-lives?

Cer. I will, my lord.

Beseach you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shown you all was found with her;
How she came placed here in the temple;
No needful thing omitted.

Per. Pure Diana, bless thee for thy vision! I
Will offer night-oblations to thee. Thaisa,
This prince, the fair-betrothed of your daughter,
Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,
This ornament
Makes me look dismal will I clip to form;
And what this fourteen years no razor touch’d,
To grace thy marriage-day, I’ll beautify.

Sir, this, Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit,
My father’s dead. [my queen,

Per. Heaven’s make a star of him! Yet there,
Will we celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days:
Our son and daughter shall in Tybus reign.

Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay
To hear the rest untold: sir, lead’s the way. [Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gow. In Antiochus and his daughter you have heard
Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:
In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen,
Although assail’d with fortune fierce and keen,
Virtue preserved from fell destruction’s blast,
Led on by heaven, and crown’d with joy at last:
In Helicanus may you well desire
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears
The worth that learned charity aye wears:
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame
Had spread their cursed deed, and honour’d name
Of Pericles, to rage the city turn,
That him and his they in his palace burn;
The gods for murder seem so content
To punish them; although not done, but meant.
So, on your patience evermore attending,
New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending.

[Exit.]
VENUS AND ADONIS.

Villa miretur vulgaris: mihi flavus Apollo
Pucula Castalia plena ministret aqua.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE HENRY Wriothesly,
EAL OF SOUTHWATER, AND BARON OF TICHEFIELD.

I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden: only, if your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a god-father, and never after car so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own wish and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your honour's in all duty,

William Shakspeare.

Even as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase;
Hunting he loved, but love he taung'd to scorn;
 Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto him,
And like a bold-faced suitor 'gins to woo him.

'Thrice-fairer than myself,' thus she began,
The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are;
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Saith that the world hath ending with thy life.

'Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow;
If thou wilt deign this favour, for thy need
A thousand honey secrets shalt thou know:
Here come and sit, where never serpent kisses,
And being set, I'll smoother thee with kisses.'

'And yet not cloy thy lips with leathed satiety,
But rather fanish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety,
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty:
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport.'

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and livelihood,
And trembling in her passion, calls it balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good:
Being so enraged, desire doth lend her force
Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pouted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, upset to toy;
She red and hot as coals of glowing fire,
Tie red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimbly she fastens:—O, how quick is love!
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove;
Backward she plucks him, as she would be thrust;
And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips:
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he frown,
And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips;
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
'If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open.'

He burns with bashful shame; she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks;
Then with her windy sighs and golden hairs
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks:
He saith she is immodest, blames her 'miss;
What follows more she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd or prey be gone;
Even so she kissed his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends she doth anew begin.

Forced to content, but never to obey,
Panting he lies and breatheth in her face;
She feedeth on the stean as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace;
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling showers.

Look, how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies;
Pure shame and awed resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes:
Rain added to a river that is rank
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and pretily entreats,
For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he lours and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame and anger ashy-pale;
Being red, she loves him best; and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears,
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Till he take truce with her contending tears.
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks all wet;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.
Venus and Adonis.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a davy-dapper peering through a wave,
Who, being look’d on, ducks as quickly in;
So offers he to give what she did crave;
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer’s heat
More thirst for drink than she for this good turn.
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn:
‘O, pity,’ gan she cry, ‘flint-hearted boy!
’Tis but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy?

‘I have been wo’d, as I entreat thee now,
Even by the stern and direful god of war,
Whose sinewy neck in battle ne’er did bow,
Who conquers where he comes in every jar;
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
And begg’d for that which thou mask’dst shalt have.

‘Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
His batter’d shield, his uncontrolled crest,
And for my sake hath learn’d to sport and dance,
To toy, to wanton, dally, smile and jest,
Scoring his churlish drum and enigmatical red,
Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

‘Thus he that overruled I oversway’d,
Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain:
Strong-tempered steel his stronger strength obey’d,
Yet was he servile to my coy disdain.
O, be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastering her that foil’d the god of light!

‘Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,—
Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red —
The kiss shall be with thine own loving mine.
What sweet thou in the ground? hold up thy head:
Look in mine eye-balls, there thy beauty lies;
Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes?

‘Art thou ashamed to kiss? then wink again,
And I will wink; so shall the day seem night;
Love keeps his revels where there are but twain;
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight:
These blue-vein’d violets whereon we lean
Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

‘The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shows thee unripe; yet mayst thou well be tasted:
Make use of time, let not advantage slip;
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:
Fair flowers that are not gather’d in their pride
Rot and consume themselves in little time.

‘Were I hard-favour’d, foul, or wrinkled-old,
Ill-nurtured, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
O’erworn, despised, rheumatic and cold,
Thick-sighted, barren, lean and lacking juice,
Then mightst thou pause, for then I were not for thee;
But having no defects, why dost abhor me?

‘Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow;
Mine eyes are gray and bright and quick in turning;
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning;
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

‘Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
Or, like a nymph, with long dishelv’d hair,
Dance by the baths, and yet not being seen:
Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire.

‘Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie;
These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me;
Two strengthless doves will draw me through the sky,
From morn till night, even where I list to sport me:
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou shouldst think it heavy unto thee?

‘Is thine own heart to thine own face affected?
Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
Steel thine own freedom and complain on theft.
Narcissus so himself himself forsook,
And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

‘Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use,
Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear:
Things growing to themselves are growth’s abuse:
Seeds spring from seeds and beauty breedeth beauty;
Thou wast begot; to get it is thy duty.

‘Upon the earth’s increase why shouldst thou feed,
Unless the earth with thy increase be fed?
I lay law of nature thou art but a part,
I come to take that thou hast to part:
That thine may live when thou thyself art dead;
And so, in spite of death, thou dost survive,
In that thy likeness still is left alive.’

By this the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For where they lay the shadow had forsook them,
And Than, tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
So he were like him and by Venus’ side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disinclining eye,
His louring brows o’erwhelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours when they blot the sky,
Souring his cheeks cries ‘Fie, no more of love!
The sun doth burn my face; I must remove.’

‘Ay me,’ quoth Venus, ‘young, and so unkind?
What bare excuses makest thou to be gone?
I’ll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun:
I’ll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
If they burn too, I’ll quench them with my tears.

‘The sun that shines from heaven shines but warm,
And, lo, I lie between that sun and thee:
The heat I have from thence doth little harm,
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me;
And were I not immortal, life were done
Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

‘Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel,
Nay, more than flint, for stone at rain relieth?
Art thou a woman’s son, and canst not feel
What ‘tis to love? how want of love tormenteth?
O, had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.

‘What am I, that thou shouldst content me this?
Or what great danger dwells upon my suit?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak, fair; but speak fair words, or else be mute:
Give me one kiss, I’ll give it thee again,
And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

‘Fie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well-painted idol, image dull and dead,
Statue contentious but the eye alone,
Thing like a man, but of no woman bred!
Thou art no man, though of a man’s complexion,
For men will kiss even by their own direction.’

823
VENUS AND ADONIS.

This said, impatience chokes his pleading tongue,
And swelling passion doth provoke a pause;
Red cheeks and dasy eyes blaze forth her wrong;
Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause:
And now she weeps, and now she fain would speak,
And now her sobs do her intentions break.

Sometimes she shakes her head and then his hand,
Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;
Sometimes her arms infold him like a band;
She would, he will not in her arms be bound;
And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
She locks her lily fingers one in one.

'Fondling,' she saith, 'since I have hemm’d thee here,
Within the circuit of this ivory pale,
I’ll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer;
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale:
Graze on my lips; and if those hills be dry,
Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

Within this limit is relief enough,
Sweet bottom-grass and high delightful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest and from rain:
Then be my deer, since I am such a park;
No dog shall rouse thee, though a thousand bark.’

At this Adonis smiles as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple:
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
Foreknowing well, if there he came to lie,
Why, there Love lived and there he could not die.

These lovely caves, these round enchanting pits,
Open’d their mouths to swallow Venus’ liking,
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
She and swelling passion, with which provokes striking?
Poor queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn!

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say?
Her words are done, her woes the more increasing;
The time is spent, her object will away,
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing.
‘Pity,’ she cries, ‘some favour, some remorse!’
Away she springs and hasteth to his horse.

But, lo, from forth a cope that neighbours by,
A breeding Jenet, lusty, young and proud,
Adonis’ trampling courser doth espy,
And forth she rushes, snorts and neighs aloud:
The strong-neck’d steed, being tied unto a tree,
Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
And now his woven girths he breaks asunder;
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven’s thunder:
The iron bit he crusheth ’tween his teeth,
Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up-prick’d; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass’d crest now stand on end;
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
As from a furnace, vapours doth he send:
His eye, which scornfully glitters like fire,
Shows his hot courage and his high desire.

Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty and modest pride;
Anon he rears upright, curvets and leaps,
As who should say: Lo, thus my strength is tried,
And this I do to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by.

What recketh he his rider’s angry stir,
His flapping ‘Holla,’ or his ‘Stand, I say’?
What cares he now for curb or pricking spur?
For rich caparisons or trapping gay?
He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life,
In limning out a well-proportion’d steed,
His art with nature’s workmanship at strife,
As if the dead the living should exceed;
So did this horse excel a common one
In shape, in courage, colour, pace and bone.

Round-hoof’d, short-jointed, fetlocks slung and long,
Broad breast, full eye, small head and nostril wide,
High crest, short ears, straight legs and passing strong,
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide:
Look, what a horse should have he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a buck.

Sometimes he scuds far off and there he scares;
Anon he starts at stirring of a feather;
To bid the wind a base he now prepares,
And whether he run or fly they know not whether:
For through his mane and tail the high wind sings,
Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather’d wings.

He looks upon his love and neighs unto her;
She answers him as if she knew his mind:
Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind,
Spars her at love and scorns the heat he feels,
Beating his kind embracements with her heels.

Then, like a melancholy malcontent,
He yells his tail that, like a falling plume,
Swells into a cloud, a cloud not the least striking?
He stamps and bites the poor flies in his fume.
His love, perceiving how he is enraged,
Grew kinder, and his fury was assuaged.

His testy master goeth about to take him;
When, lo, the unback’d breeder, full of fear,
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him,
With her the horse, and left Adonis there:
As they were mad, unto the wood they hie them,
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly them.

All swoln with chafing, down Adonis sits,
Barring his boisterous and unruly beast;
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love by pleading may be blest;
For lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong
When it is barr’d the aliance of the tongue.

An oven that is stopp’d, or river stay’d,
Burneth more holy, swelleth with more rage:
Of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words love’s fire doth assuage;
But when the heart’s attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
Even as a dying coal revives with wind,
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind,
Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
For all askance he holds her in his eye.

O, what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy!
To note the fighting conflict of her hue,
How white and red each other did destroy!
But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash’d forth fire, as lightning from the sky.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lovely lover down she kneels;
With one fair hand she heaveth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels;
His tenderer cheek receives her soft hand's print,
As apt as new-fall'n snow takes any dint.

O, what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes petitioners to his eyes suing;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them;
Her eyes woo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the wooing:
And all this dumb play had his acts made plain,
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band;
So white a friend engirts so white a foe:
This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling,
Show'd like two silver doves that sit a-billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began:
'0 fairest mover on this mortal round,
Would thou were as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound;
For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee,
Though nothing but my body's bone would cure thee.'

'Give me my hand,' saith he, 'why dost thou feel it?'
'Give me my heart,' saith she, 'and thou shalt have
O, give it me, lest thy hard heart do steel it;
[It; And being steel'd, soft sighs can never graze it;
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.'

'For shame,' he cries, 'let go, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so;
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone;
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare.'

Thus she replies: 'Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire;
Affection is a coal that must be cooled;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire:
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath none;
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

'How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

'Who sees his true-love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint, that dare not be so bold
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?

'Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee:
O, learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
And once made perfect, never lost again.'

'I know not love,' quoth he, 'nor will not know it,
Unless it be a boar, and then I chase it;
'Tis much to borrow, and I will not owe it;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it;
For I have heard it is a life in death.
That laughs and weeps, and all but with a breath.

'Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinish'd
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth:
The colt that's back'd and burden'd being young
Loseth his pride and never waxeth strong.

'You hurt my hand with wringing; let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat:
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart;
To love's alarms it will not ope the gate:
[tery;
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flat-
For where a heart is hard they make no battery.'

'What canst thou talk?' quoth she, 'hast thou a tongue?
O, would thou hadst not, or I had no hearing!
Thy maid's voice hath done me double wrong;
I had my load before, now press'd with bearing;
Melodious voice, heavenly tune harsh-sounding,
Ear's deep-sweet music, and heart's deep-sore wounding.

'Had I no eyes but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible;
Or were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible;
Though neither eyes nor ears, to hear nor see,
Yet should I be in love by touching thee.'

'Say, that the sense of feeling were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And nothing but the very smell were left me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much;
For from the stillitory of thy face excelling
Comes breath perfumed that breetheth love by smelling.

'But, O, what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four!
Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid Suspicion double-lock the door,
Lest Jealousy, that sour unwelcome guest,
Should, by his stealing in, disturb the feast?'

Once more the ruby-colour'd portal open'd,
Which to his speech did honey passage yield;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field,
Sorrow to shepherds, wo unto the birds,
Gusts and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisedly she marketh;
Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth,
Or as the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
Or as the berry breaks before it staineth,
Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
His meaning struck her ere his words began.

And at his look she flatly falleth down,
For looks kill love and love by looks reviveth;
A smile recures the wounding of a crown;
But blessed bankrupt, that by love so thriveth!
The silly boy, believing she is dead,
Claps her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red;

And all amaz'd brake off his late intent,
For sharply he did think to reprehend her,
Which cunning love did wittily prevent;
Fair fail the wit that can so well defend her!
For on the grass she lies as she were slain,
Till his breath breatheth life in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
He bends her fingers, holds her pulses hard,
He chafes her lips; a thousand ways he seeks.
To mend the hurt that his unkindness marr'd:

823
HE KISSES HER; AND SHE, BY HER GOOD WILL,
WILL NEVER RISE, SO HE WILL KISS HER STILL.

THE NIGHT OF SORROW NOW IS TURN'D TO DAY;
HER TWO BLUE WINDOWS FAINTLY SHE UP-HEAVETH,
LIKE THE FAIR SUN, WHEN IN HIS FRESH ARRAY
HE CHEERS THE MORN AND ALL THE EARTH RELIEVETH;
AND AS THE BRIGHT SUN GLORIFIES THE SKY,
SO IS HER FACE ILLUMINATED WITH HER EYE;

WHOSE BEAMS UPON HIS HAIRLESS FACE ARE FIX'D,
AS IF FROM THENCE THEY BORROW'D ALL THEIR SHINE.
WERE NEVER FOUR SUCH LAMPS TOGETHER INX'D,
HAD NOT HIS BROW'S REPOUND:
BUT HERS, WHICH THROUGH THE CRYSTAL TEARS GAVE LIGHT, SHONE LIKE THE MOON IN WATER SEEN BY NIGHT.

'0, WHERE AM I?' QUOTH SHE, 'IN EARTH OR HEAVEN,
OR IN THE OCEAN DRENUCH, OR IN THE FIRE?
WHAT HOUR IS THIS? OR MORN OR WEARY EVEN?
DO I DELIGHT TO DIE, OR LIFE DESIRE?
BUT NOW I LIVED, AND LIFE WAS DEATH'S ANNOY;
BUT NOW I DIED, AND DEATH WAS LIVELY JOY.

'0, THOU DIDST KILL ME: KILL ME ONCE AGAIN;
THY EYES SHUN D THE STAR-MASTER, THAT HARD HEART OF THINE, HAITH TAUGHT THEM SCORNFUL TRICKS AND SUCH DISDAIN
THAT THEY HAVE MURDER'D THIS POOR HEART OF MINE;
AND THESE MINE EYES, TRUE LEADERS TO THEIR QUEEN,
BUT FOR THY PITEOUS LIPS NO MORE HAS SEEN.

LONG MAY THEY KISS EACH OTHER, FOR THIS CURE
0, NEVER LET THEIR CRIMSON LIVERIES WEAR!
AND AS THEY LAST, THEIR VERDURE STILL ENDURE,
TO DRIVE INFECTION FROM THE DANGEROUS YEAR!
THAT THE STAR-GAZERS, HAVING WRIT ON DEATH,
MAY SAY, THE PLAGUE IS BANISHED BY THY BREATH.

PURE LIPS, SWEET SEALS IN MY SOFT LIPS IMPRINTED,
WHAT BARGAINS MAY I MAKE, STILL BE SEALING?
TO SELL MYSELF I CAN BE WELL CONTENTED,
SO THEN WILL BUY AND PAY AND USE GOOD DEALING;
WHICH PURCHASE IF THOU MAKE, FOR FEAR OF SLIPS
SET THY SEAL-MANUAL ON MY WAX-RED LIPS.

A THOUSAND KISSES BUYS MY HEART FROM ME;
AND PAY THEM AT THY LEISURE, ONE BY ONE.
WHAT IS TEN HUNDRED TOUCHES UNTIL THEE?
ARE THEY NOT QUICKLY TOLD AND QUICKLY GONE?
SAY, FOR NON-PAYMENT THAT THE DEBT SHOULD DOUBLE,
IS TWENTY HUNDRED KISSES SUCH A TROUBLE?'

FAIR QUEEN,' QUOTH HE, 'IF ANY LOVE YOU OWE ME, MEASURE MY STRANGENESS WITH MY UNRIPE YEARS;
BEFORE I KNOW MYSELF, SEEK NOT TO KNOW ME;
NO FISHER BUT THE UNGROWN FRY FORBEARS:
THE MELLOW PLUM DOOTH FALL, THE GREEN STICKS FAST, OR BEING EARLY PLUCK'D IS SOUR TO TASTE.

LOOK, THE WORLD'S COMFORTER, WITH WEARY GAIT,
HIS DAY'S HOT TASK HATH ENDED IN THE WEST;
THE OWL, NIGHT'S HERALD, SHRIKES, 'TIS VERY LATE;
THE SHEEP ARE GONE TO FOLD, BIRDS TO THEIR NEST,
AND COAL-BLACK CLOUDS THAT SHADOW HEAVEN'S LIGHT
DO SUMMON US TO PART AND BID GOOD NIGHT.

NOW LET ME SAY 'GOOD NIGHT,' AND SO SAY YOU;
IF YOU WILL SAY SO, YOU SHALL HAVE A KISS.
'GOOD NIGHT,' QUOTH SHE, AND, ERE HE SAID 'ADIEU,'
THE HONEY-EEF OF PARTING TENDER'D IS:
HER ARMS DO TREMBLE A SWEET EMBRACE
INCORPORATE THEN THEY SEE; FACE GROWS TO FACE.
TILL, BREATHLESS, HE DISJOIN'D, AND BACKWARD DREW
THE HEAVENLY MOISTURE, THAT SWEET CORAL MOUTH,

WHOSE PRECIOUS TASTE HER THIRSTY LIPS WELL KNEW,
WHEREON THEY SURREPT, YET COMPLAIN ON DROUTH;
HE WITH HER PLENTY PRESS'D, SHE FAINT WITH DEATH,
THEIR LIPS TOGETHER GLUED, FALL TO THE EARTH.

NOW QUICK DESIRE HATH CAUGHT THE YIELDING PREY, AND GLOTTIONS LIKE SHE FEEDS, YET NEVER FILLETH;
HER LIPS FORGIVE THE CONQUERORS, HIS LIPS OBEY: PAYING WHAT RANSOM THE INSULTER WILLETH; HIGH,
WHOSE VULTURE THOUGHT DOOTH PITCH THE PRICE SO THAT SHE WILL DRAW HIS LIPS' RICH TREASURE DRY

AND HAVING FELT THE SWEETNESS OF THE SPOIL, WITH BLINDED FURY SHE BEGINS TO FORAGE;
HER FACE DOTH REEK AND SMOKE, HER BLOOD DOOTH BOIL,
AND CARELESS JUST STIR UP A DESPERATE COURAGE; PLANTING OBLIVION, BEATING REASON BACK.
FORGETTING SHAME'S PURE BLUSH AND HONOUR'S WRACK.

HOT, FAINT, AND WEARY, WITH HER HARD EMBRACING.
LIKE A WILD BIRD BEING TAME WITH TOO MUCH HANDLING,
OR AS THE FEET-FOOT ROE THAT'S TIRED WITH CHARING,
OR LIKE THE TROWARD INFANT STILL'D WITH DANDLING;
HE NOW OBEYS, AND NOW NO MORE RESISTETH,
WHILE SHE TAKES ALL SHE CAN, NOT ALL SHE LIESTH.

WHAT WAX SO FROZEN BUT DISSOLVE WITH TEMPERING,
AND YIELDS AT LAST TO EVERY LIGHT IMPRESSION?
THINGS OUT OF HOPE ARE COMPASS'D OFF WITH VENTURING, CHIEFLY IN LOVE, WHOSE LEAVE EXCEEDS COMMISSION;
AFFECTION FAINTS NOT LIKE A PALE-FACED COWARD,
BUT THEN WOOS BEST WHEN MOST HIS CHOICE IS FROWARD.

WHEN HE DID FROWN, O, HAD SHE THEN GAVE OVER,
SUCH NECTAR FROM HIS LIPS SHE HAD NOT SUCCEIVED.
FOUL WINDS AND FROWS WITH PEPPED LIPS TO A LOVER;
WHAT THOUGH THE ROSE HAVE PRICKLES, YET 'T IS PLEASING;
WERE BEAUTY UNDER TWENTY LOCKS KEPT FAST,
YET LOVE BREAKS THROUGH AND PICKS THEM ALL AT LAST.

FOR PITY NOW SHE CAN NO MORE DETAIN HIM;
THE POOR FOOL PRAYS HER HE MAY DEPART;
SHE IS RESOLVED NO LONGER TO RESTRAIN HIM;
BIDS HIM FAREWELL, AND LOOK WELL TO HER HEART,
THE WHICH, BY CUPID'S BOW SHE DOTH PROTEST,
HE CARRIES THENCE INCAGED IN HIS BREAST.

'SWEET BOY,' SHE SAYS, 'THIS NIGHT I'LL WASTE IN SORROW,'
FOR MY SICK HEART COMMANDS MY EYES TO WATCH, TELL ME, LOVE'S MASTER, SHALL WE MEET TO-MORROW?
SAY, SHALL WE? SHALL WE? WILT THOU MAKE THE MATCH?'
HE TELLS HER NO; TO-MORROW HE INTENDS TO HUNT THE BORE WITH CERTAIN OF HIS FRIENDS.

'THE BORE!' QUOTH SHE; WHEREAT A SUDDEN PALM, LIKE LAWN BEING SPREAD UPON THE BLUSHING ROSE,
USURPS HER CHEEK; SHE TREMBLES AT HIS TALE,
AND ON HIS NECK SHE YOKING ARMS SHE THROWS;
SHE SINKETH DOWN, STILL HANGING BY HIS NECK,
HE ON HER BONY FALLS, SHE ON HER BACK.

NOW IS SHE IN THE VERY Lists OF LOVE,
HER CHAMPION MOUNTED FOR THE HOT ENCOUNTER;
ALL IS IMAGINARY SHE DOOTH PROVE,
HE WILL NOT MANAGE HER, ALTHOUGH HE MOUNT HER;
THAT WORSE THAN CANTALUS IS HER ANNOY,
TO CLIP ELYSIAN AND TO LACK HER JOY.

EVEN AS POOR BIRDS, DECEIVED WITH PAINTED GRAPES,
DO SURFET BY THE EYE AND PINE THE NOW,
EVEN SO SHE LANGUISHETH IN HER MISNAPS,
AS THOSE MOURNFUL BIRDS THAT SIT AND MOURN SHE SAW.
THE WARM EFFECTS WHICH SHE IN HIM FINDS MISSING
SHE SEeks TO KINDLE WITH CONTINUAL KISSING.

VENUS AND ADONIS.
I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.
‘But if thou needs wilt hunt, be ruled by me;
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox which lives by subtlety,
Or at the roe which no encounter dare:
Pursue these fearful creatures o'er the downs,
And on thy well-breathed horse keep with thy hounds.

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshot his troubles
How he outruns the wind and with what care
He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles;
The many muset, through which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

Sometime he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell,
And sometime where earth-delving coyes keep,
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell,
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer:
Danger deviseth shifts; wit waits on fear.

For there his smell with others being mingled,
The hot-scent-smelling hounds are driven to doubt,
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singled
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out;
Then do they spend their mouths: Echo replies,
As if another chase were in the skies.

By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still:
Anon their loud alarms he doth hear;
And now his grief may be compared well
To one sore sick that hears the passing-bell.

Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch
Turn, and return, indenting with the way;
Each envious brier his weary legs doth scratch,
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmurr stay:
For misery is trodden on by many,
And being low never relieved by any.

Lie quietly, and hear a little more;
Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise:
To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
Unlike myself thou hast not moral;eze,
Applying this to that, and so to so:
For love can comment upon every woe.

'Where did I leave? ’ ‘No matter where;’ quoth he,
'Leave me, and then the story aptly ends:
The night is spent.' ‘Why, what of that?’ quoth she.

I am,' quoth he, 'expected of my friends;
And now 't is dark, and going I shall fall.'

In night,' quoth she, 'desire sees best of all.

But if thou fall, O, then imagine this,
The earth, in love with thee, thy footing trips,
And all is but to rob thee of a kiss.
Rich preys make true men thieves; so do thy lips
Make modest Dian cloudly and forlorn,
Lest she should steal a kiss and die forsworn.

Now of this dark night I perceive the reason:
Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
Till forgery Nature be condemn'd of treason,
For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine;
Wherein she framed thee in high heaven's despite,
To shame the sun by day and her by night.

And therefore hast she bribed the Destinies
To cross the curious workmanship of nature,
VENUS AND ADONIS

To mingle beauty with infirmities,
And pure perfection with impure defecture,
Making it subject to the tyranny
Of mad mishances and much misery;

As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
Life-poisoning pestilence and frenzies wood,
The marrow-eating sickness, whose attaint
Disorder breeds by heating of the blood:
Surfeits, imposthumes, grief, and them'd despair,
Swear Nature's death for framing thee so fair.

And not the least of all these maladies
But in one minute's light brings beauty under:
Both favour, savour, hue and qualities,
Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd and done,
As mountain-snow melts with the midday sun.

Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Love-lacking vestals and self-loving nuns,
That on the earth would breed a scarcity
And barren death of daughters and of sons,
Be prodigal: the lamp that burns by night
Dries up his oil to lend the world his light.

What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity?
If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.

So in thyself thyself art made away;
A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
Or butcher-sire that reaves his son of life.
Foul cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
But gold that's put to more gold begots.

Nay, then, quoth Adon, you will fall again
Into your idle over-handled theme:
The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream:
For, by this black-faced night, desire's foul nurse,
Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse.

If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your own,
Bewitching like the wanent mermaid's songs,
Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown;
For now, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
And will not let a false sound enter there;

Lost the deceiving harmony should run
Into the quiet closure of my breast;
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In his bedchamber to be bared of rest.
No, lady, no; my heart longs not to groan,
But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

What have you urged that I cannot reprove?
The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger:
That lends embraces unto every stranger.
You do it for increase: O strange excuse,
When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse!

Call it not love, for Love to heaven is fled,
Since sweating Lust on earth usurp'd his name;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame;
Which the hot tyrant stains and soon bereaves,
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But Lust's effect is tempest after sun;

Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done;
Love surfeits not, Lust like a glutton dies;
Love is all truth, Lust full of forged lies.

'More I could tell, but more I dare not say;
The text is old, the orator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, now I will away;
My face is full of shame, my heart of teen;
Mine ears, that to your wanton talk attended,
Do burn themselves for having so offended.'

With this, he breaketh from the sweet embrace,
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast,
And homeward through the dark laund runs space.
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distressed.
Look, how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides he in the night from Venus' eye;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
Till the wild waves will have him seen no more.
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood,
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereas it groans,
That all the neighbour caves, as seeming troubled
Make verbal repetition of her moans;
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled:
'Ay me!' she cries, and twenty times 'Woe, woe!
And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She marking them begins a wailing note
And sings extemporally a woeful ditty:
How love makes young men thrill and old men
How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty: [dote
Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
And still the choir of echoes answer so.

Her song was tedious and outwore the night.
For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short:
If pleased themselves, others, they think, delight
In such-like circumstance, with such-like sport;
Their copious stories oftentimes began
End without audience and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal
But idle sounds resembling parasites,
Like shrill-tongued tapsters answering every call,
Soothing the humour of fantastic wits?
She says 'T is so;' they answer all "T is so;"
And would say after her, if she said "No."

Lo, here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast
The sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold
That cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:
'Oh, clear and good, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star dost borrow
The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other.'

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'erworn,
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds and for his horn:
Aun she hears them chant it lustily,
And all in haste she coasteth to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some twine about her thigh to make her stay:
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling dogs do ache,
Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.

by this, she hears the hounds up at a bay:
Where she starts, like one that spies an adder
Wreathed up in fatal folds just in her way.
The fear whereby doth make him shake and shudder;
Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appals her senses and her spirit confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough boar, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:
Finding their enemy to be so curst,
They all strain courtesy who shall cope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart;
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part:
Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
They basely fly and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstacy:
Till, cheering up her senses all dismay'd,
She tells them 'tis a careless fantasy,
And childish error, that they are afraid;
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no more:—
And with that word she spied the hunted bear,
Whose frothy mouth, bベpanied all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whether:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back retires to rate the boar for mutter.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she untreads again;
Her mora than haste is mated with delays,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain,
Full of respects, yet nought at all respecting;
In hand with all things, nought at all effecting.

Here kennel'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the weary catiff for his master,
And there another licking of his wound,
'Gainst venom 'o'ers the only sovereign plaster;
And here she meets another sadly scowling,
To whom she speaks, and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceased his ill-resounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin volleys out his voice;
Another and another answer him,
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amazed
At apparitions, signs and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gazed,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath
And sighing it again, exclaims on Death.

'Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love,'—thus chides she Death,—

'Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean,
To stifle beauty and to steal his breath,
Who when he lived, his breath and beauty set
Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

'If he be dead,—O no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it:—
O yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit.
Thy mark is feeble age, but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim and cleaves an infant's heart.

'Hast thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And, hearing him, thy power had lost his power.
The Destinies will curse thee for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not Death's ebon dart, to strike him dead.

'Dost thou drink tears, that thou provokest such weeping?
What may a heavy groan advantage thee?
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour?

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She vail'd her eyelids, who, like sluices, stop
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropt;
But through the flood-gates breaks the silver rain,
And with his strong course opens them again.

O, how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in the tears, tears in her eye;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sorrow,
Sorrow that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
Signs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions throng her constant woe,
As striving who should best become her grief;
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth chief,
But none is best: then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this, far off she hears some huntsman hollo;
A nurse's song the ear pleased her babe so well:
The dire imagination she did follow
This sound of hope doth labour to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorning it should pass,
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken when she seemeth drown'd.

O hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and woe are both of them extremes;
Despair and hope makes thee ridiculous:
The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
In likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unwraps the web that she hath wrought;
Adonis lives, and Death is not to blame;
It was not she that call'd him all-to naught;
Now she adds honours to his hateful name;
She clipes him king of graves and grave for kings,
Imperious supreme of all mortal things.

Venus and Adonis.
VENUS AND ADONIS.

No, no; quoth she, 'sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me I felt a kind of fear
When as I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
Then, gentle shadow,—truth I must confess,—
I rail'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

'Tis not my fault: the boar provoked my tongue;
He wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong;
I did but act, he's author of thy slander:
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
Could rule them both without ten women's wit.

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenduate;
And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With Death she humbly doth insinuate;
Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs, and stories
His victories, his triumphs and his glories.

'O Jove,' quoth she, 'how much a fool was I
To be of such a weak and silly mind
To wall his death who lives and must not die
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

'Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves;
Trikes, unwatched with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bethinking grievances.'
Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure, away she flies;
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The boar's boar's conquest on her fair delight;
Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
Like stars ashamed of day, themselves withdrew;

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
And there, all another'd up, in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
Into the deep dark cabins of her head:

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain;
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never wound the heart with looks again;
Where, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes;
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound.
This mutiny each part doth so surprise
That from their dark beds once more leap her eyes;

And, being open'd, throw unwilling light
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd:
No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
But stole his blood and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noted;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumbly she passions, frantickly she doteth;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead:
Her voice is stopt, her joints forget to bow;
Her eyes are mad that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly,
That her sight dazling makes the wound seem three;
And then she reprehends her mangling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be:
His face seems twin'd, each several limb is doubled;
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

'My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet, quoth she, 'behold two Adonis dead!
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead;
Heavy heart's lead, melt at mine eyes' red fire!
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

'Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost!
What face remains alive that's worth the viewing?
Whose tongue is music now? what canst thou boast
Of things long since, or any thing ensuing?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim;
But true-sweet beauty lived and died with him.

'Donnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear!
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you
Having you not to lose his most dear fear;
The sun doth scorn you and the wind doth kiss you:
But when Adonis lived, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair:

And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep;
The wind would blow it off and, being gone,
Play with his locks: then would Adonis weep;
And straight, in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

'To see his face the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him;
To recreate himself when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him;
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his prey
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

'When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took,
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries and ripe-red cherries;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

'But this foul, grim, and urchín-snouted boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore;
Witness the entertainment that he gave:
If he did see his face, why then I know
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

'Tis true, 'tis true; thus was Adonis slain:
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheathed unaware the tusk in his soft groin.

'Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess,
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first;
But he is dead, and never did he kiss my youth with his; the more am I accurst.'
With this, she fellath in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woeful words she told;
She lifts the coffer-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo, two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies;
Venus and Adonis

Two glasses, where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excel'd,
And every beauty robb'd of his effect:
'Wonder of time,' quoth she, 'this is my spite,
That, thou being dead, the day should yet be light.'

'Since thou art dead, lo, here I prophesy:
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend:
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end,
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low,
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

'It shall be fickle, false and full of fraud,
Bud and be blasted in a breathing-while;
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd
With sweets that shall the truest sight beguile:
The strongest body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb and teach the fool to speak.

'It shall be sparing and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures;
The staring rufian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures;
It shall be raging-mad and silly-mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

'It shall suspect where is no cause of fear;
It shall not fear where it should most mistrust;
It shall be merciful and too severe,
And most deceiving when it seems most just;
Perverse it shall be where it shows most toward,
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

'It shall be cause of war and dire events,
And set dissension 'twixt the son and sire;
Subject and servile to all discontentns,
As dry combustious matter is to fire:

Sith in his prime Death doth my love destroy,
They that love best their loves shall not enjoy.'

By this, the boy that by her side lay kill'd
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequ'r'd with white,
Resembling well his pale cheeks and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.

She bows her head, the new-sprung flower to smell,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath,
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is reft from her by death:
She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears
Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.

'Poor flower,' quoth she, 'this was thy father's guise—
Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire—
For every little grief to wet his eyes:
To grow unto himself was his desire,
And so 'tis thine; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast as in his blood.

'Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
Thou art the next of blood, and 'tis thy right:
Lo, in this hollow cradle take thy rest,
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night:
There shall not be one minute in an hour
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower.

Thus weary of the world, away she bies,
And yokes her silver doves; by whose swift aid
Their mistress mounted through the empty skies
In her light chariot is quickly convey'd;
Holding their course to Paphos, where their queen
Means to immure herself and not be seen.
THE RAPE OF LuCRECE.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY Wriothesly,
EARL OF SOUTHEAMPTON, AND BARON OF TICHFIELD.

The love I dedicate to your lordship is without end; whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moiety. The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours; what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater; meantime, as it is, it is bound to your lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with all happiness.

Your lordship's in all duty,

William Shakespeare

THE ARGUMENT.

LuCiuS TaRquinIUS, for his excessive pride surnamed Superbus, after he had caused his own father-in-law Servius Tullius to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom, went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper every one commended the virtues of his own wife; among whom Collatius extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucrecia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome: and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatius finds his wife, though it were late in the night, spanning amongst her maids: the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several disports. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatius the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time Sextus Tarquinius being inflamed with Lucrece's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privately withdrew himself, and was, according to his estate, royally entertained and lodged by Lucrece at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stealthed into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucrece, in this lamentable plight, hastily dispatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and finding Lucrece attired in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the doer and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king: wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

FROM the besieged Ardea all in post, Borne by the trustless wings of false desire, Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host, And to Collatium bears the lightless fire Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire And girdle with embracing flames the waist Of Collatine's fair love, Lucrece the Chase.

Haply that name of chase unhappily set This bateless edge on his keen appetite; When Collatine unwisely did not let To praise the clear unmatched red and white Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight. Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties, With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent, Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state, What priceless wond' the heavens had him lent In the possession of his beauteous mate; Reckoning his fortune at such high-pround rate, That kings might be espoused to more fame, But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O happiness enjoy'd but of a few! And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done As is the morning's silver-melting dew Against the golden splendour of the sun! An expired date, cancel'd ere well begun: Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms. Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade The eyes of men without an orator: What needeth then apologies be made, To set forth that which is so singular? Or why is Collatine the publisher Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown From thievish ears, because it is his own? Perchance his boast of Lucrece's sovereignty Suggested this proud issue of a king: For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be: Perchance that envy of so rich a thing, Braving compare, disdainfully did sting His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should vaunt. That golden hap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate His all-too-timeless speed, if none of those: His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state, Neglected all, with swift intent he goes To quench the coal which in his liver glows. O rash false heat, wrath'd in repentant cold. Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows old! When at Collatium this false lord arrived, Well was he welcomed by the Roman dame, Within whose face beauty and virtue strove Which of them both should underprive her fame? When virtue brag'd, beauty would blush for shame; When beauty boasted blushes, in despite Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white.
But beauty, in that white intituled
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field:
Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;
Teaching them thus to use it in the night, [white.
When shame assail'd, the red should fence the
This heraldry in Lucrece' face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red and virtue's white:
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right;
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight;
The sovereignty of either being so great,
That oft they interchange each other's seat.

Their silent war of lilies and of roses,
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, lest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquished doth yield
To those two forces of true, that would let him go,
Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow tongue,—
The niggard prodigal that praised her so,—
In that high task laith done her beauty wrong,
Which fair exceeds his barren skill to show:
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint, adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on evil;
Birds never limed no secret bushes fear:
So guiltless she securely gives good cheer
And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd;

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base sin in plaits of majesty;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy;
But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store,
That, cloy'd with much, he pineth still for more.

But she, that never coped with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their pilary looks,
Nor read the subtitle-shining secrecy;
Writ in the glassy margins of such books:
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no hooks;
Nor could she moralize his wanton sight,
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And deeds with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry;
With bruised arms and wounds of victory:
Her joy with heaved-up hand she doth express,
And, wordless, so greets heaven for his success.

Far from the purpose of his coming hither,
He makes excuses for his being there:
No cloudly show of stormy blustering weather,
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear:
Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her vaunt prison stows the Day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending weariness with heavy spright;
For, after supper, long he questioned
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night;
Now leaden slumber with life's strength doth fight;

And every one to rest themselves betake,
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds,
that wake.

As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstaining:
Despair to gain doth traffic off for gaining;
And when great treasure is the need proposed,
Though death be adjunct, there's no death suppos'd.

Those that much covet are with gain so fond,
For what they have not, that which they possess
They scatter and unloose it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age;
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we gage;
As life for honour in fell battle's rage;
Honour for wealth; and oft that wealth doth cost
The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in venturing ill we leave to be
The things we are for that which we expect;
And this ambitious foul infirmity,
In having much, torments us with defect
Of that we have; so then do neglect
The thing we have; and, all for want of wit,
Make something nothing by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must dotting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his lust;
And for himself himself he must forsake;
Then where is truth, if there be no self-trust?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
Tosanderous tongues and wretched hateful days?

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had closed up mortal eyes;
No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries;
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs: pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wake to stir and kill.

And now this lustful lord leapt from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm;
Is madly toss'd between desire and dread;
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other feareth harm;
But honest fear, bewitch'd with lust's soul charm,
Doth too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude desire.

His falcon on a flint he softly smiteth,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly;
Whereat a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
Which must be lord-star to his lustful eye:
And to the flame thus speaks advisable;
As from this cold flint I enforced this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire.'

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise:
Then looking scornfully, he doth despise
His naked armour of still-slaughter'd lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust:

833
LUCRECE.

Fair torch, burn out thy light; and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine:
And die, unshallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine;
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine:
Let fair humanity avert the deed.

O shame to knighthood and to shining arms!
O foul dishonour to my household's grave!
O impious act, including all foul harms!
A marshal man to be soft fancy's slave!
True lovers, in a true respect, must have;
Then my digestion is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat;
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,
To cipher me how fondly I did dote:
That my posterity, shamed with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not bin.

What win I, if I gain the thing I seek?
A dream, a breath, a frotth of fleeting joy.
Who buys a minute's mirth to wail a week?
Or sells eternity to get a toy?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy?
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be struck down?

If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent?
This siege that hath engirt his marriage.
This bane to youth, this sorrows to the sage.
This dying virtue, this surviving shame
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame?

O, what excuse can my invention make
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints shake,
Mine eyes forget their light, my false heart bleed?
The guilt being great, the fear doth still exceed;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But coward-like with trembling terror die.

Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife,
As in revenge or quittance of such strife;
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

Shameful it is; ay, if the fact be known:
Hateful it is; there is no hate in loving:
I'll beg her love; but she is not her own:
The worst is but denial and reproving:
My will is strong, just reason's weak removing;
Who fears a sentence or an old man's saw
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe?

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation
'Tween frozen conscience and hot-burning will,
And with good thoughts makes dispensation,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still.
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, 'She took me kindly by the hand,
And gazed for tidings in my eager eyes.
Fearing some hard news from the warlike hand,
Where her beloved Collatinus lies.
O, how her fear did make her colour rise!

First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd,
Forced it to tremble with her loyal fear!
Which struck her soul, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer.
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

Why hunt I then for colour or excesses?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth:
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows dreadeth;
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth;
And when his gaudy banner is displayed,
The coward lights and will not be dismay'd.

Then, childlike fear, avaunt! debating, die!
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age!
My heart shall never countermand mine eye:
Sad pause and deep regard beseech the sage;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage:
I fear the pilot is. beauty's dispossess'd:
Then who fears sinking where such treasure lies?'

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost choked by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open listening ear,
Full of foul hope and full of foul mistrust;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seats Collatinus;
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worser part;
And therein heartens up his servile powers.

Who, flatter'd by their leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more shalish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led:
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucretce's bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforced, retires his ward:
But, as they open, they all rate his fill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard:
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-wandering weasels shirk to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face;
Extinguishing his conduct in this case;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorch,
Puffs forth another wind that stirs the torch;

And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks:
He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
And gripping it, the needle his finger pricks;
As who should say 'This glove to wantron tricks
Is not injur'd; return again in haste;
Theon seest our mistress' ornaments are chase.'

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove, that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hour dial,
Who with a lingering stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

‘So, so,’ quoth he, ‘these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the snooped birds more cause to sing.
Pain pays the income of each precious thing;
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves and sands,
The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands.’

Now is he come unto the chamber-door,
That slits him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath barr’d him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself impiety hath wrought,
That for his prey he doth begin,
As if the heavens should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited th’ eternal power
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts; quoth he, ‘I must delfow!
The powers to whom I pray abhor this fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?’

‘Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back’d with resolution!
Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried;
The blackest sin is clear’d with absolution;
Against love’s fire fear’s frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.’

This said, his guilty hand pluck’d up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide;
The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch:
Thus treason works ere traitors be espied.
Who sees the lurking serpent steps aside;
But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,
And gazeth on her yet unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rolling his greedy eyeballs in his head:
By their high treasos is his heart misled;
Which gives the watch-word to his hand full soon
To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Look, as the fair and fiery-pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, his eyes begin
To wink, being blinded with a greater light:
Whether it is that she reflects so bright,
That dazzleth them, or else some shape supposed;
But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died!
Then had they seen the period of their ill;
Then Collatine again, by Lucrece’s side.
In his dear bed might have repos’d still:
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world’s delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek; lies under,
Coozing the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss:
Between whose hills her head entombed is:

Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admired of lewd unhallow’d eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet: whose perfect white
Show’d like an April daisy on the grass.
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like margiolds, had sheathed their light,
And canopied in darkness sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play’d with her breath;
O modest wantons! wanton modesty!
Showing life’s triumph in the map of death.
And death’s dim look in life’s mortality;
Each in her sleep themselves so beautify,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life lived in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of maiden worlds unconquered,
Save of their lord no bearing yoke they knew,
And him by oath they truly honoured.
These worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred;
Who, like a foul usurper, went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see but mightily he noted?
What did he note but strongly he desired?
What he beheld, on that he firmly dotted,
And in his will his wilful eye he tired.
With more than admiration he admired
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion fawneth o’er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o’er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust by gazine qualified;
Slack’d, not suppress’d; for standing by her side,
His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins:

And they, like straggling slaves for pillage fighting,
Oblurate vassals fell exploits effecting,
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children’s tears nor mothers’ groans respecting,
So fill in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarum striking,
Gives the hot charge and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,
Swearing with pride, march’d on to make his stand.
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Left their round turrets destitute and pale.

They, mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governess and lady lies,
Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries:
She, much amazed, breaks ope her lock’d-up eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm’d and controll’d.

Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy wakening,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghastly sprite,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a-shaking;
What terror ’t is! but she, in worser taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapped and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill’d bird she trembling lies;

885
She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shifting antics, ugly in her eyes:
Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries;
Who, angry, that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunt them with more dreadful sights,

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,—
Rude ram, to batter such an ivory wall—
May feel her heart—poor citizen!—distress'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
This moves in him more rage and lesser pity,
To make the breach and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe;
Who o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehement prayers urges still
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: 'The colour in thy face,
That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace,
Shall plead for me and tell my loving tale:
Under that colour am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer'd fort: the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

'Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide:
Thy beauty hath ensnared thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide;
My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might;
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

'I see what crosses my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose defends;
I think the honey guarded with a sting;
All this beforehand counsel comprehends:
But will is deaf and hears no heedful friends;
Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

'I have debated, even in my soul,
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall breed;
But nothing can affection's course control,
Or stop the hautain'd fury of his speed.
I know it constant misery enlists
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.'

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wing's shade,
Whose crooked beak threats if he mount he dies:
So under his insulting falcon lies
Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells
With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

'Lucretia,' quoth he, 'this night I must enjoy thee:
If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee:
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,
To kill thine honour with thy life's decay;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

'So thy surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye;
Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
Thy issue buried with nameless bastardy:
And thou, the author of their obloquy,
Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

'But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend;
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;
A little harm done to a great good end
For lawful policy remains enacted.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
In a pure compound; being so applied,
His venom in effect is purified.

'Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,
Tender my suit: bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot;
Worse than a slavish wife or birth's blot:
For more is descried in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.'

Here with a cockatrice dead-killing eye
He roseth up himself and makes a pause;
While she, the picture of pure pity,
Like a white hind under the grie's sharp claws,
Plays, in a wilderness where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite.

But when a black-faced cloud the world doth threat,
In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their bidding,
Hindering their present fall by this dividing;
So his unhallow'd haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking eat, he doth but daily,
While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse panteth:
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
A swelling gulf that even in plenty wanteth;
His ear her prayers admits, but his heart granteth
A penetrable entrance to her pleading:
[bug.]
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with rain-

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face;
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place:
And midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,
By knighthood, gentility, and kind friendship's oath,
By her tears and tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common trouth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,
That to his bond he 'll make him retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, 'Reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;
End thy ill aim before thy shot be ended;
He is no woodman that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

'My husband is thy friend: for his sake spare me,
Thyself art mighty; for thine own sake leave me:
Myself a weakness; do not then ensnare me:
Thou look's't not like deceit; do not deceive me.
My sighs, like whirlwinds labour hence to heave thee:
If ever man were moved with woman's means,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:

'All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threatening heart,
To soften it with their continual motion;
For stones dissolved to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears, and be compassionate! Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

'In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee;
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me, [name.] Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely,
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same,
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king;
For kings like gods should govern every thing.

'How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thus thy vices but before thy spring!
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What darest thou not when once thou art a king?
O, be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wiped away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

'This deed will make thee only loved for fear;
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With foul offenders thou perforce must bear,
When in thee the like offences prove:
But fear of this, they will not remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

'And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name?
Thee back'st reproach against long-living laud,
And makest fair reputation but a bawd.

'Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfill?
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way?

'Think but how vile a spectacle it were,
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smother:
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.
O, how are they wrapp'd in with infamies
That from their own misdeeds askance their eyes!

'To thee, to thee, my heaved-up hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash reliance;
I sue for exiled majesty's repeal;
Let him return, and flatterings thoughts retire:
His true respect will prison false desire,
And wipe the dim mist from thy doting eye,
That thou shalt see thy state and pity mine.

'Have done,' quoth he; 'my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret:
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls!
Add to his flow, but alter not his taste.' [haste

'Thou art,' quoth she, 'a sea, a sovereign king;
And, lo, there falls into thy bounteous flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puzzler's womb is hearsed,
And not the puzzle in thy sea dispersed.

'So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignified;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave:
Thou loathed in their shame, they in thy pride:
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot;
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

'So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state—
'No more,' quoth he; 'by heaven, I will not hear
Yield to my love; if not, enforced hate,
[thee:]
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear thee
That done, despitefully I mean to bear thee
Unto the base bed of some rascom groom,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.

'This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies:
Shame folded up in blind concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
The wolf hath seized his prey, the poor lamb cries;
Till with her own white fleece her voice contr'd
Entombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:

For with the nightly linen that she wears
He pens her piteous clamours in her head;
Cooling his hot face in the chasteest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed!
The spots whereof could weeping purify,
Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again;
This forced league doth force a further strife;
This momentary joy breeds months of pain;
This hot desire converts to cold disdain:
Pure Chastity is ril'd of her store,
And Lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk
The prey wherein by nature they delight;
So surfeit-taking Tarquin fares this night:
His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
Devours his will, that lived by foul devou'ring.

O, deeper sin than bottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination!
Drunken Desire must vomit his receipt;
Ere he can see his own some abomination.

While Lust is in his pride, no exclamation
Can curb his heat or rein his rash desire,
Till like a jade Self-will himself doth tire.

And then with lank and lean discolor'd check,
With heavy eye, knell brow, and strengthless pace,
Feeble Desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
Like to a bankrupt beggar wails his case:

The flesh being proud, Desire doth fight with Grace,
For there it revels; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So faires it with this faultful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chased;
For now against himself he sounds this doom,
That through the length of times he stands dis-
Besides, his soul's fair temple is defaced; [graceful:

To whose weak ruins mustier troops of cares,
To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have batter'd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
Her immortality, and made her thrall
To living death and pain perpetual:

Which in her presence she controlled still,
But her foresight could not forestall their will.

887
Even in this thought through the dark night he
A captive victor that hath lost in gain; [stealeth,
Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain;
Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the burden of a guilty mind.

He like a thievish dog creeps sadly thence;
She like a weared lamb lies panting there;
He scowls and hates himself for his offence;
She, desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear;
She stays, exclaiming on the d mythical night;
He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loathed delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertite;
She there remains a hopeless castaway;
He in his speed looks for the morning light;
She prays she never may behold the day.
'For day,' quoth she, 'night's sakes doth open lay,
And my true eyes have never practised how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

'They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold;
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water that doth eat in steel,
Upon my checks what helpless shame I feel.'

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some purer chest to close so pure a mind.
Franitie with grief thus breathes she for her spite
Against the unseen secrecy of night:

'O comfort-killing Night, image of hell!
Dim register and notary of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell!
Vast sin-concealing cause: nurse of blame!
Blind muffled bawl! dark harbour for defame!
Grim cave of death! whispering conspirator
With close-tongued treason and the ravisher!

'O hateful, vaporous, and foggy Night!
Since thou art guilty of my careless crime,
Muster thy mists to meet the eastern light,
Make war against my honour'd course of time;
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wond't height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

'With rotten dumps ravish the morning air;
Let their exhaled unwholesome breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
 Ere he arrive his weary noon-tide prick;
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
 That in their smoky ranks his softer'd light
May set at noon and make perpetual night.

'Were Tarquin Night, as he is but Night's child,
The silver-shining queen he would distain;
Her twinkling handmaidens too, by him defied,
Through Night's black bosom should not peep again:
So should I have co-partners in my pain;
And fellowship in woe both woe asign
As palmers' chat makes short their pilgrimage.

'Where now have I no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms and hang their heads with mine,
To mask their brows and hide their infamy;
But I alone alone must sit and pine.
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine,

Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans,
Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.
'O Night, thou furnace of foul-recking smoke,
Let not the jealous Day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace!
Keep still that possession of thy fancy's place,
That all the faults which in thy reign are made
May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade!

'Make me not object to the tell-tale Day!
The light will show, character'd in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay.
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow:
Yet, the illiterate, that know not bow
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loathsome trespass in my looks.

'The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name:
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame;
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defame,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.

'Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserved reproach to him allotted
That is as clear from this attaint of mine
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

'O unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatine's face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the met'f afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
Alas, how many bear such shamefull blows,
Which not themselves, but he that gives them knows!

'If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But rob'd and ramseck'd by injurious theft:
In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

'Yet am I guilty of thy honour's wrack;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him:
Besides, of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue: O unlock'd for evil,
When virtue is profaned in such a devil!

'Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud?
Or hateful cuckoo hatch in sparrow's nests?
Or toads infect fair founts with venom mud?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

'The aged man that coughs up his gold
Is plagued with cramps and gouts and painful fits;
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless barns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.
So then he hath it when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his youth;

Who in their pride do presently abuse it:
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cured-blessed fortune long.

The sweets we wish for turn to loathed soures
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers;
Theadder hisses where the sweet birds sing;
What virtue breeds iniquity devours:
We have no good that we can say is ours*.

But ill-annexed Opportunity
Or kills his life or else his quality.

O Opportunity, thy guilt is great!
'Tis thou that executest the traitor's treason:
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou point'st the season;
'Tis thou that spurn'st at right, at law, at reason;
And in thy shaly cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by him.

Thou makest the vestal violate her oath;
Thou blow'st the fire when temperance is thaw'd;
Thou smoother'st honesty, thou murd'rer'st truth;
Thou foul abetter! thou notorious bawd!
Thou plantest scandal and displaceth laud:
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief!

Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private feasting to a public fast,
Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name,
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter wormwood taste:
Thy violent vanities can never last,
How comes it then, vile Opportunity,
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?

When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd?
When wilt thou sort an hour great strifes to end?
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chain'd?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pain'd?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee;
But they never meet with Opportunity.

The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds;
Justice is feasting while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds;
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds;
Wrath, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages,
Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages.

When Truth and Virtue have to do with thee,
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid:
They buy thy help; but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
He gratis comes; and thou art well appalled
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.
My Colleague would else have come to me
When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

Guilty thou art of murder and of theft,
Guilty of perjury and subornation,
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift,
Guilty of incest, subornation of sin,
An accessory by thine inclination
To all sins past, and all that are to come,
From the creation to the general doom.

Mis-shapen Time, cosепmate of ugly Night,
Swift subvert; carrier of guilty care,
Enter of youth, false slave to false delight,
Base watch of voe's, sin's pack-horse, virtue's snare;
Thou nursest all and murderst all that are:

O, hear me then, injurious, shifting Time!
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gavest me to repose,
Cancell'd my fortunes, and enchained me
To endless date of never-ending woes?
Time's office is to fine the hate of foes;
To eat up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To make the morn and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wrangler till he render right,
To ruinate proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust their glittering golden towers;

To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
To feed oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books and after their contents,
To pluck the quilts from ancient ravens' wings,
To dry the old oak's sap and cherish springs,
To spoil antiquities of hammer'd steel,
And turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel;

To show the beldam daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To slay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion wild,
To mock the subtle in themselves beguiled,
To cheer the ploughman with increased crops,
And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
One poor retiring minute in an age
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
Lending him wit that to bad debtors lends:
O, this dread night, wouldst thou one hour come back,
I could prevent this storm and shun thy wrath!

Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
With some miscarriage cross Tarquin in his flight:
Devises extremes beyond extremity,
To make him curse this cursed midnight:
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright,
And the dire thought of his committed evil
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans;
Let there bechance him pitiful mischiefs,
To make him morn; but pity not his moans:
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones;
And let mild women to him lose their mildness,
Wilder to him than tigers in their wildness.

Let him have time to tear his curled hair,
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of Time's help to despair,
Let him have time to live a leathid slave,
Let him have time a beggar's ort to crave,
And time to see one that by arms doth live
Disdain to him disdained scrumps to give.

Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort;
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly and his time of sport;
And ever let his unrecalling crime
Have time to wail th' abusing of his time,
O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st this ill!
At his own shadow let the thievish run mad,
Himself himself seek every hour to kill!
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should
For who so base would such an office have
As slanderous death-man to so base a slave?

'The baser is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate:
The mighty-tar, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honour'd, or begets him hate;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded presently is miss'd,
But little stars may hide them when they list.

'The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And unpereceived fly with the filth away;
But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay.
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day:
Gnats are unnoticed wheresoe'er they fly,
But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye.

'Out, idle words, servants to shallow fools!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Bus'd yourselves in skill-contending schools;
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters;
To trembling clients be you mediators:
For me, I force not argument a straw,
Since that my case is past the help of law.

'In vain I rattle at Opportunity,
At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful Night;
In vain I cavil with mine infamy,
In vain I spurn at my confirm'd despite:
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
The remedy indeed to do me good
Is to let forth my foul-diffused blood.

'Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame;
For if I die, my honour lives in thee;
But if I live, thou livest in my disme:
Since thou couldst not defend thy loyal dame,
And wast afraid to scratch her wicked foe,
Kill both thyself and her for yielding so.'

This said, from her be-tumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death:
But thou, the neighbouring hostess in her art
To make more vent for passage of her breath;
Which, thronging through her lips, so vanisheth
As smoke from Ætna, that in air consumes,
Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

'In vain,' quoth she, 'I live, and seek in vain
Some happy mean to end a hapless life.
I fear'd by Tarquin's falchion to be slain,
Yet for the self-same purpose seek a knife:
But when I fear'd I was a loyal wife:
So am I now: O no, that cannot be;
Of that true type hath Tarquin ril'd me.

'O, that is gone for which I sought to live,
And therefore now I need not fear to die.
To clear this spot by death, at least I give
A badge of fame to slander's livery;
A dying avarice
Poor helpless help, the treasure stol'n away,
To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!

'Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not know
The stained taste of violated troth;
I will not wrong thy true affection so,
To flatter thee with an infringed oath;
This bastard graft shall never come to growth:

He shall not boast who did thy stock pollute
That thou art doting father of his fruit.

'Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state;
But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought
Basely with gold, but stol'n from forth thy gate.
For me, I roll the miseries of my fate,
And with my trespass never will dispense,
Till life to death acquit my forced offence.

'I will not poison thee with my attaint,
Nor fold my fault in cleanly-co'd excuses;
My sable ground of sin I will not paint, no words
To hide the truth of this false night's abuses:
My tongue shall utter all; mine eyes, like sluices,
As from a mountain-spring that feeds a dale,
Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale.'

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
The well-tuned warble of her nightly sorrow,
And solemn night with slow sad gait descended
To ugly hell; when, lo, the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow:
But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.

Revealing day through every cranry spies,
And seems to point her out where she sits weeping;
To whom she sobbing speaks: 'O eye of eyes,
Why pry'st thou through my window? leave thy peeping;
Mock with thy tickling beams eyes that are sleeping:
Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
For day hath nought to do what's done by night,

Thus carv's she with every thing she sees:
True grief is fond and testy as a child,
Who wayward once, his mood with nought agrees;
Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild;
Continuance tames the one; the other wild,
Like an unpractis'd swimmer plunging still,
With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care,
Holds disputition with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare;
No object but her passion's strength renews;
And as one shifts, another straight ensues:
Sometimes his griefs so clog his head and heart
To make him blind, and sometimes so light,
It's mad and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy
Make her woes mad with their sweet melody:
For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy
Sad souls are slain in merry company;
Grief best is pleased with grief's society:
True sorrow then is feelingly sufficed
When with like semblance it is sympathized.

'Tis double death to drown in ken of shore;
He ten times pines those pines beholding food;
To see the salve doth make the wound ache more;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good;
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks overflows;
Grief dailly with nor law nor limit knows.

'You mocking birds,' quoth she, 'your tunes entomb
Within your hollow-swelling feather'd breasts,
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb:
My restless discord loves no stops nor rests;
A woefull hostess brooks not merry guests;
Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears;
Distress likes dumbs when time is kept with tears.'
LUCRECE.

Come, Philomed, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my dishell'd hair:
As the black earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep groans the diapason bear:
For burden-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st better skill.

And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched L,
To imitate thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife to affright mine eye;
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
These means, as frets upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languishment.

And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shaming any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
That knows not parching heat nor freezing cold,
Will we find out; and there we will unfold
To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kinds:
Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle minds?

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly,
Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily;
So with herself is she in mutiny,
To live or die which of the twain were better,
When life is shamed, and death reproach's debtor.

To kill myself, quoth she, alack, what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution?
Thy that lose half with greater patience bear it
Than they whose whole is swallowed in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion
Who, having two sweet babes, when death takes one,
Will slay the other and be nurse to none.

My body or my soul, which was the dearer,
When the one pure, the other made divine?
Whose love of either to myself was nearer,
When both were kept for heaven and Collatine?
Alas! the bark peel'd from the loftie pine,
His leaves will wither and his sap decay;
So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy;
Yet were the bark peel'd from the loftie pine,
Grossly engirt with daring infamy:
Then let it not be call'd impiety,
If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole
Through which I may convey this troubled soul.

Yet die I will not till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death;
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him taint'd shall for him be spent,
And as his due writ in my testament.

My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonoured.
'T is honour to deprive dishonour'd life;
The one will live, the other being dead:
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred;
For in my death I murder shameful scorn:
My shame so dead, mine honour is new-born.

Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee?

My resolution, love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou reveng'd must be.
How Tarquin must be used, read it in me:
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
And for my sake serve thou false Tarquin so.

This brief abridgment of my will I make:
My soul and body to the skies and ground;
My resolution, husband, do thou take;
Mine honour be the knife's that makes my wound;
My shame be his that did my fame confound;
And all my fame that lives disbursted be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.

Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will:
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it?
My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill;
My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall free it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stonyly say "So be it:
Yield to my hand; my hand shall conquer thee:
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be."

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wiped the brinish pearl from her bright eyes,
With untuned tongue she hoarsely calls her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies:
For heet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers flies.
Poor Lucrece' cheeks unto her maid seem so
As winter mends when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give demure good-morrow,
With soft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty,
And sorts a sad look to her lady's sorrow,
For why her face wore sorrow's livery;
But durest not ask of her audaciously
Why her two sons were cloud-elapsed so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with woe.

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower moisten'd like a melting eye,
Even so the maid with swelling drops gan weep
Her circled eye, enforced by sympathy
Of those fair suns set in her mistress' sky,
Who in a salt-waved ocean quench their light.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling;
One justly weeps; the other takes in hand
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling.
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing;
Grieving themselves to guess at others' smarts,
And then they drown their eyes or break their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds,
And therefore are they form'd as marble will:
The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill:
Then call them not the authors of their ill,
No more than the wax shall be accounted evil.
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champagne plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep;
In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep;
Through crystal walls each little mote will peep;
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.

No man inveigh against the wither'd flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill'd:
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour,
Is worthy blame. O, let it not be held
Poor women's faults, that they are so fulfill'd.
LUCRECE.

With men's abuses: those proud lords, to blame,
Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.
The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong:
Such danger to resistance did belong,
That dying fear through all her body spread;
And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the like counterfeits of her complaining:
'My girl,' quoth she, 'on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raining?
If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood:
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

'That tells me, girl, when went —' and there she stay'd
Till after a deep groan — Tarquin from hence?
'Madam, ere I was up,' replied the maid,
The more to blame my sluggard negligence:
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense;
Beware the stirring ere the break of day,
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

'But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.'
'O, peace!' quoth Lucrece: 'if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less;
For more it is than I can well express:
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

'Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen:
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say? One of my husband's men
Bid thou be ready, by and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear:
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it;
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ.'

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill:
Conceit and grief an eager combat fight;
What wit sets down is blotted straight with will;
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill:
Much like a press of people at a door,
Throng her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins: 'Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeveth thee,
Health to thy person! next vouchsafe t' afford
If ever, thy Lucrece thou wilt see —
Some present speed to come and visit me.
So, I commend me from our house in grief:
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief.'

Here folds she up the tenour of her woe,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality:
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excurse.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her;
When sighs and groans and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her From that suspicion which the world might bear her.
To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told;
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion that it doth behold,
When every part a part of woeth bear.
'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear:
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords.
And, so row oars, being blown with wind of words.

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ
'At Artes to my lord with more than haste.'
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-faced groom to hie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast:
Speed more than speed but dull and slow she deems:
Extremity still urgeth such extremes.

The homely villain court'sies to her low;
And, blushing on her, with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll without or yea or no,
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie.
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie
Imagine every eye beholds their blame;
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame:

When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect To talk in deeds, while others saucily Promise more speed, but do it leisurely:
Even so this pattern of the worn-out age.
Pawn'd honest looks, but laid no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blazed;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wisely on him gazed;
Her earnest eye did make him more amazed:
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he spied in her some blemish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the dutious vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan:
So woe hath wearied woe, moan tired moan,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Pausing for means to unmum some newer way.
At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy:
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threatening cloud kissing Ilion with ann'or;
Which the conceited painter drew so proud, As heaven, it seem'd, to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of nature, art gave lifeless life:
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Shed for the slaughter'd husband by the wife:
The red blood reek'd, to show the painter's strife;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ashly lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begrimed with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust:
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;
In youth, quick bearing and dexterity;
And here and there the painter interfaces
Pale cowards, marching on with trembling paces;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble,
That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O, what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 't were encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguiled attention, charm'd the sight:
In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white,
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
Thin winding breath, which pur'd up to the sky.

About him were a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly listening, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears entice,
Some high, some low, the painter was so nice;
The scalps of many, almost hid behind,
To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear;
Here one being thor'g'd bears back, all boll'n and red;
Another smoker'd seems to pelt and swear;
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Griped in an armed hand; himself, behind,
Was left unseen, to save the eye of mind:
A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole to be imagined.

And from the walls of strong besieged Troy
When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy [field,
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such odd action yield,
That through their light joy seemed to appear,
Like bright things stain'd, a kind of heavy fear.

And from the strand of Dardan, where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks the red blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and than Retire again, till, meeting greater ranks,
They join and shoot their foam at Simoils' banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is stell'd.
Many she sees where cares have carv'd some
But none where all distress and doleur dwell'd,
Till she despairing Hecuba beheld.

Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies.

In her the painter had anatomized
Time's civil, beauty's wreck, and grim care's reign;
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguised;
Of what she was no semblance did remain:
Her blue blood changed to black in every vein,

Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had
Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece lends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the belldam's voes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cries,
And bitter words to ban her cruel foes:
The painter was no god to lend her those;
And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
To give her so much grief and not a tongue.

'Poor instrument,' quoth she, 'without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue;
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And rail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong;
And with my tears quench Troy that burns so long;
And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

'Show me the trumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear:
The eye kindled in the fire that draweth here:
And here in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter die.

'Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many moe?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so;
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe:
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

'Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here many Hector faints, here Troilus swounds,
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised wounds,
And one man's lust these many lives confounds:
Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame and not with fire.'

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes:
For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the dolorous knell:
So Lucrece, set a-work, sad tales doth tell
Topencill'd pensiveness and colour'd sorrow; [row. She lends them words, and she the looks doth bor-

She throws her eyes about the painting round,
And whom she finds forlorn she doth lament.
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Phrygian shepherds lent:
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content;
Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild, that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show
An humble gait, calm look, eyes waiting still,
A brow unbent, that seem'd to welcome woe;
Checks neither red nor pale, but mingled so
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ashly pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so ensconced his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-faced storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skil'd workman this mild image drew
For perjured Simon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew;
Whose words like wildfire burnt the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilion, that the skies were sorry,
And city and shears from th'fixed places,
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their faces.

This picture she advisedly perused,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill,
Saying, some shape in Simon's was abused;
So fair a form lodged not a mind so ill:
And still on him she gazed; and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spied,
That she concludes the picture was belied.

'It cannot be,' quoth she, 'that so much guile-
She would have said 'can lurk in such a look;'
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue 'can lurk' from 'cannot' took:
'It cannot be,' she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus, 'It cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked mind:

'For even as subtle Simon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
As if with grief or travail he had fainted,
To me came Tarquin armed; so beguil'd
With little stars shot from inward honesty,
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

'Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those sorrow'd tears that Simon shed's!
Priam, why art thou old and yet not wise?
For every tear he falls a Trojan bleeds:
IIis eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds;
Those round clear pearls of his, that move thy pity,
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

'Such devils steal effects from lightless hell;
For Simon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such unity do hold,
Only to flatter fools and make them bold:
So Priam's trust false Simon's tears doth flatter,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water,'

Here, all enraged, such passion her assail'd,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Simon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest,
Whose deed had made herself herself destitute:
At last she smilingly with this giveth o'er:

'Fool, fool!' quoth she, 'his wounds will not be sore.'
Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow,
And both she thinks too long with her remaining:
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining:
Though woe be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps,
And they that watch see time how slow it creeps.

Which all this time hath overslip'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent;
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep survive of others' detriment;
Losing her woes in shows of discontent.
It easeth some, though none it ever cured,
To think their doleful others have endured.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black:
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky:

These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Amazedly in her sad face he stares;
Her eyes, though sod in tears, look'd red and raw,
Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares:
Both stood, like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: 'What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befell'n, that thou dost trembling stand?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent?
Why art thou thus attend in discontent?'

'Unmask, dear dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.'

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of woe;
At length address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is ta'en prisoner by the foe;
While Collatine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending:
' Few words,' quoth she, 'shall fit the trespass best,
Where no excuse can give the fault amending;
In me noe woes than words are now depending;
And my laments would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

'Then be this all the task it hath to say:
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas, thy Lucrece is not free.

'For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining faction in my chamber came
A crested creature, with chain'd lightning bright,
And softly cried 'Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love; else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.

"'For some hard-favoured groom of thine, quoth
'Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will, [he,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee
And swear I found you where you did fulfil
The loathsomse act of lust, and so did kill
The leeches in their deed; this act will be My fame and thy perpetual infamy.'

'With this, I did begin to start and cry;
And then against my heart he sets his sword,
Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word;
So should my shame still rest upon record,
And never be forgot in mighty Rome,
Th' adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

'Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear;
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak;
No right plea, no plea might please that judge there:
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had purloin'd his eyes;
And when the judge is rob'd the prisoner dies.

'O, teach me how to make mine own excuse!
Or at the least this refuge let me find;
LUCRECE.

Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse,
Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forced; that never was inclined
To accessory yeldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.

Lo, here, the hopeless merchant of this loss,
With his head declined, and voice damn'd up with woe,
With sad set eyes, and wretched arms across,
From lips new-wakened pale begins to blow
The grief away that stops his answer so:
But, wretched as he is, he strives in vain;
What he breathes out his breath drinks up again.

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste,
Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride
Back to the strait that forced him on so fast;
In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past:
Even so his sighs, his sorrows, make a saw,
To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless woe of his poor she attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh:
' Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendest
Another power; no flood by raining slaketh.
My woe too sensible thy passion maketh
More feeling-painful: let it them suffice
To drown one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

' And for my sake, when I might charm thee so
For she that was thy Lucrece, now attend me:
He suddenly revenged on my foe,
Thine, mine, his own: suppose thou dost defend me
From what is past: the help that thou shalt lend me
Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die;
For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

' But ere I name him, you fair lords; quoth she,
Speaking to those that came with Collatine,
'Shall plight your honourable faiths to me,
With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine;
For 't is a meritorious fair design
To chase injustice with revengeful arms:
Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies' harms.'

At this request, with noble disposition
Each present lord began to promise aid,
As bound in knighthood to her imposition,
Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd.
But she, that yet her sad task hath not said,
The protestation stops. 'O, speak;' quoth she,
'How may this forced stain be wiped from me?

' What is the quality of mine offence,
Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance?
May my pure mind with the foul act dispense,
My low-declined honour to advance?
May any ceremon move me from this chance?
The poison'd fountain clears itself again:
And why not I from this compelled stain?'

With this, they all at once began to say,
Her body's stain her mind untainted clears;
While with a joyless smile she turns away
The face, that map which deep impression bears
Of hard misfortune, carved in it with tears.
' No, no,' quoth she, 'no dame, hereafter living,
By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving.'

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
She throws forth Tarquin's name: 'He, he, she says,
But more than 'he' her poor tongue could not speak;
Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathings, sick and short essays,
She utters this, 'He, he, fair lords, 't is he,
That guides this hand to give this wound to me.'

Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unsheathed:
That blow did bail it from the deep unrest
Of that polluted prison where it breathed:
Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeathed
Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
Life's lastIng date from cancel'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew;
Till Lucrece' father, that beholds her blood,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body threw;
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
The murderous knife, and, as it left the place,
Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;

And babbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who, like a late-sack'd island, vastly stood
Bare and unpeopled in this fearful flood.
Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face
Of that black blood a watery rigid goes,
Which seems to weep upon the tainted place:
And ever since, as pitying Lucrece' woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
And blood untainted still doth red abide,
Blushing at that which is so putrified.

' Daughter, dear daughter,' old Lucretius cries,
'That life was mine which thou hast here deprived.
If in the child the father's image lies,
Where shall I live now Lucrece is unliv'd?
Thou wast not to this end from me derived.
If children pre-deceased progenitors,
We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

' Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new born;
But now that fresh fair mirror, dim and old,
Shows me a bare-boned death by time outworn:
O, from thy cheek thy image thou hast torn,
And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,
That I no more can see what once I was!

' O time, cease thou thy course and last no longer,
If they succeed to be that should survive.
Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger
And leave the fatterling feeble souls alive?
The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again and see
Thy father die, and not thy father thee!

By this, starts Collatine as from a dream,
And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
And then in key-cold Lucrece' bleeding stream
He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,
And counterfeit's to die with her a space:
Till many shame bids him possess his breath
And live to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
Hath served a dumb arrest upon his tongue:
Who, mad that sorrow should his use controul,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long,
 Begins to talk: but through his lips do throng
Weak words, so thick come in his poor heart's aid,
That no man could distinguish what he said.
_LUCRECE._

Yet sometime 'Tarquin' was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er:
Then son and father weep with equal strife
Who should weep most, for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says 'She's mine.' 'O, mine she is,'
Replies her husband; 'do not take away
My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail'd by Collatina.'

'0,' quoth Lucretius, 'I did give that life
Which she too early and too late hath spill'd.'
'Woe, woe,' quoth Collatine, 'she was my wife,
I owed her, and 'tis mine that she hath kill'd.'
'My daughter,' and 'my wife,' with clamours fill'd
The dispersed air, who, holding Lucrece's life,
Answer'd their cries, 'my daughter,' and 'my wife.'

Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece's side,
Seeing such emulation in their woe,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece's wound his folly's show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly-jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words and uttering foolish things:

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him disguise;
And arm'd his long-lid wits advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes.
'Thoun wronged lord of Rome,' quoth he, 'arise;
Let my unsounded self, supposed a fool,
Now set thy long-experienced wit to school.

'Why, Collatine, is woe the cure for woe?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow (deeds?)
For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds:
Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
To slay herself, that should have slain her foe.

'Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentations;
But kneel with me and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations,
Since Rome herself in them doth stand disgraced,
By our strong arms from forth her fair streets chased.

'Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stain'd,
By heaven's fair sun that breeds the fat earth's store,
By all our country rights in Rome maintain'd,
And by chaste Lucrece's soul that late complain'd
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife.'

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss'd the fatal knife, to end his vow;
And to his protestation urg'd the rest,
Who, wondering at him, did his words allow:
Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow;
And that deep vow, which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment.

ADVENTURER IN
FORTH

T. T.

I.
From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the riper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory:
But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel,
Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament
And only herald to the gaudy spring;
Within thine own bud buried thy content,
And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.
Pity the world, or else this little glutton
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

II.
When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery so gazed on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held;
Then being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserved thy beauty's use,
If thou couldst answer 'This fair child of mine
Shall sum my count and make my old excuse,'
Proving his beauty by succession thine!
This were to be new made when thou art old,
And see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it cold.

III.
Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unblest some mother.
For where is she so fair whose unear'd womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop postelty?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime:
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see
Despite of wrinkles this thy golden time.
But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.
Unthrift lovingess, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing but doth lend,
And being frank she lends to those are free.
Then, beauteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give?
Profitless usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
Thy unused beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives the executor to be.

V.
Those hours, that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same
And that unfair which fairly doth excel;
For never-resting time leads summer on
To hideous winter and confounds him there;
Sap check'd with frost and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty o'erthrown and bareness every where:
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor is nor no remembrance what it was:
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
Leese but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.
Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
In thee thy summer, ere thou be distill'd:
Make sweet some vial; treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden usury
Which happies those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times refug'ed thee:
Then what could death do, if thou shouldst depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity?
Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be death's conquest and make worms thine heir.
SONNETS.

VII.

Lo! in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And like a god the step-up heavenly hill,
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage;
But when from highmost pitch, with weary ear,
Like feeble age, he recleth from the day,
The eyes, for duteous, now converted are
From his low tract and look another way:
So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?
Sweet with sweet war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lov'st thou that which thou receivest not gladly?
Or else receivest with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unaccorded hands do savourless sound:
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear.
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering,
Resembling sire and child and happy mother
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee: 'thou single wilt prove none.'

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shall hap to die,
The world will wail thee, like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow and still weep.
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every privy widow well may keep
By children's eyes her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unthrift in the world doth spend,
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unused, the user so destroys it.
No love toward others in that bosom sits
That on himself such murderous shame commits.

X.

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant, if thou wilt, thou art beloved of many,
But that thou none lov'st is most evident:
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire,
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O, change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodged than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, generous and kind,
Or to thyself at least kind-hearted prove:
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou growest
In one of thine, from that which thou departest:
And that fresh blood which yearly thou dost borrow
Thou may'st call thine when thou from youth conferr'dst,
Herein lives wisdom, beauty and increase: [verbatim.
Without this, folly, age and cold decay:
If all decayed, so, the thing should cease
And threescore year would make the world away.
Let those whom Nature hath not made for store
Harsh featureless and rude, barrenly perish:

Look, whom she best endow'd she gave the more;
Which bounteous gift thou should'st in bounty cherish:
She carved thee for her seal, and meant thereby
Thou should'st print more, not let that copy die.

XII.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curles o'er with white;
When lofty trees I see bare of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canpy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and brightly beard,
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake
And die as fast as they see others grow:
Truce:
And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make de-
Save breed, to brave him when he takes thee hence.

XIII.

O, that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours than you yourself were live;
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give.
So should that beauty which you hold in lease
Find no determination; then you were Yourself again after yourself's decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.
Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
Which husbandry in honour might uphold
Against the stormy gusts of winter's day
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
O, none but unthrifts! dear my love, you know
You had a father: let your son say so.

XIV.

Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck;
And yet methinks I have astronomy,
But not to tell of good or evil luck,
Of plagues, of deaths, or seasons' quality;
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each his thunder, rain and wind,
Or say with princes if it shall go well,
By oft predict that in heaven find:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And, constant stars, in them I read such art
As truth and beauty shall to love be drive.
If from thyself to store wouldst convert;
Or else of thee this I prognosticate:
Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

XV.

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge stage presents not but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and check'd even by the self-same sky,
Vaunt in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful Time debateth with Decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And all in war with Time for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engrat you new.

XVI.

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours,
And many maiden gardens yet unset

848
With virtuous wish would bear your living flowers,
Much like than your painted counterfeit:
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, Time's pencil, or my pupil pen,
Neither in inward worth nor outward fair,
Can make you live in beauty of men.
To give away yourself keeps yourself still,
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your cast high deserts?
Though yet, heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say ' This poet lies;
Such heavenly touches 'er or touch'd earthly faces,'
So should my papers yellow'd with their age
Be scorn'd like old men of less truth than tongue,
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage
And stretched metre of an antique song:
But were some child of yours alive that time,
You should live twice; in it and in my rhyme.

In summer's day, thou lion's paw,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-lived phoenix in her blood;
Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st,
And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-foot'd Time,
To the wide world and all her fading sweets;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime,
O, curb not with thy princely brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in thy course untainted do allow
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

A woman's face with Nature's own hand painted
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquitted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion:
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereon it gazeth;
A man in hue, all 'hues' in his controlling,
Which steals men's eyes and women's souls amazeth.
And for a woman wert thou first created;
Till Nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting
And by addition me of thee defeated,
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.
But since she priz'd thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love and thy love's use their treasure.

Who heaven itself for ornament doth use
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse;
Making a couplement of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven forgiveth in this brief duration.
O, let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then believe me, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air:
Let them say more that like of hearsay well;
I will not praise that purpose not to sell.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou are of one date;
But when in thee time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days should expiate.
For all that beauty that doth cover thee
Is but the seemly raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me:
How can I then be elder than thou art?
O, therefore, love, be of thyself so wary
As I, not for myself, but for thee will;
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.
Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain;
Thou gavest me thine, not to give back again.

As an unperfect actor on the stage
Who with his fear is put besides his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart,
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
Overcharged with burden of mine own love's might.
O, let my books be then the eloquence
And dumb presagers of my speaking breast,
Who plead for love and look for recompense
More than that tongue that more hath more express'd.
O, learn to read what silent love hath writ:
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter and hath stell'd
Thy beauty's form in table of my heart;
My body is the frame wherein 't is held;
And perspective it is best painter's art.
For through the painter must you see his skill,
To find where your true image pictured lies;
Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
That hath his windows glaz'd with thine eyes.
Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done:
Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me;
Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun
Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee;
Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art;
They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

Let those who are in favour with their stars
Of public honour and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumphal bars,
Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most.
Great princes' favoursites their fair leaves spread
But as the marigold at the sun's eye,
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown's they in their verdure die.
The painful warrior famoues for fight,
After a thousand victories once foil'd,
Is from the book of honour razed quite,
And all the rest forgot for which he toil'd:
Then happy I, that love and am belov'd
Where I may not remove nor be removed.
XXVI.

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage,
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit,
To thee send this written embassy,
To witness duty, not to show my wit:
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine
May seem bare, in wanting words to show it,
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul's thought, all will, bestow it;
Till whatsoever star that guides my moving
Points on me graciously with fair aspect
And puts apparel on my tatter'd loving,
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect:
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee;
Till then not show my head where thou mayst prove me.

XXVII.

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tired;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my work's work's expir'd:
For then my thoughts, from far where I abide,
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eyelids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see:
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Performs thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in glazily night,
Makes black night beauteous and her old face new.
Lo! thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee and for myself no quiet find.

XXVIII.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am delabir'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not eased by night,
But day by night, and night by day, oppress'd?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me;
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still further off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him thou art bright
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven:
So flattering I the swart-complexion'd night,
When sparkling stars twine not their gild'd the even.
But day doth daily draw, and night doth nightly grow,
And night doth nightly make grief's strength seem stronger.

XXIX.

When, in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries
And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends posses'd,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, and then my state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love remember'd such wealth
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And wish my wish fulfilled, and all my woe's rest
Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since cancell'd woe,
And mean the expense of many a vanish'd sight:
Then can I grieve at grievances forgot,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er

The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restored and sorrows end.

XXXI.

Thy bosom is endear'd with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead,
And there reigns love and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stol'n from mine eye
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things removed that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my loves gone by,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give;
That due of many now is thine alone:
Their images I loved I view in thee,
And thou, all they, hast all the all of me.

XXXII.

If thou survive my well-contented day,
Then shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And though they be outworn by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.
O, then vouchsafe me but this loving thought:
'Had my friend's Muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,'
To march in ranks of better equipage:
But since he died and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I 'll read, his for his love.

XXXIII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Platter the mountain-tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn corners his visage hide;
Only to wander in sad solitudes of space;
Even so my sun one early morn did shin
With all triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out, alack! he was but one hour mine;
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now.
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth;
Sunshine the world may stain when heaven's sun staineth.

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertaake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
"Tis not enough that through the cloud thou break,
To dry the rain on my storm-beaten face,
For no man well of such a salve can speak
That heals the wound and eues not the disgrace
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.
Ah! but those tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
And they are rich and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

No more be grieved at that which thou hast done;
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
And lighten's sun and fancies in successful bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
SONNETS.

Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,
Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are;—
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense—
Thy adverse party is thy advocate—
And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence:—
Such civil war is in my love and hate
That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief which slyly robs from me.

XXXVI.

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blasts that do with me remain
Without thy help by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spite,
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame,
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.

As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So, I, made lune by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth.
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crown'd sit,
I make my love engraven to this store:
So then I am not lamen, poor, nor despaired,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give
That I in thy abundance am sufficed
And by a part of all thy glory live.

Look, what is best, that best I wish in thee;
This wish I have; then ten times happy me!

XXXVIII.

How can my Muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
O, give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth Muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old mine which rhymer's invocate;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to outlive long date.
If my slight Muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

XXXIX.

O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me?
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
And what is 't but mine own when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divided live,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That death doth wantest alone.
O absence, what a torment wouldst thou prove,
Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive,
And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
By praising him here who doth hence remain!

XL.

Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
What hast thou then more than thou hast before?
No love, my love, that thou mayst true love call;
All mine was thine before thou hadst this more.
Then if for my love thou my love receivest,
I cannot blame thee for my love thou usest;
But yet be blamed, if thou thyself deceit
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
Although thou steal'st all my poverty;
And yet, love knows, it is a greater grief
To bear love's wrong than hate's known injury.
Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
Kill me with spices; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.

Those petty wrongs that liberty commits,
When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy years full well helts,
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art and therefore to be won,
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed;
And when a woman were, what woman's son
Will sorely leave her till she have prevail'd?
Ay me! but yet thou mightest my seat forbear,
And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
Who lead thee in their riot even there
Where thou art forced to break a twofold truth,
Hers, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said I loved her dearly;
That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye:
Thou dost love her, because thou know'st I love her;
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
And losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
Sweet flattery! then she loves me alone.

XLIII.

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
For all the day they view things unrespected;
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And darkly bright are bright in dark directed.
Then thou, whose shadow shadows doth make bright,
How would thy shadow's form form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so!
How would, I say, mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day,
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes hath stay!
All days are nights to see till I lose thee,
And nights bright days when dreams do show thee

XLIV.

If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
Injuries distance should not stop my way;
For then despite of space I would be brought,
From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
No matter then although my foot did stand
Upon the farthest earth removed from thee;
For nimble thought can jump both sea and land
As soon as think the place where he would be.
But, ah! thought kills me that I am not thought
To leap large lengths of miles thou canst art gone,
But that so much of earth and water wrought
I must attend time's leisure with my soul,
Receiving nought by elements so slow
But heavy tears, badges of either's woe.
SONNETS.

XLV.
The other two, slight air and purging fire,
And both with thee, wherever I abide:
The first my thought, the other my desire,
These present-absent with swift motion slide.
For when these quicker elements are gone
In tender embassy of love to thee,
My life, being made of four, with two alone
Shakes down to death, oppos'd with melancholy.
Until life's composition be re cured
By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
Who even but now come back again, assured
Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:
This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
I send them back again and straight grow sad.

XLVI.
Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war
How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,
My heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie,—
A closet never pierced with crystal eyes —
But the defendant doth that plea deny
And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
To side this title is impracticable
A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart,
And by their verdict is determined
The clear eye's moity and the dear heart's part:
As thus; mine eye's due is thy outward part,
And my heart's right thy inward love of heart.

XLVII.
Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
And each doth good turns now unto the other:
When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
Or heart in love with sighs himself doth another,
With mine love's picture then my eye doth feast
And to the painted banquet bids my heart;
Another time mine eye is my heart's guest
And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
So, either by thy picture or my love,
Thyself away art present still with me;
For thou not farther than my thoughts canst move,
And I am still with them and they with thee;
Or, if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII.
How careful was I, when I took my way,
Each trille under trustest bars to thrust,
That to my use it might unmisused stay
From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
But thou, to whom my jewels trilles are,
Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
Thou, best of dearest and mine only care,
Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest,
Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art,
Within the gentle closure of my breast,
From whence at pleasure thou mayst come and part;
And even thence thou wilt be stol'n, I fear,
For truth proves thiefish for a prize so dear.

XLIX.
Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee drawn on my defects,
When as thy love hath cast his utmost sum
Call'd to that audit by advised respects;
Against that time when thou shalt strangely pass
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye,
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall of the settled and settle duty, —
Against that time do I enconce me here
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part:

To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws,
Since why to love I can allege no cause.

L.
How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek, my weary travel's end,
Doth teach that ease and that refuse to say
'Thus far the miles are measured from thy friend!' The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods shilly-shally, to bear the weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider loved not speed, being made from thee:
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide;
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than the sharp survey;
For that same groan doth put this in my mind;
My grief lies onward and my joy behind.

LI.
Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer when from thee I speed:
From where thou art why should I haste me thence?
Till I return, of posting is no need.
O, what excuse will my poor beast then find,
When swift extremity can seem but slow?
The sword I spur, the (sacred) bridles chance on the wind;
In winged speed no motion shall I know:
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace:
Therefore desire, of perfect'st love being made,
Shall neigh — no dull flesh — in his fiery race;
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade;
Since from thee going he went willful-slow,
Towards thee I 'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.
So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-lock'd treasure,
The very which he will not employly survey,
For blotting the fine point of seldom pleasure.
Therefore are fears so solemn and so rare,
Since, seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.
So is the time that keeps you as my chest;
Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide,
To make some special instant special blest,
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.
Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII.
What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend?
Since every one hath, every one, one shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lend.
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you;
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian tires are painted new:
Speak of the spring and foison of the year,
The one doth shadow of your beauty show,
The other as your bounty doth appear;
And you in every blessed shape we know.
In all external grace you have some part,
But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.
O, how much more doth beauty beauteous seem
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.
The tanker-blooms have full as deep a dye
As the perfumed tincture of the roses,
Hang on such thorns and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds discloses;
But for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwoo'd and unregretted fade,
SONNETS.

Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made:
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse distills your truth.

LV.
Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswep't stone besmeard with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find
Even in the eyes of all posterity
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.
Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might:
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes even till they wink with fullness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with too much dulness.
Let this sad interim like the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contract'ed new Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view;
Else call it winter, which being full of care
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

LVII.
Being your slave, what should I do but tend
Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend,
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour
When you have bid your servant once adieu;
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But, like a sad slave, seek and think of nought
Save, where you are, how happy you make those.
So true a fool is love that in your will,
Though you do any thing, he thinks no ill.

LVIII.
That god forbid that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure!
O, let me suffer, being at your beck,
The imprisonment of your liberty;
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each check,
Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list, your charter is so strong
That you yourself may privilege your time
To what you will; to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting so be hell;
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.
If there be nothing new, but that which is Hath been before, how are our brains beguiled,
Which, labouuring for invention, bear amiss
The sense of burden of a former child!
O, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame;
Whether we are meand, or whether better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.
O, sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

LX.
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time that gave doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the flourisht set on youth
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow,
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow;
And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.
Is it thy will thy image should keep open
My heavy eyelids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire my slumbers should be broken,
While shadows like to thee do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou dost send from thee,
So far from home into my deeds to pry,
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenour of thy jealousy?
O, no! thy love, though much, is not so great:
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake;
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake:
For thee watch I whilst thou dost awake elsewhere,
From me far off, with others all too near.

LXII.
Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye
And all my soul and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
No shape so true, no truth of such account;
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worlds surmount.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beaten and chop'd with tum'd antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read;
Self so self-loving were iniquity.
'Tis thee, myself, that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

LXIII.
Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With Time's injurious hand crush'd and o'erworn;
When hours have drain'd his blood and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles: when his youthful morn
Hath travel'd on to age's steepy night,
And all those beauties whereof now he's king
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life:
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them still green.

LXIV.
When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
The rich proud cost of outworn buried age;
SONNETS.

When sometime lofty towers I see down-raised
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss and less with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay;
Ruin hath taught me that in vanity,
That stage will come and take my love away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXV.
Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'erways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wreckful siege of battering days,
When rocks immoveable are not so strong,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays?
O fearful meditation! where, alas,
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O, how this profit is this mystery might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

LXVI.
Tired with all these, for restful death I cry,
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honour shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
And strength by limping sway disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly doctor-like controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill:
Tired with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

LXVII.
Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve
And face itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek
And steal the living hue of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now Nature bankrupt is,
Beggard of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchanger now but his,
And, proud of many, lives upon his grace.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had
In days long since, before these last so bad.

LXVIII.
Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn,
When beauty lived and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were born,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head;
Ere beauty's death, the death of honour gay:
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth Nature store,
To show false Art what beauty was of yore.

LXIX.
Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend;
All tongues, the voice of souls, give thee that due,
Uttering bare truth, even so as foes commend.
Thy outward thus with outward praise is crown'd;
But those same tongues that give thee so thine own
In other precepts do confound.
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown,
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds;
Then, churls, their thoughts, although their eyes were kind,
To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
The solve is this, that thou dost common grow.

LXX.
That thou art blamed shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The snare that herbs instruct thee to avoid
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being woo'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast pass'd by the thrush of young days,
Either not assail'd or victor being charg'd;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy evermore enlarged:
If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

LXXI.
No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled,
From this vile world, with vile worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember well
The hand that writ it: for I love you so
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O, if, I say, you look upon this verse
When I perhaps compound with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay.
Lest the wise world should look into your tomb
And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.
O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit lived in me, that you should love
After my death, dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased I
Than a niggard truth would willingly impart:
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
For I am shamed by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIII.
That time of year thou mayst in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Thou see'st the cloister'd choirs, with winter's rags sung:
In me thou seest the twilight of such day
As after sunset fades in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me thou seest the glowing of such fire
That on the asiles of thy youth doth lie,
As the death-bed wherein it must expire
Consumed with that which it was nourish'd by,
This thou perceivest, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

LXXIV.
But be contented: when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The vacant leaves my mind's imprint will bear,
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead,
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
The worth of that is, that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXV.
So are you to my thoughts as food to life,
Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground;
And for the peace of you I hold such store,
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an enjoyer and anon
Doubling the fitching age will steal his treasure,
Now counting best to be with you alone,
Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure;
Sometimes all full with feasting on your sight
And by and by clean starved for a look;
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is had or must from you be took.
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.
Why is my verse so barren of new pride,
So far from variation or quick change?
Why with the time do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep to every word that was before,
That every word doth almost tell my name,
Showing their birth and where they did proceed?
O, know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument;
So all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent:
For as the sun is daily new and old,
So is my love still telling what is told.

LXXVII.
Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning mayst thou taste.
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show
Of mouthed graves will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shady stealth mayst know
Time's lievelish progress to eternity.
Look, what thy memory can not contain
Committ to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children nursed, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee and much enrich thy book.

LXXVIII.
So oft have I invited thee for my Muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poesy disperse.
Thine eyes that taught the dumb on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance afoft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine and born of thee:
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces gracest be;
But thou art all pay for art and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXXIX.
Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace.
But now my gracious numbers are decay'd
And my sick Muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a worthier pen,
Yet what of thee my poet doth invent
He robs thee of and pays it thee again.
He lends thee virtue and he stole that word
From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give
And found it in thy check; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXXX.
O, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame!
But since your worth, write as the ocean is,
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark inferior far to his
On your broad main doth witfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building and of goodly pride.
Then if he thrive and I be cast away,
The worst was this; my love was my decay.

LXXXI.
Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I let earth again rotten:
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entomb'd in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read,
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall live—such virtue hath my pen—
Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths
Of men.

LXXXII.
I grant thou wert not married to my Muse
And therefore mayst without attainst o'erlook
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise,
And therefore art enforced to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love; yet when they have devised
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou truly fair wert truly sympathized
In true plain words by thy true-telling friend;
And their gross painting might be better used
Where checks need blood; in thee it is abused.

LXXXIII.
I never saw that you did painting need
And therefore to your fair no painting set:
SONNETS.

LXXXV.

I found, or thought I found, you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt;
And therefore have I slept in your report,
That you yourself being extant well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb;
For I impair not beauty by the story,
While others would give life and bring a tomb.
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes
Than both your poets can in praise devise.

LXXXIV.

Who is it that says most? which can say more
Than this rich praise, that you alone are you?
In whose confine immured is the store
Which should example where your equal grew.
Lean penury within that pen doth dwell
That to his subject lends not some small glory;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are your own commendation story,
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not making worse what nature made so clear,
And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
Making his style admired every where.
You to your beauteous blessings add a curse,
Being found on praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXV.

My tongue-tied Muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise, richly compiled,
Reserve their character with golden quill
And precious phrase by all the Muses filed.
I think good thoughts whilst other write good words,
And like a sullen clerk still cry 'Amen'?
To every hymn that able spirit affords
In polish'd form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you praised, I say 'Tis so, 'tis true,
And to the most of praise and something more;
But that is in your thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before.
Then others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVI.

Was it the proud full sail of his greatverse,
Bound for the prize of all too precious you,
That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inharse,
Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew?
Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write
Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead?
No, neither he, nor his compoers by night
Giving him aid, my verse astonished.
He, nor that affable familiar ghost,
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence,
As victors of my silence cannot boast;
I was not sick of any fear from thence:
But when your courage did up his line,
Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

LXXXVII.

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st not thy estimate;
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gavest, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gavest it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
In sleep a king, but waking no such matter.

LXXXVIII.

When thou shalt be disposed to set me light
And place my merit in the eye of scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn.
With mine own weakness being best acquainted,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of faults as may not for Pelham nor me suit,
That thou in losing me shalt win much glory:
And I by this will be a gainer too;
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me.
Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence;
Speak of my duneness, and I straight will haul,
Against that topic all my reasons lose.
Thou canst not love, disgrace me for so ill,
To set a form upon desired change.
As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will,
I will acquaintance strangle and look strange,
Be absent from thy walks, and in my tongue
Thy sweet loved name no more shall dwell.
Lest I, too much profane, should do it wrong
And haply of our old acquaintance tell.
For thee against myself I'll vow debate,
For I must never love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
Now, while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after-loss.
Ah, do not, when my heart hath 'scaped this sorrow,
Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe;
Give not a windy night a rainy morn,
To linger out a purpose overthrown.
If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their spite,
But in the onset come; so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might,
And other strains of woe, which now seem woe,
Compared with loss of thee will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
Some in their wealth, some in their bodies' force,
Some in their garments, though new-tangled ill,
Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse;
And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
Wherein it finds a joy above the rest:
But these particulars are not my measure;
All these I better in one peg doth nest.
Thy love is better than high birth to me,
Richer than wealth, prouder than garnaments' cost,
Of more delight than luxurys and horses be;
And having thee, of all men's pride I boast.
Wretched in this alone, that thou mayst take
All this away and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
For term of life thou art assured mine,
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine.
Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
When in the least of them my life hath end?
I see a better state to me belongs
Than that which on thy humour doth depend;
Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
Since that my life on thy revolts doth lie.
SONNETS.

O, what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?
Thou mayst be false, and yet I know it not.

So shall I live, supposing thee art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though after'd new;
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place:
For there can live no hatred in thine eye,
Therefore I cannot know the springs of change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange,
But heaven in thy creation did decree
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
How like Eve's apple dost thy beauty grow,
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow,
They rightly do inherit heaven's graces
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Other's for them; whose task's to serve their grace.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die,
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outravishes his dignity:
For sweetest things turn sour most by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame
Which, like a canker in the fragrant rose,
Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name!
O, in what sweets dost thou thy sins enclose!
That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
Cannot disgrace but in a kind of praise;
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O, what a mansion have those vices got
Which for their habitation chose out thee,
Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
And all things fair turned foul by base decay!
Take heed, dear heart, of this large privilege;
The hardest knife ill-used doth lose his edge.

Some say thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say thy grace is youth and gentle sport;
Both grace and faults are loved of more and less;
Thou mak'st faults grace that to thee resort.
As on the finger of a crowned queen
The basest jewel will be well esteem'd,
So are those errors that in thee are seen
To truths translated, and for true things deem'd.
How many lambs might the stern wolf betray,
If like a lamb he could his looks translate!
How many gazers mightst thou lead away,
It thou wouldst use the strength of all thy state!
But do not so; I love thee in such sort
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen!
What old December's barreness every where!
And yet this time removed was summer's time,
The seeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease:
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans and unfather'd fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the vernal birds are mute;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April dresses in his trim
Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing;
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him.
Yet not the lays of birds nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odour and in hue
Could make me any summer's story tell,
[grew ;
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they
Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
Nor raise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
As with your shadow I with these did play:

The forward violet thus did I chide:
[smells,
Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet that
If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dyed.
The lily I condemned for thy hand,
And buds of marjoram had stol'n thy hair:
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white, had stol'n of both
And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But, for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
More flowers I noted, yet I none could see
But sweet or colour it had stol'n from thee.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
To speak of that witch which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, resty Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If Time have any wrinkle graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised everywhere.
Give me my love faster than Time wastes life;
So thou prevent'st his scythe and crooked knife.

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dyed?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
So lost thou too, and therein dignified.
Make answer, Muse: will thou not happily say
'Truth needs no colour, with his colour fix'd;
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd?'
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for 'tis lies in thee
To make him much outlive a gilded tomb,
And to be praised of ages yet to be.
Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how
To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

My love is strengthen'd, though more weak in seem;
I love not less, though less the show appear:
That love is merchandized whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish every where.
Our love was new and then but in the spring
When I was wont to greet it with my lays,
As Philiomel in summer's front doth sing
And stops her pipe in growth of riper days:
Not that the summer is less pleasant now
Than when her mournful hymns did hush the night,
But that wild music burthensh every bough
And sweets grown common lose their dear delight.
Therefore like her I sometime hold my tongue,
Because I would not dull you with my song.

CIII.
Ach, what poverty my Muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument all bare is of more worth
Than when it hath my added praise besides! -
O, blame me not, if I no more can write!
Look in your glass, and there appears a face
That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines and doing me disgrace.
Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,
To war the subject that before was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend:
Thus let them tell you how I am to tell;
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit
Your own glass shows you when you look in it.

CIV.
To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I eyed,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride,
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
In process of the seasons have I seen,
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like that hand,
Stal from his figure and no pace perceived;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion and mine eye may be deceived:
For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred;
Ere you were born was beauty's summer dead.

CV.
Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore my verse to constancy confined,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference;
'Fair, kind, and true' is all my argument,
'Fair, kind, and true' varying to other words;
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
'Fair, kind, and true,' have often lived alone,
Which three till now never kept seat in one.'

CVI.
When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even of your beauties you have none now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you pretituring;
And, for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.
Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Supposed as forfeit to a confined doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured,
And all the sad augurs mock their own preface;
Incumbant now crown thy rich assured
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While his rude insulter these leisues tribes:
And thus in this short reign's work I shall
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.
What's in the brain that ink may mar character
Which hath not figure to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what new to register,
That may express my love or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same,
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love's brief course
Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for aye his page,
Finding the first conceit of love there bred
Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CX.
O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of love: if I have ranged,
Like him that travels I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged,
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good.
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

CXI.
Ah, 'tis true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley to the view,
Gored mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new;
Most true It is that I have look'd on truth
And strangely: but, by all above,
These blemishes gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays proved these my best of love.
Now all is done, have we shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confined.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

CXII.
O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means what public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand:
Pity me then and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of else 'gainst my strong infection;
SONNETS.

No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance, to correct correction.
Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow;
For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o'er-green my bad, my good allow?
You are my all the world, and I must strive
To keep my son in peace and praise from from your tongue;
None else to me, nor I to none alive,
That my steel'd sense or changes right or wrong.
In so profound abyss I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critic and to flatterer stopped are.
Mark how with my neglect I do dispense:
You are so strongly in my purpose bred
That all the world besides methinks are dead.

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind;
And that which governs me to go about
Doth part his function and is sullen blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out;
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth catch:
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the rudest or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour or deformed creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The crow or dove, it shapes them to your feature:
Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true mind thus makes mine eye untrue.

Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery?
Or whether shall I say, mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchemy,
To make of monsters and things indigest
Such cherubins as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O, 'tis the first; 'tis flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kindly drinks it up:
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is grieving,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup:
If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it and doth first begin.

Those lines that I before have writ do lie,
Even those that said I could not love you dearer:
Yet then my judgment knew no reason why
My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.
But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows and change decrees of kings,
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharp'st intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of altering things.
Ahs, why, fearing of time's tyranny,
Might I not then say 'Now I love you best,'
When I was certain o'er incertaint,
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest?
Love is a babe: then might I not say so,
To give full growth to that which still doth grow?

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O, no! it is an ever-fixed mark
That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
Love's not Time's fool, though rose lips and cheeks
With his bending sickle compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

Accuse me thus: that I have scanted all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay,
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereeto all bonds do tie me day by day;
That I have frequent been with unknown minds
And given to time your own dear-purchased right;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.
Book both my willfulness and errors down
And on just proof surmise accumulate;
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your waken'd hate;
Since my appeal says I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge,
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness when we purge,
Even so, being full of your ever-cloying sweetness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding
And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meetness
To be diseased ere that there was true need.
Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured
And brought to medicine a healthful state
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured;
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

What potions have I drunk of Siren tears,
Distill'd from limbecks foul as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes and hopes to fears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win!
What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted
In the distraction of this maddening fever!
O benefit of ill! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better;
And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,
Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return rebuked to my content
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

That you were once unkind befriended me now,
And for that sorrow which I then did feel
Needs must I under my transgression bow,
Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel.
For if you were by my unkindness shaken
As I by yours, you've pass'd a hell of time,
And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
To weigh how once I suffered in your crime.
O, that our night of woe might have remember'd
My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits,
And so to you, as you to me, then tender'd
The humble salve which wounded bosoms fits!
But that your trespass now becomes a fee;
Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom me.

'Tis better to be vile than vile esteem'd,
When not to be receiv'd reproach of being,
SONNETS.

And the just pleasure lost which is so deem'd
Not by our feeling but by others' seeing:
For why should others fail and be undone
Give salutation to my sportive blood?
Or on my frailties why are froward spies,
Which in their wills count bad what I think good?
No, I am that I am, and they that level
At my abuses reckon up their own:
I may be straight, though they themselves be bended;
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown;
Unless this general evil they maintain,
All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

CXXII.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory,
Which shall above that idle rank remain
Beyond all date, even to eternity;
Or at the least, so long as brain and heart
Have faculty by nature to sub sist;
Till each to razed oblivion yield his part
Of thee, thy records can be miss'd.
That poor retention could not so much hold,
Nor need I tally thy dear love to score;
Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
To trust those tables that receive thee more:
To keep an adjunct to remember thee
Were to import forgetfulness in me.

CXXIII.

No, Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change:
Thy pyramids built up with newer might
To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
They are but dressings of a former sight.
Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost foist upon us that is old,
And rather make them born to our desire
Than think that we before have heard them told.
Thy registers and thee I both defy;
Not wondering at the present nor the past,
For thy records and what we see doth lie,
Made more or less by thy continual haste.
This I do vow and this shall ever be;
I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

CXXIV.

If my dear love were but the child of state,
It might for Fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
As subject to Time's love or to Time's hate,
Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gather'd,
No, it was build'd far from accident;
It suffers not in snilling pomp, nor falls
Under the blow of thrall'd discontent,
Whereeto the inviting time our fashion calls:
It fears not policy, that heretic,
Which works on leases of short-number'd hours,
But all alone stands hugely politic;
Shower'd that it nor grows with head nor drows with
To this I witness call the fools of time,
Which die for goodness, who have lived for crime.

CXXV.

Were 't aught to me I bore the canopy,
With my extern the outward honouring;
Or laid great bases for eternity,
Which prove more short than waste or ruining?
Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour
Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent,
For compound sweet forgiveing simple savour,
Pithful in their sap yet sapless in their rent.
No, let me be obsequious in thy heart,
And take thou my oblation, poor but free,
Which is not mix'd with seconds, knows no art,
But mutual render, only me for thee.
Hence, thou suborn'd informer! a true soul
When most improach'd stands least in thy control.

CXXVI.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
Dost hold Time's fickle glass, his sickle, hour;
Who hast by wanings grown, and therein show'st
Thy lovers withering as thy sweet self grow'st;
If Nature, sovereign mistress over wrack,
As thou goest onwards, still will pluck thee back,
She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May time disgrace and wretched minutes kill.
Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure!
She may detain, but not still keep, her treasure;
Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

CXXVII.

In the old age black was not counted fair,
Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
But now is black beauty's successive heir,
And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame:
For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
Pairing the foul with art's false borrow'd face,
Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy bower,
But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace.
Therefore my mistress' hair are raven black,
Her eyes so suited, and they mourners seen
At such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
Slandering creation with a false esteem:
Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe.
That every tongue says beauty should look so.

CXXVIII.

How oft, when thou, my music, play'st
Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jacks that mingle leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand!
To be so tickled, they would change their state
And situation with those dancing chips,
O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more bluest than living lips.
Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

CXXIX.

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action lust
Is perjur'd, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust,
Enjoy'd no sooner but despi'd straight,
Past reason hunted, no sooner had,
Past reason lated, as a swallow'd bait
On purpose laid to make the taker mad;
Mad in pursuit and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest have, extreme;
A bliss in proof, and proved, a very woe;
Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream.
[well]
All this the world well knows; yet none knows
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

CXXX.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go;
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground:
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she belied with false compare.

CXXXI.
Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou knowst to my dear doting heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say that thee behold
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan:
To say now err I do love not at all,
Although I swear it to myself alone.
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear
Thy black is fairest in my judgment's place.
In nothing art thou black save in thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

CXXXII.
Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart torments me with disdain,
Have put on black and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the grey cheeks of the east,
Nor that full star that ushers in the even
Doth half that glory to the sober west,
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
O, let it then as well beseech thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part.
Then will I swear beauty herself is black
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

CXXXIII.
Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Is't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweet'st friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou harder hast engross'd: Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsoaken;
A torment thrice threefold thus to be cross'd.
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Whoe'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my goal:
And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

CXXXIV.
So, now I have confess'd that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgaged to thy will,
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous and he is kind;
He learn'd but surety-like to write for me
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend can claim debtor for my sake,
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me:
He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

CXXXV.
Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy 'Will,'
And 'Will' to boot, and 'Will' in overplus;
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus.
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?

Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in 'Will,' add to thy 'Will'
One will of mine, to make thy large 'Will' more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one 'Will.'

CXXXVI.
If thy soul cheek thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy 'Will,'
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love my love-suit, sweet, fulfil.
'Will' will fulfil the treasure of thy love,
Ay, all it full with wills, and my will one.
In things of great receipt with ease we prove
Among a number one is reckoned none:
Then in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy stores' account I one must be;
For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee:
Make but my name thy love, and love that still,
And then thou lovset me, for my name is 'Will.'

CXXXVII.
Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine eyes,
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is take the worst to be.
If eyes corrupt by over-partal looks
Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged hooks,
Wherefore the judgment of my heart is tied?
Why should my heart think that a several plot
Which my heart knows the wide world's common
Or mine eyes seeing this, say this is not, [place?
To put fair truth upon so foul a face?
In things right true my heart and eyes have erred,
And to this false plague are they now transferred.

CXXXVIII.
When my love swears that she is made of truth
I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some mutator'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue:
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress'd.
But wherefore says she not she is unjust?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is in seeming trust,
And age in love lives not to have years told:
Therefore I lie with her and she with me,
And in our faults by lies we flatter'd be.

CXXXIX.
O, call not me to justify the wrong
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye but with thy tongue;
Use power with power and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lovseth elsewhere, but in my sight,
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside:
What need'st thou wound with cunning when thy might
Is more than my o'er-press'd defence can hide?
Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies.
And therefore from my face she turns my foes,
That they elsewhere might start their injuries:
Yet doth it so: but since I am near slain
Kill me outright with looks and rid my pain.

CXL.
Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-tied patience with too much disdain;
SONNETS.

CXL.

Lest sorrow lend me words and words express
The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet, love, to tell me so;
As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
Not mean their health from their physicians know;
For if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee;
Now this ill-wresting world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be.
That I may not be so, nor thou belted,
Bear thou the eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

CXL.

In faith, I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 't is my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view pleased to note.
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delighted,
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste, nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But if my eyes with my false passions can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee,
Who leaves unwary'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin awards me pain.

CXL.

Love is my sin and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving.
O, but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproving;
Or, if it do, not from those lips of thine,
That have profaned their scarlet ornaments
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine,
Robb'd others' beds' revenues of their rents.
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lov'st those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee:
Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows
Thy pity may deserve to pity be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example mayst thou be denied!

CXL.

Lo! as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her labe and makes all swift dispatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay,
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not minding her poor infant's discontent;
So runn'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I thy babe chase thee afar behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou mayst have thy 'Will,'
If thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

CXL.

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still:
The better angel is a man right fair,
The other spirit a woman colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend
Suppose I may, yet not as I would,
But being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell:
Yet this shall I never know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

CXLV.

Those lips that Love's own hand did make
Breathed forth the sound that said 'I hate'—
To me that languish'd for her praise;
But when she saw my woeful state,
Straight in her heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue that ever sweet
Was used in giving gentle doom,
And taught it thus anew to greet;
'It hate' she alter'd with a glad
That follow'd it as gentle day
Doth follow night, who like a fiend
From heaven to hell is flown away;
'I hate' from hate away she threw,
And saved my life, saying 'not you.'

CXLVI.

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Thrice rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward wall so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease?
Dost thou find thy'styl'd foes' revenues spread?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's less,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Wiser spirit a thousand times more wise:
So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on men,
And Death once dead, there's no more dying then.

CXLVII.

My love is as a fever, longling still
For that which longer nurseth the disease.
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve
Desire is death, which physic did except.
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic-mad with evermore unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd;
For I have sworn thee fair and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLVIII.

O me, what eyes hath Love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight!
Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures falsely what they see right?
If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's 'No.'
How can it? O, how can Love's eye be true,
That sees with partiality, and love with tears?
No marvel then, though I mistake my view:
The sun itself sees not till heaven clears.
[blind,
O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me
Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLIX.

Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
When I against myself with thee partake?
Do I not think on thee, when I forget
Of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
Who lathst thee that I call my friend?
On whom frown'st thou, that I do fawn upon?
Nay, if thou liest on me, do I not spend
Revenge upon myself with present moan?
What merit do I in myself respect?
That is so proud thy service to despise,
A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

When all my best doth worship thy defect,
Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
Those that can see thou lovest, and I am blind.

CL.
O, from what power hast thou this powerful might
With insufficiency my heart to sway?
To make me give the lie to my true sight,
And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
That in the very refuse of thy deeds
There is such strength and warrantise of skill
That, in my mind, thou worst all best excels?
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more
The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
O, though I love what others do abhor,
With others thou shouldst not abhor my state:
If thy unworthiness raised love in me,
More worthy I to be beloved of thee.

CII.
Love is too young to know what conscience is:
Yet who knows not conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheat, urge not my amiss,
Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove:
For, thou betraying me, I do betray
My nobler part to my gross body's treason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason;
But, rising at thy name, doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
No want of conscience hold it that I call
Her 'love' for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CIII.
In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing,
In act thy bed-vow broke and new faith torn
In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee,
When I break twenty? I am perjured most;
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee
And all my honest faith in thee is lost,
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy,
And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see;
For I have sworn thee fair; more perjured I,
To swear against the truth so foul a lie!

CIIII.

Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep:
A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
Which borrow'd from this holy fire of Love
A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove
Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
But at my mistress' eye Love's brand new-fired,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
I, sick withal, the help of bath desired,
And thither bied, a sad distemper'd guest,
But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
Where Cupid got new fire—my mistress' eyes.

CLV.
The little Love-god lying once asleep
Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to keep
Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
The fairest votary took up that fire
Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd;
And so the general of hot desire
Was sleeping by a virgin hand disarm'd.
This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
Which from Love's fire took heat perpetual,
Growing a bath and healthful remedy.
For men diseased; but I, my mistress' thrall,
Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

From off a hill whose conceave womb re-worded
A plaintful story from a sistering vale,
My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
And down I laid to list the sad-tuned tale;
Ere long enlaid a tallow maid full pale,
Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
Which fortified her visage from the sun,
Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw
The carcass of a beauty spent and done:
Time had not seythed all that youth begun,
Nor youth all quit: but, spite of heaven's fell rage,
Some beauty peep'd through lattice of soerd'age.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eye,
Which on it had conceited characters,
Laudering the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears,
And often reading what contents it bears;
As often shrieking wailing didst woe,
In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her level'd eyes their carriage ride,
As they did battery to the spheres intend;
Sometimes diverted their poor balls are tied
To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend
Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
To every place at once, and, nowhere fix'd,
The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose nor tied in formal plat,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride
For some, untuck'd, descended her sheaved hat,
Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside;
Some in her threaten fillet still did bide,
And true to bondagè would not break from thence,
Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favours from a maund she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of beaded jet,
Which one by one she in a river threw,
Upon whose weeping margin she was set;
Like usury, applying wet to wet,
Or monarch's hands that let not bounty fall
Where want cries some, but where excess begs all.

863
A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
Which she perused, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood;
Crack'd many a ring of posied gold and bone,
Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
Found yet moe letters sadly penn'd in blood,
With slied silk feat and affectedly
Enswathed, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

These often bathed she in her fluxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often 'gan to tear;
Cried, 'O false blood, thou register of lies,
What unapproved witness dost thou bear!
Ink would have seem'd more black and damned here!'—
This mid, in top far range, in nut or mints,
Big discontent, so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that grazed his cattle nigh—
Sometimes a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest hours, observed as they flew—
Towards this afflicted fancy hastily drew,
And, privileged by age, desires to know
In brief the grounds and motives of her wo.

So slues he down upon his grained bat,
And comely-distant sits he by her side;
When he again desires her, being sat,
Her grievance with his hearing to divide;
If that from him there may be anght applied
Which may her suffering ecstasy assuage,
'T is promised in the charity of age.

'Father,' she says, 'though in me you behold
The injury of many a blasting hour,
Let it not tell your judgment I am old;
Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power:
I might as yet have been a spreading flower,
Fresh to myself, if I had self-applied
Love to myself and to no love beside.'

'But, woe is me! too early I attended
A youthful suit—it was to gain my grace—
Of one by nature's outwards so commended,
That maidens' eyes struck over all his face:
Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place;
And when in his fair parts she did abide,
She was new lodged and newly defiled.

'His browny locks did hang in crooked curls;
And every light occasion of the wind
Upon his silken parcelpn helmets.
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find:
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind,
For on his visage was in little drawn
What largeness thinks in Paradise was sown.

'Small show of man was yet upon his chin;
His phoenis down began but to appear
Like unshorn velvet on that termless skin
Whose bare out-bragg'd the web it seem'd to wear:
Yet show'd his visage by that cost more dear;
And nice affections wavering stood in doubt
If best were as it was, or best without.

'His qualities were notious as his form,
For maiden-tongued he was, and thereof free;
Yet, if men moved him, was he such a storm
As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,
When winds breathe sweet, murply though they be,
His rudeness so with his authorized youth
Did livery falseness in a pride of truth.

'Well could he ride, and often men would say
'That horse his mettle from his rider takes:
 Proud of subjection, noble by the way,
What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stope
And controversy hence a question takes, [makes!']

Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.

'Bout quickly on this side the verdict went:
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertaining and to ornament,
And spake, like in himself, not in his case:
All aids, themselves made fairer by their place,
Came for additions; yet their purposed trim
Pieced not his grace, but were all graced by him.

'So on the tip of his subduing tongue
All kind of arguments and questions deep,
All replies promis'd, and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep:
To make the weeper laugh, the languer weep,
He had the dialect and different skill,
Catching all passions in his craft of will:

'That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old; and sexes both enchanted,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted:
Consents bewitch'd, ere he desire, have granted;
And dialogue for him what he would say,
Ask'd their own wills, and made their wills obey.

Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind;
Like fools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of lands and mansions, theirs in thought assign'd;
And labououring in me pleasures to bestow them
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe them:

'So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweetly supposed them mistress of his heart.
My woeful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple, not in part,
What with his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserved the stalk and gave him all my flower.

'Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired yielded;
Finding myself in honour so forbid,
With safest distance I mine honour shielded:
Experience for me many bulwarks builded
Of proofs new-bleeding, which remain'd the foil
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spoil.

'But, ah, who ever shunn'd by precedent
The destined ill she must herself assay?
Or forced examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-past peril in her way?
Consuel may stop awhile what will not stay;
For when we rage, advice is often seen
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

'Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof:
To be forbid the sweets that seem so good,
For fear of harms that press in our behalf.
O appetite, from judgment stand aloof!
'The one a palate hath that needs will taste,
Though Reason weep, and cry 'It is thy last'.

'For further I could say 'This man's untrue,
And knew the patterns of his soul beguil
Heard where his plants in others' orchards grew,
Saw how deceits were gilded in his smiling;
Knew vows were ever brokers to deliling;
Thought characters and words merely but art,
And bastards of his soul adulterate heart.

'And long upon these terms I held my city,
Till thus he gan besiege me: 'Gentle maid,
A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That's to ye sworn to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call'd unto,
Till now did ne'er invite, nor never woo.

"All my offences that abroad you see
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
Love made them not; with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind:
They sought their shame that so their shame did find;
And so much less of shame in me remains,
By how much of me their reproach contains.

"Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or my affection put to the smallest isen,
Or any of my pleasures ever charm'd;
Iarm have I done to them, but ne'er was harm'd;
Kept hearts in livers, but mine own was free,
And reign'd, commanding in his monarchy.

"Look here, what tributes wounded fancies sent,
Of yaled pearls and rubies red as blood;
[me,
Figuring that they their passions likewise lent me
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrinmer'd mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

"And, lo, behold these talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd,
I have received from many a several fair,
Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech'd,
With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
And deep-brain'd sounets that did amplify
Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.

"The diamond,—why, 'twas beautiful and hard,
Wherefore his invisi' properties did tend;
The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend
With objects manifold: each several stone,
With wit well blazon'd, smiled or made some moan.

"Lo, all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensived and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I heard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is, to you, my origin and end;
For these, of force, must your oblations be,
Since I their altar, you enpanon me.

"O, then, advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weights down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these smiles to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
What me your minister, for you obeys,
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distinct parcels in combined sums.

"Lo, this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified, of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

"But, O my sweet, what labour is't to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives,
Playing the place which did no form receive,
Playing in unconstraint in that disstrained eyes?;
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle 'scapeth by the flight,
And makes her absence valiant, not her might.

"O, pardon me, in that my boast is true:
The accident which brought me to her eye
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly:
Religious love put out Religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immured,
And now, to tempt, all liberty procured.

"How mighty then you are, O, hear me tell!
The broken bosoms that to me belong
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all congest,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

"My parts had power to charm a sacred nun,
Who, disciplined, ay, dieted in grace,
Believed her eyes when they to assai' begun,
All vows and consecrations giving place:
O most potent love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

"When thou impressest, what are precepts worth
Of state example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame!
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense,
'Gainst shame,
And sweetens, in the suffering pangs it bears,
The aloe of all forces, shocks, and fears.

"Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine;
And suppli'cant their sighs to you extend,
To leave the battery that you make 'gainst mine,
Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bouded oath
That shall prefer and undertake my troth."

"This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were levell'd on my face;
Each cheek a river running from a fount
With brisht current downward flow'd apace;
O, how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who glaz'd with crystal gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue enclose.

"O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear!
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O e'leff effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extin'ture hath.

"For, lo, his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolved my reason into tears;
There my white stole of chastity I daff'd,
Shook off my sober guards and civil fears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore,
His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

"In him a plenty of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's aptness, as it best deceives,
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows.

"That not a heart which in his level came
Could 'scape the hail of his all-hurting aim,
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And, veil'd in them, did win whom he would maim:
Against the thing he sought he would reclaim;
When he most burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and praised cold chastity.

'Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed fiend he cover'd;
That love's experience gain'd he from mine,
Which like a cherubin above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd?

Ay me! I fell; and yet do question make
What I should do again for such a sake.

'O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that forced thunder from his heart did fly,
O, that sad breath his spongy hogs bestow'd,
O, all that borrow'd motion seeming owed,
Would yet again betray the fore-betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid!

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

I.
When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unskilful in the world's false forgeries.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although I know my years be past the best,
I smiling credit her false-speaking tongue,
Outfacing faults in love with love's ill rest.
But wherefore says my love that she is young?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is a soothing tongue,
And age, in love, loves not to have years told.
Therefore I'll lie with love, and love with me,
Since that our faults in love thus smoother'd be.

II.
Two loves I have, of comfort and despair,
That like two spirits do suggest me still;
My better is a man right fair,
My worse a spirit to a woman colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her fair pride.
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
For being both to me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell;
The truth I shall not know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

III.
Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world could not hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthy, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in me.
My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then, thou fair sun, that on this earth doth shine,
Exhale this vapour vow; in thee it is:
If broken, then it is no fault of mine.
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To break an oath to win a paradise?

IV.
Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh, and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.

She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there,—
Touches so soft still conquer chastity.
But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refused to take her figured proffer,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward:
He rose and ran away; ah, fool too proudman!

V.
If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?
O never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd:
Thought to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like osiers bow'd.
Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live that art can comprehend.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend;
All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire;
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet fire.
Cesart as thou art, O do not love that wrong.
To sing heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue.

VI.
Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing torrent for Adonis made
Under an osier growing by a brook,
A brook where Adon used to cool his spleen:
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stoopeth naked to the brook's green brim:
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly as this queen on him.
He, spying her, bounces in, whereas he stood:
'O Jove,' quoth she, 'why was not I a flood?'

VII.
Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle;
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is, brittle;
Sofer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty:
A lily pale, with damask dye to grace her,
None fairer, nor none faiser to deface her.

Her lips to mine how often hath she join'd,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing!
How many tales to please me hath she coin'd,
Dreading my love, the love thereof still fearing!

Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.
She burn'd with love, as straw with fire flameth;
She burn'd out love, as soon as straw out-burneth;
She framed the love, and yet she foil'd the framing;
She bade love last, and yet she fell a-turning.

Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother.
Then must the love be great twixt thee and me,
Because thou lovest the one, and I the other.
Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense;
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such
As, passing all conceit, needs no defence.
Thou lovest to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phoebus' lute, the queen of music, makes;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drown'd
When as himself to singing he betakes.

One god is god of both, as poets feign;
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

Fair was the morn when the fair queen of love,

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adon's sake, a youngster proud and wild;
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill:
Adon Adonis comes with horn and hounds;
She, silly queen, with more than love's good will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those ground;
'Once,' quoth she, 'did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wound with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth!

See, in my th'ghth,' quoth she, 'here was the sere,'
She shew'd here; he saw more wounds than one,
And blushing led, and left her all alone.

Sweeter rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon vaded.
Pluck'd in the bud, and vaded in the spring!
Bright orient pearl, alack, too timely shaded!
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting!

Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree,
And falls, through wind, before the fall should be.

I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have;
For why thou left'st me nothing in thy will:
And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave;
For why I craved nothing of thee still:
O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee,
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

Venus, with young Adonis sitting by her
Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him:
She told the youngling how god Mars did try her,
And as he fell to her, so fell she to him.

'Even thus,' quoth she, 'the warlike god embraced me,'
And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms;

'Even thus,' quoth she, 'the warlike god unlace me,'
As if the boy should use like loving charms;
'Even thus,' quoth she, 'he seiz'd on my lips,'
And with her lips on his did act the seizure:
And as she fetch'd breath, away he skips,
And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure.

Ah, that I had my lady at this bay,
To kiss and clipe me till I run away!

Crabbed age and youth cannot live together:
Youth is full of pleasance, age is full of care;
Youth like summer morn, age like winter weather;
Youth like summer brave, age like winter bare.
Youth is full of sport, age's breath is short;
Youth is nimble, age is lame;
Youth is hot and bold, age is weak and cold;
Youth is wild, and age is tame.

Age, I do abhor thee; youth, I do adore thee;
O, my love, my love is young!
Age, I do defy thee: O, sweet shepherd, be thine,
For methinks thou stay'st so long.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good;
A shining glass that vadeth suddenly;
A flower that dies when first it gins to bud;
A brittle glass that's broken presently:
A doubtful good, a glass, a glass, a flower,
Lost, vaded, broken, dead within an hour.

And as goods lost are seld or never found,
As vaded glass no rubbing will refresh,
As flowers dead lie wither'd on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can redress,
So beauty blench'd once is for ever lost,
In spite of physic, painting; pain and cost.

Good night, good rest. Ah, neither be my share;
She bade good night that kept my rest away;
And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care,
To descant on the doubts of my decay.

'Farewell,' quoth she, 'and come again to-morrow!'
Fare well I could not, for I supp'd with sorrow.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
In scorn or friendship, nil I construe whether:
'T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
'T may be, again to make me wander thither.

'Wander,' a word for shadows like myself,
As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east!
My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise
Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest.

Not daring trust the office of mine eyes,
While Phoelmia sits and sings, I sit and mark,
And wish her lays were tuned like the lark;
For she doth welcome daylight with her ditty,
And drives away dark dismal drearly dreaming night:
The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight;
Sorrow changed to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow.
For why, she sigh'd and bade me come to-morrow.

Were I with her, the night would post too soon;
But now are minutes added to the hours;
To spite me now, each minute seems a moon;
Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
Pack night, peep day; good day, of night now borrow;
Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

SONNETS TO SUNDARY NOTES OF MUSIC.

[XVI.]

Ir was a lording's daughter, the fairest one of three,
That liked of her master as well as well might be,
Till looking on an Englishman, the fair'.st that eye could see.

Her fancy fell a-turning,
Long was the combat doubtful that love with love
did fight,
To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant
knight:
To put in practice either, alas, it was a spite
Unto the silly damsel!
But one must be refused; more mickle was the pain
That nothing could be used to turn them both to gain,
For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with disdain:

Alas, she could not help it!
Thus art with arms contending was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away:
Then, lullaby, the learned man hath got the lady gay;
For now my song is ended.

XVII.

On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month was ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air;
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath,

'Air,' quoth he, 'thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!'

But, alas! my hand hath sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Yow, alack! for youth unmeet;
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiope were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.'

[XVIII.]

My flocks feed not,
My ewes breed not,
My rams speed not,
All is amiss:
Love's denying,
Faith's defying,
Heart's renying,
Causer of this.
All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost, God wot;
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a nay is placed without remove.
One silly cross
Wrought all my loss;
O frowning Fortune, cursed, fickle dame!
For now I see
Inconstancy
More in women than in men remain.

In black mourn I,
All tears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,

Living in thrall:
Heart is bleeding,
All help needing,
O cruel speeding,
Fraughted with gall.

My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal;
My weather's bell rings doleful knell:
My curtall dog, that wont to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;

My sighs so deep
Procure to weep,
In howling wise, to see my doleful plight.

How sighs resound
Through heartless ground,
Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight!

Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Green plants bring not
Forth their dye;

Herds stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back peeping
Fearfully:

All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled,
All our love is lost, for Love is dead.

Farewell, sweet lass,
Thy like ne'er was
For a sweet content, the cause of all my moan:

Poor Corydon
Must live alone;
Other help for him I see that there is none.

XIX.

When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
And stall'd the deer that thou shouldest strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy partial might:
Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young nor yet unwed.

And when thou comest thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
Lest she some subtle practice smell,——
A cripple soon can find a halt:——

But plainly say thou lov'st her well,
And set thy person forth to sell.

What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will calm ere night:
And then too late she will repent
That thus dissembled her delight;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say,

'Had women been so strong as men,
In faith, you had not had it then.'

And to her will frame all thy ways;
Spare not to spend, and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing in thy lady's ear:
The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble true;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Press never thou to choose anew:
When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled as with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft:
A woman's nay doth stand for nought?

Think women still to strive with men,
To sin and never for to saint:
There is no heaven, by holy then,
When time with age doth them attain.
Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

But, soft! enough, too much, I fear;
Lest that my mistress hear my song,
She will not stick to round me 't the ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long:
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

[xx.]
Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dales and fields,
And all the craggy mountains yields.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, by whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee a bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me and be my love.

LOVE'S ANSWER.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee and be thy love.

As it fell upon a day
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
Trees did grow, and plants did spring;
Every thing did banish moan,
Save the nightingale alone;
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast up-till a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull'st ditty,
That to hear it was great pity:
'I see, I fee, I, now would she cry;
'Tereu, tereu!' by and by,
That to hear her so complain,
Scarce I could from tears refrain;
For her griefs, so lively shown,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah, thought I, thou mourn'st in vain!
None takes pity on thy pain:
Senseless trees they cannot hear thee;
Ruthless beasts they will not cheer thee:
King Pandion he is dead;
All thy friends are laps'd in lead;
All thy fellow birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me,
Whilst as fickle Fortune smiled,
Thou and I were both beguiled.
Every one that flatters thee
Is no friend in misery.
Words are easy, like the wind;
Faithful friends are hard to find:
Every man will be thy friend
Whilst thou hast therewith to spend;
But if store of crowns be scant,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one be prodigal,
Bountiful they will him call,
And with such-like flattering,
'Pity but he were a king,'
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice;
If to women he be bent,
They have at commandement:
But if Fortune once do frown,
Then farewell his great renown;
They that fawn'd on him before
Use his company no more.
He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need;
If thou sorrow, he will weep;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep;
Thus of every grief in heart
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

[XXI.]
THE PHENIX AND THE TURTLE.

Let the bird of loudest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul precursur of the fiend,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king:
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thou treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender makest
With the breath thou givest and takest,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and constancy is dead;
Phoenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they loved, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distinct, division none;
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt the turtle and his queen;
But in them it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the phoenix' sight;
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appall'd,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together,
To themselves yet either neither,
Simple were so well compounded,

That it cried, How true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Whereupon it made this threne
To the phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love,
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRENOS.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here enclosed in cinders lie.

Death is now the phoenix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest.

Leaving no posterity:
'T was not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be;
Beauty brag, but 't is not she;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.
